A report from PETROLEO INTERNACIONAL, released in September, indicates that throughout the world from the time oil development began until 1 January 1978, a total of 3,444,564 wells were drilled, of which 2,513,000 were in the United States (73 percent of the total). In comparison, in all of Latin America, including the islands of the Caribbean, only 100,000 wells have been drilled in all of its history, even though that region has a large share of the world's sedimentary basins.

CORPOANDES FINDS COAL DEPOSIT IN SANTO DOMINGO

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 3 Nov 80 Sec 1 p 17

[Article by Boaneg Pernia Ramires]

[Text] The state of Tachira now has the best nonmetallic mineral resources in the entire Andean region, according to economist Wilfredo Colmenares, administrative coordinator of the Tachira mining-industrial program, which is now being developed by the Andean Development Corporation.

"Until now this resource has not been exploited as it should be. In Tachira alone there are small deposits in Lobatera; there is limestone in Capacho and some phosphate deposits in the Sucre District. Such irregular development has not been conducive to effective participation by the entity, in relative terms, in the creation of the gross domestic product, because it only amounts to about 0.7 percent of that figure at present," stated the economist.

He also pointed out that the mineral resources of the region are exploitable in their entire density, but under certain well-defined technical criteria. Corpoandes is now studying the possibility of setting up a mining program revolving around these resources, for the direct benefit of Tachira.

"The Andean Development Corporation," he added, "looking to the future of mining in Tachira, is making the necessary diagnostic studies, as well as prospecting and evaluation activities, and has achieved very positive results."

With reference to the places where the processes have taken place, Colmenares indicated that the corporation is studying the coal deposits located in Santo Domingo, in the southern part of Tachira; the calcareous zone in Capacho; and the gypsum deposit in San Pablo, near the Pereno River.

"These prospecting studies have yielded results in the case of coal; geological reserves are estimated at 282 million metric tons. From the quantitative and qualitative point of view, this mineral is a fuel capable of replacing traditional sources of energy such as petroleum and natural gas.

"Concerning the calcareous deposit of Capacho," he added, "geological reserves amounting to 78 million metric tons were discovered. In the San Pablo area, reserves are estimated at 5 million metric tons."

According to Colmenares, the industrial exploitation of the resource has already been planned. The Electrical Administration and Development Corporation (CADAFE) considers these studies to be of the utmost importance, as are their results, because the Santo Domingo coal, given its qualities and quantities, represents a mineral of high potential for the production of electrical energy.

Along these lines, CADAFE has expressed an interest in installing a thermoelectric plant near the Santo Domingo coal deposit. The plant would utilize this mineral, which has a high megawatt capacity.

"For the initiation of this work," reported Colmenares, "a contract will be signed between CADAFE and Corpoandes, based on the results already obtained from the studies completed. When we finish the complete evaluative stage in terms of the proven reserves in industrial categories, studies will begin for the construction of the thermoelectric plant."

The economist announced that steps are already being taken to build the new cement plant in Tachira. Raw material available locally will be used.

"This project is now at the promotional level," he indicated. "The Venezuelan Development Corporation (CVF), Corpoandes, Fundatachira, the Chamber of Commerce, private institutions and some private investors will participate. The market analyses that have been completed have revealed a severe shortage of the product, which is having an adverse effect on the construction industry."

He concluded: "A strip mine for exploiting the coal of Santo Domingo, with an estimated investment of 77 million bolivars; an underground mine, with an investment of 300 million bolivars; the construction of the thermoelectric plant, slated to begin in 1983 with an investment of 90 million bolivars, these are the projects on the boards, in addition to the cement plant, whose construction will require an estimated investment of 300 million bolivars."

EL PALITO REFINERY PRODUCTION--Puerto Cabello--As a result of a change in standards being carried out by technicians hired by Corpoven at the El Palito refinery plants, the enterprise will soon increase its daily production from 17,000 barrels to 77,000 barrels, with an investment of 1.8 billion bolivars in the projects of the Punta Chavez area. This information was provided to journalists by Juan Chacin, president of Corpoven, who was accompanied by Antonio Pietri, manager of the refinery. The assembly of the new equipment, according to Chacin, will be finished by next May, and the production levels announced should be reached 3 months later. The Corpoven official announced that the polyduct between El Palito and Tacagua will come on line very soon. It will carry 70 percent of the gasoline and other petroleum byproducts consumed by the central region of the country, thereby avoiding much of the transportation by means of gondola cars and other heavy transport vehicles. In recent months these modes of transportation have been involved in disturbances as a result of surprise stoppages and strikes; furthermore, they have caused deterioration of freeways and highways. Chacin as well as Pietri expressed their satisfaction at the work completed in the expansion program of this important national refinery. They took this opportunity to announce that prizes would be awarded to long-time employees of the company, among them Elio Rojas, with 30 years of uninterrupted service at the Anaco and Puerto Cabello facilities. NEW STEAM INJECTION PLANTS--Two alternating steam injection plants will be installed by Maraven, S. A. at the Bachaquero Field in the state of Zulia. They will increase crude oil production by 60,000 barrels a day, according to William Neuman, who is assigned to the Special Projects Unit of the Development Engineering Administration of that enterprise. When the plants, known as HH-8 and LL-4, begin operation, the production rate of that area will jump to 110,000 barrels of oil per day, which represents an increase of 60,000 barrels a day over the current production level. As a consequence of greater crude oil production, the production of associated gas will rise to 60 million cubic feet per day, from current levels of 20 million. Neuman indicated that the "Bachaquero Field Development Project" is being carried out by the Special Projects Unit of the Development Engineering Administration of Maraven, S. A., which is a subsidiary of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. (Petroven). It has three basic stages: a) Definition of equipment to be used, b) Development of basic engineering concepts and project details, and c) Construction and operation, he added. "At this time we are contracting with the firm that will select the principal equipment for the plants, such as boilers, feed-water pumps, etc. The HH-8 plant will have a capacity of 4,100 tons of steam per day, while the LL-4 plant will put out 8,100 tons of steam each day. The two cover an area of 7,000 hectares. The project envisions some 1,500 wells, of which 1,000 already exist. That is, 500 new wells will be drilled. The target date for beginning operations at plant HH-8 is January 1984, while that of plant LL-4 is January 1985," concluded Neuman. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 5 Nov 80 Sec 2 p 6] 8926

NO OIL WORKERS CONFLICT FORESEEN--At this time no labor conflict among oil workers, on land or at sea, is in the offing, stated Sulpicio Ventura Quero, secretary general of the Petroleum Workers Federation (FEDEPETROL). Ventura Quero made the statement in response to a question about the unrest among members of the merchant marine who are threatening to paralyze more than 10 tankers belonging to Lagoven and Maraven. News of the threats appeared in a daily in Caracas. The oil leader stressed that a few months ago a contract was signed with the oil industry in which the workers won major concessions. Ventura Quero pointed out that no member of the FEDEPETROL executive committee has given any indication of conflicts in the oil industry due to problems with the workers or solidarity. "As secretary general of FEDEPETROL," he insisted, "I can categorically deny any information that has appeared in any newspaper involving the name of FEDEPETROL. Oil workers know that when we have a conflict or some demand to make, the FEDEPETROL executive committee does it; no middleman is necessary." He concluded by saying, "Those who want to fish in troubled waters by mentioning FEDEPETROL are wasting their time, because this is a serious and responsible federation that does not play around with illegal strikes or impulsive stoppages." NEW OIL DRILLING METHOD--Venezuela has achieved considerable savings of time and money by drilling oil wells in shale--layers of dense material similar to clay--up to 2,000 feet (600 meters) thick, using drilling mud made with gas-oil. This technology results in a 28 percent reduction in comparison with conventional water-based drilling mud, which is lost entirely when used. This advance in the technique of drilling oil wells was revealed last week in Mexico City during the Second Latin American Congress on Drilling by Alberto Soto of Maraven, S. A., a subsidiary of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. Soto reported on the experiences Maraven has had with the use of drilling fluids made with petroleum in the drilling of wells at the Motatan, Barua, La Paz, Mara and Quisiro oilfields in the state of Zulia. He compared these results with those of wells drilled with conventional fluid. Soto indicated in his paper that during the drilling of wells with water-based fluids there have usually been serious problems caused by the collapse of rigs and the bogging down of drilling pipes, because thick layers of hydrophilic shale had to be drilled through. The drilling mud to which Soto referred is 85 percent gas-oil and 15 percent water and additives that are emulsifiers and generators of viscosity. SALVADORAN ANEP: TREATY WITH HONDURAS OPENING DOOR TO PROGRESS

[Text] The National Private Enterprise Association (ANEP) has expressed its satisfaction with the Peace Treaty with Honduras. It sees the situation in these terms:

"The National Private Enterprise Association (ANEP) cannot but express its deep satisfaction with the agreement reached between the governments of Honduras and El Salvador to sign the Peace Treaty between the two countries. The historic act will take place on 30 October in Lima, Peru.

"All should pay tribute to the brilliant work of the mediator, Dr Luis Bustamante y Rivero, whose experience and wisdom enabled the two parties to find--not without great efforts and serious problems--the means to bring the two governments together.

"We have undergone 11 years of arduous struggling to heal the wounds caused by the armed confrontation, and to return meaning and life to the spirit of brotherhood that has been the legacy of our peoples since independence. The best talents, the most astute scholars and the best technical personnel of the two countries have devoted all that time to their efforts at restoring peace. Now peace beckons on the horizon like a new dawn, full of hope for the two nations.

"We still do not know on what basis the agreement was reached to sign the Peace Treaty. It is unthinkable that one or the other party made concessions that could be considered onerous or contrary to the legitimate interests of both nations (which in the final analysis are of the same nationality). However, there was one overwhelming imperative: achieve peace. Two twin nations, with total racial, geographic and historic identity, could not turn their backs on each other for the rest of time. That would have been a sin, a crime. Reconciliation was a necessity; a reconciliation with dignity, justice, decency and honor.

"The common destiny of Central America, moreover, also demanded this return to brotherhood. When the members of a family are divided, they fall prey more easily to the modern conquerors, who offer only slavery and oppression.

"The advantages of progress await Central America in the future; that progress is easier to attain through force than through unity [as published]. One of the first consequences of the restoration of peace between Honduras and El Salvador will undoubtedly be the reactivation of the Central American Common Market, to make it more dynamic and creative, with the many proven benefits that were felt before by all Central Americans.

"The functioning of this Common Market was blazing a legitimate trail toward the economic independence of the Isthmus. Now our people should advance toward that goal with renewed energy.

"The signing of the Peace Treaty gives us an excellent opportunity to review, update and adjust to our new situation in the area the instruments of the General Treaty of Central American Economic Integration (signed in Managua on 13 December 1960). As everyone knows, the countries that signed that treaty are taking unilateral steps that are adversely affecting free trade, the free mobility of people and the free flow of goods.

"The Common Market may not be the panacea for the region's socioeconomic problems, but it is one of the most effective tools for our people.

"The distance that has grown between Honduras and El Salvador during these 11 years has been, more than anything else, outside the precedents of history, or has contradicted history. All that time there has been a vacuum in the efforts and joint projects of the two countries, as well as the rest of the nations of the area, to keep up with the rapid changes of this world.

"Now the principal task must be to try to make up for lost time and struggle to overcome, on all levels, the problems of our people. We should all contribute to the best of our abilities to this work. We can only hope that in the future there will be no more problems or differences to cloud this historic brotherhood between Hondurans and Salvadorans. San Salvador, 24 October 1980."

HONDURAS TAKES MEASURES TO PREVENT INCREASE OF SALVADORAN WORKERS

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 27 Oct 80 p 24

[Text] Tegucigalpa--The Ministry of Labor has reached the conclusion that it can not indiscriminately grant employment papers to Salvadorans, as that move would spur unemployment in the country, already 18 percent.

The Secretariat of Labor is prepared to share responsibilities with the Ministry of the Interior, the Office of Migration, the National Agrarian Institute and other state institutions to design a uniform policy for dealing with Salvadoran immigration following the signing of the peace treaty between Honduras and El Salvador.

The General Employment Office, responsible for authorizing employment requests by aliens, concluded that "it cannot allow the indiscriminate granting of permits to Salvadoran citizens who want to work here."

Jorge Roberto Maradiaga, minister of labor by law, explained that the decision is based on the fact that Honduras has an 18 percent unemployment rate.

"It is not appropriate for us to make efforts to increase the work available, on the one hand, while promoting unemployment on the other hand," he added.

Policy Design

The Secretariat of Labor will suggest to other official agencies "the formulation of a policy to deal with this problem with unanimity of criteria and a critical attitude, bearing in mind the need to protect national interests."

"We cannot grant permits indiscriminately without affecting the right to work here, and adhering to the provisions of international covenants. But as we make allowances for foreign workers, we are reducing the employment opportunities available to our own workers," stressed Maradiaga.

Possibility Exists

"However, there is a possibility that in those sectors where there is qualified manpower, we may be able to grant permits after an investigation."

The legal statutes governing labor issues specify "the number of foreign workers who can work in an enterprise, and the remuneration that should be given them."

With regard to foreign technicians, the Ministry of Labor, in a mutual agreement with the Higher Council of Economic Planning, will coordinate the selection of specialized personnel, giving priority to Honduran nationals.

General Treaty

The General Treaty of Central American Integration expires in 1981. In recent weeks negotiations have been stepped up. The two alternatives are to extend the treaty for 5 years or to draw up a new one.

Although the talks are concentrating on the economic aspect, social aspects have been overlooked, to the extent that Honduran labor authorities do not know how the emigration of workers will be regulated, or how workers will be allowed to travel among the countries of the area.

The population explosion in El Salvador is still of great concern, because it tends to drive down wages in neighboring countries.

Maradiaga, referring to the truce with that country, foresees a characteristic phenomenon happening: "The recovery of our economy, but at a very high social cost." The presence of Salvadoran workers in Honduras could drive down wages and make inputs cheaper, but at the cost of increasing the number of unemployed and underemployed persons.

URUGUAY-ARGENTINA FREE TRADE ZONE AGREEMENT DISCUSSED

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 31 Oct 80 p 9

[Text] Brazil, Mexico, Paraguay and Chile have shown interest in participating through ALADI [Latin American Integration Association] in what initially will be a free trade zone between Uruguay and Argentina.

This was announced last night by the minister of economy and finances, Valentin Arismendi, who spoke at a luncheon organized by the Association of Uruguayan Marketing Managers and asserted that the pact, which will be inaugurated by the minister and his Argentine counterpart, Jose Alfredo Martinez de Hoz, this coming 5 November in Montevideo, "is a club open to other countries."

Arismendi pointed out that a country needs a major domestic market to have bargaining power.

After referring to the various possible forms of integration, he explained that Argentina and Uruguay would abolish any quantitative restrictions and establish a common tariff between the two countries but not for third parties.

He then indicated that in his opinion this agreement does not imply that Uruguay is going to deviate considerably from its liberal economic policies. In theory, trade will be diverted as there will be a preferential spread, he noted. He then posed the question whether Uruguay could open markets through free international trade without concluding these kinds of agreements.

Elimination of Incentives

He later stressed that the document hammered out with Argentine representatives comes under the ALADI clause that permits member states to resort to partial agreements and that in the document Argentina agrees to special treatment for Uruguay because it is a country with a small domestic market.

The objective of this agreement, Arismendi said, is to implement the entirety of the NADI [Tariff List and Customs Duties] code, and we do not yet know whether we will draw up lists and go about cutting customs duties by categories.

The economy minister also underscored that since this is basically a competition-oriented agreement, it would contain clauses to abolish the incentives that the two parties might have accorded their domestic enterprises inasmuch as such incentives cause distortions.

Arismendi also stressed the importance of the role that the bilateral commission (COMINTER), to be set up under the agreement, will play. He stated that as far as the clauses relating to the origin of goods are concerned, a decision was made to establish three zones: a) a white zone, which includes all products from the zone and whose origin does not have to be certified; b) a black zone, which will consist of all items not from the zone and whose origin will not have to be discussed, such as the painting and packaging of certain products; and c) a gray zone, in which the ALADI clauses will be applied, while allowing COMINTER, at the request of one of the contracting parties, to study specific origin clauses for certain products.

Transition Period

Arismendi announced furthermore that the free trade zone agreement with Argentina would be in effect for a transition period of 3 years. During this time semiannual meetings will be held to consider requests formulated by the parties for the withdrawal of concessions. At the end of the 3 years, either of the parties can withdraw from the agreement if it feels that it is not beneficial to its interests.

The minister also indicated that the two countries are willing to completely eliminate tariffs for certain categories of goods right away. In other cases, Argentina might abolish them immediately while Uruguay is given more lead time, and in still others, there could be equal residual tariffs in the two countries.

URUGUAYAN INDUSTRIES: FREE TRADE ZONE AGREEMENT FAVORS ARGENTINA

Montevideo EL PAIS in Spanish 2 Nov 80 p 15

[Text] The Uruguayan Chamber of Industries has sent the nation's economy and finance minister, Valentin Arismendi, a note with a memorandum and statistical tables, outlining the basic results of its analysis of the Draft Economic Complementarity Agreement between our country and the Argentine Republic and making public its position on the issue.

After stating that "it shares the motivations for and the considerations of the draft," it adds that "the Chamber of Industries feels that the provisions of the Economic Complementarity Agreement must take into account the wide disparity in relative strength between Argentina and Uruguay."

It adds that "fair overall results cannot be expected if ground rules are not established to level out the major differences arising from the sizes and natural resources of the two countries."

Maintaining the same critical tone and judgment, the note goes on to say that "there are also well-known imbalances in direct and indirect tax policy, prices and rates of public enterprises and services, promotional credits, development poles, exemptions on noncompetitive raw materials, etc."

The chamber feels that "these imbalances are assuredly in Argentina's favor, and a number of comparative advantages that could benefit Uruguay are ephemeral or of such minor importance that they cannot be cited as factors offsetting or attenuating the abovementioned advantages."

It goes on to say that "a partial agreement cannot sidestep the principles set forth in the 1980 Treaty of Montevideo. ALADI [Latin American Integration Association] recognizes differences between Argentina and Uruguay in declaring the latter a country of intermediate development and expressly according it preferential treatment.

"It seems quite clear that this recently reaffirmed principle cannot be ignored in the first practical step taken within the ALADI framework, not only because of what such special treatment could mean to Uruguay but also because disregard of it on this initial occasion would establish a precedent that would certainly invalidate the efforts that the country has exerted to achieve it by preventing it from demanding such special treatment in other future agreements.

"In other words, if Uruguay makes its continued membership in ALADI contingent upon recognition of its special size-related status, how can it now disregard this recognition, fail to take advantage of it and jeopardize its future bargaining power in ALADI?

"On account of the differences between the two countries, which we outlined above, a differential tariff treatment must be established, which, furthermore, is provided for by ALADI in Article 3 of Resolution 6 of the Council of Ministers."

The chamber then says that "in connection with the important sphere of raw materials supplies, the provisions of Council of Ministers Resolution 2 must be complied with, which stipulates in Article 4, Paragraph h):

'Agreements establishing commitments for the use of inputs from the signatory countries themselves must set forth procedures guaranteeing that their use is dependent on the existence of suitable supply, quality and pricing terms.'

"Moreover, we must not forget what happened with the raw materials that were negotiated in LAFTA, the prices of which were set above international prices in accordance with the tariff advantage obtained, with the resulting damage to the country's foreign exchange position.

"This issue is so vitally important that we can assert that the signing or rejection of the agreement ought to be contingent upon the origin of the raw materials.

"With regard to the issue of temporary admission, we agree that this arrangement should exist for both countries, as long as it does not create distortions in trade.

"Lastly, Uruguay must have included in the terms of the agreement that its aim is to balance trade between the two countries, a principle that ALADI has adopted, while officially designating balanced trade as a condition of the free trade program."

The chamber concludes by stating that "a quick extension of this agreement to other countries in the region is of the greatest importance in achieving our objectives and in safeguarding a country with an inadequate market, like Uruguay."

Standards of Origin Proposed

In Annex I of its note to the economy and finance minister, the Uruguayan Chamber of Industries proposes the following standards of origin:

1. Products extracted, raised or grown in the zone or that utilize exclusively zonal materials in their processing or manufacture shall be considered as originating from the zone. To this end, the necessary procedures shall be established to guarantee that their utilization is contingent upon the existence of suitable supply, quality and pricing conditions.

2. Specific requirements of origin can be established by mutual agreement in exceptional cases at the request of either of the parties, and said requirements shall be implemented through ad hoc resolutions of COMICEC.

Along with the note, the Uruguayan Chamber of Industries submitted a series of tables explaining the grounds for its proposal, all of which contained data from the sworn statements of origin presented by industrial export firms.

PERUVIAN-CHILEAN RELATIONS--Minister of Foreign Relations Javier Arias Stella revealed yesterday that there is a "total willingness" and "the best of spirits" between Peru and Chile to formalize their diplomatic relations "at the highest level." The minister, without indicating the exact date when this will take place, said: "We are working in that direction and so are they." He said that as a first step they agreed on the need to reinitiate talks by means of the Joint Peruvian-Chilean Commission, since there is a series of subjects that have not been discussed since 1978. Arias Stella said that to that end the commission will start meeting again during the first week in December. The head of Peruvian diplomacy stated that there are many problems arising from the intense traffic and tourism which have developed in the border zone, and "they must be the subject of an agreement." For example, he said that some Peruvian companies which travel from Lima to Buenos Aires via Santiago find it impossible to pick up passengers in Chilean territory. The Peruvian diplomatic chief went to Jorge Chavez International Airport on Thursday to greet his Chilean colleague Rene Rojas, who was on his way to his country. He stressed that this was a reciprocal act for a similar gesture of courtesy by the Chilean foreign minister a little over a month ago when Arias was passing through the Santiago airport on his way to Montevideo. PERUVIAN-ARGENTINE RELATIONS--Buenos Aires, 1 Oct (AFP)--New Peruvian Ambassador to Argentina Guillermo Hoyos Osores expressed his confidence in the improvement of relations between the two countries in the future. The diplomat, who arrived in this capital yesterday to assume his new duties, announced that he is the bearer of a message from his country's President Fernando Belaunde Terry to Argentine Chief Executive Jorge Rafael Videla. About the new Peruvian constitutional government, Hoyos Osores said: "It is facing serious problems but we are making headway because it is a very active, dynamic government, and moreover it was elected by an enormous power. Peru's gravest problems are the scourge of extremism as well as a very high inflation rate and the country's indebtedness," he added. The diplomat explained that "the extremism manifests itself in the activities of extreme leftist groups which stir up riots in the streets and promote strikes on any pretext, with senseless stoppages." He said that nevertheless "it has been controlled, because it is not something that has reached intolerable extremes these days." Hoyos Osores expressed his optimism about the possibility of bilateral accords between Buenos Aires and Lima, stating that "some are public and others I cannot yet announce." Hoyos Osores, who will present his credentials to the Argentine government next week, occupies the Peruvian Embassy here for the second time, since he represented his country in 1961 and 1962, during Fernando Belaunde Terry's first presidential term. L.A. EXPORTERS FEDERATION HEADQUARTERS--By the unanimous decision of Latin America and Caribbean countries, Venezuela was chosen as the new headquarters of FELACEX [Latin American and Caribbean Federation of Exporters]. The 14 nations attending the preparatory meeting of the Third Congress of the Association of Venezuelan Exporters, which is being held presently at the Military Club, showed their support by selecting our country as the headquarters of this international organization for 2 years. Attending the preparatory meeting are, among others, the delegates from Peru, Mexico and Venezuela, who stressed that the congress must bolster Latin America's terms of trade with the rest of the world, the developed countries in particular, "which in recent years have turned their backs on a policy of incentives for our exports," Dr Boris Romero, the president of the Association of Exporters of Peru, said. Thus, the top Latin American export association will have its center of operations in Caracas. FELACEX was founded 10 years ago and is headquartered in Buenos Aires. FOREIGN MINISTER SPEAKS TO OAS ASSEMBLY

PY220110 Buenos Aires NOTICIAS ARGENTINAS in Spanish 2100 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Buenos Aires, 20 Nov (NA)--Argentine Foreign Minister Carlos Pastor today warned the OAS General Assembly in Washington that the Argentine Government will reconsider its "attitude of cooperation" toward this organization if this continental forum is used for the attainment of "circumstantial political goals."

This is the speech:

Every year the OAS General Assembly gives us the opportunity for examining the development of our organization in the light of events that have taken place since the last meeting. It gives us a chance to think about the course we are following and to draw a few conclusions.

I believe that each and every one of us brings to this forum the results of these thoughts. Thus I believe that part of the purpose of this meeting is to expound these conclusions before the ministers and heads of delegations present.

The year 1980 has not been the happiest for the world. Without being overly pessimistic we could say that this year has had many dark days. This has not been a coincidence but the result of the way in which things have developed within the international community. Crises have come one after another and few have been solved: Asia has been shaken by such serious events that it is today considered as the continent which is most heavily agitated by the wars and violations of the principles of international peace and security. Yet, violence and crises are not limited to that region.

Under varying forms, violence is today part of daily life in many nations in the world. Latin America is not exempt from it. Our America, which our predecessors believed to be safe from the dangers of disruption of peace under the protection of the Inter-American Reciprocal Assistance Treaty and the OAS charter, is not the idyllic security zone that was pursued with the above inter-American instruments. The forces unleashed by the whole range of modern problems have also affected our continent and existing regional commitments have proven ineffective in protecting us from the winds of crisis that are blowing in the political and economic fields. The question that arises immediately is whether these instruments have been useful. Although it is proper to admit that they are imperfect, perhaps the answer could be found only within ourselves. How much consideration has each of us here in attendance given in our daily actions to the reasons that originated our system? We must honestly ask ourselves this question.

In the political sector, we must analyze whether the course we have chosen for the OAS is one which will promote harmonious coexistence among our governments, whether we have not forced the organization into a single direction, and whether, in so doing, we have created a climate of confrontation and schisms which are apt to create a deep skepticism regarding the value of our regional system, which should be instrumental in overcoming our disagreements and in drafting collective plans of action in areas in which our peoples have long been waiting for effective action.

Because excessive priority has been placed on one aspect of our system--as has happened in recent years--we have caused an imbalance among the other aspects or have overlooked some of the main objectives that led to the creation of our organization: collective peace and security and economic cooperation.

As the most powerful member country of the OAS has considered it useful to emphasize a certain policy, its ideas have been overemphasized in such a way that they are not in keeping with the meager results obtained in the fields of collective security and cooperation for development. On the contrary, this year has been the worst in this regard within the OAS.

Our association is based on the principle of nonintervention which has been so difficult to accept, and even today we must reiterate it once again in order to remember that without total respect for this principle this organization would weaken to the extent that it would become a mere shadow of what was been sought by its founders. Why am I making this comment? Perhaps because there is a political trend which feels that this principle must be reviewed.

The new ways of interpreting the principle of nonintervention entail risks of unleashing a useless debate with political implications and effects which will be negative for our joint efforts. Our America is multifaceted and changing. Our peoples do not always live under similar political systems, and this pluralism which encompasses many different types of governments will always be part of our continental status quo. In the past, when this has been ignored, this organization has experienced severe upheavals.

To make a habit of continually analyzing and passing critical political judgment on what takes place inside the member countries carries the germ of the organization's paralysis because, among other reasons, it reveals the lack of balance in actions of the organization that follow contingency policies lacking foresight and a sense of permanence. Perhaps these short-term policies have been advocated as an invalid alternative to disguise the lack of a true hemispheric cooperation policy, especially at the economic level.

The remarkable and noteworthy fact is that for the past 4 years the government which should have been able to help this cooperation most seems to be interested only in encouraging a policy which appears to seek the disruption of continental unity and has remained indifferent to the calls of the region for an active participation in the joint effort aimed at the development of our peoples.

The longevity of an international organization is no proof of its usefulness, nor is it a guarantee that it will remain in existence indefinitely. It seems that this organization needs a severe crisis to pull it out of its lethargy and impotence. These times of crisis are drawing closer. It could well be that this is the time for us to see if we can help to instill strength in the idea of a true multilateral cooperation on constructive issues, disregarding the disruptive factors which erode it day after day.

If our organization reaches the point of viewing itself as a supranational court capable of judging governments and taking the position of a political body higher than the states themselves, we would have encouraged it to take the shortest road to its destruction. The lack of realism has precluded long-term tasks. Those who founded this organization did not believe that it could become the sound box of disagreements and clashes. Thus, if we harbor a true desire for cooperation let us make a genuine effort to calm the spirit and dispell the atmosphere of conflict which looms on our horizon by working pragmatically for the satisfaction of urgent Latin American needs.

Mr Chairman: The promotion of essential human rights is one of the principles which inspire the American states, and this is set forth in the charter of the organization. Argentina, one of the founders of this organization which has an age-old tradition of respect for human rights which goes back as far as its birth as a nation, fully supports this principle. To safeguard and guarantee these rights for the Argentine society it has had to wage a staunch struggle when these rights were threatened by an unprecedented terrorist aggression. The Argentine people were the winners in this struggle and the process of national reorganization is developing firmly in line with the policical guidelines established in December 1979. The final objective of this process is the establishment of a true, stable and representative democracy.

In view of the above, the Argentine Government has always been ready to cooperate with those international institutions whose authority regarding the promotion of human rights stems from freely undertaken commitments and as long as these institutions avoid the temptation to pass unacceptable political judgments.

This is a very difficult and sensitive task which requires cooperation and not antagonism, because without the cooperation of the governments little can be really done in this field.

If these institutions try to turn into political censors of the governments, their goals will be distorted and this will give rise to an attitude of rejection or indifference. However, we believe that positive contributions can be made in the field of human rights if the above-mentioned pitfalls are avoided.

Mr Chairman: So far, inter-American economic relations have been based on guidelines which have done very little to supply us with the appropriate tools to overcome the severe problems of the region. The insufficient foreign economic aid during the sixties and the multilateral mechanisms, such as the special commission for consultation and negotiation created to expedite trade with the United States, have not been effective instruments for the promotion of Latin America's economic development.

The region's economic situation today demands solidary hemispheric actions to which every member of this organization must contribute to the extent possible. The special General Assembly scheduled for 1981 must establish the guidelines for these actions, drawing special attention to the significance of trade, financial cooperation and the strategies which our countries could implement for their industrialization.

At a time when there are severe problems in meeting international payments, crucial imbalances on the exchange markets and a dangerous increase of protectionism from developed countries, Latin America has become one of the staunchest supporters of the trade and development of the United States, which has been experiencing a severe deficit in its trade with the rest of the world.

The above shows the justice of the economic and financial demands Latin America has been making to effectively strengthen hemispheric cooperation in line with the OAS charter. These demands are not a mere call for solidarity from the richest partner of the organization, but a request that vigorous joint and harmonious action be developed capable of helping the development of each and every one of the countries of the region, respecting their characteristics and interests.

Faced with the challenge of current times, we must join our efforts for action. The Latin American peoples, whose development has been neglected, can no longer accept paternalistic gestures of alleged generosity. This must be understood by every one of us who has responsibility for the leadership of this joint effort. This is the only way to resolve our problems and give the world the image of a strong and united America.

Mr Chairman: We must discuss two of the severest Latin American problems. I mean food and energy shortages. There are countries whose economic and social future is tied to both problems: others are facing only one of them; few are free from both. There are millions of inhabitants in countries of this America of ours whose nutrition standards are below the basic minimum, and there are states which are unable to cope with the growing cost of the energy they must import. This somber prospect which looms over most countries, demands responsible, immediate and joint action.

Some of the members of this organization, aware of the serious nature of these crises are giving unilateral aid to help offset these shortages. Argentina is chanelling most of its food assistance to Latin America. It also helps with food in cases of natural disasters such as the recent ones in the Caribbean. It also actively cooperates in transferring technology in the fields of agriculture and livestock, aid which we have recently extended to certain countries in the Caribbean and Central America.

In the field of energy, Argentina supplies gas to neighboring countries and helps brother nations develop nuclear technology. We have signed bilateral accords which are already operational. We also firmly support the efforts of the Inter-American Nuclear Energy Commission and we would like to see its tasks facilitated by the urgent approval of the dratt amendment of its statutes. This draft was submitted to the OAS Council in 1978 and it is still awaiting a decision. However, much more must be done and the OAS must not remain aloof from the hunger of many peoples in our region or the extremely severe consequences of the energy crisis.

We would like to believe that this General Assembly will be a valuable opportunity for reaffirming America's will to struggle against the evils threatening it.

We hope this meeting will be remembered for the unanimous reaffirmation of these objectives and not as yet another meeting of clashes and disagreements detrimental to the fragile and progressively weaker hope which millions of men and women of our America place in this regional organization.

If the member countries prove to be capable of overcoming disagreements and promoting effective cooperation aimed at satisfying the needs of our peoples, we will be ready to join regional actions without restrictions.

However, if this OAS assembly is used to attain circumstantial political goals and against the basic reasons for and principles of its creation, my government will be forced to reconsider its attitude of cooperation toward the organization, which would be straying away from its responsibility for the true needs of the continent.

Mr Chairman: In order to work within the framework of effective cooperation toward the development of our peoples we must avoid useless clashes and confrontations which distort and strain the atmosphere within the organization. In other words, let us work together on the basis of the true situation of our America.

PRESS AGENCY COMMENTARY ASSESSES U.S. ELECTIONS

PY131616 Buenos Aires NOTICIAS ARGENTINAS in Spanish 0335 GMT 12 Nov 80

["Political Panorama" Commentary by Luis Garasino]

[Text] Buenos Aires, 12 Nov (NA)--On Tuesday, 4 November, the United States elected a new president: the oldest man, the first divorced man and the first actor to reach the White House. But apart from these details the question of the meaning of this election--for the world in general and for Argentina in particular--is still unanswered.

First: Reagan did not reach victory alone but is accompanied by a large group of Republican congressmen who for the first time in a quarter of a century outnumber the Democrats in the Senate and almost equal the Democrats in the House of Representatives.

Second: The defeat of the liberals--in the U.S. sense of the word--McGovern, Church, Bayh and Magnuson has been practically systematic.

Since neither Carter nor Reagan produced much enthusiasm in the voters, this means that it was the rejection of the economic conditions--recession, inflation, expansion of the role of the state--which took Reagan to the presidency.

But perhaps it could also be pointed out that the evident incompetence of the Carter administration to face such problems contributed to discrediting a system and a school of political thought which are also shared by Edward Kennedy, who will certainly be the Democratic candidate in 1984.

And let us not forget that the banner of rational administration and the limitation of state intervention were also part of the former Georgia governor's platform in 1976.

The wide margin of Reagan's victory surprised everybody, especially the public opinion pollsters, who could not predict the outcome of the election. Carter's experts were more certain; at the end of the tiring campaign on Monday, they told him that he was defeated.

The analyses could continue "ad infinitum," but the fact is that Reagan is the first "confessed conservative" to reach the White House in 50 years, and now what?

The president-elect gave a press conference 48 hours after the elections. Many topics were avoided, such as the hostages in Iran, in order not to cause problems for the one who is still the chief of state until 20 January.

In Buenos Aires some paragraphs were read with special attention, such as the one in which Reagan stresses the continuity of the human rights policy, but also the one that says "we cannot turn our backs on friendly governments just because they do not exactly share out point of view on this matter." Curiously, that question does not appear in the exclusive interview published by TIME magazine in its latest issue.

Reagan declares himself a staunch supporter of Kissinger's theory on the "linkage" of positions in international policy, that is, not to negotiate anything in isolation, but to relate some matters with others until they become a "package." Reagan said: "One cannot sit down and negotiate on armaments while pretending that the Soviet Union is not invading Afghanistan. I support and I believe in broad negotiations."

He also said that he believes that the Soviets themselves prefer to have a coherent adversary and know very well what he is doing, than have one who alternates between threats and withdrawals. Coherence, one way or the other, seems to be fundamental, but it is certainly a strange world that has lost the custom not only of seeing it but also of invoking it.

Naturally this can lead to very delicate situations. Reagan has shown himself to be a supporter of negotiations and bilateral relations with Latin America. Roger Fontaine, one of his advisers on inter-American policy, said in Buenos Aires a few months ago and repeated it in Washington that he believes that the new trend in Argentine-Brazilian relations is one of the most important facts of recent years and that this rapprochement should be encouraged. These are important statements that should be taken into consideration by those who have the responsibility of formulating and executing our foreign policy.

But above all let us not forget that relations may become much more cordial and, at the same time, commitments much stronger on the eve of a change that may be important to the relations between the superpowers.

MISTREATMENT OF HAITIAN REFUGEES SCORED

Ignored By Television

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 14 Nov 80 p 7

["Television View" column by 'Monitor': "Haitian Bashing"]

[Text]

WE WERE ABLE to make some interesting comparisons with American television news coverage this week. On Wednesday, Mike Smith reported that despite some "initial resistance" at Cay Lobos, the 102 Haitian refugees stranded there were loaded onto the government tender to be taken to Haiti. Beyond this spare information there were no pictures, no interviews and no background to the situation.

By contrast, the American networks showed Bahamian police brutally clubbing the Haitians, ordering foreign newsmen out at gunpoint and firing tear gas. The Haitians — including some pregnant women — were engaged in passive resistance to avoid being taken back to their homeland, preferring to go to the United States.

But when police came ashore in military fatigues, with automatic weapons, gas masks and clubs you would think an invasion was taking place. "Pack up and get outta here ... I said pack up and get outta here!" a policeman shouted angrily into the camera. When the newsmen boarded their helicopters, the police aimed their weapons at them to force them to take off.

There are several points to be drawn from this unfortunate incident. First, it clearly shows the divergence between ZNS's managed news and independent news coverage. TV-13 could only report a bare outline without going into detail and without getting any pictures (which they could probably have obtained from foreign stations). So, the Bahamian people remain misinformed and uninformed about events in their own country while foreigners have a good view of what is happening.

Second, where is the compassion for the plight of the Haitians themselves? There is no denying that the influx of illegal immigrants places almost intolerable strains on the Bahamas' social fabric, but that is no reason to club half-starved people into submission when they are offering only passive resistance. Violence should only have been used to counteract violence.

And third, there is no reason why reporters should not cover such a story for the public and no reason why they should be ordered out at gunpoint as if they were in a combat zone. If the police thought it imperative, they should simply have been told to leave.

On Thursday's newscast, Mike Smith noted simply that "Bahamian police have completed their exercise on Cay Lobos." No doubt the ugly scenes on Cay Lobos this week will mean bad publicity for the Bahamas as a tourist destination, but that is not the fault of the news coverage. The public — including the Bahamian public — have a right to be informed of what is going on in the world.

[Excerpt] The Official Opposition over the weekend condemned Government for the savage attack on the Haitians at Cay Lobos. And it urged every Bahamian who believes, "however remotely, in the principles of Christ and his disciples to lend their voices to the condemnation of their Government."

In a 17-page statement, the opposition Social Democratic Party said the public should condemn a Government "which knew from October 9 that over 100 human beings would starve to death without food and water, and who for nigh on five weeks sent none.

"Over 100 human beings who our Government seemed willing to allow to starve to death rather than entertain the miserly cost of feeding them."

Making the statement for his party, leader Norman Solomon said that the American Government was "almost certainly appalled" at the Bahamas Government's "callous indifference to human life."

BWU COMMENTS ON MANLEY DEFEAT IN JAMAICA

Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 11 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

BRIDGETOWN, Nov. 9 (CANA): Barbados's largest trade union today reflected on the recent change of government, following general elections in Jamaica and concluded that one of the major contributing factors was the economic crisis which developed under the Manley administration.

"Wherever there are serious economic pressures falling on a community, as there were in Jamaica, it becomes very difficult for any government that is in power to maintain its influence over its supporters and consequently a change of government becomes necessary", Barbados Workers' Union (BWU) general secretary Frank Walcott said.

Walcott's comments in his weekly press column followed the defeat (58 seats to 8) of the People's National Party (PNP) Government of Michael Manley in October 30 elections, following a turbulent year of unprecedented violence, chronic shortages of food and other imports, widespread factory closures due to the island's inability to purchase raw materials and unemployment in the region of 35 per cent.

The Union disagreed with critics of former PNP Prime Minister Michael Manley, who contend that his economic difficulties stemmed from his Democratic Socialist ideological position.

However, the BWU asserted that Manley had embarked on an ideological course "that one must be prepared to do on the basis of strength, because in the world as it stands today, political ideologies will survive on each's own power and stability or the alliance of such friends."

Walcott added: "It is clear that in today's world if a government takes a political course, it must know where its allies stand, so that if it runs into difficulties, the allies must be there to provide the assistance and support which is so essential for the maintenance of the economic life of the people.

"Let us at this stage do whatever we can to give the moral courage to the Jamaicans, so that they will rebuild their country and that the Caribbean, in the eyes of the world, will flourish as a stable and progressive area."

In welcoming the new Jamaica Labour Party (JLP) Administration which emerged from last month's poll, the BWU stated: "We hope they will continue to give freedom to their country and the workers, so that the trade union movement can be an important element in the Caribbean democracy we all hope to build."

'PRESENCIA' FORESEES NO BETTER TREATMENT UNDER REAGAN

PY130223 La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 9 Nov 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Reagan and His Policy Toward Latin America"]

[Text] Latin American countries are naturally interested in what happens in the United States, both because of their geographical proximity with the great nation of the north, and the fact that the United States carries sufficient weight to influence the entire world, especially its neighbors. Whether we like it or not, we must acknowledge this fact as part of the reality in which we are living.

This is why many have time and again asked this question: What does the future U.S. Government led by Ronald Reagan think about U.S. relations with Latin America?

One thing that has been made clear through several statements is that the United States does not list Latin America among its top priorities--that is, among those requiring priority attention. It has been stated--and this is discouraging--that greater attention will be focused on other regions such as the Middle East and China, not to speak of the U.S. European allies and their common enemy, the Soviets.

With regard to the political and economic intentions of the Reagan administration, the Latin American position has not changed; it seeks to overcome relations which are often marked by dependence and to promote interdependent relations in which the principle of equality among nations may be respected. Now, Reagan represents the most conservative, nationalist U.S. sectors who believe that achieving the greatness of the country comes above all, that U.S. greatness should be achieved, if necessary, at the cost of sacrificing foreign interests and even by force. Therefore, we wish to give warning that the fears of those who predict a return of the "big stick" policy, although adjusted to the new times, are not exaggerated.

Speaking of politics, Reagan has mentioned the desire to be free shared by all American peoples, but has failed to properly clarify the meaning of those expressions which have been stated by every U.S. administration and which have been ultimately implemented in varying, contradictory ways. This is also applicable to his remarks about human rights, which was the central issue in President Carter's foreign policy.

Several points must be considered in the economic sector. For instance, it is a fact that Latin America still needs, and will continue to need for many years to come, both economic and technical assistance, factors in development which the United States provides to a higher degree than any other country in the world. It is not known what trends U.S. aid and assistance will follow and the conditions it will impose (there has always been conditions: some can be readily accepted; others are simply tolerated because the recipients have no choice). Yet the great aspiration of all Latin peoples and of the Third World of achieving basic self-support will not be fulfilled until their raw materials and manufactured products are sold at fair prices, until an equitable relationship is established between sellers and buyers, until the much publicized "indexation," which has always been bluntly rejected by developed countries, is implemented. The question is whether Reagan will take steps toward promoting fairer treatment, whether one should expect this from a conservative, highly nationalist government closely linked to the interests of large corporations, especially multinationals. It will certainly be difficult to obtain an answer which, after all, could later be disproved--at least partially--by events.

In sum, there are sufficient indications to believe that, on the whole, the Latin American countries will not receive better treatment. On the contrary, there may be many setbacks in relation to what was intended by sectors which are more progressive and far-sighted than those represented by Reagan.

'EL DIARIO' ANALYZES U.S. FOREIGN POLICY UNDER REAGAN

PY210200 La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 18 Nov 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Justified Expectations?"]

[Text] The outcome of the U.S. elections has led to many uncertainties throughout the world. This is natural because the man who will occupy the White House in January belongs to another party, whose principles and goals are different from those of the current president; and the United States, whether one likes it or not, is one of the main powers in world politics.

But the worries seem to be much exaggerated. One has to start from the premise that the United States, under both Republican and Democratic governments, has almost always maintained a single policy, with variations in its application. Some are softer than others in the application of principles, but all agree on the general objectives of the United States: to maintain world hegemony, to inflexibly support democracy—as understood by that country—and to try to improve day by day the living conditions of its citizens. Due to the sharpening of world ideological struggle, it is probable that in recent times positions have become harder on such world problems as peaceful coexistence, the rationalization of arms manufacturing, human rights and the ideological expansion of the Soviet Union. This will be seen when the new president takes over the White House and begins to nominate his closest coworkers, the men who will form the image of the new government.

In the case of Latin America, the uncertainty is greater because many countries, among which we should include Bolivia, think that the new U.S. policy toward governments that are not the product of popular elections may change from that imposed by President Carter who, under the heading of human rights, adopted several measures opposed to those regimes. But some signs have already emerged indicating that these changes will be minor and that there will be no major innovations in the human rights policy. Judging from statements made in the past few days, the new U.S. Government will continue maintaining the need to preserve human rights and democracy, while changes in the application of this policy could lead to a withdrawal from certain measures imposed by the Carter administration. In other words, there will be a change of application but not of philosophy, and this is very important for many South American countries.

It is certainly ture that the United States has the leadership in the hemisphere and is a power throughout the world. But is is also true that during recent times many countries have understood the need to avoid in some way their extreme dependency on the past by adopting more independent attitudes, even at the risk of difficult situation in the economic sector. So countries like Chile, Argentina and others have ignored the pressures from the north and have not complied with the White House guidelines, in a clear demonstration of a great effort to achieve real independence.

It is still too early to judge Reagan's government. One has to wait for the power transfer, listen to the new president's words and carefully observe his first steps, which will mark the characteristics of the new regime. Then we will know whether current expectations of U.S. change are justified.

BRIEFS

HUMAN RIGHTS VISIT--Fernado Ortiz Sanz, permanent Bolivian ambassador to the United Nations, warned the Third Commission of the UN General Assembly that the Bolivian Government may find itself compelled to revise its position regarding the visit of the Human Rights Commission to this country. Ambassador Ortiz Sanz explained the human rights situation in Bolivia, stating first that the extremist corruption of democracy compelled the armed forces of the nation to take over the government. He then referred to the slander campaign against Bolivia mounted by extremism and imperialism [words indistinct] of calumny. He further analyzed the true interpretation of the human rights concept with regard to the needs of the developing countries. He pointed out that President Luis Garcia Meza has spontaneously invited a UN human rights commission to visit the country, thus showing that Volivia has nothing to conceal. He concluded by stating that we reject any attempt to approve a document before the visit of the commission, and he warned that in case any document of this nature is approved under sectarian pressures, the Bolivian Government would find itself compelled to revise its position regarding the visit of the Human Rights Commission to this country. [Excerpts] [PY210237 La Paz Radio Illimani Network in Spanish 0100 GMT 21 Nov 80]

ARCE, LECHIN, REYES ISSUE STATEMENTS--La Paz, 14 Nov (AFP)--Interior Minister Luis Arce Gomez said last night when he presented Juan Lechin Oquendo, highest leader of the Bolivian Labor Central (COB), to the press that the latter was an adviser to the military rather than a political prisoner, because of the wise counsel he gives officers who visit him. Arce Gomez also presented Simon Reyes Rivera, well-known leader of the Mineworkers Federation and the Communist Party at the army staff office. The latter said that he had been well treated after he was transferred from the Directorate of Political Order [Direccion de Orden Politico--DOP] to army headquarters. When asked about the conditions under which the Bolivian workers are now living and whether they support Gen Luis Garcia Meza's regime, Reyes replied that right now he lacked the necessary information to answer those questions. When the minister asked Lechin whether, in his opinion, there was social peace in Bolivia, the latter stated that social peace is always a product of justice and that it cannot be achieved while the latter does not exist. He then pointed out that labor leaders, contrary to politicians, always depend on the will of the workers. He said that my future will thus depend on whether the Bolivian workers confirm their confidence in me or withdraw it. At the end of the presentation Lechin said that he had met socially conscious officers during his detention and especially expressed his thanks for the treatment received from Col Carlos Mena, chief of intelligence at army headquarters. IMF VISIT--La Paz, 19 Nov (TELAM)--A delegation of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) is visiting Bolivia to evaluate the development of a financial monetary program signed between that organization and Bolivia in December 1979. Government spokesmen termed the delegation's visit normal, as was the visit of a delegation of the World Bank several weeks ago, and hastily made it clear that their presence in the country does not mean that a monetary devaluation will be decreed. They also pointed out that during the delegation's stay in the country they will hold meetings with the executives of the main state enterprises, but that the most important talks will be held with members of the Finance Ministry, the Central Bank, the National Economic and Planning Council and President Luis Garcia Meza. BISHOPS' SECURITY LAW STAND--Interior Minister Luis Arce Gomez praised the Bolivian episcopal conference for the letter it sent to President Luis Garcia Meza, regarding the state security law. Colonel Arce Gomez stated that he finds everything aimed at achieving social peace and tranquillity in the country to be very good. It seems to me to be very good and I congratulate Monsignor Mestre and all the bishops for their stand. The interior minister said the following regarding this important subject: [recording indistinct] He then reported that he had met with the president a few hours ago to discuss the suggestions proposed by the Bolivian episcopal conference regarding the state security law. POLITICAL STRENGTH, FUTURE PLANS OF LABOR PARTY ASSESSED

Party Strong in 15 States

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 5 Oct 80 p 1-Supplement

[Article by Gilberto Negreiros, political reporter, collaborating with the Porto Alegre, Sao Paulo, Belo Horizonte and Recife branch offices: "Labor Party Shows Strength With Organization in 15 States"]

[Text] The Labor Party (PT), already organized in 15 states, is expected to request provisional registration with the Supreme Electoral Court on the 13th of this month, making this a show of force at a time when its main leader, metallurgical worker Luis Inacio da Silva, is awaiting two trials on charges in connection with the National Security Law.

With the triple support structure made up of trade union leaders; the students and intellectuals; and the Base Level Church Communities (CEB), which have already discussed open support of the PT in Sao Paulo, the organization, which resulted from the strikes in the ABC [Santo Andre, Sao Bernardo do Campo, and Sao Caetano do Sul industrial sections], now has 40,000 members, according to its leaders, and has penetrated among the rural workers surprisingly.

Final Assessment

On Tuesday, the national leadership of the PT met at the Sao Paulo Legislative Assembly for a final assessment of the work of party organization, before sending the request for provisional registration.

The organization of the PT began in the municipalities of Osasco and Sorocaba, where workers less skilled than those in the ABC predominate, and in cells formed by the CEB. The origins of the cadres joining the PT are illustrated by a figure: a half of the party affiliation questionnaires were returned because they were incorrectly filled out.

By Wednesday night, the Sao Paulo section confirmed that 70 provisional municipal commissions had been formed, with the expectation of 50 others shortly in cities in which there is a heavy percentage of hand laborers.

One fact established by the national mapping of the PT is announced by its leaders with pride: of the 722 municipalities in Minas Gerais, the party has succeeded in organizing in 160. This figure generously exceeds the 20 percent of the municipalities required by law for each state, and in Minas Gerais, this figure is not surpassed even by the government PDS [Social Democratic Party].

In Rio de Janeiro, the PT has formed commissions in 13 municipalities and 15 of the 25 electoral zones in the capital—where commissions are equivalent to those in municipalities for purposes of registration—and has also exceeded the minimal 20 percent.

The situation in the other states in which this limit has also been exceeded is as follows: Acre, 8 commissions; Espirito Santo, 16; Santa Catarina, 55 expected; Mato Grosso do Sul, 18; Maranhao, 26; Piaui, 27; Rio Grande do Sul, 47; Goias, 47; Rio Grande do Norte, 30; Ceara, 36; and Amazonas, 15.

Leftist Sectors

Despite the participation in the national leadership of Mr Apolonio Sales, former leader of the Brazilian Revolutionary Communist Party (PCBR), the support of the PT by leftist sectors is a subject its leaders avoid. It is known, however, that there is a broad range of groups, some others and some left over from the period of urban guerrilla warfare in the '70s, which are also bearing points for the party.

A number of groups, designated representatives of the "independent left"--to distinguish them from the Brazilian Communist Party (PCB) and the 8 October Revolutionary Movement, which have moved closer to the PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement Party]--support the PT on a scale and level of action varying from state to state. These include the student factions Liberty and Struggle (Libelu), Advance and Struggle (Avanlu), the Movement for the Emancipation of the Proletariat, Socialist Convergence, the Internationalist Socialist Organization, remnants of the PCBR and Popular Action (AP) and dissident factions of the PCB.

Although the leader of the PT in the Chamber, Deputy Airton Soares of Sao Paulo, says that "demanding ideological certification is a DOPS [Department of Political and Social Order] procedure, not ours," relations with the leftist factions were on the brink of rupture in February, when the drafting of the party program was discussed.

Now State Deputy Jose Eudes, president of the provisional executive commission of the PT in the state of Rio de Janeiro, regards the participation of leftist sectors as "an advance and a force working for any party struggling for profound change." He recognizes the existence of differences, but says that "the PT does not seek to be homogeneous and can live with contradiction." And he says: "The hegemony in the PT today is Christian leftist, not Marxist."

Base Communities

Regarded as the main bearing point for the PT, the CEBs have taken on political importance, as was recognized recently by the Church itself, which promoted a private meeting on 13 and 14 September, according to all reports, at the Salesian

College in Campinas. The meeting was attended by 300 CEB leaders from 12 dioceses in Sao Paulo and 2 bishops: Dom Gilberto Pereira Lopes, of Campinas, and Dom Luiz Colussi, of Lins.

A pamphlet illustrated by a tree labeled "capitalist" with branches labeled estate ownership, large enterprises, capital concentration and political power, was distributed as a point of departure for the debate. The fertilizer for this tree was labeled laws, disunity among the workers, illiteracy and conformism, and the "fruit" was labeled expulsion from the land, unemployment, low wages, high living costs, malnutrition and disease.

Among other subjects related to the activities of the CEBs, the participation of Catholics in political parties was discussed, and the majority preference fell to the PT. The archdiocese of Campinas provided the participants with printed programs of the PDS, the PP [Popular Party], the PDP [Democratic Labor Party] and the PT--no PTB [Brazilian Labor Party] program was distributed--as well as a questionnaire entitled "New Parties," produced in pamphlet form by the Ecumenical Center of Documents and Information.

Party Base

The base cell is the key to the organization of the PT, whose statutes attribute to it the function of "deepening and guaranteeing internal democracy." With a minimum of 21 members belonging to a given electoral district, grouped "by place of residence, occupational category or social movement," the cell is seen as the spearhead of the party in the neighborhood, poor district and trade union association.

According to the statutes, the municipal officers are required to consult the base cells to direct the aldermen elected and establish the PT line in the municipalities. Influence on the state and national levels is guaranteed by Article 72: "The major decisions of the officers and legislative representatives must be made after consulting the base cells." They also establish party dues.

Catholic Participation

Although the question about the support given to the PT by the Church was viewed with mistrust and attempts to sidestep the matter, Raimundo Furtado Kappel (Mundinho), of Rio, 28 years of age and a member of the Workers' Pastorate and of the PT municipal commission in Volta Redonda, finally revealed that a half of the 51 members the party has succeeded in organizing in the city are Catholics.

Dona Albertina Santos de Lima, 38, married to a toolmaker and the mother of one child, was one of the participants in the meeting in Campinas. A member of the parish community of Our Lady of Fatima, in Vila das Belezas, Santo Amaro region, in Sao Paulo, stated with conviction: "The PT is the party embodying the goals of the people. In it I am learning about politics."

Work in the Neighborhoods

The 51 members enrolled by the PT in Volta Redonda, a municipality in which the National Steel Company alone employs 20,000 metallurgical workers, represents very few, Mundinho admits. But he commented: "A campaign was waged here to alienate and intimidate the workers. Even today the personnel who go to the trade union meetings are afraid to sign the attendance roster. In 1964 and 1968 many people were arrested on the basis of the attendance rosters."

With the agreement of Jose Emidio da Souza, president of the provisional municipal commission of the PT and also a member of the Workers' Pastorate of the Volta Redonda diocese, Mundinho said that the party will try to swell its ranks through neighborhood mobilization work. Both were politically active in the days of the now-extinct MDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement].

Although he admits that "the coming elections will be marked by a popular movement, with major participation by the Church," Mundinho denied that the bishop of Volta Redonda, Dom Valdir Calheiros, has participated in the organizing of the PT.

"It must be understood," he said, "that the Church participates in politics in the broad sense, since it is engaged in the work of mass consciousness-raising. But it does not come out for one party, because if it did it would lose maneuvering room, and what strengthens the Church is diversification.

"The PT is a party which identifies with the Workers' Pastorate because of the program, but there is no obligation to be a member of the pastorate and the PT as well. So much so that there are people there also who belong to the PMDB.

"The Church is on the side of the oppressed, and to the extent that the PT takes a stand on the oppressor-oppressed relationship, they are close," Mundinho added.

Metallurgical worker Jose Emidio da Souza admitted that "it is possible that without the peasants of the Church, the PT might not have been viable, but this would change nothing, for we would have opted for another party with which we could identify."

"The PT has a Christian majority," Mundinho put in, "but we are members of it because we believe that it represents a path for the people. A Christian must participate in politics because the greatest political act in which we can engage is labor."

Practicing the Gospel

An active participant in setting forth the demands of the residents in the poor quarters of Santo Amaro, Dona Albertina is also a member of the former MDB, but she says that only in the PT has she had "a chance to discuss our problems. I chose the PT because I want to see the country governed by the workers. There is not a single worker in Brazil who is not oppressed."

Concerning her status as a PT militant and member of the CEB, she explained: "The Church obeys the gospel and at the same time seeks to improve the life of the people. This is because evangelization means liberation. The path of Christ is a choice in favor of those who are oppressed. Living a community life, with the priests and bishops, we will find the path Christ taught, that of liberation, in faith and unity."

Also a former member of the MDB, Jose Tomas Vitorino, 52, married and the father of seven, is a retired employee of the Sao Paulo Municipal Mass Transportation Company. For 10 years he has been active in the Interlagos CEB and now he has joined the PT. "I chose the PT because it is a party which comes from the base and has the direct participation of the worker from the outskirts and the slums. The people feel that the PT is developing from the base upward."

Through the CEB Vitorino persuaded the prefecture to build a school and day nurseries. He reports that at the weekly parish community meetings the raising of the workers' consciousness with a view to political activity is discussed, "because like it or not, the people must understand politics in order not to be swept along by others' views.

"In the community," he added, "people meet through the gospel. We read the Bible and share in the problems of the neighborhoods and the people. The gospel is read and applied in practice."

Indirect Participation

Brother Francisco Cristovao Pereira, who works in the Workers' Pastorate in the industrial cities of Contagem and Betim, part of greater Belo Horizonte, admitted that "many priests sympathize with the PT, but they do not join or work visibly in the party.

"The participation of the clergy," he asserted, "occurs indirectly. The Church guides communities toward achieving a critical view and participating through legal and legitimate channels in the defense of their rights, as is the case with the trade unions and the political parties. We believe that the citizen should participate in politics, be it the PT, the PDT or the PDS."

Brother Cristovao admits, however, that the preference of the members of the CEBs has been the PT. "With a critical view of reality, the worker finds that it is the PT which is closest to him, which best corresponds to his needs and aspirations, because of the ethics, the proposals and program, the ideology of the party."

A former priest and now a metallurgical worker, the president of the provisional regional commission of the PT in Minas Gerais, Ignacio Hernandez, says that in addition to the priests, two bishops, Dom Mario Teixeira Gurgel, of Itabira, and Dom Quirino Adolfo Schmitz, of Teofilo Otoni, "sympathize with the PT."

Neither Christian Nor Atheistic, But Democratic

"The PT is not a Christian party nor an atheist one. It is a party with a vision of democracy from the viewpoint of the workers' class. For us, democracy is not an abstract word but the synonym of a reality in which we can eat, dress and live decently and say what we want. Only we do not think of democracy as the right to kill or rob others."

This is the definition of the party proposals given by the peasant leader Manoel da Conceicao, in exile until October of last year and a member today of the national provisional leadership commission of the PT. Coexistence with the leftist factions, which he recognizes as a problem, the support received from the ecclesiastical communities of the Church, which he does not deny, and the achievement of registration are stages along the path to a goal being sought with faith in the mobilizing power of the base cells. "The PT is seeking to win power, like any other party," he says.

Priority

In charge of the organizational work in Paraiba, Rio Grande do Norte and Pernambuco, Manoel da Conceicao says that the PT "is experiencing its second phase now." The first involved the establishment of the base cells throughout the country, with the enrollment of militants.

The initial idea was to establish the cells and only after that first stage to begin organizing the provisional municipal commissions. But the need to speed up the legalization of the party, according to Manoel da Conceicao, gave priority to the establishment of the commissions, even where the cells had not been organized.

"Without abandoning the task of cell organization," he explained, "we accelerated the organizational procedure to meet all the requirements of the law. Thus it will be clear that if they do not register us, it will be for political reasons."

Pernambuco is "the most difficult state," he admits, attributing the limited penetration by the PT to two factors: the linking of the "mass struggle with charismatic personalities"--a reference to former Governor Miguel Arraes and the local leadership of the PMDB--and the "diversity of concepts about the intentions of the PT"--a reference to the leftist factions.

Although he says that "the situation has improved, so much so that we now have a thousand militants in greater Recife and 600 in the interior," Manoel da Conceicao does not conceal the fact that relationships with the leftist groups which supported the PT represents an obstacle the party will have to overcome internally.

"In the PT we have factions which still insist on the mechanistic view of the party and mass organization, and regard themselves as the vanguard solely because they have mastered Marxist theory. There is a struggle, as in any party in which there are various factions, and will continue to be, causing the party to advance politically. As the non-ideologized production sectors gain an understanding of our intentions, these will begin to fade away, because they have no authority to question problems which a worker or a peasant experiences in practice."

Manoel da Conceicao stressed that "the PT does not demand nor will it that a worker define himself ideologically." Coexistence "between Christians and atheists of various sorts," he believes, is possible because "the common denominator is opposition to exploitation and the desire to put an end to it.

"I say that the PT has no ideology," he said, "in that sense that it is not only those who are Marxist who are right, not only those who are Christians who are right. This is the line which defines militant action in the PT."

Although he pays tribute to the CEBs, in which he too was active, "because that was where the organization of the workers began," Manoel da Conceicao does not think there should be talk of a Church-PT alliance. "The Church never said join the PT. There is a good relationship between sectors in our party and some bishops and priests. Even so, this is not the attitude of the Church as a whole."

He does not believe, moreover, that the Church hierarchy can restrict support by its base communities of the PT, and he comments: "After the members of the communities joined the PT, the process reversed. It is the Church which can feel flattered. I do not believe in any restriction because the Church has already concluded, in the work in its own base communities, that the solution for the country is political and not religious. If a bishop or priest agrees, fine, if he does not, matters develop just the same."

Manoel da Conceicao stressed that "what caused the PT to emerge was not the Church communities, but 15 years of the workers' claims, which neither the government nor the MDB heeded. This forced the workers to seek their own solution in the PT."

A refusal to register the PT based on the claim that it is a class party is unjustified in his view.

"We are open to all the workers in this country, from household help to the most refined intellectual. And among other things, because we have no ideology.

"We know that the government is concerned about us," Manoel da Conceicao says, "but this concern is not because of the leftist factions. The government knows that small groups, even if armed with rifles, cannot overthrow the government. But it knows that if the electoral challenge of a mass PT led by the workers is accepted, it will be defeated."

The Problem of Charismatic Leaders

Creating a space between Senator Pedro Simon's PMDB and former Governor Leonel Brizola's PDT is the challenge faced by the PT in Rio Grande do Sul, which is repeating on the same scale the battle for its own space faced by the party in Pernambuco, where former Governor Miguel Arraes, heading the PMDB, has a monopoly on the opposition.

With yet another difficulty--the apparatus Governor Chagas Freitas has made available to Deputy Miro Teixeira so that he can become his successor on the PP slate--the PT in Rio de Janeiro too is seeking its identity, in a state where it has not succeeded in winning over the trade-union leadership and where it knows it will not have the support of the ecclesiastical communities of the Church.

No Representation

The president of the PT in Rio Grande do Sul, Olivio Dutra, a banking worker removed from the presidency of his trade union by the government after the strike last year, recognizes that his party colleagues are lagging far behind the PMDB and the PDT in party organization matters, but he is not concerned.

"If we wanted to establish appointed commissions as the other parties are doing, it would be very easy. But what is important for us is organization of the base cells, even though it is slower work."

Apart from the student sector, the PT has won supporters in middle-class professional unions--bank workers, journalists and architects--and workers in the food, civil construction and metallurgical industries and also among port workers. Olivio Dutra himself admits that the trade-union base of the PT is still very fragile.

"Rio Grande do Sul urgently needs strong workers' leadership. The PT developed here among trade unionists in the tertiary sector and grew with the incorporation of sectors of the petite bourgeoisie, liberal professional and independent workers. This led to a certain blockage in the party organization due to excessive theoretical discussion."

The PT in Pernambuco does not have a single parliamentarian and will not be among the state parties strengthening the application for party registration by the Supreme Electoral Court. The explanation given by the regional leadership is that the initial effort to establish state cells failed there. They had to be reorganized, because the members of the groups organized on the basis of occupational categories had different electoral domiciles, which might have justified disqualification of the provisional commissions.

According to the president of the provisional regional executive commission, Joao Alberto Nascimento (Peixe), the municipal commissions only need to be organized by November. He explains the weakness of the PT with the argument that "the social movements there are very weak in comparison to the other states."

Peixe remains optimistic, and predicts that the most combative trade union leadership will end up in the PT, while the indications are that the 140,000 workers in the sugarcane-growing zone still regard former Governor Miguel Arraes as their leader. "We face another problem in the rural sector--the large contingent of illiterates," he commented.

Campaign in the Interior

Squeezed between the Chagas Freitas faction of the PT and the PMDB, which divide the opposition voters in Rio, the PT went to the interior, seeking compensation in such centers as Petropolis, Volta Redonda, Nova Friburgo, Campos, Cachoeira de Macacu and Cabo Frio for the shortfall in the capital, where it has established 15 provisional commissions to date out of a total of 25 electoral districts.

The party has not succeeded in penetrating the trade unions in Rio or the surrounding lowlands, although it has a cell regarded as important in Nova Friburgo, the members of which are textile and metallurgical workers. In the view of State Deputy Jose Eudes, the only PT parliamentarian in Rio de Janeiro, the explanation is simple. "The trade-union movement in Rio is still profoundly dominated by petty politics and backward welfare-style trade-unionism."

Rural Support in Minas Gerais

Contrary to the expectations of its own leaders, the PT in Minas Gerais has grown in the northern part of the state, in the rural sectors in the Jequitinhonha, Mucuri and Doce Valley regions, but has not succeeded in winning over the workers' contingents in the large and average cities. Not a single metallurgical leader has signed the membership rolls, while at least 15 rural trade-union leaders are militants in the PT.

An alternate member of the provisional national executive commission, Wagner Benevides, president of the oil workers' trade union, agrees that at the beginning the PT was made up of students and liberal professional people. "Today the situation is different. The liberal professional cells are almost at a standstill, while participation by the workers is increasing noticeably."

Rallies Fail

Recently, not even the participation of Lula could prevent the failure of two rallies held in the industrial cities of Ipatinga and Itabira. More than a week earlier, a thousand peasants participated in a rally in Itanhumi, 50 kilometers from Governador Valadares. And the leaders estimate that 50 aldermen joined the PT.

This unexpected growth made it necessary to reorganize the work of enlisting members. Metallurgical worker Inacio Agero explained that every weekend, 15 to 20 militants are sent to the interior of Minas Gerais, where they sponsor rallies to attract trade-union leaders and members. "We do this with our own money, since the party doesn't have a nickel," he made a point of noting.

Vicente Goncalves Afonso, a member of the provisional regional commission of the PT and of the Turmalina Rural Workers' Union in the Jequitinhonha Valley, gives the following explanation of the growth of the party in the rural zones:

"There are very serious land disputes here. In the past we had 'colonelism,' but it is worse now, with the arrival of the large farm and reforestation enterprises. They force people off the land and order the houses and our timber burned. Only workers united within the PT can be in a position to wage a battle against this exploitation and injustice."

April Strike Announced

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 27 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Sao Paulo—Speaking yesterday at the rally to protest the inclusion of trade union leaders under the National Security Law and intervention in the workers' unions, the national president of the PT, Luis Inacio da Silva (Lula) announced that next April "the workers will provide another demonstration of strength and will bring all the factories in Sao Bernardo do Campo to a halt with another strike."

Removed as president of the Sao Bernardo do Campo and Diadema Metallurgical Workers' Trade Union by government intervention, Lula promised the workers and other participants in the gathering at the Vila Euclides Stadium: "We will only cease to act as your representatives when you so desire. Until then, no. On the day a new slate of officers for the trade union is elected, Lula will become just another of your comrades in struggle."

People in the Streets

Lula emphasized that the rally showed that "it is not difficult to get the people into the streets when they are summoned," and he admitted: "We are not concerned about our inclusion under the National Security Law. We know that there are thousands of workers suffering hunger, in situations worse than ours, because they cannot buy a kilogram of beans at 150 cruzeiros."

The former trade union leader believes that "it is Maluf and not the workers" who should be included under the National Security Law, and he recalled the expulsion of Father Vito Miracapillo and the threat to expel Dom Pedro Casaldaliga. He went on to add: "They were expelled or threatened with it because the government says that foreigners cannot participate in politics or intervene in the domestic affairs of Brazil. And what are Volkswagen and Mercedes Benz doing here? The Foreign Statutes do not serve to protect Brazilians, but are designed to expel the foreigners who are joining with their fellow-workers in their struggle.

"We called a strike and we are being included under the National Security Law. But the treasury minister hijacks a plane, the police beat workers waiting in line to buy beans and no one says anything. This is evidence that for us workers there is only the right to have duties, and not the right to have rights."

The national president of the PT also said that "the government will need more courage: it is going to have to seize and kill people, because as long as we are free we will be at the gates of the factories, shouting until they hear us. Great endurance will be needed for the government to overcome the people." Further he asserted his confidence that the PT will be registered by the Supreme Electoral Court, and he predicted: "We will be a legal party and we will further win control of the government of this country, because the working class is the majority and cannot be governed by those who represent minority classes."

The gathering yesterday was inaugurated with a statement by the CBA [Brazilian Amnesty Committee] in Sao Paulo, and Lula's defense lawyer, Luis Eduardo Greenhalg. He spoke of the development of the trial and said that he believes it "does not affect just the 13 trade-union members threatened with prosecution under the National Security Law, but rather all of those who are struggling in this country for peace, justice, democratic freedom and against the National Security Law.

"This time the military regime must understand that it is not by means of any national security law that the voices of hundreds of thousands of workers can be stopped," Luis Eduardo Greenhalg said. The next speaker, Expedito Soares Batista, one of the deposed officers, proposed and won approval for the launching of "a general strike in Sao Bernardo do Campo" on the day the trade-union members on trial are sentenced. He then recognized the difficulties in carrying out his proposal, but even so he said that "it will be carried out, to the extent that beginning tomorrow, workers, teachers, students and housewives undertake to popularize it."

The prefect of Sao Bernardo do Campo, Tito Costa, said: "The time has come for Brazil to have a legal structure which serves the interests of the majority of its people, above all eliminating this evil National Security Law and allowing the worker to live and control his trade union, so that it can never again be turned over to a council or an interventor, who does not represent the interests of the workers."

PORTELLA DESCRIBES EDUCATION MINISTRY ROLE IN DEMOCRATIZATION

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 26 Oct 80 p 6

[Text] Brasilia--"I am a minister for democratic construction and I carry with me the inevitable misunderstanding of this campaign," Minister Eduardo Portella told O GLOBO in an exclusive interview in an assessment of the role of the Ministry of Education and Culture (MEC) in the proposed more open approach.

With this policy, according to the minister, it was necessary to undertake a democratic redefinition of the MEC, which he explains in these terms:

"The democratic muscles of Brazilian education had stiffened due to lack of use or improper use. Without a democratic environment, education and culture will never flourish. They may grow or swell self-destructively, denying their very identity. These forms can never replace the liberation and development of man.

"To carry out this democratic redefinition," the minister said, "we had to reject the perverse Manichaeism which ate away the unhealthy tissue of the weakest part of the Brazilian intellectual sector. It only understood and accepted exclusive relationships. There is no room for confluence and consensus--which is not the same as unanimity--for this or that. They are troglodytes, feeding on the constant elimination of others."

An Irrational Block

"I am speaking of this irrational block in terms of which the right wing and the left wing, both increasingly hysterical, resemble each other and blend together. I am a minister for democratic construction and I carry with me the inevitable misunderstanding of this fanaticism-plagued era. However I prefer to run all the risks of the present to making the choice of the easy path or flight by means of which mere spectators ensure their private and harmless peace. I prefer to be here rather than to join those who throw stones, those who never dirty their hands or their clothes in the hard and difficult construction of Brazilian society.

"I do not believe in authoritarian or despotic solutions. Violence was not an absolute revolutionary value, carrying within itself its own legitimacy. Therefore I am tolerant, I believe in others and in the founding function of negotiation.

"The teachers and students are the supports of national construction, along this two-way road on which teaching and learning are the firm terms of a single equation. My tolerance is a constructive tolerance, and whomever it may displease, as long as I have legs I will travel that path.

"The greater the obstacles and the threats made along the democratic path, the more intense and tireless our work must be. The transition contains within it discouraging contradictions. But it is essential not to be discouraged."

At the Discussion Table

As a concrete expression of the democratic redefinition of the MEC, the minister of education mentions discussion first of all.

"We are issuing an implicit or explicit invitation to dialog. The main subjects of education and culture have been placed freely on the discussion table. This is already a service rendered. The MEC makes no sense if it is not a democratic institution."

In the order and terms set forth by Minister Eduardo Portella, other undertakings which will implement the democratic project include:

1. A priority balance, requiring "the strengthening of the basic structures with pre-vocational training on the first level and actual vocational training on the second, without forgetting the link with the pre-school phase."

2. Target population: "This should be the most needy, the neglected regions, the rural zones, the neglected urban outskirts. Here the MEC regains its true social function."

3. Decentralization of the administrative system, beginning with the conversion of the regional offices into state ones (which will mean that each state has its own office) and a link with the Ministry of Debureaucratization with a view to "a series of measures to remove major obstructions."

4. Prior consultation with the communities involved in each decision, a "innovative practice deliberately pursued to the extreme limit of the law."

5. Mobilization of informal educational mechanisms, above all the vehicles of mass education "in a broad plan to democratize culture."

6. "The university must emerge from its traditional isolation to establish transforming cooperation with first- and second-level education, either through the revision of basic intermediate degree requirements, or through extension work."

7. "The scientific research policy must be oriented toward the specific demands of national development."

8. "The curricular structure must move away from the abstraction of the past and seek living content, with the obvious intention of bringing education closer to daily life."

The Next Stage

Attributing a preponderant role in the social aspects of the policy of more open approach to education, Minister Eduardo Portella said that in defining the stage or stages to come, it is necessary to begin with the fact that economic Brazil and social Brazil are far from being unified areas.

"I even believe that President Joao Figueiredo's great task, for which he has two irreplaceable requirements--economic objectivity and social purpose--will be to promote this historic reconciliation.

"The prevailing economic picture, aggravated at all times by external disturbances, has not allowed us to meet the social demands of education. Compensation for teachers, skilled and special public employees, remain blatantly unjust, interfering with the greater effort to raise the level of education.

"In any case," Portella concluded, "the participational education carried out by the MEC, with its stress on regionalization, in the area ranging from the socially oriented universities to the planning of ecologically sound diets for school nutrition reveal a program which is simultaneously redistributed and improvement-oriented, in the certainty that, deprived of quality, social mobility or advancement will be nothing but a hoax giving the diploma an unhealthy allure."

EMPLOYMENT IN MAJOR URBAN CENTERS DECLINES

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 24 Oct 80 p 27

[Text] Brasilia--The total employment figure for 5 of the 10 main urban centers in the country declined in the month of August this year, taking the month of July as a base. The index was down 0.32 percent in Sao Paulo, 0.58 percent in Rio de Janeiro, 0.05 percent in Salvador, 0.62 percent in Fortaleza, and 0.16 percent in Belem. The greatest increase was seen in Recife, with a figure of 0.76 percent.

These figures were released yesterday by the Ministry of Labor, based on a survey made by the National Employment System (SINE) in 7,052 enterprises, covering a total of 3,770,000 employees, located in the 10 main urban centers of the country. The study covered enterprises with more than 50 employees in the industry, civil construction, trade and services sectors.

Industry showed a drop in available employment in 7 of the 10 regions studied: the indices declined by 0.55 percent in Sao Paulo, 1.50 percent in Rio de Janeiro, 0.34 percent in Belo Horizonte, 0.41 percent in Porto Alegre, 0.53 percent in Curitiba, 0.35 percent in Salvador, and 0.76 percent in Belem.

The civil construction sector was another which showed a decline in available jobs in 7 of the 10 urban centers studied, with declines as follows: 0.80 percent in Rio de Janeiro, 1.67 in Curitiba, 0.69 in Porto Alegre, 0.22 in Brasilia, 0.08 in Recife, 2.38 in Salvador and 3.27 in Fortaleza (the largest decline noted).

Trade and services were the only sectors in which employment available was up in 6 of the 10 metropolitan regions, thus showing a decline in 4 others. The greatest increase in trade activities was seen in Recife, with 1.13 percent, followed by 1.11 percent for Curitiba, 0.92 percent for Belem, 0.41 percent for Sao Paulo, 0.13 percent for Rio de Janeiro, and 0.06 percent for Belo Horizonte. The employment available in services was up by 1.65 percent in Porto Alegre, 1.23 percent in Salvador, 1.19 percent in Recife, 1.09 percent in Belo Horizonte, 0.73 percent in Curitiba, and 0.34 percent in Brasilia.

In comparison to August 1979, moreover, 7 of the metropolitan regions showed an increase in the overall employment available. Salvador led the increase in job offers with 8.09 percent, followed by Porto Alegre with 5.88 percent, Belo Horizonte with 5.63 percent, Recife with 4.22 percent, Salvador with 2.18 percent, Brasilia with 0.89 percent, and finally Sao Paulo with 0.74 percent. The greatest decline in employment available during the period under consideration was seen in Salvador, down 2.07 percent, followed by Rio de Janeiro, with a decline of 0.14 percent and Curitiba with a decline of 0.13 percent.

Turnover

Job turnover in Sao Paulo dropped from 3.2 percent in July to 3.0 percent in August, for the overall index. The decline in job turnover in Belo Horizonte was from 3.8 to 3.3 percent, with 3.6 to 3.3 percent for Rio de Janeiro, 4.1 to 4.0 percent for Recife, and 5.8 to 3.9 percent for Brasilia. The turnover index increased from 5.2 in July to 5.7 percent in August in Belem, 4.6 to 4.7 percent in Fortaleza, 4.4 to 4.9 percent in Salvador, and 4.5 to 4.6 percent in Curitiba, with the figure remaining stable at 4.9 percent for Porto Alegre.

The traditional high turnover in the civil construction sector was maintained, with rates ranging from 13.6 percent for Porto Alegre to 8.4 percent for Rio de Janeiro in the month of August, both lower than the figures for both localities in the month of July. The lowest average turnover index in all the capitals studied was seen in the service sector, ranging from 3.5 percent in Belem to 2.2 percent in Rio de Janeiro, Brasilia and Fortaleza for the month of August.

PAPER FORESEES PRAGMATIC REAGAN FOREIGN POLICY

PY190150 Santiago CHILE EL MERCURIO in Spanish 11 Nov 80 p A3

[Editorial: "Reagan's Foreign Policy"]

[Text] The first statements by U.S. President-Elect Ronald Reagan on foreign relations imply the acknowledgement that during recent times a deterioration of the friendly relations with nations of the hemisphere has deliberately been permitted. They also imply his determination to change Washington's attitude toward the continent.

He said: "We are going to make efforts to formulate bilateral agreements with the peoples of the Americas, so that the North, Central and South American peoples can be united in their determination to be free."

The wish to create bilateral fronts in defense of free world values can be better understood within the context of the general philosophy which the new president intends to apply to the foreign relations of his administration. Even though it is true that it is not easy to find concrete references to international problems in Reagan's speeches and writings during the campaign, it is possible to discern certain guidelines regarding his intentions.

The essence of his vision of foreign policy seems to be the conviction that the Soviet Union, which is considered to be a not very trustworthy country, represents a permanent threat to the survival of the West, since the Soviet Union is the only one responsible for many of the tensions in the world today. Thus it must be a priority for the U.S. Government to oppose Soviet expansion in the world. First, it would be necessary to markedly improve the defensive capability and the military effectiveness of the United States. Second, it is necessary to establish alliances with those nations of the world that fear Soviet expansionism.

Based on the above, in his first speech as president-elect, while recognizing the fundamental values of the concept of human rights, Reagan made it clear that a coherent policy on this matter could not mean the total subordination of U.S. foreign policy to human rights.

Therefore, in his political program during the elections he stated that the Latin American, African and eastern countries would not be judged on their internal policies, but on their attitudes toward the United States. The same electoral platform specified that financial and military aid would be subject to the interests of U.S. foreign policy.

His opposition to the subversion and violence exported by Cuba and Moscow should be understood in the same way, including his declared determination to "abstain from granting aid to any Marxist government of the hemisphere," including Nicaragua.

It is possible to discern that, without Reagan's presidency marking a radical change in U.S. foreign policy--since there will always be strong elements of continuity--a new climate will preside over the international relations of that great power, and that they will be guided by practical considerations, the defense of the economic and gepolitical interests of the United States and the determination to restore the image and the reality of the United States.

'REGIME IDEOLOGIST' RESPONDS TO CRITICISM OF PLEBISCITE

Santiago ERCILLA in Spanish 22 Oct 80 pp 29-32

[Interview with 'regime ideologist' Eduard Boetsch by Rosario Guzman E.]

[Text] He is not a man who likes to grant interviews. He prefers, rather, to remain behind the scenes--directing the performance, often--staying off the stage. However, when circumstances require it, he enters the arena, lance at the ready, and assails his adversary mercilessly.

Several days ago, representatives of the former Christian Democratic Party [PDC] hurled a number of charges denouncing what--in their opinion--had been an assault on the "integrity" of the plebiscite that took place recently in our country.

ERCILLA considered it appropriate to seek out a man who, while occupying no official post, is deemed one of the present regime's most important theorists. We found a Boetrch who, without mincing words, answered all the questions we put to him.

Married, with five children, a civil engineer, 59 years old, the alumnus of the German School and the University of Chile is credited with having been the principal impetus behind Jorge Alessandri's second candidacy, with having participated actively in the civic movement that laid the groundwork for Allende's overthrow, and also with having been one of the forces behind the National Consultation in 1978.

He compares politics with oceanography. He says that the sea's mysteries cannot be uncovered through observation of the waves or storms. It is the major sea currents that determine the flora, the fauna and even the climate of surrounding regions.

"In politics," he says, "the same is true: What matters is the currents of opinion."

"Frei," he continues, "is important to the extent that he interprets the Christian Democrats and their sympathizers. The cardinal is important to the extent that he leads the Catholics."

He is troubled by the tendency of "the demagogs to seek social equality and happiness on the basis of distribution of the wealth and plunder. The glory of the creation lies in diversity." He asserts that human beings were created different, with different aptitudes: "Thus, there are great artists, and there are great businessmen, who naturally are great earners of money."

In his opinion, "A Ford has done more for his people's welfare than a thousand left-wing politicians combined. The latter devote themselves to pointing out that the workers earn little and that goods are sold at high prices." He wonders:

"If they really want to do something useful for the needy, why don't they get together and start a business that pays better wages and sells at lower prices?"

It is a subject that stirs his feelings, and he becomes animated when speaking of it. He asserts that none of the important things in life can be bought with money: "not happiness or love or the life of a child." Consequently, the idea of equalizing all human beings, having all of them earn the same, strikes him as an aberration.

"And when this view is supported by priests, I see a rebellion against the divine order, for God made men different. There are blind people, there are the insane, the deformed and the evil, and there are also beings endowed with talent, beauty and kindness. Would they all become equal if they earned the same amount?"

Cardinal in the Dock

Passionate, energetic and spontaneous, he spews forth--like a torrent--everything he is feeling and thinking at the moment. He suddenly stops after what he has said to make sure that he has not gone farther than even he would wish. He answers, attacks, "tones down," analyzes and finally gives approval to the product fabricated earlier.

[Question] What have you thought of the charges coming from opposition groups concerning possible irregularities in the plebiscite held recently in our country?"

[Answer] First of all, it should be noted that the plebiscite was condemned abroad long before it was held by people who know nothing about Chile. The same was done here, in advance, by the same people who customarily join in the chorus of international censure.

Moreover, I think the opposition is consistently saying things that do not reflect reality or that are manifestly contrary to people's views, including those of their own followers.

[Question] Whom are you referring to, specifically?

[Answer] Both some former political parties and the Church hierarchy.

[Question] What do you have against the Church hierarchy, with whom you often do battle in public?

[Answer] For many years the hierarchy had not ventured an opinion on any political issue in our country. The present cardinal, as well as the Santiago Church, had never done it. Not during Jorge Alessandri's administration, nor during Frei's nor Allende's. However, under this government not a single measure has been adopted without criticism from the hierarchy.

[Question] Why do you think this is happening?

[Answer] It's inexplicable, for what it says is clearly contrary to the thinking of most Catholics, and, at other times, contrary to the truth.

[Question] Could you cite a specific instance?

[Answer] Of course, plenty. For example, when Monsignor Santos said that the Christian Democrats had been charged an exorbitant sum for time on Channel 13 during the period preceding the plebiscite, which was completely disproved by the director of that channel and, later, by Rector Swett. Or when the cardinal asserted that the Church in Chile is persecuted. Or when Bishop Camus declared that the Allende government's abuses couldn't be compared with those of the present one. And I could give you many more.

[Question] For what purpose do you think the Church hierarchy could be inventing these charges?

[Answer] The truth is that there's no choice but to conclude that they aren't doing it to be believed here in Chile, but rather to appear abroad as victims and thus obtain the material resources needed to carry out their plans.

Staring into space, he wonders aloud, somewhat abstractedly, "Don't they realize the enormous harm they're doing to Chile? Let's not forget, and it has been said often, that the Marxist campaign against Chile wouldn't have been so successful if it hadn't been endorsed by the PDC and the Church of Santiago."

"No one in the world," he concludes, "condemns us because of what the communists say. On the other hand, they do condemn us on the basis of what those politicians and prelates I mentioned say."

Feeblemindedness

Returning to the subject of the plebiscite, ERCILLA pointed out that he had spoken of condemnation "in advance," but it should be noted that the PDC's charges had been issued "afterward." For instance, there was that concerning the obvious --and inexplicable, according to them--decrease in the number of those not voting in comparison with previous balloting.

"First of all, I want to tell you that I think criticisms of the document show feeblemindedness. The point about failure to vote that you've brought up strikes me as grotesque. If everyone could vote at any polling place in the country, it obviously was much easier to cast a vote, and thus there should have been an extremely small number who failed to do so."

[Question] What about the lack of registers of voters?

[Answer] Oh, come on! The voter registers were used to perpetrate the biggest frauds with the most serious consequences ever seen in Chile. At least, in 1970 they were even used to snatch victory away from Jorge Alessandri.

"They were used for multiple registrations," he says angrily, "for the removal of names of opposition voters, through the use of party affiliation lists; for replacement of people; for voting by dead people. All of this was seen in the 1970 fraud, which was denounced by--among others--the Christian Democrats themselves."

He concludes, emphatically, "The identity card is perfectly valid for voting, and it should always be done with it."

[Question] What do you have to say about a 14 percent increase in voters in comparison with the balloting of 4 January, 2 years ago, a percentage which, in the opinion of those leveling the charges, does not correspond to the recorded increase in population?

[Answer] I don't know if that's true. I don't have the exact figures concerning that, and thus I can't answer your question. In any case, I think it's appropriate to point out that the increase in voters over the 1978 balloting isn't strange. That vote was organized in a very short time, and, moreover, in this instance the people have expressed their views on matters of vital importance to them.

[Question] In your opinion, did both groups--opposition and government--have the same opportunity to publicize their ideas?

At this point in the conversation, Boetsch did not conceal his irritation. He seemed to be repelled by "such hypocrisy that moves those who yesterday committed monstrous irregularities to get so upset."

Two Great Losers

He sits back in his leather chair, opens his eyes very wide and says, "Why don't you ask them what National Television did during the Frei administration to show the gathering of Jorge Alessandri's supporters at the Mapocho station? It was shameful! They misled the public in the most disgraceful manner imaginable.

[Question] But that merely proves that they acted very badly. . . .

[Answer] And therefore they have no moral right to say anything. And that isn't all: This time, they used every means at their disposal to spread their ideas. This time, National Television didn't pull the dirty trick that they did. The people aren't stupid. All Chileans know in their hearts that they voted freely and that they had all the information they wanted. Now, if these gentlemen think the people are governed by slogans, they have a low opinion of our people.

[Question] Do you think there have been losers in the plebiscite?

[Answer] Yes, I think there were two big losers: Frei and the cardinal. Frei, because he came out in the Caupolican as a tool of communism and was abandoned by the body of Christian Democrats. The cardinal and the Catholic Church of Santiago, because if 80 percent of the population is Catholic, what percentage of them is following their cardinal?

[Question] Are you a Catholic?

[Answer] Yes, and I consider myself a part of that vast majority of them that feels totally free to make a decision, with a clear conscience, regarding any problem that might arise without feeling constrained by the Church leaders' political opinions.

He breaks the thread of the discussion to point out that, in his opinion, it is irrefutable proof of the integrity of the plebiscite:

"The results of the plebiscite agree fully with what the polls said, which indicates that there was no manipulation of any sort. At 1500 hours on 11 September, the Gallup firm gave the percentages for Santiago, and they coincided almost perfectly with the results."

One of the events that undoubtedly surprised the public most at that time was the resignation from the Council of State by former President Jorge Alessandri on 12 September. Eduardo Boetsch had accompanied the former head of state to the polls on the day of the plebiscite, asserting publicly that Alessandri had voted "Yes" and that he wanted the citizenry to adopt that position.

[Question] Then how do you explain his resignation on the day following the plebiscite?

[Answer] Don Jorge resigned the chairmanship of the Council of State on 12 August, but did not renounce the Council of State, as people have said. It suffices to read the text of the constitution presented by him and the one approved by the Ruling Junta and submitted for the plebiscite to understand his well-founded reasons for resigning.

Because of the brevity of our subject's answer, ERCILLA attempted to go farther:

[Question] Did it happen that Jorge Alessandri--because of his republican tradition and his experience as president of the republic--could not accept implantation of the concept of a military government in the Chilean Constitution through the confirmation in office of the commanders-in-chief for 4 years? Could that be the reason for his resignation?

[Answer] Ask him that.

Turning to an entirely different subject, we asked him his opinion of the Civic-Military Movement, which representatives of the so-called "hardliners" in the government have asserted should be a political movement.

"I don't think that the president has ever even hinted at creating an official political movement or a single government party, which would amount to the same thing. An official party is obviously a fascist party, and Chile is not a fascist country.

[Question] What do you think of those here who say that Minister Sergio Fernandez has "fulfilled what was required of him"?

[Answer] Fernandez has proven to be a great minister of the interior. He has had to deal with very serious problems, and he has solved them with notable sound judgment, patience and skill. A person with all his capabilities has much more to do for Chile. His departure from the government would be an irreparable loss and an unforgivable mistake.

PROSPECTS OF LABOR MOVEMENT EXAMINED

Santiago MENSAJE in Spanish Nov 80 pp 616-619

/Article by Jaime Ruiz-Tagle P.: "Outlook for Chilean Trade Unionism"/

/Text/ The new constitution which was submitted to a plebiscite establishes a timetable for the installation of a "protected democracy" but it will come some time in the distant future. However, changes that might occur in Chilean society do not necessarily depend on decrees or law, regardless of whether they are ratified by plebiscite or not, rather they might arise from the vitality of the social movements within it. The worker and peasant movements, the shantytown, student and cultural movements are ultimately the ones which will determine Chile's future. This is why, as a new phase in our national life is about to begin, it is a good time to look at the existing trade union situation in Chile which forms the foundation of the labor movement.[1]

In a previous article[2] we said that a new situation exists in Chile and that social forces should play a role in it. Within this new setting the classes confront each other directly without having to go through government mediation. And we said that these confrontations were isolated, not related so that they could not be interpreted as the action of a labor movement as such. In this article we would like to appraise that statement and inquire to what extent we are seeing a resurgence of this social movement. We will limit this inquiry to the urban sector and leave the agrarian sector for yet another analysis.

Organized Workers

There are no current data available on how many workers belong to unions since 1977 was the last time the Labor Directorate issued any figures. The value of these figures is limited because they do not indicate the degree of activity and because union activity was partially paralyzed during the 1973-1979 period (collective bargaining suspended, elections banned, limits on meetings and so forth). However, available data are important because they show the potential strength of trade unionism as we begin a period of greater activity.

In 1977, 709,436 workers belonged to unions in the cities or 32.3 percent of employed workers which is a high percentage. What is more in the production of goods sector (mining, agriculture, construction) trade union members accounted for two-thirds of employed workers. Workers from the industrial and mining sectors alone account for over half of union membership. So that in addition to their strategic importance, which has been historically proved, we have their numerical importance.

On the other hand, it is a good idea to study union membership based on type of union since the vitality of the "industrial" unions (or plant unions of blue-collar workers) has been greater traditionally than that of the professional unions (composed mostly of white-collar workers). "Industrial" union members represent approximately one-third of the total and are composed primarily of industrial workers and miners. In the services sector, obviously, the professional unions predominate.

Lastly, it is worthwhile to point out that in 1977 there were 1,816 industrial unions with an average of 124 members and 4,141 professional unions with an average of 117 members. The average size of the unions was small and this limited their ability to apply pressure and exert influence.

On the eve of the Labor Plan's implementation (2 July 1979), the Labor Directorate reported that there were 6,108 unions in existence, 151 more than in 1977. A year later, on 14 July 1980, the Directorate reported that 538 unions had been created. This means that since the Labor Plan went into effect the base of organized labor has expanded. Nevertheless, according to the same source, the new unions were very small with an average membership of 67.[3] This leads us to conclude that the splintering of the trade union movement is intesifying as predicted when the Labor Plan was prepared.

In short, a quick analysis of available figures shows that the number of Chilean trade union organizations is significant and they represent a high percentage of employed workers, especially in industry and mining. It also shows us that the "industrial" unions (blue collar) are not in a majority. Only in industry and mining do they represent over half of organized labor.[4] We also found that there has been an increase in the number of unions created since the Labor Plan went into effect, but these are small and weak unions.

Labor Union Elections

Information on union membership gives us an idea about the composition of Chilean trade unionism. A study of some elections results will enable us to identify it even further and, at the same time, identify its opponents.

As is known, at the end of October 1978, union elections were held in the private industry sector under government supervision.[5] The union members could not select candidates and the incumbent officials as well as anyone with a "political history" could not run for office. This was an attempt to remove ideology from the union movement and prevent its reunification.[6] According to available information, elections were held in a little over one-third of the unions.[7] Despite government restrictions, those who were in the opposition (over half) won and many were leftist sympathizers. The remainder were independents who did not support the government. This seems to indicate that traditional ideological beliefs still remain at the core of the union movement along class lines and there is no likelihood that there will be "vertical" integration into the system.

The union leaders elected in October 1978 will serve for 4 years until 1982. Those unions which did not hold elections in 1978 have been holding elections according to the Labor Plan.[8] The elections are held without candidates. This is an attempt to prevent candidates from representing specific programs and and certain ideological options. An effort is being made to remove ideology and politics from the unions so that their activities are limited to benefit and wage demands within each company.

There still isn't complete information available on the elections which have been held, but certain trends have emerged from available data. The elections have confirmed former leaders in their posts except where the nominees were chosen by the government (or when an effort specifically was made to change the leadership). The following table shows election results based on the ideology of the leaders.

We can see that the government has meaningful support only in a few unions in the financial and services sectors (State Bank and Channel 13 TV) and that in other sectors its strength is minimal or nonexistent.

The ideology of the elected leaders shows that the government's efforts to eliminate ideology from the trade union movement has not been successful thus far. Although many workers have been affected by the government's propaganda against "politicians," at election time they vote for leaders who hold clear ideological and political positions. This shows once more that the trade union movement needs political "intercession" to influence solutions to social problems which affect the workers living and work conditions.

Collective Bargaining: Results and Consequences

In a previous article[9] we wrote about the limitations placed on collective bargaining within the narrow confines of the Labor Plan. Let's not forget that government workers, both in centralized and decentralized agencies, are excluded from the collective bargaining table. Also excluded are workers in companies or institutions where in the last 2 calendar years the government funded over 50 percent of their budget. In addition, apprentices and seasonal workers are excluded as are those workers in companies with less than eight employees.

On the other hand, collective bargaining is limited to business (excluding federations and confederations) and wages and working conditions are the only subjects which can be negotiated. All kinds of obstacles block the exercise of the right to strike.

In addition to the legal aspects just cited, a factor which has had a significant impact on collective bargaining has been the high rate of unemployment. The fact that employers can replace workers easily encourages them to be rigid or repressive.

According to the Minister of Labor, during the plan's first year 2,574 joint contracts affecting some 600,000 workers were signed. This figure represents approximately 16 percent of employed workers which shows that most wage earners remained outside the system. However, those involved in the negotiations represent nearly 85 percent of organized labor which of itself indicates that trade unionism has been reactivated after a 7 year recess.

Nevertheless, the workers went into the negotiations under very difficult circumstances. They could not act outside the narrow legal framework because they were repressed as soon as they tried. They were whipped by layoffs (before and after) and with threats about layoffs or bankruptcy. Often the employers treated the workers with disdain and arrogance.

It is not possible to know exactly what financial gains were made because no information is available on what overall benefits were obtained. On wages alone the Minister of Labor said that the average readjustments were between 7 and 8 percent higher than the CPI. This figure is equal to the overall growth of the economy (according to official figures) so that there has been no redistribution of income.[11]

At the same time, since many wage earners have only received cost of living raises and since the real average increase in wages has been approximately 8 percent (according to the National Statistics Institute's ISS), this means that many workers--probably those earning higher incomes--have received larger increases than those obtained through the collective bargaining system. In this respect, collective bargaining is of questionable value.

We cannot here go into a detailed analysis of the results by production sectors. Suffice it to say that the industrial sectors receiving the lowest increases are the textile and metallurgical sectors and the most disadvantaged sector is that of the state companies. In both cases the relationship with the features of the economic model is obvious.

In general it could be said that the larger or smaller increases have depended on the structural characteristics or opportunities existing within each sector of the economy. In other words, the action of the unions would have an effect only within a complete social framework which included the economic, legal and political elements.

According to available information, the strikes did not have a significant impact on the outcome of the negotiations. In fact the strikes decreased as negotiations progressed through various stages until by the ninth and final session there were none. The decline in the number of strikes resulted from the workers awareness that the strikes were useless as a form of pressure. Reality confirmed the conclusions of experts who studied the Labor Plan.

At the organizational level,[12] by limiting collective bargaining to business and because of the closed political system, the large union organizations had difficulty in redefining their roles. Prior to this their role was to act as mediator between the workers and the government. Today they have tried to establish platforms for sectorial or national struggles but with little success except in a few instances. The difficulty in redefining their role has been agravated by the ideological differences among the leadership organizations which are no strangers to the establishment of different kinds of ties with the world trade union movement.

On the other hand, the implementation of the Labor Plan and of collective bargaining has led to a revitalization of an organized labor base. And this new life stems from the real interests of the labor base which implies that union activities are becoming more democratic. There has always been great unity at the base level and proof of this lies in the fact that several different unions have not been organized within the same production sector even though the Labor Plan makes it easy to do so. Frequently, even when several unions exist within one company or firm, they have gone to the bargaining table as one. Nevertheless, the reactivation of the organized labor base has come face to face with the limitations imposed by the legal-political framework: the lack of a mediator who can take their demands to the nation.

More specifically, the frustration over the meager results of the bargaining sessions and the fear of layoffs can lead to discouragement and demobilization. However, awareness of institutionalized repression and of sharing a common class interest might be the nucleus of new forms of struggle by which the workers can defend their legitimate rights.

From a political point of view, while it can be said that the government was successful in "involving" the workers in the Labor Plan (thereby avoiding an international boycott), it failed in its effort to break or splinter the labor union movement. On the other hand, the limitations placed on collective bargaining have made the organized labor base aware that the workers' lot cannot improve significantly without changes in the economic policy: job security, protection of the nation's industry, social security controlled by the workers and so forth. In other words, the labor union movement is beginning to present its own political platform.

There definitely are two movements. There is a reorientation of the labor movement towards an organized labor base which makes it more democratic and there is the beginnings of "politicization" of the labor movement which is trying to give birth to some struggles and exert pressure on the government. This political activity will take place relatively independent of the parties and will be under the direction of the national organizations.

If this trend is consolidated, it would be a reversal of one of the most striking features of the labor movement since the 30's starting with the birth of accelerated industrialization. For the consolidation to occur, it will be necessary for the labor movement to find new and effective forms of struggle to use in the long process that has just begun.

1. Our definition of "labor movement" is the action of all organized workers who defend their socio-economic interests at their place of work and in society at large, who fight against those with opposing views and try to create a new kind of social organization. In this respect, the "labor movement" is a facet of trade unionism and is characterized by its historical design.

4. It is necessary to point out, however, that construction workers, most of whom are manual laborers, were usually organized in professional unions.

8. At the end of the 90-day period for collective bargaining or the end of the period in which collective bargaining should have taken place, those unions which did not hold collective bargaining sessions--inter-company, independent and construction workers unions--could hold elections starting on 3 October 1979.

11. According to the Minister of Labor, the goal of collective bargaining is not to redistribute income. Instead wage increases should correspond to an increase in production. However, a study of increased productivity by sectors shows that a value has not been placed on it as should have been done which would have been reflected in wage increases. Cf. VECTOR, "The Collective Bargaining Process: Evaluation of Some Results," Economic Cycle Report, July 1980.

CNI INTERCEPTS IMPRISONED MIR MEMBERS' MESSAGES

Santiago ERCILLA in Spanish 22 Oct 80 pp 10-11

[Text] The old story of the wolf in sheep's clothing has apparently been repeated. Under the innocent wings of a "dove of peace" security officials have found two messages that seem to implicate two MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left] members being held in the Santiago Penitentiary in the three attempted bank robberies that took place on 28 July.

On 7 October, as Liliana Contreras was saying goodbye to her husband Raul Lopez in the visitors' area of the "pen," a prisoner whom she did not know asked her to take--as she had on other occasions--a bag containing nearly 30 handicraft items to the workshop department of the Vicariate of Solidarity. There, for some years, the prisoners' products have been bought as a means of helping them financially.

This time, though, the goods did not reach their destination. At the doors of the prison, National Intelligence Bureau [CNI] personnel detained Liliana Contreras on finding in her handbag a wool-and-cardboard dove that contained the messages.

It was established that one of them had been written by Mario Munoz Espinoza, arrested on 8 September and charged with participation in attempts on three banks on Santa Elena Street last 28 July. In the message, addressed to the "leadership" of the MIR, Munoz reported on the activities of the members of his cell from April through July. The dates correspond precisely to those that could have witnessed preparations for the robberies. He spoke, for example, of quartering people in his house beginning on 26 July, during which time "Juan stood guard along with the others; he prepared meals. He saw no irons until Sunday, the 27th, when he took part in the simulation. The next day the comrades left. Juan listened to everything on the radio and left that day for the south."

"Juan" is the political name of Mario Munoz, and, in fact, the day of the assaults he apparently traveled to the south.

The other message seized by the CNI had been written by the prisoner Eduardo Arancibia. Employing much more obvious language that involved no code words other than false names, he gave a detailed account of the day of the robberies: "I missed with my second shot, and the grenade didn't work as it should have (R-4 failed). I think it's another defect to overcome, for our war is always to continue until victory, but the weapons don't work."

He said, too, that they could not use the "vietnamitas" against the van that was in front of the bank and that three of his companions were beneath the van which was ready to start. Besides offering "recommendations" about security to the MIR leadership, Arancibia stated that he felt like a "snake-in-the-grass" for having surrendered Mario Munoz' house. He also asked to continue as a member of the MIR, "which is the only thing that keeps me going as a revolutionary."

In addition to these two documents, authorities confiscated a letter Arancibia was sending to relatives in which he sought to reassure them by saying he regretted his conduct and would never take part in MIR activities again once he was freed, for he considered a stage he had outgrown.

"Unjustified Nervousness"

On interrogation, the bearer of the messages said they were intended for "Patty" (Patricia Reyes, a Vicariate official). As a result, the Vicariate responded when the information appeared in a morning paper, expressing its confidence in the implicated official and casting doubt on the authenticity of the messages. It based the doubt on three facts: Arancibia was under arrest from 28 July to 4 August and was free, having contact with MIR members, until 6 September, when he was arrested again; the prisoners in section five of the "pen" knew that work sent out had been inspected on various occasions by security officials; and the Vicariate has not one, but five, people in charge of accepting handicrafts, and thus a package intended for one of them could easily go astray.

The Vicariate's position was interpreted by some media as a questioning of "the CNI story," but CNI officials told ERCILLA that such a story does not exist, for it was not they who had publicized the messages: "We"--they said--"found the documents and confined ourselves to sending the evidence to the military prosecutor and Minister Paillas, who have pressed charges against Munoz and Arancibia. They will have to institute proceedings, and, if grounds for prosecution are found, the documents should be used as proof in those proceedings."

As a matter of fact, the CNI freed Liliana Contreras at 10 o'clock because there were no charges, it has not arrested Patricia Reyes and has not lodged any sort of charge against the Vicariate or any of its employees. Therefore, to the CNI, the "nervousness in some circles" is unjustified, thus far.

ARMED FORCES ATTACK FARC IN URABA AREA

Bogota EL ESPECTADOR in Spanish 21 Oct 80 p 10-A

[Article by Jose Guillermo Herrera]

[Text] Medellin, 20 Oct—In the biggest antiguerrilla operation planned for the western part of the country, 10,000 Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps troops have begun to gain ground in the vast Uraba wilderness, with their sights set on the columns of the fifth front of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC), which are concentrated in this jungle zone.

The wideranging military operation was supported this weekend by units quartered and amassed in the Middle Magdalena section of Antioquia, which is linked through a mountainous, hard-to-reach area with the western part of Antioquia.

First Captures

Preliminary reports on the operation, which was scheduled to begin several weeks ago but had to be postponed because of the conflict that arose in the El Pato region with settlers who left their lands to avoid being the target of bombings. indicate that so far four alleged members or liaisons of the FARC have been captured, including the leader of the Democratic Front, Conrado Perez.

According to the accounts received today, the operation began on the coast of Antioquia, in the port of Turbo, and by establishing military posts and reserve stations, the troops are making headway into the mountainous jungle zone that serves as a haven for one of the most aggressive FARC fronts.

Troop movements suggest that the drive into the jungle region is beginning in the village of Currulao, in the district of Turbo, which has been the focus of several guerrilla raids that have left several police agents, army troops and civilians dead.

Fear of Bombings

A committee of councilmen from Apartado, which is 12 hours from this capital over land, cautioned today that there is uncertainty among the civilian population and asserted that if the same tactics are used as in El Pato, army bombings would force hundreds of settlers in the region to abandon their lands.

The Apartado town council representatives said today that so many troops have been deployed throughout the western part of the country that at least 500 posts have been set up in towns, districts and locations that inhabitants have to pass through.

Combined Forces

The "Voltigeros" Battalion, the largest and best equipped in the Uraba region, has been receiving reinforcements in recent days from the Colombia, Junin and Bombona tactical units, as well as from naval and airborne forces.

The councilmen who cautioned about the operation asserted that the population there has become aware of paratrooper methods and the organization of navy personnel stationed in Turbo, who will be moving into the interior of the region along the Atrato and San Juan rivers.

The most important of the many military posts set up in the region are the ones in Puerto Lleras, Pavarando, San Pedro, Arboletes, Pueblo Bello, Bejuquillo, El Gas and Los Mandarinos, which have between 200 and 600 troops.

There is also a mobile post for special missions that is off by itself in Bejuquillo in the district of Mutata.

Psychological Efforts

Although the drive against the fifth front of the FARC was scheduled to begin a few days after the offensive staged in El Pato, the conflict prompted with hundreds of settlers who marched to Neiva to protest the bombings caused its delay until last weekend.

To prevent this from happening again (since there a thousands of settlers throughout the Uraba region), the command of the Fourth Brigade, in conjunction with high-level national defense commands, prepared and implemented a program for better relations with the civilian population; this consisted of helicopter drops of leaflets explaining the activities of guerrillas and their impact on peace and tranquility among citizens.

Over the past week, several helicopters from the military forces assigned to the operation in Uraba dropped a series of leaflets concerning the antiguerrilla drive on the municipalities of Turbo, Apartado, Chigorodo and Mutata, including their most heavily populated districts and precincts.

Letter From a Former Guerrilla

Another new twist to the operation in Uraba was the presentation to the mass media of an open letter signed by an alleged former member of the fifth FARC front in which he calls on his former colleagues to put down their arms and accept the demands of life in society.

One of the leaflets picked up in the western part of Antioquia warns the civilian population that if they come across a warning to "abandon the area in 8 days," they should realize that this a FARC threat.

Landazabal Trip

Army Commander Gen Fernando Landazabal Reyes visited this capital and the Uraba and Middle Magdalena regions recently to get the latest details on the wide-ranging antiguerrilla drive.

The army commander plans to visit this area again in 2 weeks, at which time the preliminary results of the operation will surely be in.

EXPORT DATA FOR FIRST HALF OF YEAR REPORTED

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 25 Oct 80 p 10-A

[Text] Colombian exports increased 24.7 percent during the January-July period this year in comparison to the same period in 1979.

This was reported by DANE [Administrative Department of Statistics], based on national customs manifests and bulletins from the National Federation of Coffee Growers.

Exports were valued at $2.4 billion, with coffee accounting for $1.619 billion.

Coffee exports were up 41.9 percent over the same period last year.

The DANE report contains the following information:

Imports totaled $2.342 billion, a 36.3 percent increase over the January-July 1979 period.

The following table summarizes developments in seven major categories of exports:

Exports of seven of the main tariff headings (in thousands of dollars, FOB value)

Heading	January-July 1980	January-July 1979	Percent Change
Coffee, tea, mate and spices	1,619,561	1,141,601	+41.9
Mineral fuels, oils and minerals, and products from their distillation	54,456	93,673	-41.9
Cotton	--	57,159	+53.7
Garments and textile accessories	46,039	60,583	-24.0
Live plants and floriculture products	53,835	43,670	+23.3
Sugars and confectionery items	59,707	39,694	+50.4
Bookstore items and graphic arts products	23,723	28,303	+16.2

With July statistics from Turbo still out, exports were slightly above 2.517 net metric tons, a drop of 19.2 percent from the same period in 1979, due to the relative shift in the makeup of exports. At the same time, close to 3.2 million net metric tons were imported, an increase of 7.3 percent over the same period last year.

JUDGES CONCERNED ABOUT THREAT FROM CRIMINAL ELEMENT

Judges Demand Weapons

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 25 Oct 80 p 6-A

[Article by Alba Lia Medina and Hector Rodriguez Villa]

[Text] Medellin, 24 Oct--Spokesman for the judiciary today asked for Security Council, which was meeting in this capital under the chairmanship of Government Minister German Zea Hernandez, to provide judges and magistrates with weapons to confront criminals.

Defense Minister Gen Luis Carlos Camacho Leyva agreed with the request, describing it as an "acceptable security measure." He noted, nevertheless, that the central government would have to think over its decision.

The request of the judges and magistrates, which is unprecedented in the country's history, was conveyed to the governor of Antioquia, Alvaro Villegas Moreno, during a meeting prior to the opening of the Security Council, which took place at 1100 hours at the headquarters of the Fourth Brigade.

According to the governor, they also demanded greater surveillance in courts and tribunals, searches of persons entering the buildings housing their offices and open courts, special protection for threatened officials, decent furnishings for their courts, life pensions for the family members of slain judges and an end to the government's campaign of slander against judges, whom it has potrayed to the country as dishonest individuals given to corrupt practices and bribery.

The National Security Council meeting was held at the facilities of the Fourth Brigade west of Medellin, while judges and magistrates marched silently through the main streets of the capital of Antioquia with flags at half mast.

The ministers and security chiefs had a working lunch between 1100 and 1400 hours.

They later met with members of the judiciary and representatives of various Antioquia trade unions.

The sectional head of DAS [Administrative Department of Security], Col Francisco Martinez, and the commander of the Antioquia Police, Col Hector Valderrama Ocampo, submitted a statistical report on crime in Medellin.

Those attending were surprised that crime in this capital city, the site of sensational slayings, was down this year from 1979.

Over the first 10 months of the year, 100 persons have been murdered, and over the last 33 months the victims of criminals with motor vehicles totals 1,044.

Camacho Leyva Comments

Defense Minister Gen Luis Carlos Camacho Leyva accepted the request of the judges to be allowed to carry arms to defend themselves against drug trafficking gangs. He said that he thought it was acceptable for judges to carry weapons as a security measure but that this would have to be decided on by the central government.

Gen Camacho Leyva again defended the Security Statute and said that the recent assassination of a woman judge was abominable but did not show that the drastic steps that the government has taken to crack down on crime had failed.

He stated that the Armed Forces were prepared to serve the country in every area in which they are called upon, including drug trafficking.

He recalled that in recent months since the army has gotten involved in the battle against drugs on the Atlantic coast, it has succeeded in confiscating large amounts of cocaine and marihuana, as well as aircraft, ships and automotive vehicles.

The minister referred to a request submitted to the government this week by Antioquia attorneys, who asked that investigations into drug trafficking be handled and ruled on by military criminal justice.

No Reason for Alarm

Government Minister German Zea Hernandez, who presided over the National Security Council, stated that although developments in Medellin have been touchy, there is no reason for alarm inasmuch as the police, security agencies and the army are prepared to guarantee the honor, lives and property of citizens, in keeping with the constitution. He announced, nevertheless, that security measures would be taken over the next few hours.

The nation's attorney general, Guillermo Gonzalez Charry, reported on the appointment of several inspectors to monitor trials and asserted that the Judicial Police would try to clear up not only the crimes of the two judges but other recent events here as well.

The head of the Public Ministry downplayed the resignations submitted by members of the judiciary, saying that they were formalities more than anything else.

The mayor of Medellin, Bernardo Guerra Serna, said that transit police were armed as of yesterday so that they can function with real authority and not be treated abusively by drivers when they are acting in the line of duty.

He stressed the urgent need to further control the use of motorcycles in Medellin and other regional capital cities.

These vehicles have been used in connection with most of the attacks and the many slayings in various departments.

The national director of the DAS, Manuel Guillermo Gonzalez Silva, expressed serious concern over the wave of crime in the capital of Antioquia and said that gangs of criminals could be controlled in the future by boosting the number of Judicial Police units.

Change in Economic Model

Medellin, 24 October (By Gustavo Ramirez)--Former Development Minister Gilberto Echeverri Mejia today called for a revamping of the economic model and demanded an urgent solution to the serious problem of insecurity facing Medellin.

"We have to call together men who are calm and cool, men of character, so that they are not carried away by fear or panic," the former minister said.

"The country realizes that its president is a man of very good will with a desire to do the right thing," he noted.

"We have to come up with emergency solutions, of which there are two kinds, I would say: a law enforcement solution to meet Medellin's and Antioquia's security requirements, and a jobs solution, to immediately create jobs, along with wideranging programs for housing and public works," he pointed out.

Echeverri Mejia outlined his views at the Security Council meeting here to analyze law and order in this capital.

He noted that the production sector is not growing in Colombia because private savings are shifting to the financial sphere.

"The production sector has to grow and meet the demand for jobs, and if it is not bolstered financially, it is not going to be able to do this. We have to change the model," he asserted.

Slain Judge Requested Protection

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 25 Oct 80 p 6-A

[Article by Hector Rodriguez Villa, special correspondent]

[Text] The 50th criminal court judge, who was slain here, had received threats against her life but was denied protection by Antioquia authorities, the Superior Court of Medellin disclosed here.

The magistrates denied that the judge was investigating the fatal attack by hired gunmen on Jairo Marin Jaramillo, the 14th circuit criminal judge, a few days earlier.

Dr Cartagena, they said, was pursuing various lines of investigations relating to drug trafficking and was apparently slain by persons interested in halting them.

They admitted that other judges, especially municipal criminal court judges pursuing investigations of this kind, have been pressured to acquit defendants. In statements to EL TIEMPO, the chief justice of the Superior Court, Arturo Gomez, said that Medellin has what people have called "the death squad," inasmuch as many persons, those with criminal records in particular, have been found slain on the outskirts of the city.

He said that so far the authorities have not taken special security measures to guarantee the safety of judges, even though they have asked for protection on several occasions.

He noted, for example, that there is a minimal security force, young agents armed only with billy clubs, at the National Palace, where the tribunal and superior courts are located.

Gomez contended that cocaine and marihuana trafficking has taken over the country, especially Medellin, adding that the money from it can easily be used to buy off the authorities.

He disclosed that the 50th criminal court judge had a reputation of being very honest and unbending in her investigations, which included several drug trafficking cases.

He said that the Colombian Government bears a serious responsibility in the current situation because it has not given the administration of justice the elements it needs to combat crime.

He cited as an example that the Congress has refused to comply with the constitutional stipulation to earmark 10 percent of the federal budget for financing the judiciary.

"All of the government's money is being wasted on political scheming," the judge said, showing this reporter his only typewriter, which is damaged, and relating how he himself brought in the books, bookcases, paintings and rugs in his office.

"The desk behind which I work is mine, because the government has not supplied any office equipment," he added. He attributed the wave of crime in Medellin and Colombia in general to people's overriding desire to get rich quick, regardless of whether the means are illegal.

Resignations

The chief justice of the Superior Court of Medellin, Judge Arturo Gomez, confirmed that most of the judges and magistrates in this city have handed in their resignations to dramatize their displeasure with the unsafe conditions in which they have to perform their judicial functions.

"I will convene the full court by Wednesday so that it can render a judgment on the resignations, but I think that they ought to be turned down," he explained.

BARCO CANDIDACY, LIBERAL PARTY POLITICS DISCUSSED

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 29 Oct 80 p 1-B

[Article by Gabriel Gonzalez]

[Text] At its meeting yesterday the DLN [National Liberal Directorate] assessed the results of the Liberal municipal assemblies that were held successfully on Sunday and began preparations for the departmental conventions that will be staged in their capital cities on Friday, 14 November. The conventions will elect sectional directorates and delegates to the National Convention on 13 December.

Drs Victor Mosquera Chaux and Alvaro Uribe Rueda reaffirmed the desires for unity that inspire the DLN and pointed out that potential errors in last Sunday's assemblies would be corrected.

In conversations with EL TIEMPO, Mosquera Chaux said that Dr Virgilio Barco is fully entitled to submit his name as a candidate for consideration and hailed the fact that the former ambassador to Washington has accepted the already approved ground rules without reservations.

There has been talk again in recent days of the system of popular consultation to select a candidate, but all indications are that an agreement with the conservative faction is no longer possible. The Santofimio faction submitted a bill in this regard to the chamber, but it has not yet been debated. Dr Barco said in his letter to the DLN that he would be the first to accept such a procedure but that if there is no agreement, Liberalism could not ignore the rules that have been adopted to choose a candidate in a wideranging convention.

Barco will travel to Bogota Thursday evening and immediately begin a round of discussions with national leaders of Liberalism to broaden his views on a number of crucial problems on which there is still debate in the party.

Separately, the editorial by former President Carlos Lleras Restrepo in NUEVA FRONTERA (published today on the editorial pages) elicited much comment. In it he analyzes in detail the Liberal organization process and says that if attempts are made to link him to patronage battles, he would prefer to remain on the sidelines of political activity. Lleras leveled criticism at the mayor of Medellin, Bernardo Guerra Serna, and the Alberto Santofimio faction for their apparently divisive intentions. In any case, Dr Guerra Serna said that he was not going to argue with Lleras Restrepo, whom he admires and respects.

Carlos del Castillo Restrepo, a member of the National Vigilance Commission, traveled yesterday to Barranquilla to mediate in the Liberal conflict that has arisen on the Atlantic coast, and Liberal groups that withdrew from the assembly on Sunday (such as those of Name Teran, Slebi and Lebolo de la Espriella) made various statements on the crisis that has developed. As we know, at the assembly Governor Pedro Martin Leyes was accused of trying to pressure Councilman Oscar Fernandez Gonzalez, which the groups apparently took as grounds for their withdrawal.

In recent hours, Governor Martin Leyes angrily rejected the accusation, saying that "this approach is a puerile, vapid and disrespectful pretext to conceal the real reasons why several Liberal factions decided to leave the assembly." Councilman Oscar Fernandez also denied the charge in a letter to the DLN, and the councilmen from the Martin Leyes faction sent the DLN a long letter explaining the situation.

The DLN and Barco

The president of the DLN, Victor Mosquera Chuax, gave the following statement to EL TIEMPO in connection with the letter that presidential hopeful Virgilio Barco sent him on Monday:

"Dr Virgilio Barco's letter contains several points, which will be commented on when I answer it. In the first place, the letter contains Dr Barco's statement that he will abide by the rules set down by the boards of Liberal legislators on the initiative of the former presidents, the Directorate and the Central Political Commission.

"He also notes the importance of the forum that will be held in March of next year (not February) to study and draw up the program that the party will present to Liberalism and to public opinion in general for the 1982 election campaign.

"Thirdly, Dr Barco says that he will contact political leaders and travel (these are his own words) throughout our vast country to discuss national problems. This is in line with his intention to submit his name as a candidate for the Liberal Party's presidential nomination. He is entitled to do so, as have other outstanding Liberals who have decided to participate in this first stage of the presidential candidate selection process, which will culminate at the convention in September 1981. I will have an opportunity to discuss at greater length the other points that Dr Barco broaches in his letter in the response that I will issue in due time."

When asked about the possibility of his own candidacy, which some circles have been talking about, Mosquera Chaux said: "The papers always try to get ahead of my intentions and desires. I am rendering a service on the DLN, which I suppose will terminate in December of this year. So far I have no other plans."

When asked whether he might in the immediate future join the ranks of Liberal presidential hopefuls, Mosquera Chaux said: "Who can predict the future when you can't even say what's going to happen with your own life?"

Unlike Alberto Santofimio Botero, Barco pointed out that he is abiding without reservations by the rules of the game approved by Liberalism and he announced that he would travel throughout the country to converse directly with people.

Although Barco did not say outright that he is a presidential candidate, he noted in his letter to the DLN: "...I propose to again visit our vast country, to renew contacts and to hold a democratic dialog before the election campaign begins next year, and if the predominant party opinion is that I represent it in the campaign, I will do so without any reservations."

So far, Drs Augusto Espinosa, Virgilio Barco and Alberto Santofimio have thrown their hats in the ring as candidates for the Liberal nomination; other names, such as Otto Morales Benitez, are also regarded as Liberal presidential hopefuls, to judge by various statements or proposals.

The campaign for the nomination is expected to be intense from now until September 1981, when a national convention of more than 600 delegates chooses the party candidate. From that point, another campaign will begin, the open competition with the Conservative candidate, who will be chosen after the Liberal Party standard-bearer is. In any case, there will supposedly be two Liberal candidates until March 1982, because Santofimio Botero has said that he will continue until the legislative elections, which he will take as a final reference point for deciding whether to remain in the struggle or support the official candidate.

As far as Dr Augusto Espinosa Valderrama is concerned, he attended a luncheon yesterday in Bogota at the Economic Association of Friends of the Country with young professionals and university professors, with whom he analyzed Liberal politics. Tomorrow he will attend a banquet at the Guayacana Restaurant given in his honor by university professors and workers from the Comunera youth group in Socorro Province. The banquet will be staged by Alirio Rodriguez and Jaime Otero, and Espinosa Valderrama has agreed to be there.

This weekend, Espinosa will meet with members of the private sector who, headed by Hernando Castilla Samper, Jose Gomez Pinzon, Rafael Espinosa and Gustavo Pradilla, recently backed his presidential candidacy; Espinosa Valderrama will be in Cordoba on 7, 8 and 9 November, a department where his candidacy is being promoted by Senator German Bula Hoyos.

Separately, Liberal circles are anxiously awaiting a statement that former President Lopez Michelsen is preparing in New York; after 2 long months abroad, he will be returning to the country by the end of next week, perhaps.

PLN YOUTH LEADER REFUTES CHARGE OF NEGOTIATING WITH COMMUNISTS

San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 29 Oct 80 p 11

[Interview with Marcelo Prieto by Wilmer Murillo in the column "Political Wednesdays in the Repbulic"; date and place not given]

Already before his address, reports had begun to circulate about presumed negotiations by PLN youth leaders with the communists. The concern that these agreements might be in progress was shared by some of the older liberation leaders, who demanded clarification by the candidate, possibly to dispel doubts and the accumulating fears. The agreements which might have been developing through complicated alliances were apparently aborted. In these flirtations, if such existed, there was always mention of Deputy Marcelo Prieto, and in the phrase used by some, "Prietocommunism." Many believe that there must have been some kind of alliances. Otherwise, what was the point in a warning against them? Meanwhile, Deputy Marcelo Prieto, the highest leader of the PLN youth, expressed the view in this interview that Prietocommunism is a clear plot to discredit him personally along with the sectors he represents. The interview follows.

[Question] Who in the PLN, in your view, attempted to arrange alliances with the communists to the point of meriting the reprimand candidate Luis Alberto Monge felt obliged to issue?

[Answer] Monge's warning was not addressed to any personal group in particular. It was rather a statement of a general nature on which we all agree. On some occasions the PLN has made contact with various groups, not necessarily of the extreme left wing, but in the traditional antiliberation sector as well, such as the Carazo faction, with a view to waging concrete battles on various fronts. For example, the PLN university youth on one occasion participated in the elections of the student federation at the university in the All-Labor coalition, in which there were sectors which were not liberation supporters. In any case, the statement that sectors of our party youth have established firm alliances with extreme leftist groups is false. All this can be summed up in the statement that the PLN youth have been making contacts with a view to concrete struggles with sectors representing the whole political spectrum in the country always in defense of the principles of democracy and the general interests of the people.

[Question] Don't you think the statements by candidate Monge concerning the prohibition against alliance with the communists were excessive? Was it zeal or lack of confidence in the youth which caused the problem, do you think?

[Answer] I said that these statements were not addressed to any specific group. It was a general statement on which we fully agreed.

[Question] Some speak of Prietocommunism in referring to the youth movement of the PLN. Do you believe that the term is the result of ignorance or bad faith?

[Answer] Both. What is wanted is to link the word Prieto with the word communism in the minds of the people, with a view to discrediting the present and future struggles in which I may play a role. I have done nothing but struggle within the PLN so that our party can truly interpret the popular interests and become a truly social democratic party. All of us participating in this struggle have suffered from being labeled communists. Daniel Oduber did, and Monge himself, as well as leaders as outstanding as Benjamin Nunez and Armando Arauz himself. Thus it is almost traditional to accuse comrades who engage in these battles of being communists. Despite the bad faith of the charge I would not even have responded to it, because I have behind me more than 15 years of democratic struggle. Since I was 13 I have participated in politics within the PLN. I have faced the communists in the universities, in the trade unions, and in the communal development movement. Thus I have no need to respond to false charges which represent a clear attempt to discredit me and the sectors I represent.

[Question] In view of its origins in social democracy, the political ideology the PLN says it pursues, do you believe it is possible to foresee any type of agreement by this party with the communists, or at least could they coexist without antagonism?

[Answer] Social democracy is not a basically anticommunist or anticapitalist doctrine. It is a doctrine entirely different from communism and from capitalism. It calls for struggle to achieve social justice and to encourage economic development with absolute respect for democratic principles and institutions. We do not share the communist thesis that to achieve justice one must eliminate freedom. Nor do we have anything in common with the oligarchic factions which, under the pretext of defending formal democracy, oppose every social advance. We are a distinct and different alternative. The only one making possible social justice with freedom.

[Question] There are loyal social democrats and there are deviationists. Is this important within the National Liberation Party?

[Answer] My struggle all my life has been directed toward strengthening the principles of social democracy within the PLN. This is not a deviation. Quite the contrary, if not a return to the original sources of the PLN. Those who have opposed us are precisely those who have wandered from these original principles. They have abandoned the banners of social democracy and have ended up outside the party itself.

[Question] Jose Figueres said recently in LA REPUBLICA that socialism is compatible with democracy. Do you believe this is true?

[Answer] I not only share that belief but I believe that there can be no democracy without socialism, and vice versa. Democracy is the political form of socialism. Historically and philosophically, socialism is and must necessarily be democratic and the socialist idea has represented an effort to achieve the full freedom of the human individual. There are regimes which call themselves socialist but are not, such as the USSR and its satellites. What exists in these countries is not socialism. It is totalitarian state capitalism. The communists have discredited socialism by the establishment of dictatorships falsely called socialist.

[Question] Now that many people speak of the need to create a new political and social structure with more justice and solidarity, how would you outline these rejuvenating changes to adapt the party structures to these socialist realities being sought?

[Answer] The PLN needs to update its program and develop a new platform for the last quarter of the 20th century, based on the same principles which continue to be social justice with freedom. In addition, it needs internal democratization in the quantitative sense, which has been achieved with the new party statutes, and also in a qualitative sense, with the enriching of the leadership and political action organs of the party with more representatives of the popular sectors. The PLN must struggle to represent all sectors in its leadership bodies. These are the main efforts which must be made to convert the party into a truly social democratic one in the program, organizational and internal social composition sectors.

[Question] Do you believe that at a time when there is talk of dialog and consensus for moving forward it is possible to consider excluding future agreements with groups whether of the left or the right? Don't you believe this may prove a difficult task?

[Answer] Definitely. It seems to me that a future PLN government must seek the support of all sectors struggling to maintain our political democracy, to strengthen the institutions of that democracy and to promote just and socially oriented economic development. Those who do not share these desires for liberty with justice cannot support the PLN, because our party will not compromise on these principles.

[Question] Do you believe that within this line of action, the PLN can compete successfully in developing a more dedicated youth and trade union movement? Do you believe that this is realistic?

[Answer] It is not only realistic but proper. The PLN has no reason to abandon the banners of struggle. It must develop a strong trade union movement, a vigorous youth movement, and a strong communal organization of the social democrats themselves.

[Question] To what do you attribute the tensions between the executive and legislative branches?

[Answer] The Carazo administration has been characterized by absolute lack of political and administrative coordination. The government has a majority in the Assembly. It controls the most important commissions and the officers and has votes enough in plenary session to carry its undertakings forward. When the government and the president in particular attack the Assembly, they are basically attacking their own faction. What the conflicts mentioned reveal is the absolute political incompetence of the Carazo regime. The serious tensions and internal contradictions in the Unity Party make it impossible for this group to implement a serious government program. The PLN faction has always been open to dialog, but the government has taken dialog to mean silent fulfillment of and submission to its orders and preferences. And the PLN has never been ready to do this.

[Answer] It does not matter. Monge will win the elections and will be the president, whatever candidate the coalition puts up against us.

[Question] What might the effect of a resurgence of Echandi support and the development of the possible candidacy of Mr Echandi have on PLN interests?

[Answer] The resurgence of a pro-Echandi movement, attempting to rally some sectors traditionally opposed to us, clearly reveals the degree of disintegration in the Unity coalition, which no longer offers an electoral and political alternative for these sectors. The search for new alternatives is doomed to failure because as I have already said, the PLN will obviously win the elections.

PUERTO RICO VIEWED AS COLONIAL FAILURE OF U.S.

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 4 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by PRENSA LATINA correspondent Eloy Concepcion: "Puerto Rico--Colonial Failures"]

[Text] The announcement of the closing of an American factory producing watches in Puerto Rico putting more than 1,200 workers into the street adds yet another element to the chronic unemployment in the labor force of that country, which has reached 30 percent.

This enterprise, which has operated on the island for more than 20 years, has announced its transfer to the Philippines, with the approval of the colonial governor who said he respects the decisions of its officers.

Lolita Aulet, a member of the Central Committee of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party (PSP), said that the dismissal of the workers at the factory represented a harsh blow to the entire workers' class and is a result of the economic crisis on the island, which is extremely dependent on foreign capital.

Independent Party leader Ruben Berrios said that the closing of the enterprise shows that the entire colonial economic structure is now incapable of guaranteeing minimal stability.

The unemployment figure in Puerto Rico comes to 30 percent, in a country with a population of 3,200,000 inhabitants, excluding the some 2,000,000 Puerto Ricans who have emigrated to the United States.

Independent Party leader Ruben Berrios, in analyzing the unemployment situation, said that it is becoming ever clearer to Puerto Ricans that independence is the only status which will provide the mechanisms needed to combat unemployment efficiently.

The U.S. colonial plans to put an end to the increasing unemployment in Puerto Rico have failed, Berrios said.

An analysis of the standard of living of the population can be undertaken on the basis of colonial government figures, in which the increase in prices of goods of first necessity stands out.

For example, bread has gone up 19 cents per pound and a liter of milk now costs about 60 cents.

The colonial government has no solution to lower the unemployment figure and on one occasion, when the problem was discussed publicly, a secret report submitted to the colonial governor was revealed. It defended massive emigration as the only means of avoiding unemployment on the island.

According to official U.S. government figures, the cost of living went up in just 1 year in Puerto Rico by 20.3 percent, and food costs went up 36.9 percent.

Within the plan for colonial subjection, the Puerto Rican economy comes within the context of that in the United States, which controls and directs it.

The announcement of the closing of the watch factory and the loss by 1,200 workers of their jobs is yet another evidence of the failures in the U.S. effort pursued to represent Puerto Rico as a flourishing colony.

FAILURE OF U.S. SPACE SHUTTLE PROGRAM REPORTED

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 21 Oct 80 p 3

[Article in the column "Twentieth Century"]

[Text] How goes the U.S. space program? Well, not very well. Its strong point is a transfer vehicle, an apparatus launched like a rocket but which lands like a plane. Difficulties with it continue and it is badly behind schedule.

By means of this manned rocket-plane, it is hoped that several satellites can be put into orbit in a single flight, the orbits of others adjusted, and if necessary, landings on Earth effected to make major repairs. In any case, the landing craft will be devoted 75 percent to military missions.

The whole exterior of the apparatus is covered with 31,000 refractory ceramic tiles, each of a special geometric form, affixed to the fuselage. On entry into the earth's atmosphere, it would suffice for one to come loose for the entire landing craft, its contents and crew to be consumed in flames.

The most recent tests made on land showed that the cement did not measure up to the theoretical calculations. This required the removal of all the tiles, for chemical treatment one by one to remove the remaining cement, and the recementing of those which were not damaged or cracked. To date, no fewer than half of the total, some 9,500, have been found to be damaged. It will be necessary to make new ones, each to its millimetric geometric tolerance, at an additional expenditure of between $400 and 500 million. To date the investment in this troublesome child of sophisticated Yankee technology has run to $8.8 billion. A mere trifle! And no one knows where it will end. Naturally, all of these millions, representing a loss to the U.S. Treasury, are profits for the contracting firms. They also mean less money available to meet the obligations of the state to provide the limited services offered the needy people.

The problem is that, with all these delays and difficulties, the international American Telephone and Telegraph, Intelsat, RCA and Western Union companies, which plan to use the landing craft to place various communications satellites they own in orbit in 1981, are negotiating with the European Common Market countries so that, if the next tests carried out in Guyana with the launching of the Ariadne European satellite-bearing rocket are successful, they can carry out their program, which would refurbish the budget of the international companies by 25 percent.

It seems that not even the Yankee businessmen themselves are confident of a prompt solution to the many problems of the landing apparatus, and as to using U.S. rockets, it appears that they are also less economical than the European models, still in the testing stage.

UN DECISION IN SUPPORT OF POL POT CRITICIZED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 21 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by Juan Marrero: "Monstrous and Absurd Decision"]

[Text] It is well known that the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary regime has murdered 3 million persons in Kampuchea. Genocide and ferocity like this can only be compared with what Hitler did to the European peoples. But despite all this, and despite the fact that this bloody regime no longer even exists in Kampuchea, because it was overthrown, there are governments which daily claim to be democratic but show not the slightest shame in supporting and protecting these hangmen. Just a few days ago these "democratic" countries succeeded in extending the membership of the phantasmagoric regime of Pol Pot in the United Nations. This is incredible but true. And it is incredible because it is even in violation of the UN Charter. But when we see which interests are operating behind the scenes in this situation we see that it is not so incredible that the defeated Pol Pot-Ieng Sary regime retained its seat in the UN. The United States, China and a number of capitalist countries have sanctioned this monstrosity. And it is precisely among the countries who have done this that we see "democratic" Venezuela. This is not surprising, of course. The international policy of the COPEI [Social Christian Party] takes the side of the most anti-popular causes. This has been seen in the support provided to the Christian Democratic genocide of the military junta in El Salvador. It can be seen in the complicity evidenced with the judgment absolving the terrorists who dynamited the Cubana de Aviacion plane in Barbados. And now, it can be seen in the vote cast by the Venezuelan delegation at the UN in favor of those who murdered 3 million human beings and destroyed cities and cultural values in Kampuchea. And even yet these nations continue their hypocritical and shameless talk of being democratic and of defending human rights. The situation in Kampuchea is a new element in international political life which has served to force these governments which claim to be democratic to drop their masks yet once again. But in the final analysis, the vote against Kampuchea in the UN will not make it possible for these episodes of horror into which Pol Pot and Ieng Sary plunged this Asian country to recur. These men have not the slightest chance of regaining power. The Kampuchea of the people today is strong and its Revolutionary People's Council has the firm support of the people who have succeeded in surviving the long night of assassination. And in addition, people's Kampuchea has the support of the socialist community and the most progressive forces in the world. Monstrous decisions, intrigues or maneuvers such as those on which we have commented cannot change the advance of the people toward their destiny of true independence and social liberation.

JOINT SOVIET-CUBAN ARCHEOLOGICAL EXPEDITION REPORTED

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 24 Oct 80 p 47

[Article by H. Nunez Lemus: "Joint Soviet-Cuban Expedition"]

[Text] A press conference was held at the Academy of Sciences of Cuba last Friday to report on the results of a first Soviet-Cuban archological expedition on USSR territory, within the context of the scientific cooperation agreement between the academies of sciences of the two countries.

The excavation work was carried out near the Sopka II archeological monument in the Vengerovo region, Novosibirsk province, in western Siberia.

The Cuban delegation included Lourdes Dominguez Gonzalez, head of the archeology department at the ACC [Academy of Sciences of Cuba] and researcher Jorge Febles Duenas, who gave full details of this historic first expedition.

The work included the excavation of a Bronze Age cemetery (Andronov culture, in the middle of the second millenium before Christ), located in an 8-hectare area of land covered with "kurganes," the name given in the USSR to the tombs of that period, as well as other excavations at nearby sites, where the semi-buried homes of nomadic tribes of the early centuries of our era were discovered, thus fulfilling the dream of Soviet scientist and academician Aleksei Pavlovich Okaldnikov, director of the Institute of History, Philology and Philosophy of the Siberian branch of the USSR Academy of Sciences with regard to joint archeological expeditions with the USSR.

Researchers Dominguez and Febles reported that in the near future, Soviet and Cuban scientists will organize the first joint Cuban-Soviet archeological expedition on our territory.

Participants in the recently-ended expedition in the USSR representing the Soviet Union included Doctoral Candidate Vincheslav Molodin, head of the West Siberian detachment for North Asian expeditions at the Institute of History, and in all, more than 40 persons took part in the work.

During their stay in the USSR the Cuban representatives visited the corresponding institutes in Moscow and Leningrad, where they gave lectures on Cuban archeology and participated in numerous work sessions with experts from that brotherly country.

During the period between 30 May and the middle of October, apart from the work described, various ceremonies were held including a celebration in honor of National Cuban Rebellion Day on 26 July, organized by the bureau of the CPSU and the Soviet government in the region, at which the Cuban archeologists spoke.

Concerning the success achieved, Dominguez and Febles said that it enabled them to learn through practice the new methods and techniques of archeological excavation, as well as considerable material concerning other cultures. They also gained experience in the administration and leadership of complex expeditions.

Sonnia Moro, assistant director of the Institute of Social Sciences at the Academy of Sciences, was present along with the representatives and presided at the press conference.

PRESS COMMENTS ON U.S. ELECTION, REAGAN VICTORY

Reagan Style, Image

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Reagan's Victory"]

[Text] After midnight, Ronald Reagan had not only been elected president of the United States, but had also won an impressively comfortable victory.

Reagan's election probably signifies more a change in style than a change in substance in the internal and external policies of the United States.

But the large majority which he has garnered has all the marks of a mandate for Reagan to vigorously implement his political ideas.

However, it should be pointed out that during the campaign--a victorious campaign--he assumed a position of much more serenity, generosity and moderation than the conservative radicalism that characterized him in the past.

Reagan left a very favorable impression on those who followed the televised debate between him and President Carter last week.

He appeared to have great equanimity, and much less acidity and diatribe than Carter.

His success will depend to a great extent on the cabinet he chooses.

The Jimmy Carter presidency has made important achievements which will be better appreciated with the passage of time.

But it is undeniable that Carter projected an image of insecurity, frequent changes in position, ups and downs, moral arrogance (which many termed hypocrisy) and, during the campaign, a propensity for mudslinging.

The world needs a United States with a healthy and prosperous economy, and with a generous, firm and wise foreign policy.

A politician who ascends to the presidency of his country should not be judged so much for his past rhetoric, as for his actions as president.

It is to be hoped that the president will be faithful to the hopes of the majority that elected him, and that he will achieve a better distinction between style and substance than Carter was able to do.

Importance to World

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 8B

[Editorial: "The U.S. Election"]

/Text/ At this point, the electoral fracas in the great nation to the north should be reaching the climax of the turmoil which kept emotions running at a suspenseful high.

To date, the polls and surveys do not give a sure victory to either of the candidates, although indicators slightly favor Ronald Reagan. However, it is not impossible that in the end the tables will be turned.

The whole world is watching these elections, as is understandable. As President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala said, "When the president of the United States is elected, we know the most important leader of the West is being chosen. On his shoulders will weigh enormous responsibilities for maintaining peace."

It is there--the maintenance of world peace--where we find the core, the nerve center, of the foremost concern in the minds and spirits of all nations.

Is Reagan a warmonger, or does he adhere to the old axiom, "Si vis pacem para bellum;" that is, nothing ensures peace better than being prepared for war?

On the other hand, is Jimmy Carter's apparent pacifism--like Chamberlain's attitude toward Hitler at Munich--going to arouse the Russian thirst for expansion into his territory, and is that expansion going to goad the United States, tired of giving in, into war?

To that concern we must add another, which is not unrelated to peace: the economy. The economic crisis, accentuated by oil prices, the inflation that grips the United States, unemployment throughout the world, which in turn swells the ranks of the hungry.

It should be noted that these elections do not involve a clash between classes--on that battlefield there are no classist parties--but rather, they offer a choice between two attitudes, two political points of view within the strict framework of the system.

Thus, as far as Latin America and specifically the Dominican Republic are concerned, the solutions we will have to assimilate will be those that suit the supreme interests of the United States, not those that meet our needs as economically dependent countries.

It is well known that in the treatment we have been given during recent decades, there has been no difference between Democrats and Republicans.

Now, as before, we will continue to bear the burden of external inflation, coming from the United States; we will continue to be subject to the fluctuations of the prices of our basic necessities; we will continue to be markets in their eyes, not underdeveloped nations that are languishing instead of thriving, that do not have the protection of international social justice.

In conclusion, whatever happens after the American elections, we will continue to be the chorus, not the actors; the victims, never the winners; the gallery in a spectacle in which our own destiny is at stake, without our being consulted.

Significance of Reagan Win

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 07

[Editorial: "Reagan's Triumph"]

[Text] The Republican Party of the United States is joyously celebrating the spectacular defeat of the smiling occupant of the White House by its candidate.

It would seem--judging by the 400 electoral college votes--that the American people share an almost unanimous conviction that Ronald Reagan will enter the presidential mansion on Pennsylvania Avenue with a magic wand, capable of solving with a mere wave, as in the fairy tales, the overwhelming problems that confront the nation, problems which Jimmy Carter left unresolved, piling indecision upon indecision.

Inflation, a cost of living that, as people say there, makes it impossible to go shopping, unemployment approaching 8 million, and a complex and impenetrable energy problem that U.S. scholars and technologists have been unable to overcome or skirt.

To this panorama we must add the fact that it does not take a crystal ball to see that this country is on the decline, with a weak, ineffectual international policy that has been discredited even in the eyes of the small countries. These countries do not trust in a power that runs with its tail between its legs in the face of any challenge, without resisting the audacious extremism of the Reds.

Will the Reagan miracle flourish? The American people, having defeated Carter, have placed their faith in this marvel; they are hoping against hope.

And there are not a few of us who hope that the result will be the abandonment of the Keynesian economic policy which saved the United States from chaos during the thirties, when the famous Black Tuesday Crash occurred.

Now the government will haul down its colors and the private sector, without government intervention, will be the one to fight inflation, curb the rise in wages and open tight fists with new investments to create countless new jobs.

In the political sphere--and in terms of what relates specifically to us--we hope that Reagan will discredit the extreme rightists who already see him entering our countries, sword in hand, and intervening to defent or promote the governments that suit the interests of the United States. We also hope he will contradict those extreme leftists who claim that a "witch hunt" has begun, that countries that now know freedom will begin to feel the heel of the boot.

We hope, in sum, that the U.S. economy does not suffer from the enervating social upheaval that undermines or paralyzes wealth-creating production, as a result of the implementation of the Chicago School theories.

We also trust that the abandonment of the highly touted and selective human rights policy that characterized the Carter Administration will not mean that present strong-arm regimes are going to be sanctified, or that fetters will be placed on the nationalist democracies that believe in order, but within the context of liberty; that believe in force, but as a servant of law.

PENA GOMEZ ON PRD INFIGHTING, PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 13 Oct 80 pp 1, 14

[Article by Julian Cabrera]

[Excerpts] Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez warned yesterday that the current factional strife within the PRD [Dominican Revolutionary Party] could result in the loss of power and suggested at the same time a new pact among the groups vying for control of the PRD that would be similar to the 1977 one.

The PRD leader castigated severely the method being used by the factions that are trying to grab the party's leadership organizations, indicating that "it is obvious that the party's internal balance is being lost, and unbalancing the party means splitting and fragmenting it."

Continuing, the secretary general of the PRD warned that the coming about of that situation would mean for the party losing its power to govern and going over to the opposition again.

During his speech, Pena Gomez reviewed the PRD's internal situation, insisting repeatedly on the need for the party to achieve unity as an indispensable requisite to its retaining its power to govern in the 1982 elections.

He drew the line, saying that the factional struggle has now reached a point that requires the forceful intervention of the PRD's organizations and its principal leaders.

He added that unless this intervention takes place immediately, "we run the risk of a new split."

He said that "the factional dispute needs a sense of balance, of mutual tolerance, and of conviction that neither the party nor the government must be monopolized by a single faction."

Pena Gomez said that to bring about the unity of the PRD and avoid having the losing factions feel tempted to form splinter parties, "we must guarantee them a participation in the government that will be proportional to their strength, at least insofar as concerns the designation of the party nominees."

It was at this point that the PRD leader suggested the adoption of a new pact on candidates to party nominations that would, in this case however, be agreed among the factions.

(Prior to the PRD's 9th congress in 1977, Dr Pena Gomez obtained agreement in a pact among nominee candidates Antonio Guzman, Salvador Jorge Blanco, Jacobo Majluta and Marcio Mejia Ricart.)

The PRD's secretary general pointed out that it is incumbent on the Executive Committee and the National Convention to compel the candidates for nominations and the factional leaders to subscribe to this new pact, so that it cannot be violated by any of the winners.

"Faithfully to the PRD's internal democracy, the party's presidential nominee must be given to that candidate for the nomination who obtains an absolute majority of the party's vote, that is, half the votes plus one," Pena Gomez asserted.

He proposed that, based on the first ballot and taking into account those candidates having obtained more than 20 percent of the votes, the party nomination for the vice presidency of the Republic should go to the second or third of these, with a solemn written promise that in case of victory his followers would be allocated a certain number of ministerial portfolios or general directorates.

He said the third position would be that of party nominee for the Federal District, which would go to the second or third of the above candidates who had not been nominated for the vice presidency of the Republic.

Lastly, Pena Gomez indicated that the candidate among the above who came in fourth in the first ballot, or one of his followers, would be designated the party nominee for senator for the Federal District with the option of converting this to president of the Congress.

He clarified that in the event two or three nominee candidates obtain 20 percent of the votes, the general secretariat would designate, with the advice of the National Executive Committee, the party nominees for the above positions, without necessarily taking into account the leaders of organized factions.

Pena Gomez deemed that the new pact he is proposing would provide to the PRD's principal leaders and their followers a certain guarantee of participation in the exercise of power and of real incorporation in the mechanisms of government, "which will not occur if we abandon ourselves to selection of the party nominees by the free play of the struggle among factions imbued with a false sense of democracy that would only contribute to our definitive fragmentation."

He warned that to meet the difficult challenge awaiting the PRD in 1982 "we must build a strong financial position, beginning now to make the necessary sacrifices to accrue the indispensable resources for the electoral campaign."

There were moments in which Pena Gomez's intervention prevented conflicts between the members of different factions.

The PRD leader took the microphone on the main rostrum of the proceedings and ordered the withdrawal of all posters bearing slogans.

In short, the meeting proceeded normally and as soon as it had ended the demonstrators withdrew toward their respective militant committees.

MAJLUTA, SONIA GUZMAN DENY AGREEMENT TO HEAD PRD

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 15 Oct 88 pp 1, 12

[Article by Luis Ovidio Sigaran]

[Excerpt] Vice President Jacobo Majluta and the administrative under secretary of the presidency, attorney Sonia Guzman de Hernandez, denied yesterday, in separate statements, that a 1982 electoral ticket headed by them has been drawn up.

Majluta said "there has never been any discussion in that regard. The fact is that the first information I have had on this question is what I have read" in the daily EL SOL.

For her part, Under Secretary Guzman de Hernandez, daughter of the president of the Republic, indicated she had been surprised to read the report and had ascribed it to "mere speculation." EL SOL published a report yesterday alleging that circles close to the National Palace, principally in the PRD [Dominican Revolutionary Party] sector, are trying to put together an electoral ticket with Vice President Majluta at its head. His running mate would be attorney Sonia Guzman and Majluta factions within the PRD.

This ticket would unite the Guzman and Majluta factions within the PRD.

The administrative under secretary of the presidency stated that "there are many persons in the PRD much more qualified" than she to be the vice presidential candidate on a PRD ticket in the forthcoming elections.

She also said her greatest aspiration is "nothing more nor less than, once her public administrative duties, helping this government in whatever way I can, have ended, to withdraw to the peace and quiet of my home and of my professorship."

This is why--she insisted--she considers the report to be just another speculation among the many that are circulating relative to the coming elections.

Majluta, interviewed at his National Palace office, indicated that "it is very premature to discuss this kind of thing."

He deems it even "somewhat discourteous," in that if one does not know another's plans, he should not express an opinion about them.

He was very firm in asserting there has been no discussion of putting together a ticket with him as the presidential nominee and Sonia Guzman as the vice presidential one.

Nevertheless, he said that with him heading it any ticket is feasible.

He claimed not to know the origin of the report, but conceded that the author of the newspaper article is a responsible person.

On the other hand, he said that a "ticket by which our faction would have the presidency and that of (Mr) Antonio the vice presidency" would be a logical one to put forth.

This is what he views as "logical and natural, but I cannot speak for the president or his faction, because it would be a lack of courtesy on my part--as much so as it would be on their part to make plans involving me."

This is so because his faction is independent of all the others; "what it is not independent of" is the PRD.

He stated that such a ticket could be drawn up based on faction, that is, based on position.

Majluta said that obviously the president's faction is in a disadvantageous position with respect to the possibility of obtaining the presidency for the simple reason that its top leader is President Guzman himself.

Since there is no reelection, he said, the president is not playing for those stakes in the political game and there are therefore more than one aspirant to the nomination in his faction, while in his own there is only one such aspirant, who is he himself, Majluta.

The vice president also considers it logical that since the ticket was inverted in the last election, it should be changed in the coming one.

He affirmed that he has always been in favor of participation by all the factions, because all the factions are the party.

He indicated that everyone in the PRD belongs to some faction, except Pena Gomez, "but I believe that even Pena Gomez will end up having to lean one way or another, in search of a balance, of course, with which I fully agree."

He feels that the factional struggle has at times taken highly disagreeable turns, as in the case of attorney Matuey Decamp's attack on the president of the Republic.

He referred to the statement made by the president of the Chamber of Deputies to the effect that there is talk of dissolving the Chambers.

Majluta said this was an attempt against himself by Matuey Decamps and that he believes it may have been the product of a momentary passionate outburst.

He stated he is in agreement with the speech made by the PRD's secretary general on Sunday, except on one point: the possibility that the party may lose the 1982 elections.

He disagrees on this point because the members and leaders of the factions within the party are members of the PRD above all else, and anyone leaving its ranks will do so alone, he said.

As an example, he cited the party's ninth congress, which produced discontent among Dr Salvador Jorge Blanco's followers; and yet, he finally "felt compelled" to support the PRD.

BISHOP OF SAN SALVADOR DEFENDS POPE'S LETTER

PA220405 San Salvador EL DIARIO DE HOY in Spanish 21 Nov 80 p 7

[Excerpts] Statements follow by Msgr Marco Rene Revelo, auxiliary bishop of San Salvador, which were made on 20 November during a news conference about Pope John Paul II's letter referring to the situation in El Salvador. Monsignor Revelo referred to the criticism of the pope's letter made by a self-styled organization called the People's Church National Council [Consejo Nacional de la Iglesia Popular—CONIPO], which, according to Monsignor Revelo, consists of priests, brothers, sisters, laymen and catholics of a definite political leaning.

Monsignor Revelo said that politics is not the concern of the church and those who criticize it for this, are wrong.

Monsignor Revelo said that the pope's letter clearly criticizes violence, whatever its source, and makes an appeal for dialogue. How is this dialogue to be brought about? This is a matter to be decided by the organizations involved.

If those who criticize the pope's letter expect a political definition, well they are wrong, he said. The church does not have a political affiliation. Monsignor Revelo added that the newspaper ORIENTACION and radio station YSAX are part of the church but that they are not its spokesmen. He said further that he did not approve of some statements carried by those news media. However, he added, these news media are autonomous.

Monsignor Revelo said he did not know the reasons which led Msgr Pedro Arnoldo Aparicio y Quintanilla to say that ORIENTACION is directed by a communist.

REAGAN WIN NO 'SETBACK'--Jose Napoleon Duarte has been asked if he thinks Ronald Reagan's election in the United States will change the situation here. Duarte said: "Even if Reagan's victory has been hailed by some Salvadorans living in hotels in Miami, Guatemala City and San Salvador, don't think that the structural reforms undertaken in the country will be set back. This process is irreversible, and both land reform and the nationalization of the banks are part of it through a commitment by the armed forces to the Salvadoran people." Duarte said "marines" or any other foreign force that tries to intervene in our affairs won't be accepted here. [Excerpt] [PA221428 San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 20 Nov 80 p 19]

RIGHTISTS 'LOOK TO' REAGAN--Reagan and the shift to the right in the country. The rightists are looking to Reagan. They believe that by raising the spectre of the red beast of communism, he will allow them to do as they please. Reagan himself, however, will finally realize that the practices of our rightwing and our security forces grossly exceed his rightist fantasies. Of course, he has said that he prefers good relations for the United States over human rights. For this reason, it is possible that the leftists may accelerate their program and launch the attempt to take power before January. As we have said, their actions are increasingly numerous and intense. The democratic nations wish to give us a hand. Panama has called for the OAS to look at the barbarism prevailing in El Salvador. Guatemala has been horrified by this summons, because it knows that its practices are similar to those of El Salvador. We are ever closer to the end, although so far it is not known just how this end will come about. ANTI-GOVERNMENT PAMPHLETS DISTRIBUTED

Kingston SUNDAY GLEANER in English 16 Nov 80 p 4

[Article by GLEANER Grenada Correspondent St. Georges]

[Text] Grenada, Nov. 8--Another anti-government pamphlet has been distributed and the writer promises to give full details of certain activities and many more which were "studied" by Grenadians under Bishop's guidance. "You must pay now," the pamphlet says, "for we shall soon give full details of the aforementioned and many others."

The pamphlet was distributed during the daylight hours of last Thursday morning, motorists finding it in their parked cars. Distribution took place in Grenville, the island's second town, and it is not known if they were distributed elsewhere.

Entitled "Ent No Stopping Us Now," the name of a popular American song, this pamphlet follows on the heels of the first anti-government pamphlet which was distributed us mid-September and was called after another song, "Getting To Know You."

The second pamphlet claims to be associated with publication of the first. "We have received the highest acclaim for our fearless and heroic efforts in our last issue 'Getting To Know You,'" It says the second, however, is not typed on the same typewriter, the writing style appears to be different, and it differs from the first in that it is addressed directly to Bishop.

You Are Mistaken

"We know that anyone who opposes you is a CIA, a capitalist, an imperialist, a reactionary, a counterrevolutionary, a petty bougeoisie, a destabiliser, an exploiter or an opportunist," the pamphlet says. "You really thought it was only the Cubans who helped you to seize power." No, you are mistaken because it was a concerted and a united effort by we, the people, against Gairy."

REAGAN'S PLANS FOR CENTRAL AMERICA HAILED

PA170316 Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 7 Nov 80 p 2

["National Events" column: "What to Expect From the Reagan Government"]

[Text] The question most repeatedly asked since the results of the elections in the United States were released has been the following: What does the victory of Republican candidate Ronald Reagan mean to Guatemala? It is not simple curiosity. Everyone--the upper and lower classes--wants to know what can be expected from a conservative, anticommunist president at a time when the region is suffering from the effects of Mr Carter's policy that generated agitation and anarchy.

The answers received so far vary according to the ideology, posture, prejudices or simply the liking or aversion felt toward the new U.S. president. Politicians, in particular, try to explain the situation to their own convenience. Additionally, there has been one who, almost as a whim, has given Mr Reagan this extravagant warning: "You will not be a flagbearer for the backwardness and exploitation of our people, and this [warning] comes from good Guatemalans..." Very pretty. A sad figure of a gentleman fighting against imaginary windmills.

Like this one, there are others who see in Reagan's conservatism an opportunity to show off their revolutionary postures and their nationalist zeal against an alleged reincarnation of Teddy Roosevelt, who is ready to intervene in the country's internal affairs on behalf of the "exploiting classes." Perhaps deep down they know that there is nothing of the sort on the horizon, but they enjoy these admonitory poses, since there is nothing simpler than to box with one's own shadow. We are going to hear many repetitions of this until we are tired of them.

But if one really wants to know what Reagan thinks and what he has announced for this area--especially our country--when he takes office, one has to put aside conjecture, rhetoric and prejudicial postures to analyze what the new U.S. president has said on the subject throughout the electoral campaign. In this manner, one will obtain the right answer and perhaps some worries will be soothed.

The greatest concern has to do with the human rights policy which, in hands of the leftist activists, became an instrument of coercion, a screen for interfering in the internal affairs of our countries. Well then, on the subject there is no need for suppositions or guesses. President Reagan has said on various occasions that his government will continue to be concerned about safeguarding those rights, but in no way will they be used as a pretext for harassing friendly governments or for improper interference in the private jurisdictions of those governments.

Elaborating on the topic on other occasions, he has said that this policy will be given a new focus and that preference will be given to the moral aspect instead of having all emphasis placed on the political aspect. In other words, the United States will stop acting as the judge and examiner of other countries and will at no time impose sanctions as a means of punishment for violations of this type.

For Guatemala and other countries that have been the victims of the ill will of the State Department--specifically of the Latin and Central American sections that are in the hands of cabinet revolutionaries like Mr Cheek and his staff of proconsuls--the new concept expressed by Mr Reagan implies an end to the blockades, to the sheltering of subversives and to the experiments to destabilize the area. The important thing is that interference will be replaced by respect for the sovereignty and dignity of our peoples.

Mr Reagan has also been clear regarding the communist subversion instigated by Cuba and other neighboring countries. His government, he has said, will help constitutional and democratic governments that are the friends of the United States to defend themselves from Castroist attack, when these governments so request, by supplying military materiel. It is to the interest of the United States, he has said, to strengthen the area to prevent a continuation of the Castroist advance. A Mexican newspaper that is very closely linked to the leftwing has described this news as a "military intervention," and as the beginning of the "gunboat policy in Latin America." The purpose of this capricious description is to discourage these intentions, portraying them in the worst light, to give the impression that they deserve only repudiation.

PAPER ADVISES REAGAN TO 'CLEAN UP' OWN BACKYARD FIRST

PA232330 Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 12 Nov 80 pp 10, 24

["Cactus" column by Alvaro Contreras Velez: "Reagan and the Marxist Conspiracy in Central America"]

[Excerpts] In a report reminiscent of La Pasionaria [a reference to Dolores Ibarruri, leader of the Spanish Communist Party], Juan Tamayo, an EFE correspondent in Mexico, said that "Ronald Reagan's overwhelming victory over President Carter has generated generalized fear that, from the White House, Reagan will return to big stick tactics to clear the region of Marxist influence." The region to which Tamayo refers is none other than the area from Panama to Mexico, encompassing Central America.

If Reagan were to do so, whether making use of the odious "big stick" [quoted phrase in English] that was buried with Theodore Roosevelt in 1919 or of any other element of aggression, the fears to which the newsman refers would have been based on what Reagan said during the campaign, not on the smashing victory that brought him to the presidency.

In a speech delivered in Chicago in June, Reagan said clearly that he would change "most of Carter's political guidelines." The anticommunists of the region interpret this to mean that his government will not continue to promote Marxist conspiracy as was done by Carter and his proconsuls Vaky, Cheek, Pezullo, White, Bowdler and other "muppets" [quoted word in English] of human rights.

Further, if Reagan proceeds as the EFE correspondence fears he will, he should start by first sweeping out his own home (the White House) and then by passing the broom through all the corners of the State Department and some embassies of "the region," which are infested with shamefaced [vergonzante] communists, calling themselves liberals and dressed in the red cassock of Jimmy Carter's "human rights" [quoted phrase in English] activists.

This would be healthier for Reagan himself, for his party and for the success of his presidential term than for him, with a "big stick" [in English] or without one, to get his fingers into cleanup tasks that are solely and exclusively the purview of the peoples and governments of each of these countries.

This translates into an absolute respect for free self-determination and for the principle of nonintervention that, for the past 3 years, have been ignored not only by the defeated Carter, but also by his supporters in Panama, Costa Rica, Mexico, Venezuela and so forth.

SEVEN CABINET MINISTERS DROPPED FROM CANDIDATES LIST

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 17 Nov 80 p 4

[Text]

GEORGETOWN, Guyana, Nov 14 (CANA) – Seven prominent Cabinet Ministers are not on the list of candidates the ruling Peoples National Congress (PNC) has drawn up for the December 15 general elections here.

Missing from the PNC list of 65 names, officially handed over to chief elections officer Roy Hammond yesterday, are Foreign Minister Rashleigh Jackson, Energy and Natural Resources Minister Hubert Jack, Agriculture Minister Gavin Kennard, Home Affairs Minister Vibert Mingo, Finance Minister Frank Hope, Attorney General and Justice Minister Mohamed Shahabudden and Minister in the Office of the Prime Minister, Kit Nascimento.

Mr Mingo and Mr Nascimento were the only two of the seven who were elected to the last National Assembly, the others being appointed Ministers.

Except for Nascimento, the PNC members were Senior Ministers in the Cabinet.

Winslow Carrington, a member of the Parliament in the last National Assembly and a former Labour Minister is also not on the list.

Former West Indies opening batsman, Roy Fredericks, is among several relatively young newcomers to elections who are included in the list.

National Chairman of the Young Socialist Movement (YSM), the PNC youth arm, Eugene Gilbert, student leader Albert Henry and Assistant PNC General Secretary, Urmiah Johnson, are also among the new faces.

Trade Minister Joe Tyndal, a former Deputy Secretary General of the Caribbean Community (Caricom), Economic Development Minister, Desmond Hoyte, Labour Minister Hamilton Green, Works and Transport Minister Steve Naraine, and Parliamentary Affairs Minister Cammie Ramsaroop are also included, along with Mr Burnham's son-in-law, medical practitioner Richard Van-West Charles.

WPA, VLD WILL OPPOSE NEXT ELECTION

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 17 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] Georgetown, Guyana, Nov 14 (CANA)--The opposition Working People Alliance (WPA) which along with the small Vanguard for Liberation and Democracy (VLD) has called a boycott of the December 15 general elections, is stepping up its campaign against the elections with a public meeting in the city this evening.

The WPA and the VLD are boycotting the elections and are campaigning around the country for the electorate to stay away from the polls on polling day.

They have so far been concentrating the boycott drive out of the city but the VLD last night held a meeting in the city and this is being followed by the WPA's this evening.

Four of the WPA main leaders, Eusi Kwayana, and University of Guayana lecturers, Dr Rupert Roopnairine, Dr Joshua Ramsammy and Dr Clive Thomas will be seeking tonight to convince the key city electorate of the merits of their boycott stand.

The boycotting parties say they took the decision because the ruling Peoples National Congress (PNC) had not met joint opposition demands for free and fair elections.

The opposition Peoples Progressive Party (PPP) which was a party to the free and fair elections demands drawn up with the WPA and VLP earlier this year, has decided to put up candidates for the elections in what is said was the interest of the "legal survival" of the Opposition here, despite its contention that the PNC would be rigging the voting.

Both the VLD and the WPA have expressed disappointment at the PPP decision and are urging Guyanese not to heed the PPP's call to turn out on voting day.

VARIOUS SECTORS REACT TO REAGAN VICTORY

No Change Expected

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 7

[Editorial: "Reagan's Hour"]

[Text] The avalanche of votes won by former Governor of California Ronald Reagan in his contest with the President of the United States, James Carter, on election day constitutes a clear mandate from the people of that country, in the sense that the time has come to put an end to the ambiguity, vacillation and inefficiency of the administration, and to adopt serious definitions leading to the strengthening--internal and external--of the leading power in the West.

Under President Carter, the image of a victorious, dynamic, powerful and decisive nation in modern history was rapidly becoming blurred, and the idea that the United States "was declining" began to gain credence among the U.S. voters.

There were a number of factors which led to this impression: the obvious weakness of President Carter with regard to the act of state terrorism committed by the regime of the Ayatollah Khomeyni in Iran, with the bold kidnaping of more than 50 members of the staff of the U.S. embassy accredited in Teheran, in violation of all the norms of international law; the subsequent failure of a rescue mission which ended in the death of several officers and soldiers in the Iranian desert; the lack of an energetic and concrete response to the seizure of Afghanistan by the Soviets; the indifference evidenced with regard to totalitarian penetration in Central America and the Caribbean, etc.--these are only some of the pertinent aspects in the foreign policy area.

Circumstances which should not be underestimated made their contribution in the domestic sector: the energy crisis, accelerated inflation, the birth of a phenomenon never before seen in an industrial power--"stagflation," or the stagnation of the economy interrelated with inflation (which had been regarded as impossible in terms of classic economic theory); a massive rise in taxes and the inefficiency and increase in cost of the Social Security system; the increase in public expenditures and a series of vacillations, paradoxes, contradictions and inconsistencies in the handling of major national problems led U.S. citizens to reach the conclusion that what was needed was a leader, a strong, clearly defined man, capable of and interested in reestablishing the greatness of the country.

An emotional ingredient which weighed rather heavily in the final balance was the weak and inconsistent and (in the judgment of the critics) opportunistic fashion in which Carter handled the problem of the hostages in Iran.

When almost the entire American public had set aside the concern pertaining to this groups of U.S. citizens in their minds, the White House began indirectly to leak reports to the effect that the hostages "probably" would be released momentarily.

This belief, fanned by the mass media, gave rise to great hope among the citizens, and when at the last minute the event did not come about in fact, there was indignation and resentment of the President, accentuating the disillusionment which already existed with regard to his administration.

The full list of the factors in Carter's incredible failure, for he was not even able to get 10 percent of the electoral votes his opponent did, despite the fact that he had the facilities of the regime at his disposal, would be interminable, but it is perhaps worth mentioning one last fact: while Reagan rallied the American conservatives (of both parties) behind him, Carter somewhat frightened off the liberals, who rallied mainly around Edward Kennedy, because the vacillations and ambiguities mentioned prevented him from identifying fully with a clearly progressive line of thinking in the realm of domestic policy.

Thus he had the conservatives against him but he did not have the liberals for him. This is the only possible explanation for his loss of the state of New York, which has historically been carried by the candidate with more progressive ideas.

In brief, Carter will return to Plains next January to manage his peanut plantation, and the Reagan era will begin. Like the majority of the observers, LA PRENSA does not believe there will be very dramatic changes.

Possibly government efficiency will improve and an increase in production will be stressed instead of increasing the social welfare burden. A greater emphasis on the defense and security of the country is also foreseeable, as is a review (not the elimination) of the human rights policy.

The United States is a basically democratic country and it should not be concluded from the electoral results that there will be a "friendly" rapprochement with the Latin American dictatorships, although perhaps ways of promoting the return of democracy which are more viable than the isolation policy of Carter and his associates in situations such as those in Chile, Guatemala and Argentina will be sought.

The Reagan era will bring a shift to the right, but because of the balance of power (and with the Congress dominated by the Democratic Party), this shift will not be radical, although doubtless it will mean a new way of approaching the problems of regional policy, and perhaps a more pragmatic and functional means of blocking leftist extremism, discouraging the ventures of totalitarianism and actively promoting the paths of freedom.

CGT Sees Dictatorships Increasing

Tegucigalpa EL CRONISTA in Spanish 6 Nov 80 pp 1, 6

[Text] The General Workers' Federation (CGT) believes that the inauguration of Ronald Reagan in the U.S. government will increase the dictatorships existing in Latin America.

According to workers' leader Felicito Avila Ordonez, secretary general of the CGT, Reagan's ascent to power will in one way or another accelerate the contradictions arising between the capitalist system and renewal, the product of the needs of the people.

Avila noted however that "with Jimmy Carter or Reagan, United States policy is not decided by them exclusively, but is defined by the 'trilateral' power representing the great political and economic monopolies of the world."

With the announcement of a new international policy, the political parties in Honduras will have to play a role different from their present one. The CGT believes that some parties will be overjoyed with Reagan's triumph.

This is because of the similarity of their political ideas and the lack of renewal in the government program. For others, the announcement by the president-elect that he will pursue a doctrine of national security, which in other cases has led to the establishment of dictatorships, may be a concern.

The workers' leader expressed the opinion that with the new U.S. government, dictatorships will increase in Latin America, but with the difference that the peoples have now raised their heads and are trying to confront this type of reality.

"Poverty, hunger, the requirements of freedom and democracy a people have represent a tool for refusal to tolerate dictatorial policies," the secretary of the CGT concluded.

PDCH Fears Democratic Stagnation

Tegucigalpa EL CRONISTA in Spanish 6 Nov 80 pp 1, 6

[Text] "With the election of Ronald Reagan to the presidency of the United States, some processes of democratization in Latin America will be slowed, leading to internal and external crises with unpredictable consequences."

This statement was made by Adan Palacios, executive secretary of the Honduran Christian Democratic Party (PDCH).

Palacios believes that despite the actions of the present U.S. administration the continent is concerned with whoever is elected because of the influence the United States exerts politically and economically. "It is of greater concern," he adds, "when the winner belongs to the Republican Party, which is traditionally conservative and throughout the history of this country has revealed dominating attitudes, even invading territories."

He then said that the new foreign policy Reagan will pursue will bring a slowdown in the area of democratization processes launched with the acceptance of the people.

This will create a foreign crisis and, what is more serious, the confrontation with the Soviet Union will be tremendously difficult, with powerful strategies and tactics not experienced to date under the government of Jimmy Carter, the PDCH spokesman concluded.

Other Political Party Reactions

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] Tegucigalpa--The political parties undertook a careful analysis yesterday of Ronald Reagan's triumph in the presidential elections in the United States, and urged better U.S. treatment of these countries.

Various leaders consulted by this periodical praised the democracy prevailing in that country in this type of process and agreed that "would that it could serve as an example for Honduras in its next elections."

Among the political parties, those most impressed by the triumph were the nationalists, who say that the triumph of the Republicans will bring the dawn of a new future for these peoples.

The liberals, at least those in the "Rodist" faction, placed their hopes in just action by Reagan to improve the socioeconomic conditions in Central America. Not so for the Christian democrats, who said that the election results pose a threat to the future of the region, Latin America and the entire world.

Nicolas Cruz Torres, Orlando Lozano Martinez and Roberto Galvez Barnes commented that the triumph of Reagan brings a glimpse of a new picture on the international level, which may prove beneficial in the near future.

The first-mentioned said that the Republican triumph will without a doubt serve to counteract the impending communist avalanche in Central America.

Lozano Martinez and Galvez Barnes, for their part, hoped for greater attention to these peoples on the part of the new president, but without intervention in the domestic affairs and sovereignty of the peoples.

Also the members of the PN [National Party] said that they wish this might serve as an incentive, since it will encourage the citizenry to support the electoral census, thus contributing by their votes to improving democracy on the national level.

Galvez Barnes, who declined to discuss the subject more fully, said that these methods of going to the polls to complete a process of this sort should be developed here, on the level of internal party leadership as well, in order to lead to a proselytizing approach providing greater individual possibilities for each of the members.

Meanwhile, liberal Deputy Rafael Antonio Ardon termed Ronald Reagan's triumph "overwhelming," saying that it demonstrated his great popularity and the acceptance of him by the people of the United States.

"I have the impression that some variations in U.S. policy will come about, the essence of them serving to offset the communist infiltration which is occurring in the Caribbean and Central America, wherein Honduras is a show-window for the socialist countries. Therefore, it is necessary to strengthen democracy," Ardon stressed.

He said that if the new president acts in accordance with what has been said in the sense of limiting violence of the leftist sector, "he will have to support true freedom in the electoral process approaching here, if we are not to find ourselves involved in situations of uncertainty such as have occurred in other countries on the isthsmus."

Disagreeing with these concepts, the adviser of the Christian Democratic Party, Ramon Velasquez Nazar, expressed the view that none of the candidates represented an alternative for these peoples, because "they always act such as to keep us dependent, a means they can use to exploit our natural resources through the international companies, as history shows."

However, he explained that Carter was the lesser of the two evils, but unfortunately the people of the United States did not agree with the view many people in Latin America have of the personalities of the contenders.

He stressed that Reagan's election will mean support from now on for strong government, which will lead to the stagnation of some reforms and programs which the U.S. government had an interest in promoting.

Finally, he said that success for Latin America will depend on the attitude the dependent countries adopt with regard to demanding what rightly belongs to them in the international sector.

PAPER COMMENTS ON REAGAN, HUMAN RIGHTS POLICY

PA181948 San Pedro Sula TIEMPO in Spanish 8 Nov 80 p 4

[Article from the "Political Labyrinth" column]

[Text] The victory of Ronald Reagan, who is now the U.S. president-elect, has provoked euphoria among the country's ultraconservatives, skepticism among the moderates and, naturally, despair among those who consider the human rights policy indispensable in order to prevent a hecomb in Central America.

Nevertheless, and despite the conservatism wielded by Reagan during the election campaign, we believe that there will be surprises, after all. Quite probably, Reagan will not abandon the policy on human rights and he may even retain Bowdler's team in Central America. Moreover, although the ultraconservatives are preparing an all out offensive in order to take advantage of Reagan's election, they "should not outdo themselves" for it would not be farfetched if they "wound up losing everything."

However, continuing with the Spanish proverbs and this matter of "fishing in troubled waters," it appears that Ricardo Zuniga [National Party leader] is taking advantage of Reagan's election to give the impression that his presidential candidacy is "tied" to Reagan. He is telling this to his followers in order not to have to make the opening [apertura] demanded by the National Party's youth and rank and file. [sentence as published]

He is overlooking the fact, however, that the people know that the election of a U.S. president does not sway the policy of any party in Honduras and that, as the upper Honduran military echelons have said, "if there is no opening there is no assistance."

PAPER HAILS BARBADOS OPPOSITION TO MAURICE BISHOP

Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 12 Nov 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Carry On, Barbados"]

[Text] Barbados has remained nobly adamant in its justifiable dispute with the dictatorial regime of Maurice Bishop of Grenada.

Last week in the wake of the U.S. presidential election, Mr. Adams, the Barbados Prime Minister, quite properly said that in the Caribbean there was great need for Grenada to return to the folds of democracy by holding an election. Regrettably, the dictator Mr. Bishop has used Mr. Adams' statement for a vicious, personal attack on the people of Barbados.

Barbados, in our view, quite properly decided to withdraw diplomatic privileges from Grenadian government officials using the Barbados airport, a withdrawal which has significance because it is almost impossible for Grenadians to travel anywhere without travelling through Barbados. And indeed, over the weekend one Minister of Government of Grenada found that the privileges had been withdrawn, and complained about the illegality of it.

This of course is nonsense, and Barbados is perfectly within its rights in taking this action. We support Mr. Adams in his statement that the continued existence of this dictatorial regime in the English-speaking Caribbean which runs counter to our democratic traditions is bound to have a harmful effect on the development of the Caribbean Development Bank which depends on relationships with countries which have long traditions of democracy. We should like to remind Mr. Bishop and those who support him that democracy cannot be destroyed by a gun. They may be successful now, but the people of Grenada will eventually seek their return to democracy through the ballot box.

Until then Caribbean governments should, like Barbados, treat Mr. Bishop's regime as a pariah.

POLICE BEGIN CRACKDOWN ON LAWLESSNESS, WEAPONS

Weapons Seized

Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 14 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] The police yesterday seized 27 M16 automatic assault rifles and 7,700 rounds of ammunition in a raid on a private premises in D'Aguilar Road, off the Waltham Park Road, in lower St. Andrew.

This is a record haul of weapons of this type, a police spokesman told the Gleaner.

The guns and ammunition were found in four suitcases, one of which bore an Air Jamaica tag, with no name written on it. Although the three-bedroom house is occupied, no one was at home when the police raided. No one has been arrested, but investigations are continuing.

The rifles, which military spokesmen say appeared to be used, were equipped with "decoys" which muffle the sound of the shots to make it difficult to ascertain the direction from which the shots are being fired. The rounds of ammunition were in military green canvas bags.

When the guns were found they were dismantled. There were also plastic tubes of weapons oil medium, a lubricant, cleaning brushes, and gunbelts for ammunition magazines.

The raid was carried out by 50 policemen, 20 from the Hunt's Bay station and 10 from the Denham Town station, who were quickly assembled after a tip and were led by a senior office from the Hunt's Bay station.

The officer said: "It was the first time I had been able to round up men so fast for an operation; they were so enthusiastic." The raid took place shortly after 8 a.m.

When the police arrived at the house they surrounded the building. The doors were locked and the policemen had to kick down the doors to enter. The first bedroom they entered they saw the four suitcases.

"As I went inside and saw the grips, I could smell that there were guns inside," one officer said.

The police had difficulty opening the suitcases and they had to use a hacksaw and pliers to prise them open. When open the suitcases revealed the 27 M16 rifles and 7,700 rounds of ammunition in several green canvas military bags. The dismantled guns were assembled by the police at the Hunts Bay station.

The weapons were taken to Hunt's Bay Station where senior police officers went through the stockpile and informed the Commissioner. A press conference was hurriedly arranged for the Commissioner of Police's head office on Hope Road, St. Andrew. Attending the conference were the Attorney General and Minister of National Security and Justice, the Hon. Winston Spaulding, the Commissioner of Police, Mr. W.O. Bowes, and the Chief of Staff of the Jamaica Defence Force, Brigadier Robert Neish, as well as other top police and military officers.

At the press conference, Mr. Bowes said that the find was as a result of criminal investigations and intelligence work carried out by the police. He said that although the find was motivated by Operation Crime Stop, it could not be directly attributed to that operation, but more directly to police investigations and intelligence work.

He said that the effort was as a result of a special anti-crime drive in co-operation with Crime Stop, and added that he was asking the citizens of the country to help the security forces in every possible way in getting all the illegal guns.

Mr. Spaulding in his statement said that he wholeheartedly thanked the police for the find and the all-round work they were doing.

"There are many guns out there and we are determined to get them. The future of this country depends on the security forces success in achieving this," Mr. Spaulding said.

Since the general election there had been a dramatic drop in crime and terrorism, and the discovery of the arsenal was a "magnificent gain" for the security force. It demonstrated what could be achieved once the police were free to perform their duties without interference.

He said that the government had seen a genuine response to the security forces efforts from the citizens of the country, and that the government was making every effort to provide the police with the equipment and transportation they needed.

Although the reports were encouraging, the government could not rest on those laurels as the task was an uphill one.

"We all have a responsibility to help the police and the military and we are determined to deploy all reasonable means to come to terms with this gun madness," he said.

In reply to questions after his statement, Mr. Spaulding said the government would soon be making a full presentation on a number of strategies it proposed to introduce to get the guns.

Four M16 rifles had been found prior to yesterday at various sections of the Corporate Area since October.

Two More Guns Found

A follow-up raid by policemen into the D'Aguilar Road area where 27 M16 rifles were found yesterday morning netted a further find of two handguns and 22 rounds of ammunition.

A release from the Police Information Centre last night stated that a .45 automatic pistol and a .38 revolver were found in bushes near those raided by the police yesterday morning. In addition 22 rounds of ammunition were found. No one was arrested.

Criminals Apprehended

[Text] As part of a new anti-crime drive, special squads of police were deployed to key points in the Corporate Area yesterday afternoon.

As the drive got into high gear a top police officer told the Gleaner last night that shortly after going on the streets one of the squads had accosted three gunmen on Sunset Close in Cherry Gardens, St. Andrew and in a shoot-out one was fatally shot. Another was held and the third escaped.

The shot man was unidentified; but a .38 revolver with four live rounds and two spent shells were recovered from his body. The man held was identified as Albert Evans, 19, labourer of a Beatrix Crescent, Kingston 11 address.

Meanwhile, Police Information Centre (PIC) also reported that a man identified only as "Reddie Mickey" of Sufferers' Height, St. Catherine, was killed in a shootout with police after an attempted robbery on Wednesday afternoon.

PIC said he and another man had boarded a bus bound for Kingston at White Marl and on reaching Caymanas crossing they demanded money from the driver.

When the driver refused he was shot in the chest and the men ran.

The Central Village police launched a search for the men and in Sufferers' Heights "Reddie Mickey" was spotted and in a shootout was shot dead.

The driver of the bus, who the police did not identify, was admitted in hospital in a serious condition.

Police blotters also showed that one of three prisoners who escaped from the Brown's Town police lock-up in St. Ann Wednesday morning is now nursing gunshot wounds under police guard in the Alexandria Hospital.

The three prisoners, Arthur Brown, labourer, of Knockville; Albert Alexander, farmer, of Eight Miles, and Denton Simms, labourer, of Knockville, all of St. Ann, who were charged with murder and robbery with aggravation, had cut their way out of the lockup. Simms was shot and recaptured shortly afterwards when he used stones to attack the police who had gone in search of him. The others are still at large.

RUSSIAN GRAIN SHORTAGE, PNP PROBLEMS DISCUSSED

[Editorial: "Price Pressure From Russia?"]

[Text]

The report by the Russian authorities that the country's 1980 grain output will be about 20 percent down on the official target, and that there has been a downward revision of the 1981 estimated output, is likely to have important implications for the international grain market. For it means that if the Soviet Union is to make up the shortfall in supply on its domestic market it will have to buy grain on the international market, which will put an upward pressure on prices in the same way that the Russian intervention in the sugar market did in 1973-74.

Economies, like Jamaica's, which must import all their grain requirements and which already have serious balance-of-payments problems will almost certainly be seriously affected as a result of this development. The increase in import prices which will result will aggravate the difficult inflationary climate.

Of course, the bad grain harvest experienced by Russia may be attributed to unfavourable climatic conditions. But what the head of the Soviet Union's State Planning organization has not conceded is that there are other equally plausible explanations for the poor grain yield. Among these are the absence of incentive to Soviet farmers, and the apparently increasing inefficiency in Soviet agriculture. Additionally, there is the fact that the Soviet Union has been increasing the proportion of its Budget expended on the arms race, and on the promotion of its influence in areas such as Africa, Central Asia, Indo-China and, of course, Cuba at the expense of modernising its agriculture. Indeed, the announcement by the Russian Finance Minister of a marginal reduction in its military expenditure for 1981 must be seen as a recognition of this fact, rather than any concession towards world peace.

It may be, too, that the declining productivity of Soviet agriculture is a direct upshot of the system of central planning in which the free enterprise initiative has no place. It is of interest to note that it is in this general direction that the PNP Government of the last eight years had led Jamaica, hence, certain of the bottlenecks in the system, and the resultant decline in national output. The new Government has stated its commitment to the free market system. It has a responsibility to organise Jamaica's industry on lines that will provide meaningful incentive to the productive sectors, including farmers, and which will, at least, ensure productive efficiency.

In the agricultural sector, for example, the sense of hopelessness has never been greater, mainly the result of the confused management which the past Government had brought to bear on the industry. This is an industry with the potential for growth and development but which successive Governments have failed to promote. This new Government has an opportunity to make amends.

NEED TO ERASE CUBAN INFLUENCE IN COUNTRY STRESSED

Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 14 Nov 80 p 8

["As I See It" Column by Vincent Tullock]

[Text] Prime Minister Edward Seaga has shown some element of moderation in his first public act, that is, writing to the Cuban government and asking for the recall of Ulises Estrada as ambassador to Kingston. On the night of his victory he told the assembled battery of journalists that on assuming office he would expel Estrada. Two days after he announced that he had written to Castro telling him that he wants to continue the good relations between the two countries but that such relations cannot be developed with Estrada in Kingston.

Castro's prompt recall of Estrada, should be a lesson to Opposition Leader, Michael Manley, who demonstrated such bad manners to his people when he refused to listen to their demands last year summer. There was a strong national call for the disciplining of Estrada, but he did not take heed. In fact he again misread the mood of the people by claiming that if Estrada is asked to go it would have amounted to a form of vindictiveness. He capped it all by allowing his son to return to Havana on the same plane with Estrada, a private one at that.

His behaviour is of the type some people are attempting to peddle now. They would have us believe that the call for the trimming of the Cuban and Russian embassies is some form of witch hunting. So too would they have us think about the long overdue shakeup of Special Branch.

Influence still here

It must be understood that the defeat of the Peoples National Party and their communist allies does not mean that the Cuban influence has been eradicated from the state. There are sensitive pockets of Cuban influence here. They are local operatives and they must be flushed out of such areas where they are likely to be of long-term danger to the state. Special Branch which Cuban DGI agents called the most backward intelligence network that they have ever been associated with in this part of the world, is one which must be rebuilt from scratch.

Let me however return to the embassies of Russia and Cuba. It is a well known fact that both are overstaffed. It was only last year that Mr. Seaga stated that they were nests for espionage work. The Cubans withdrew one of their named agents but the others are still here. Mr. Seaga will have to demand that during the trimming down process certain people are included. Carlos Diaz, ex-shot put champion whom Seaga named as D.G.I. chief agent may have to go. Diosdado Suarez Lazano who replaced exposed D.G.I. agent Juan Carbonnell will certainly have to be on the list. Up at Norbrook, the exposed agents are still doing cool and Seaga will have to demand their recall. They, no doubt were no angels during their tenure of office here and since we do not need scores of Russians and Cubans to run two embassies with little or no work to do, we can tell them that at Norbrook, a staff of 10 will do while at Trafalgar Road no more than 25 should be tolerated.

Disgraceful

Now to Special Branch and the Protective Service. It cannot be denied that there is need for a body of men in the security forces to provide protection services for senior government officials and at times visiting dignitaries. The problem with Protective Services however, is that it too had the Cuban fever. Many of those men there, received training in Cuba or probably I should say refresher courses. Former Panamanian strongman, General Torrijos, on a visit to Jamaica expressed privately to then Prime Minister Manley his dismay at the fact that so many of the men were Cuban trained. Manley reportedly tried to give him some reasons for the Cuban input but he was not impressed.

Special Branch in recent months demonstrated its lack of sophistication in intelligence gathering. While it is understood that the service was almost destroyed by the politicians in 1976, its dismal performance in the wake of the failed communist threat to Jamaica was a disgrace. The Cubans having been given a free hand in every aspect of Jamaican life, did not miss a chance to move into the Intelligence Service.

There is nothing wrong with the gathering of intelligence. The government will have to make a determined move to develop the Special Branch. It is the duty of the intelligence service to act as the agent in providing the government with information to protect the state from forces that are destructive to our way of life. Such forces are on all sides of the political fence. It is not good enough to look for only communists, there are other evil political forces that can destroy the society.

There are many things to be done in the country and it is to be hoped that the government will move to have the proper procedural mechanisms put in place. For the orderly running of the society the local Cuban operatives must be dealt with in perches where they have been hiding. Flush them out now, otherwise there will be trouble from them.

VANDALISM REPORTED AT CUBAN DONATED SCHOOL

Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 11 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

JLP Member of Parliament for southern St. James, Dr. Marco Brown, said on Friday that JLP supporters only started to vandalize the Cuban gift school in Montpelier, St. James, after PNP supporters started to remove building material from the site.

In a news release issued "to correct a false impression which was given by the local media," Dr. Brown said that after the election results were known, PNP supporters got hold of keys to the school gate on Monday night and started to load trucks with steel, board and other materials. They had keys to the schoolrooms with which they were able to enter and remove furniture.

Dr. Brown said that when he went to the site on Tuesday morning there were five trucks "chartered by PNP supporters to remove what they claimed was 'their belongings as it had been given to the PNP by Cuban comrades'."

He said that the JLP supporters did not arrive on the scene until Tuesday "When they discovered that they should get some of the freemen too." Dr. Brown said that he told them that the school was a gift to all Jamaicans for the benefit of all children whether PNP or JLP. The situation was now under control, he added, and called on "all persons in Southern St. James to put political feelings aside and unite as one people."

Contacted, Police said they could not say whether it was PNP or JLP supporters who stole materials from the school.

Unused materials were stolen from the school and the school was not vandalized, Police sources added.

PLANNING MINISTRY: 1981 TO BE YEAR OF AUSTERITY

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 30 Sep 80 p 3

[Communique issued by the Ministry of Planning on 20 September 1980]

[Text] We are all aware that 1980 was a truly difficult year. Considering that we are in a postwar phase, considering all the destruction that took place, we are not suffering any great shortages, nor do we feel any important change in our daily life.

This "comfort" was no accident. Our government felt that the Nicaraguan people deserved a respite from so much suffering and penury. It believed that it was necessary for us to feel a return to normalcy, although this "normalization" was a bit premature.

It was premature because our economy had suffered a decline for 17 yeam, since the value of the PIB [Gross Domestic Product] in 1979, to begin with, was only comparable to that of 1963. We cannot say that this harsh reality was experienced by all the Nicaraguan people. On the contrary, many people commented that everything was so "normal" that the days of the bombings seemed far away and like a bad dream.

It was also a good year for business--a year in which many who never had made a profit did so for the first time.

The year 1981 will continue the second phase of recovery. We will continue rebuilding an economy which was formerly thought to be basically for the enrichment of a single sector of the population and of the transnationals, into an economy which benefits the people and serves the great majorities, particularly the working class.

In other words, we are not only rebuilding our economy, but we are also restructuring it, so that in the future we may really raise the standard of living of our people.

To achieve this objective, of course, is not easy, nor is it a task which falls exclusively to the Sandinist Government. The government sets the guidelines, but it is we, the Nicaraguan people, who, on the basis of our work, of our redoubled efforts and of the strict control of our expenditures, will make this rebuilding and restructuring possible.

Why Do We Speak of Austerity for 1981?

In 1980 we devoted ourselves basically to recovering what we had lost. This next year, in which, thanks to our work, we will be able to utilize factories to their full capacity, we will have to begin investing to increase our productive capacity, generate more jobs, bring greater technology to agriculture and improve or create new sources of electrical energy--in other words, it is a year in which we will have to invest so that we can continue to produce more and better goods. These investments that we want to make mean that we are going to need more money, especially since the foreign aid we are receiving is going to be reduced.

Now then, what does this suggest? There are two possibilities: either we continue going into debt, or we tighten our belts, increase our savings and thus accumulate our own money supply (national) to deal with these investments. Obviously the second option is better for us, since to continue going into debt means further compromising our future.

This saving will not affect the basic areas of consumption. On the contrary in 1981 we hope to eliminate shortages of some basic products that afflicted us in 1980; the distribution system will be substantially improved; we will have better markets, better transportation, and more education and health services. However, the saving will affect imports of comfort or luxury items of those products which, although we like to buy and use them, are not really necessary and without which we can get along very well.

This year will be particularly difficult for those sectors of the population which have been able to buy for their own use large quantities of those products which are not really necessary. However, for those who, because of prices, have been able to buy only strictly necessary items, there will be no difference; actually, they will be better off.

However, this is where we must call on the conscience of our people. We must understand that this measure is absolutely necessary if we want to overcome the backwardness and poverty in which we were drowning under the Somoza dictatorship. It is not a question, in any case, of "sharing the poverty"; it is a question of having the capacity to invest in more factories, more tractors, more energy projects, etc., so that we will be able to continue to advance toward a future of progress and well-being for all and not just for one small sector of the population.

In this aspect of investment, private enterprise, as well as the public, has an important task, since we must stimulate the building of new factories and present well-thought-out ideas for their establishment. In addition, small productive projects, such as shoemaking cooperatives, clothing cooperatives and auto and small electrical appliance repair shops, etc., will be stimulated. Everything that means producing, generating employment and avoiding imports of costly spare parts will be stimulated and supported in 1981.

Actually we have good prospects for the coming year, since although we must go without some products--which are not really necessary, anyway--and although this privation means a sacrifice for us, it will be a year in which we will see the growth of new industries and more technology in rural areas, and we will begin far-reaching energy projects. It will be a year of great deal of work, of creativity; a year to learn to live with what we have and to improve it; a year to exercise good control over our expenditures and to increase our efficiency to the maximum.

CNES DISCUSSES CUBAN MODEL IN PROFESSIONAL TRAINING

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 30 Oct 80 p 4

[Report on interview with Dr Mariano Fiallos Oyanguren and Dr Jose Pasos Marciaq, officials of the National Council for Higher Education, by Adriana Guillen; date and place not given]

[Text] The future Nicaraguan professional will receive profound ideological re-orientation, so that when he graduates he will be imbued with the spirit of service and with international orientation. That is the conclusion that was drawn from an interview that Mariano Fiallos Oyanguren and Jose Pasos Marciaq, officials of the National Council for Higher Education (CNES), granted LA PRENSA.

[Question] Was the plan for change that the national universities are now carrying out planned by the Cuban team of the Ministry of Higher Education of Cuba? Which of those points does the CNES consider valid for the definitive higher education plan? This question is based on what was published by the CNES in THE GREEN BOOK, which literally says: "At the request of the University Policy Committee of the Autonomous National University of Nicaragua made to the Ministry of Higher Education of the Government of the Republic of Cuba, work was begun in the month of October 1979 by a planning team composed of five Cuban specialists...In this context a decision was adopted to carry out a planning program for the 1980-1981 academic year, with also some premises for longer-range measures...That is why this is considered to be only a first initiative and moreover a point of departure for the purpose of attaining a real prospective plan for the development of higher education in the Republic of Nicaragua, as a function of the revolutionary process that the country is experiencing...."

"The first statement is not correct," said Dr Fiallos. "Nicaragua's higher education plan was developed by Nicaraguans and approved by the CNES.

"We received Venezuelan, Cuban, and Mexican technical aid and it cannot be said that it is a plan that was elaborated by Cubans. Nevertheless, Cuba's aid has been very valuable and I wish to emphasize this, because we have deficiencies in human resources which they have made up for."

He added that the foreign advisers gave us alternatives and that they selected those that they consider most appropriate for the national situation. And in a decisive tone he said, "I tell you that we evolved the developmental plan, with the help of advisers. A planning office in the CNES is working toward this end with various Nicaraguan professionals, among them Dr Carlos Martinez." And he explained that for example at this very moment there is a Mexican team assisting with the budget for higher education.

[Question] Cuba's university program graduates many professionals in the fields of medicine and education. We have observed that they have enough graduates to be able to send some to other countries. This phenomenon causes me to think that the Cuban program is out of balance, since it cannot absorb all of its graduates. I should like to ask you if our planning could bring us to that situation, which in my opinion is an error.

"I again insist," replied Fiallos, "that we are evolving a Nicaraguan plan for higher education. We are making a study for the present years, up to 1985.

"On the other hand, at a given moment a country may have more professionals than it might need. But," added Fiallos a little heatedly, "what you indicate as a failing with respect to Cuba I consider an extraordinary remark—the fact that a country after a revolutionary transformation of 20 years is able to train great numbers of doctors. Now Cuban professionals come and return, with signed contracts. And they come at our request."

Rector Fiallos continued: "I believe that we must remember that Nicaragua is a part of the world, and it would be highly satisfactory for us to produce more professionals than we need, since at any moment some country could be in difficult circumstances, like ours, and there would be great satisfaction in being able to help it. But I am not saying 'that it is good to be wasteful'—no, not that. Remember that there are various ways of planning. In approximately 1966 Nicaragua planned that it could absorb 40 doctors, even though the country needed more. The demand cannot be met even in the next 20 years," he said.

[Question] In your capacity as a professional and an official of the CNES, I should like your opinion on what it means to a graduated professional to come up against unemployment.

I would especially like Dr Pasos' opinion, since his specialty is psychiatry. How is an individual's emotional stability affected when he cannot work at his profession and has to wait for his government's decision to send him to another country to work?

"We are speaking of an individual who has received another type of education," explained Dr Jose Pasos, physician and psychiatrist. "Let us take the case of the doctor who studied in order to earn 20,000 pesos a month, because that is why he studied medicine. Then, to explain his thesis better, he added: 'I am studying medicine in order to become rich...or in order to have a nice house, a car...things that are considered normal.'

"But if we now train a professional whose ideal is to serve his country, other brothers, we are speaking of another professional, in any branch.

"A man who has decided to serve his neighbor has a humane aspiration, a profoundly humane one. When this professional graductes, his thinking will not be encased within the narrow framework of 'I am studying in order to serve here in Nicaragua and in order to live here in Nicaragua....'

"Psychologically, this individual thinks otherwise. His professional wish is to serve. It does not disappoint him to go to another country to help his neighbor," said the physician.

"We have seen," he added, "Mexicans, Cubans, Venezuelans who come here and are very happy to be helping us with their professional service. We cannot judge this man with the same criterion."

A Suitable Professional Training

[Question] Then, will the change in the professional depend on suitable professional training?

"Of course," said Dr Pasos. "We believe that all professional study should be carried out on another level, where a desire to serve is predominant."

[Question] Then, in order to have a professional whose emotional balance will not suffer, is it necessary for the entire educational system to work in this direction, so that the university can receive an 18-year-old who is already oriented, that is, one who is almost ideologically developed?

[Answer] Of course. We cannot work alone. There is the instance of cooperation from the CNES, MED (Ministry of Education), Ministry of Planning and Finance, where developmental programs and the problems to be resolved are discussed.

[Question] What professional training plan has been outlined so that when an individual arrives at the university the CNES will find an individual with a different inclination from the present one?

"A training program takes years to fully develop. Training has no golden rule. A big committee has been formed to study this matter," explained Dr Pasos Marciaq.

Bloc System

Dr Fiallos replied that the purpose of the bloc system is not to eliminate students, but rather to enable the university to make maximum use of its resources and to improve university efficiency. He said that it was the desire of the CNES to graduate as many professionals as possible and that it therefore eliminated the monographs.

Student Population

"Every 5 years the university population has doubled," said Dr Fiallos. "The country presently cannot respond effectively to the demand for education, but neither can it tell the students who arrive that they cannot study because there is no budget. A way must be sought to take care of them and the creation of intermediate careers is one of them. Nicaragua needs many intermediate technicians to meet its needs for growth and these intermediate professionals will not lessen the number of university graduates, said the UNAN rector. Also, a plan is being prepared by means of which an intermediate technician can continue his training in night courses. Before, out of an enrollment of 100, 20 were graduated. Now there must be a greater number of graduates.

"Also, the basic year has been shortened; the basic term is only one semester. The medical course has improved. And I do not see any reason for losing an exchange with other universities," replied Dr Fiallos. And Dr Pasos explained that there was no basis for this fear and they added that the University of Nicaragua at present has exchanges with the Autonomous University of Mexico and of Puebla, with universities in Boston that are affiliated with Harvard, with Venezuela, and other countries.

The CNES officials complained about the small amount of publicity that the communications media give to educational matters. And they gave as an example the case of the five North American professors who are coming to Nicaragua. They said that that news was emphasized, but that other information was not published.

They also said that the CNES has been "asking" the North American government to help them with material and professors, but that they did not receive the answer that they had hoped for.

Requirements for Professors of History

Dr Fiallos replied that the requirements were the same as those for "student assistants"--a good academic record, enrollment in the final years of the course, and compatibility with the revolution. He explained that an appointment is made by the respective university through the committee.

The students are represented on the committee by the 19 July Sandinist Youth (JS19J) and by an odd coincidence most of the assistant professors of the "Contemporary History of Nicaragua" are members of the JS19J.

CST ISSUES FORMAL CALL FOR WORKER UNITY

Workers Direct Nation's Destiny

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 1 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] To: The Labor Movement and the Workers in General; From: The Sandinist Workers Federation (CST)

When our entire people, led by their vanguard, the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front], overthrew the Somoza dictatorship on 19 July, the Sandinist philosophy that only the workers and peasants would go the distance, that only their organized force would achieve victory, resounded as never before. Fifteen months after the revolutionary triumph, this is becoming more and more of an undeniable reality, embodied in the daily efforts of all workers to snatch the country from the claws of dependence and underdevelopment and and to place its economy, which they found in ruins, on a takeoff pad.

It was the working people, above all, who emerged triumphant in our country and from any perspective, they must govern the country's destiny, because ultimately the Sandinist People's Revolution is the result of the struggle by workers, the humble people, industrial and farm laborers. It is for this reason that the working people, and in particular the working class, is called upon to play a role of prime importance in the accomplishments of the revolution, as the class that produces, the class that works, that class that generates the country's wealth.

At present, when the economic plan for 1981, "The Program of Economic Efficiency and Austerity," is being drawn up, we can clearly see that only the organized force of our workers, and mainly the urban and rural working class, can lead the revolution along the path of economic development and independence for the Sandinist homeland. Nevertheless, this is a task that imperatively needs the growing involvement of our people, to bolster the grass roots nature of our economy.

The revolutionary vanguard of the people, the FSLN, and the National Reconstruction Government Junta still feel that it will be very hard to respond to the people's immediate interests given the current state of the national economy. The aftermath of human and physical destruction and the dismantled production and state machinery that the dictatorship bequeathed us are a very weighty limiting factor in resolving all of our people's problems. Our enormous foreign debt, alarming unemployment, the absence of economic reserves for investment, the extremely high cost of living, extremely low farm output and food production last year, the destruction of housing, machinery, etc characterize a situation that the leaders of the revolution and the government have been constantly indicating to us workers.

In short, there is lack of resources to immediately satisfy all of the people's demands for better conditions, and therefore we have been asked to take pride in discipline, sacrifice and austerity now so that we can organize the country's new economy and gradually resolve all of the people's needs in terms of schooling, health care, diet, recreation, housing and wages.

The other way out would be to incur more debts to respond to immediate demands, which would mean that Nicaragua would be paying off its debts in the future without receiving any benefits and feeling the pressure of creditors impairing our sovereignty.

Our judgment is that if the labor movement claims to represent the working class and all working people, it must become practically involved in resolving our revolution's dilemma.

It must properly set its immediate wage goals and grievances in the strategic framework of the revolution and decide whether we feel that the working class must play a heroic role to boost productivity and output, a role that it can play only as a vanguard in the building of a new society. If we accept this challenge, we will be gradually creating the real economic groundwork on which the new Nicaragua will be built, on which the revolution's political program must rest.

The CST, the result of the organizational efforts of the FSLN among the workers and in the labor movement since the struggle in the underground, represents the working class's tradition of revolutionary struggle in pursuit of a broader political program that provides for its guiding role as a class in the creation of a new economic and social order. The CST represents the tradition of revolutionary struggle of the Revolutionary Workers Committees (COR), the Working People's Union Movement (MSPT), the Leon SCAAS and all of the Sandinist efforts in the labor movement. We advocate that the working class play a first line role in the construction of a new society, and faced with the challenge of our current national conditions and the economic plan being readied for 1981, we assert that success will be achieved only through all-out efforts by the workers.

Therefore, the CST invites all worker federations and union organizations to discuss as broadly as possible the stands and the role that the working class ought to assume in the interests of the revolution, which in our judgment ought to be its own interests as a leadership class for the benefit of the entire Nicaraguan people.

To this end, the CST feels that it is of prime importance to set forth a number of points of discussion that are basic to the task that lies ahead:

a. An increase in production and productivity.

b. An improvement in working conditions and social services and an increase in wages in keeping with Nicaragua's economic situation.

c. The maintenance of strict revolutionary discipline at work centers.

d. The settlement of labor disputes without halting production.

This meeting and these discussions within the working class will be arranged by an organizing committee that will meet with representatives or committees of union federations and labor organizations in our country.

The year 1981 must find the working class united around its interests and fundamental positions.

Unions' Response to Call

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 4 Nov 80 pp 1, 10

[Text] What do they think? What public comments do the leaders of the various worker federations have to make in connection with the appeal that the CST has made to them to discuss the stands and the role that the working class ought to assume?

We present herewith the views expressed by the leaders of the various worker federations in connection with the aforementioned appeal.

Alejandro Solorzano, leader of the CGTI [General Confederation of Independent Workers], told us point blank right after we mentioned the objectives of the interview to him: "My opinion is this: you cannot have a revolution without the unity of the workers because we are the basis of production."

He noted that after the triumph, the CGTI brought up the need to organize a meeting to discuss the policy that the labor movement ought to pursue nationwide. Such a meeting ought to erase a great many question marks, for example, whether a wage adjustment ought to be demanded.

This meeting would broach the issue of nominal and social wages, he said, and would find out how much the government subsidizes basic consumer items, which it would then discuss.

To summarize, he explained that the CGTI agreed completely that such a dialog should be held and that they have already decided to attend, but they wanted to make it clear that they did not agree with the procedure.

Solorzano pointed out that representatives of all worker federations had to meet beforehand so that they could attend the general meeting with clear-cut ideas. "We have appointed two delegates," he said, "to go and talk with CST leaders and outline our concern to them."

He emphasized that national reconstruction is the task of all Nicaraguans, so that we resolve our economic problem. "Any activity done separately is a weak activity."

The Single Federation

Responding to the question whether a single workers federation ought to be set up, he said that this has been a longstanding view of his organization but that first we have to achieve unity in action to begin the process that would conclude in the formation of a single federation, "which has been, I repeat, our judgment."

With regard to what Commander of the Revolution Tomas Borge said about the single federation, Solorzano said that he was in complete agreement with what Borge indicated.

CUS [Confederation for Trade Union Unity]

Jose Espinoza, secretary general of CUS, stated that the call by the CST is constructive, but the bad part is that preliminary talks have not been held, and so far a formal invitation has not been forthcoming, his group having found out through the media.

"I think that a preliminary meeting would have been very beneficial," he said. He pointed out that the four points set forth by the federation are vital but that if preparatory meetings had been held with delegates from all federations, the agenda could have been further enriched. "For example," Espinoza said, "we would have proposed a discussion of federation autonomy and the logical respect that must exist among federations too."

"Although we delegates from all federations were working together on the first draft of the reform of the Labor Code, we knew nothing about the meeting; we didn't find out about it until we read the communique in EL NUEVO DIARIO."

With regard to the creation of a single workers federation, Jose Espinoza noted that the CUS does not feel that this is a good idea; rather, it favors a union of federations, which would be coordinated by a body that would consist of delegates from all federations. "We believe in that kind of unity," he said. He added that he would be violating his own principles if he did not believe in the unity of the workers.

He stressed that the call has been very general and that despite the business-like nature of the CST and CUS, they have not received anything official yet. He went on to say that perhaps "we are getting ahead of ourselves, and the official call is on the way." In summary, he indicated that he agreed with the dialog among federations.

CTN [Federation of Nicaraguan Workers] Says Call Is Constructive

Sergio Roa, the head of CTN national training, and Enrique Velarde, a member of the federation's Executive Committee, said that the points that the CST has proposed for analysis by the federations are constructive, pointing out, however, that they found out about the matter through the newspapers and that they consider this kind of appeal very general and "not as business-like as the issue warrants."

The items brought up for discussion involve the interests of all the country's worker federations, which means that examining them and drawing conclusions will contribute to the progress of the revolution, Roa said.

Sergio Roa indicated that a single workers federation must obviously be set up to safeguard the interests of the workers.

But he pointed out that we have to be realistic and that because of the diversity of ideas that now prevails, a single federation cannot be created at present, noting that we have to realize that a gradual process must be followed to bring such a federation about.

"A single workers federation cannot come about through elitist desires, in other words, by imposing leaders; it will come about, instead, when the rank-and-file are fully aware of the need and get decisively involved in forming this single federation."

When asked whether they were going to attend the assembly, they said that the CTN Executive Committee had a meeting scheduled to discuss the call and make a decision and thus they could obviously not delve further into the matter for the time being.

CAUS [Center for Labor Unity and Action] Comments

Alan Zambrana, secretary general of CAUS, said in relation to the CST call that CAUS has been in favor of labor movement unity.

In this regard, he said, we posed this concern after the triumph. We made specific proposals regarding the formation of a single workers federation.

We favor bringing together union federations, Zambrana reiterated, in a nationwide dialog to discuss the burning problems affecting workers. We contend that unity must come about on the basis of class principles, the principles of the working class.

We are pleased, Alan Zambrana pointed out, that the CST has included wages in its four points. It is important, constructive, for us to discuss this, and of course we have to go more in-depth.

But we must point out, he said, that in order to contribute to unity, the persecution of a certain segment of the labor movement must, of course, cease.

In order to move towards unity, the members of our union who are still being held in Leon jails must be released.

He also mentioned the imprisonment of Eli Altamirano, the secretary general of the Nicaraguan Communist Party, who was arrested at his home last Sunday. (At the time that this article was being written, the appropriate authorities reported that Eli Altamirano had already been released, and a news item on this appears elsewhere in this issue.)

Zambrana said in conclusion that CAUS delegates were going to attend the meeting that the CST has called.

NEWSPAPER CRITICIZES CARTER'S PERFORMANCE

PY130111 Asuncion HOY in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 15

[Editorial: "Return to the Peanut Farm"]

[Text] The government of hesitations, timid retreats and suicidal ambiguities is over. The comedy staged as illusion of security which, ultimately, was nothing but the old, useless and ridiculous ostrich policy has come to an end. As a result, the enemy stood up more daring all the time, more convinced all the time that all he had to face was the obscure peanut seller that Carter never ceased to be.

And the double surrender was consumated: the shameful decline of Western leadership which had been the touchstone of security for those countries that had decided to take a common stand against communism, and the treacherous and unforgivable neglect of Latin American governments which, having taken that stand, were building a future free of the threat of extremism.

Never in the annals of contemporary history has a U.S. president done so much in such a short time in favor of extremism. By waving a demagogic human rights banner, he did nothing but deprive many countries of their right to choose their own destiny.

By promoting principles of deceitful appearance, he only managed to project a faded and false image of the nation which unfortunately trusted him to conduct its destiny.

These 4 years of Democratic tenure were years of lost battles throughout the world. In his desperate homestretch run for votes, Carter lied when he said his administration could boast having stayed away from any armed conflict. Although he astutely concealed the fact, Carter knew well that in the modern world wars can be won without firing a shot through the force of pure ideology, especially the diabolic Marxist ideology. While Carter was guided by his pious thoughts, communism advanced by leaps and bounds.

Communism made its move in Afghanistan and Carter's response was silence. He had earlier revealed his terrible incapacity as a statesman when he concocted and carried out the ouster of the shah of Iran, a friend of the United States. He thus left exposed a vital flank for future Soviet penetration in the Persian Gulf (which sooner or later will happen) and served power on a silver platter to a fanatic who has destabilized the precarious equilibrium in the conflictive and strategic Persian Gulf area. As punishment from God, the first move of that fanatic was to encourage the occupation of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and the capture of the embassy staff as hostages. What would a responsible president have done? He should have negotiated and moved cautiously. Instead Carter mounted the disastrous rescue operation that would have elicited laughter had it not caused the death of innocent soldiers. By another irony of fate, up to the last moment votes for Carter hung on the possible liberation of those hostages. What did Carter think of those human beings locked up inside walls in fear and terror for a long year? He only thought of them as opportunities for votes. What was his objective in implementing the much-vaunted human rights policy? A cheap search for prestige by playing with fire through the destabilization of regimes which up to then had been solid bastions against communist penetration.

Carter inverted all the terms: where energy was needed, he placed weakness; where caution was needed, he acted as a rash greenhorn. The free world justifiably began to turn its back on him as attested by his awkward presence in the picture of the world's top leaders during their meeting in Venice earlier this year, and his conspicuous absence in Belgrade at Tito's funeral, which was attended by the most important figures in world politics.

Carter goes out now when he has nothing more to lose. It is sad that his loss is also the United States' loss. Only scattered remnants of its past deterrent power remain today. It has been a constant U.S. retreat in the face of a continuous advance of the communist menace. Carter leaves the stage with a diploma for ineptness which no other U.S. president has earned before. Bureaucratic rules alone granted him the obviously undeserved chance to occupy the oval office from which other, great U.S. statesmen have directed their country's policy. Carter however still has a right which he should have been forced to exercise 4 years ago: planting peanuts. Perhaps not much can be said about this right, but at least exercising it does no damage to the West.

FOREIGN MINISTRY CONFIRMS DIVERSION OF PILCOMAYO RIVER

[Text of communique released by the Paraguayan Foreign Ministry in Asuncion on 10 November]

[Text] With regard to a recent Argentine Foreign Ministry communique referring to press reports disseminated in our capital on the diversion of the Pilcomayo River, the Foreign Ministry, for its part, deems it its duty to make the following clarifications to best inform the public:

1. Paraguay, Argentina, Bolivia, the OAS, the IDB and the UN Development Program [UNDP] signed an agreement in 1974 to conduct a study called "multiple utilization of the Pilcomayo River basin," divided into two basic stages: a) general and analysis study of the area (272,000 sq km); and b) specific programs designed to promote regional development. Falling within the framework of the above studies are, among others, the rational utilization of water resources, sediment control, irrigation and drainage projects, quality of underground water, erosion control, ecology and possibilities of promoting industries for processing agricultural and livestock products. In October 1977, the international directorate of the project (entrusted to the OAS) submitted to the consideration of both the executive committee and the coordinating commission a report on the first stage (from February 1975 to September 1977) which consisted of four volumes listing the works that had been carried out: I. General report; II. Water resources; III. Land resources; and IV. Project and socioeconomic outline. In this report, the delegations of the three countries listed those projects they regarded as being of national interest for their respective countries. Included among those of Argentina was the "Riacho el Porteno" project.

2. The respective delegations acknowledged receipt of the above OAS report in order to analyze it from the technical viewpoint. On that occasion (October 1977), the Paraguayan delegation asked its Argentine counterpart to define the various Argentine projects which could result in a joint utilization of the river and give detailed technical information on the "El Porteno" project, which was to utilize waters made available through the "natural outflow" (flooding) of the river but which, because of its size, led to the belief that it could result in a permanent utilization of the waters of the Pilcomayo River. In this regard, the Argentine coordinator made the following statement on the record:

"...declares that his acceptance of the report on the first stage does not imply his consent to the implementation by the other countries of the projects outlined therein. These projects will have to be implemented in accordance with multilateral and bilateral international instruments governing the utilization of shared water resources."

3. In subsequent meetings, the Paraguayan delegation maintained the idea of conducting the appropriate technical studies of the various projects outlined in the OAS report which included, among others, the Argentine "El Porteno" project. The 1977 conference of foreign ministers itself (resolution 79/XI) merely decided to "take note of the completion of the first stage of the study for the multiple utilization of the Pilcomayo River basin, with the important cooperation of the OAS, the IDB and the UNDP."

4. It must also be pointed out that the 1974 agreement did not empower any of the national commissions of the member countries to give consent, in the name of their respective governments, to any action which may be construed as partial or final approval of reports of international organizations, much less to projects or to the implementation of projects by the other countries of the agreement. The national commissions have eminently technical and scientific functions aimed at submitting to their respective governments reports and suggestions related to the various problems falling within their area of study.

5. At the 11th meeting of the executive committee (March 1979), the Argentine delegation reported that "Formosa Province has completed its plans for the implementation of the project, having called public bids, which are now in the process of being awarded, for this purpose." On that occasion, taking into account the lack of technical information on the subject, the Paraguayan delegation made the following statement for the records: ..."any problem stemming from the utilization of the waters of the Pilcomayo River will be considered within the framework of the agreements currently in force between the two governments."

6. Consequently, through a note sent to the Argentine Embassy on 30 May 1979, the Foreign Ministry expressed "its firm opposition to any project which would in any way cause the diversion of the main course of the Pilcomayo River and which may involve substantial loss of its interests."

It also requested "all the necessary information and data so as to acquire a precise knowledge of that project and of its implications, with the firm conviction that an appropriate definition of the problem will contribute in strengthening the current cordial relations between our two countries."

7. At the 12th meeting of coordinators (Salta, July 1979), not yet having the information requested from the Argentine officials, the national delegation was quite categorical in its statement recorded in the act: "With regard to the El Porteno project, the Paraguayan Government presented through its embassy a note to the Argentine Foreign Ministry dated 30 May 1979 and is still awaiting an answer. Consequently, according to the note, the Paraguayan delegation expresses its opposition to that project until all the reasons listed in the note are met. The Paraguayan delegation maintains the same position regarding any other project in which their resources and interests are jeopardized or can be jeopardized, resources and interests which by current agreement between the parties must be subject to previous agreements."

8. The Paraguayan delegation has been in all cases consistent in maintaining the principle that any undertaking of this nature must be adapted to Resolution No 25 of the foreign ministers of the river plate basin called "Asuncion Declaration on the Use of International Rivers," whose article 1 establishes: "Regarding continuous international rivers, with shared sovereignty, any use of their waters must be preceded by a bilateral agreement between the neighboring countries."

9. In view of the use of the waters from the river margin of the Pilcomayo River, thus diverting the normal course of the river, the Foreign Ministry presented its protest for the confirmation of the flagrant diversion of the main course with an artificial channel of the Pilcomayo River (note to the Argentine Government of 11 July 1979). It called the Paraguayan-Argentine joint commission for the administration and oversight of the Pilcomayo River to an urgent meeting to clear up a situation which is undermining the correct procedure of this difficult situation (similar note of 18 October 1979), and on 9 January 1980 it reiterated its protest at the existence and nature of the artificial diversion channel, demanding "an immediate solution to the problem" (that is, "closing the mouth of the diversion channel to return things to the previous state.")

10. The Foreign Ministry shares the statement made by its Argentine counterpart when it states in its communique that "this situation has been duly studied by the Argentine and Paraguayan Governments and agreement has been reached to implement the appropriate measures designed to dam up the above-mentioned drainage so the waters can return to their normal course as soon as possible."

In compliance with this common desire, the engineering command of the National Armed Forces is actively working in the task of closing the artificial channel, during the time which is still left before the beginning of the rainy and flooding season.

LAINO PREVENTED FROM TRAVELING TO U.S.

PY201512 Asuncion ABC COLOR in Spanish 20 Nov 80 p 11

[Text] By police order Domingo Laino, president of the Authentical Radical Liberal Party [PLRA], was unable to travel to the United States yesterday where he was supposed to lecture at Central Michigan University. Laino was prevented from boarding a Varig flight as he was preparing to do so at approximately 1615.

The leader of the opposition said in statements to the media that he had requested his identity card and passport of the Paraguayan police 2 years ago, but that they had not yet been given to him. He went on to explain that in view of this situation, the U.S. Government, through its embassy in our country, had granted him a special document that would allow him to go to the northern country. The political leader said that "as a consequence, all my documents were in order for travel to the United States," and added that he had even had to pay the required airport tax.

Laino also disclosed that the subjects he was going to talk about at Central Michigan University were "political violence, human rights and world order." He added that his main subject was "government terrorism."

He termed the measure "arbitrary" and believes it was ordered by the national executive branch. In this regard, Juan Manuel Benitez Florentin, vice president of the PLRA stated that "this measure is against Article No. 56 of the constitution," and added that "during his last press conference, in which he attacked everybody, the interior minister brandished a copy of the constitution. This violation of the constitution proves that it is not valid, that it is nothing but a piece of paper which is not respected even by the authorities."

Miguel Abdon Saguier, political secretary of the PLRA, who was also present, stated that "this outrage reveals the government's fear that statements on the national reality may be made abroad."

BISHOP SEES DEEP BITTERNESS OVER PRICE HIKES

PY182100 Asuncion ABC COLOR in Spanish 18 Nov p 11

[Excerpts] Msgr Felipe Santiago Benitez, president of the Paraguayan Episcopal Conference (CEP), has stated in describing the present situation of the Paraguayan worker, hit by the price escalation: "There is a suppressed outcry among the people, a bitterness that becomes deeper day by day. This is dangerous...and someday it may explode." He also said that "the breach between rich and poor is becoming ever wider."

Below we transcribe part of the dialogue we had with the bishops after the end of the first CEP session.

[Question] What is the position of the church regarding the developments which directly affect the Paraguayan worker?

[Monsignor Benitez] When the first fuel price increase was made, we said that it should not have been done so suddenly and so steeply, because the steep increase affected the poor worker and the poor peasant rather than people who have the means to face the situation. History shows that the breach is becoming ever wider between the haves and the have-nots, between rich and poor. But instead of helping the poor and some of the middle class so they would not suffer so much from these measures, it seems that the people are not heard or taken into account. It seems that everything is arranged technocratically technically, coldly, on a level of pure mathematical calculations; but on that level, where is human and social consideration?

This may seem to be a rather strong statement by me as president of the conference, but I maintain it. We have said from the beginning that this would happen. There is a suppressed outcry among the people, a bitterness that becomes deeper day by day. This is dangerous...and some day it may explode.

PILCOMAYO RIVER TALKS--Buenos Aires, 14 Nov (AFP)--Official Argentine and Paraguayan representatives will meet in Buenos Aires during the first few days of December to study their differences over a shared section of the Pilcomayo River, which serves as a border between the two countries. The announcement was made here by Elpidio Acevedo, Paraguayan under secretary of foreign relations, who said that Argentina recently diverted the river. He added: "Logically, we have to report this situation and try to find a solution satisfactory to Paraguayan interests." It is the Argentine position that projects involving the seasonal overflow of the Pilcomayo River do not affect the river flow or have any effect on the Paraguayan riverbank, and therefore are not subject to the international norms regulating multilateral river flow. Paraguay, however, believes that seasonal overflows do not exist and is demanding that Argentina apply the rule of prior consultation, which should govern projects affecting rivers of shared sovereignty. INFLATION FIGURE CHALLENGED--The rate of inflation reportedly reached 24 percent during the period January-August this year, whereas the Central Bank says that inflation was only 9 percent during the period January-September. The former evaluation was made in an internal study on cost of living by the Catholic University. The study also says that it can be observed that the official anti-inflationary measures are only applied to the currency, particularly by restricting credits for productive activities and by increasing the interest rate and the legal cash reserves of all kinds of financial institutions. These measures attempt to slow down the circulation of money. [Excerpts] [PY200021 Asuncion ULTIMA HORA in Spanish 18 Nov 80 p 14]

NEW PNP GOVERNMENT, PROBLEMS DESCRIBED

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 18 Nov 80 p 4

[Text]

GRAND TURK, Turks and Caicos (CANA) – The conservative government of Norman Saunders, with its 8-3 seat majority in the Legislative Council and anti-independence position, has taken office here with a public purse unable to meet pressing commitments, but amid a rising tide of public and business confidence.

Saunders and his Progressive National Party won power from the radical People's Democratic Movement (PDM) at national elections on November 4.

He heads a four-member Cabinet and has promised the tiny British colony that the emphasis of his administration will be on "good house-keeping."

Spokesmen have said they found not only the treasury almost bare, but also that a bank overdraft, guaranteed by the British government, had been utilised almost up to its limit.

Estimated recurrent revenue for 1980 has not produced what had been projected by the previous government.

There were said to be two main reasons: the past government's estimates had been over-optimistic, and secondly, there had been virtual business sector malaise in the months prior to the poll.

The spokesmen said that expenditure by the previous administration had every month exceeded the estimates.

The new government will this month draft its 1981-1982 budget, with advice from the British Development division in the Caribbean, headquartered in Barbados.

It is almost certain that in the absence of any source of windfalls for the struggling colony, the British government will be asked for budgetary assistance of between one million and two million dollars.

The level of capital aid from Britain is expected to run in the coming year to $2.5 million, it was said.

Since the election, foreign experts here have said that if it could not itself provide the assistance required by the Turks and Caicos, Britain should help it seek additional bilateral and multilateral aid.

One of the major projects for which assistance will have to be sought is a $20-million road through the Caicos Islands, held to be crucial for attracting development investment there.

The British government is committed to substantial funding for the provision of such infrastructure as roads, electricity, water, for a huge French-linked hotel project (called "Club Mediterranean").

British assistance in this regard was pegged onto a commitment, unwillingly, by the previous administration to advance to independence in 1982.

Since winning power, Chief Minister Saunders has said that with financial and technical assistance, his "good house-keeping" government could produce economic self-sufficiency, both in the public and private sectors, by 1984.

By so doing, the Turks and Caicos Islands would thereby join what he called the family of the other British dependencies in the region: Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, British Virgin Islands, Anguilla, Montserrat, and possibly Nevis.

Apart from immediate new overseas investment here following the election results, especially in the hotel industry, the spokesmen have said that major new business in tax havenry is expected to emerge.

A number of professionals attending an international tax planning seminar in the Bahamas capital, Nassau, will be coming here this week to have discussions with government and what has been described as "a revived and very optimistic chamber of commerce."

An international companies registration act approved by the last government but not yet assented to, had caused deep concern among the business community and potential foreign investors.

This will now either be repealed or "die a natural death" by never being assented to.

Local business sources said they expected the number of offshore companies registered in the Turks and Caicos Islands to double in the next six months.

In the tourism industry also there has been an evident change in outlook immediately the government changed.

Former Hotel Association officer, Tina Fenimore, who has been a successful hotelier here a decade now, remarked today:

"There is general and widespread feeling amongst the business community of confidence in and support for the new government, something which did not exist in the last four years.

"Our basic problems are shortage of qualified and disciplined staff and I am delighted that the government has said it will introduce the long-delayed vocational training programmes."

PRESS REPORTAGE ON TRADE RELATIONS WITH YUGOSLAVIA, CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Yugoslav Trade Boost Sought

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 15-16 Oct 80 p 15

[Text] Uruguay and Yugoslavia will attempt to boost trade and promote economic cooperation. This was decided at the close of the conversations between authorities from our country and members of the Yugoslav Government delegation that arrived in Montevideo last Sunday. According to a press release from the Uruguayan Foreign Ministry, the two sides agreed that "there are many possibilities for promoting trade between the two countries." In this connection, the Yugoslav representatives were said to have expressed an interest in marketing equipment, capital goods, machines, consumer goods, pharmaceuticals, tools and farm machinery, among other items, while Uruguay offered meat, fish, fishmeal, wool, leather, soybeans, various citrus fruits, skins, semi-manufactured and manufactured goods. The two sides also agreed on the need to develop broader forms of cooperation, such as setting up joint enterprises and simultaneous transactions. A decision was also made to recommend that credit lines and current accounts be opened between commercial banks in the two countries. In addition, Yugoslavia offered Uruguay the use of its warehouses and other port facilities.

Meat Sale Agreement

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 17 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] Uruguay and Yugoslavia are trying to hammer out a cooperation agreement between veterinary organizations in the two countries, with an eye towards arranging meat transactions.

The representatives of the two sides expressed the need to reach an agreement in this area during the negotiations that took place this week between the members of an official Yugoslav mission and Uruguayan authorities.

The Yugoslav delegation, headed by Vuko Dragosevic, a member of the Federal Executive Council and chairman of the commission for cooperation with developing countries, met with the undersecretaries of foreign relations, Dr Julio C. Lupinacci; industry and energy, Carlos Corti, and agriculture and fishing, Mr Tydeo Larre Borges; with the secretary of SEPLACODI [Information, Coordination and Planning Secretariat], Col Luis W. Cicalese; with the director of international economic affairs of the Foreign Ministry, Ambassador Federico Grunwaldt Ramasso, and with the director general of foreign trade, Santiago Antuna. They also held various meetings with representatives of the Chambers of Industry and Commerce and with the Commission of the Citrus Fruit Program.

At the close of their deliberations the two countries agreed, among other things, that more frequent contacts should be promoted among businessmen, trade missions should be organized and information exchanged. In this regard, it was recommended that broader cooperation be established among the various economic and trade organizations.

Now that the groundwork has been laid for further cooperation, a mission of Yugoslav businessmen is expected to visit soon to begin negotiating specific agreements.

Czechoslovak Trade Mission Visit

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 15-16 Oct 80 p 13

[Text] A Czechoslovak mission headed by the nation's director general of foreign trade, Jan Garcar, and the director for Latin American affairs (same ministry), Mr Horac, will be arriving in our country on 12 November.

The reason for the visit is to hammer out agreements with Uruguayan authorities to boost trade between the two nations.

This was reported to EL DIA by the new trade adviser at the Czechoslovak Embassy in our country, Mr Jan Michal, who will be welcomed at an evening reception at the embassy.

Michal stressed that the balance of trade between the two countries was in Uruguay's favor over the first 8 months of the year, as it sold Czechoslovakia $12 million worth of goods and imported merchandise valued at $8.5 million.

Higher sales to Czechoslovakia were reflected in wool exports, which totaled $8.5 million. Uruguay also exported $2.5 million in semifinished leather goods and close to 100 tons of rice.

Next month a shipment of 3,000 tons of oranges and further samples of frozen fish will be shipped from Montevideo to be analyzed by Czechoslovak technicians, after which it will decide whether to become a client of Uruguay's for these items.

More Tractors

In December 400 more Zetor brand Czechoslovak tractors will be arriving in our country, on top of the 1,600 that have come in in recent months.

Orange Exports

Even though this first shipment is important in terms of its commercial value, it is part of an even larger deal signed recently between the state enterprise Koospol, Inc. of Prague and CALFORU [Agricultural and Livestock Cooperative of Rural Development Associations]. Under this agreement, Uruguayan growers will deliver 3,000 tons of Late Valencia oranges in 1980. As we can see, in addition to its economic value for the country, this commercial transaction represents the consolidation of a new market for the nation's citrus fruit crop.

A reception was held on board the Uruguayan vessel on the occasion of this initial shipment. It was attended by interim Charge d'Affaires Jindrick Kabat, commercial adviser Jan Michal and commercial delegate Jan Sabo, on behalf of the Czechoslovak Embassy in Uruguay, and by Mr Jorge Saxel, Dr Alberto S. de Zumaran, Joaquin Mangado and Juan J. Musso, on behalf of the Association of Uruguayan Citrus Fruit Growers.

Also present at the get-together on board the "Venus del Mar" were Mr Jorge Aougustis, the president of Montemar S.A., the builders of the ship, its captain, Mr Heber Chiaparra, and other ranking officials from the company.

The "Venus del Mar," which just arrived from Europe with a shipment of buses for ONDA, set sail for ports in northern Europe with a full cargo of Uruguayan products.

Caracas BOHEMIA in Spanish 10-16 Nov 80 pp 6-9

[Article: "The Center-Left 'New Alternative' Comes Into Existence"]

[Text] One sector of the Venezuelan left and another of the political center are attempting to provide mutual fresh air. Today, the announcement was made to the country of the establishment of a "great national movement" which wants to be known as "The New Alternative." After an increasing political setback, these two sectors have decided to set forth on the agitated Venezuelan scene. Intention number one: to displace AD [Democratic Action] and COPEI [Social Christian Party] as hegemonic forces. But this has been the dream of all those parties for the past 20 years. Is this not perhaps just another attempt that will remain in the realm of illusion?

The Venezuelan left has been depicted on several occasions as one of the most inept in the world; in other words, it has never measured up to a period in history that could benefit it: Either it has been far ahead, setting goals for itself that were unattainable and not understood by the populace, or it has lagged behind the process, without any correct initiative for action. But, in any event, it has never been able to find the proper response to a situation that would favor it.

While the polls that have been published to date agree in announcing a particular dissatisfaction with the current government performance, while the COPEI party is embroiled in an internal conflict over the selection of the new national leadership and the presidential candidate, and when Democratic Action is striving to preserve the party's unity, the Venezuelan left has had nothing to say. All predictions indicated that the "Socialists" would take advantage of this critical period for the two major parties of Venezuela, for their own gain.

Nevertheless, despite the division and disappearance of MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left], and the internal struggle within MAS [Movement for Socialism] between Teodoro and Pompeyo, the left refuses to die. The capacity for survival is unquestionably one of the qualities of this sector.

The Center, an 'Unburied Corpse'

Jovito Villalba, despite the fact that he has declined in the electoral area, has become a kind of institution in the country. Every time the nation experiences difficult periods, the warnings and advice of Jovito Villalba are never missing. He is like the "voice of the conscience" of Venezuela.

But this "institution-man" has now lost the erstwhile powerful party machinery that accompanied him until a few years ago. This fact prompted Teodoro Petkoff to state that the political center had disappeared from Venezuela. To the case of URD [Democratic Republican Union] must be added the disappearance of FND [Democratic National Front] (the party founded by Uslar Pietri) and of (Jorge Dager's) FDP [Popular Democratic Force]. Also to be added is the stagnation of Montiel Ortega's party (MORENA [National Revolutionary Movement]).

Thus, the so-called "political center" is showing a great weakness at present. But, just as in the left, these individuals, especially Jovito and Montiel Ortega, refuse to side with Romulo Betancourt. When the great AD "exaggerator" said that Jovito was an "unburied corpse," the great "yellow" leader decided to do everything in his power to ridicule him: he backed Luis Herrera to defeat Betancourt's candidate (Pinerua), and won; he backed Carlos Andres in the "Sierra Nevada" case, and won; now he wants to defeat both AD and COPEI. Will he be able to prove, once again, that he is no "unburied corpse"?

The New Alternative

Since Jose Vicente Rangel, Jovito Villalba and Americo Martin decided to back Carlos Andres so that he would not be convicted in the "Sierra Nevada" case, there has been a strong odor indicating that something spicy is cooking. Those strange coincidences which broke all the traditional patterns of Venezuelan politics, indicated that Villalba and his former follower, Jose Vicente Rangel, combined with former presidential candidate Americo Martin, would give us a surprise tomorrow. And that tomorrow has indeed come.

A large portion of the Venezuelan left and some center sectors have reached an agreement to form a broad movement on the national level, which will not have the features of a front, but which will not be a new party either. Both Americo Martin and Jose Vicente have hastened to explain this. Jovito has not said anything in public yet. But he is one of those who is working most, quietly. The fact is that many sectors, both radical and moderate, have been receiving tempting visits. "A movement must be formed which will go beyond the left; the latter cannot defeat AD and COPEI by itself." This is Jose Vicente's new weapon, with which he is fighting the "sectarian positions" of Teodoro Petkoff, his most dangerous rival.

'Carlos Andres in the Movement...?'

Since CAP [Carlos Andres Perez] emerged unscathed from the "cold storage plant" debate, the possibility was cited of a future alliance between certain sectors of the left and center with AD's "Perecists". There were several meetings held by Jose Vicente, Americo and Jovito with Carlos Andres at a restaurant in the east. They were all operating with the possibility of an imminent split in Democratic Action...but the illusions were thwarted. In any event, "The New Alternative," a potential name for this new center-left movement, is not considering at present any alliance with any AD sector. It is also known that certain leaders of the AD Old Guard have been conversing with Americo Martin since the latter proposed to publicly rescue the personages of Leonardo Ruiz Pineda, Valmore Rodriguez, Andres Eloy Blanco and others. This is part of the political readjustment that is being started in Venezuela.

Teodoro's Nerves

Without doubt, one of those most concerned about this new political movement is the top-ranking leader of MAS, Teodoro Petkoff, who thought that his former rival, Jose Vicente, would be another "unburied corpse" without MAS. He met with a ghost which is trying to keep him from sleeping. The creation of "The New Alternative" would appear to be giving Jose Vicente Rangel an unexpected breath of fresh air. Furthermore, Teodoro's concern is said to be based, not on personal reasons, but on MAS. While the organic crisis of the political parties is spreading in the country to a disturbing degree (Rachadell has already written at length about this), the creation of any movement that would attempt to renew and transcend all the closed structures of the parties would not fail to evoke a certain amount of interest. And that is what Jovito, Jose Vicente, Americo Martin, Guillermo Garcia Ponce, Alfredo Maneiro and many others are hoping to attract. Thus, Jose Vicente has put a real "ball of fire" in Teodoro's hands.

Names and Surnames

"The New Alternative" has made considerable progress in its establishment. The first step taken was the formation of the "Parliamentary Bloc of the Left," created by Romulo Henriquez (who heads it), Jose Vicente Rangel, Domingo F. Maza Zavala, Americo Martin, Guillermo Garcia Ponce, Jesus Maria Pacheco and Laureano Torrealba. This Parliamentary Bloc has suddenly been converted into the fourth-ranking force in the National Congress. The "Teodorists" have already announced their concern over the creation of this organization, through Freddy Munoz.

"The New Alternative" hopes to obtain backing from the number of independents who are going about seeking a third solution to the country's most urgent problems. Jose Vicente Rangel and Garcia Ponce are talking with the leadership of the movement that has opposed the signing of an agreement with Colombia on the Gulf of Venezuela. This week, a joint function will be held, in which Manuel Alfredo Rodriguez, Reinaldo Cervini, Pedro J. Lara Pena, F. Brito Figueroa, Rafael Pizani, Jose Vicente Rangel and Guillermo Garcia Ponce will participate. The theme of the gathering will be the dispute with Colombia. But there has been a hint indicating that this is one of the first overtures for the incorporation of these individuals into "The New Alternative."

Other independents who are participating in this movement are: Luis Miquilena, Carlos Blanco, Elpidio La Riva Mata, Jose Ramon Briceno Moncino, Hector Malave Mata, Hector Silva Michelena, etc.

They have planned the incorporation of various sectors on the party level. One of those who was undecided about participating until a few days ago was Leonardo Montiel Ortega. But the master, Jovito, was the one assigned to convince him. Actually, a few days ago, Jovito and Montielito "happened to meet" at a restaurant in the capital. The elder approached his follower and said: "Leonardo, how long are we going to continue this way (displeased)?" To which Leonardo replied: "Teacher, you know that, despite the circumstances of the past, I am still a faithful friend of yours." From then on, the noise of the trays made it impossible to disclose the details of Montiel Ortega's incorporation into "The New Alternative." The fact is that Leonardo and Americo Martin are now conversing nearly every day.

The Americo-MIR is one of the sectors that has been most promoting this "New Alternative." The cancellation of the MIR's name has forced this sector to seek some solution to its crisis. Martin revealed that he has no intention of creating any new party. "The country would not stand for it," were his words. So, they did not have to travel very far to meet with Jose Vicente and others, and found this new movement. "This time, we are with history, and not against it," remarked Etanislao Gonzalez optimistically to Hector Silva Michelena.

The Communist Vanguard has been approached, as has Alfredo Maneiro's Cause R. Others which are at the point of joining are EPA [The People Advance], GAR [Revolutionary Action Groups] and "May Day."

Daniel Naranjo, Luis Guillermo Hernandez, former Senator Lorenzo Salazar Zamora and others, all former FDP members, are also working for the plan.

If all these sectors should merge, it is taken for granted that "The New Alternative" will be the third force in the CTV [Confederation of Venezuelan Workers]. The union movement would be headed by Ely Saul Puchi, Rafael Castaneda, Laureano Torrealba, Basilio Anton, Luis Morillo Baez and other trade unionists in the country.

The presence of Jovito Villalba and URD in this arrangement would give "The New Alternative" a genuine center-left appearance.

Important Details

It is claimed that "The New Alternative" will not be a front, but not a party either. Then what will it be? Its organizers point out that it is a new political experiment in the country. Thus far, a decision has been reached to come to an agreement, and proceed together in Congress and the Municipal Councils with the same name, symbol and electoral ticket, possibly in the parliamentary slates, for the presidential candidate, in the national, regional and municipal boards of directors, on the trade union, youth, professional and teachers fronts, on the residents boards and in other mass entities. For the time being, they will proceed separately in the political leaderships of each movement, because no one will lose his own profile, in the latter's national organization, in finances and in propaganda.

The Great Dilemma

To those familiar with the Venezuelan left, this new political plan may perhaps appear to be another abortive attempt of the left. Personal ambitions (are they a perpetual evil among them?) may perhaps prevent them from successfully achieving their goals. Hence, a deadline has been set for "The New Alternative": the 1983 elections. If they manage to pass this ordeal of fire, and go beyond 1983 with a strengthened movement, we may unquestionably be witnessing an interesting phenomenon in the country's political history.

CULTURAL DEPENDENCE ON U.S. CONCERNS VICE ADMIRAL

Caracas BOHEMIA in Spanish 13-19 Oct 80 pp 30-31

[Interview with Vice Adm Elio Orta Zambrano, by Jesus Seguias at the headquarters of the Honor Guard of Miraflores Palace; date not given]

> [Text] This was our first visit to the headquarters of the Honor Guard of Miraflores Palace. Our entry was delayed by the arrival of an army bus filled with soldiers wearing reddish green caps. The guard stationed at the gate uttered some odd-sounding words (a password, we imagined) before the military vehicle passed through. It was then our turn to give our password.

[Question] Vice admiral, is the country as safe and well-defended as this barracks?

[Answer] No. I feel that the country has not taken care of its security and defense problems; no country in the world has. Nevertheless, on ongoing desire and determination to strengthen what we might call national values is a clear-cut indication that we are seeking to strengthen our approach to security and defense.

[Question] Speaking of national values, what are the major problems that have been posed to the organization that you head, in connection with our national identity?

[Answer] We are especially worried about people losing the interest that we should all have in achieving an in-depth knowledge of our history, our music, our literature, in establishing permanent ties among education, work and progress.

[Question] Is this loss of values due to circumstantial factors or to specific reasons that can be clearly delineated?

[Answer] I think that it is due to specific factors that can be clearly delineated. This country has been tremendously influenced culturally by capitalism and the enormous country called the United States. We also have to recognize that the ease with which we can acquire insignificant material things which, however, make many people happy, is also a factor in this. But this is a situation that we can correct....

[Question] How?

[Answer] By teaching Venezuelan history in our schools and colleges again, but a realistic, concrete, accurate history that portrays the men who have forged our history as normal, everyday citizens who while having transformed certain periods of our history, were also men of the people, not the predestined or super-gifted individuals that we would like to portray them as at times.

Elio Orta Zambrano believes firmly in the potential strength of Venezuelan youth. He places his greatest hopes in them.

[Question] When you refer to to these signs of cultural dependence, which institutions do you think bear the greatest responsibility for the strength or weakness of a nation's identity?

[Answer] I would say that this should be a shared responsibility. In reality, however, it falls to three institutions in particular: the home, the Education Ministry and the mass media, the latter having the ability to transform an idea and a concept into a new idea and a new concept. We should not forget the Ministry of Information and Tourism either.

I think that by means of activities like the one we staged a few days ago with newsmen and by doing a more in-depth revision of the Organic Security and Defense Law, we can do much good. We are convinced that the mass media can and must responsibly report a great deal more on these topics and on what the Venezuelan people have to do to bolster and strengthen their national identity and to achieve a better future.

(The second cup of coffee took us by surprise. We had to interrupt the interview for a few minutes. I used the time to check my tape recorder, so that it wouldn't play any tricks on me. Our photographer continued his acrobatics to get a good picture. The vice admiral took the opportunity to intimate, with some embarrassment, that we had to finish up because the president of the republic was waiting for him.)

[Answer] Yes, of course. This is a factor that conspires against sovereignty. The developing countries, of which Venezuela and all Latin American countries are examples, are presently struggling to bolster their views in the international arena, to establish a North-South, East-West dialog and to seek an international social justice that will enable them to consolidate their economies and strengthen their industries as soon as possible...so that in the not too distant future they can offer their citizens a better, fuller life and meet the needs of everyone in the country, and I am talking specifically about Venezuela here.

FOREIGN-MADE FIREARMS CONTROL--Caracas, 21 Oct (VENPRES)--As of next January the Interior Ministry will deny firearms licenses to persons acquiring weapons outside Venezuela. The director of Arms and Explosives of the Interior Ministry, Franklin Chaparro Rojas, told VENPRES today that beginning in January, "the only firearms that will be registered and licensed in the country will be the ones purchased from CAVIM [Military Industries Company]." He pointed out that over the past 10 years "just 0.1 percent of the crimes committed with firearms were perpetrated with licensed weapons." Thus, he added, "the state did not think it was necessary to cut down on the number of gun licenses it issues; instead, it felt it should democratize the process by making them accessible to all responsible citizens, without the involvement of sponsors, friends or political patrons." He pointed out that 99 percent of the crimes committed in Venezuela with firearms are perpetrated with weapons smuggled in over the border along with other merchandise or through clandestine airstrips. Chaparro Rojas stressed that the Interior Ministry was conducting a campaign against weapons smuggling into Venezuela by reinforcing surveillance at airports, borders, ports and other access routes into the country. He also reported that after illegal weapons or firearms used in a violent crime are confiscated, the officials of the Arms and Explosives Bureau record their serial numbers and send this information to Interpol and the U.S. Department of Alcohol, Tobacco and Drugs. With regard to the most common varieties of firearms registered with his office, he reported that citizens have registered mostly revolvers and pistols with calibers between 4 and 38 millimeters. He stressed that licenses are not issued for automatic pistols or revolvers, the ones that can fire several rounds in a row when the trigger is pulled. Chaparro Rojas reported that the Arms and Explosives Bureau issued or renewed 7,064 firearms licenses during the first half of 1978. This figure does not include the licenses and renewals of industrial protection corps and firms transporting valuables. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 22 Oct 80 p D-19] 8743

GAS WELL DRILLING--Quiriquire, 22 Oct--Petroleum engineers are currently engaged in finding gas in new deposits deep in the subsoil of this old field. More than 50 years ago the search was for oil. "And it was found in abundance in this field, the prisoner of industry in the east," the historic chronicles read. Lagoven is now searching for gas there after halting an exploratory program in the so-called Cretaceous zone. "Two wells were drilled in Cretaceous rocks, and neither gas nor oil was found," a Lagoven spokesman said here. Are you abandoning the program? "For now, yes." What are you looking for now, then? "We will be drilling two wells at Quiriquire to pinpoint gas deposits." In making this announcement, the new manager of Lagoven East, Arnaldo Salazar Rafalli, explained that "there are major potential reserves of gas in this old field," adding that "we must not forget that gas is as valuable an energy resource as oil." When will exploration begin again? "The program begins in 1981." [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 23 Oct 80 p D-8] 8743

LAGOVEN GEOLOGY DEPARTMENT CHIEF--Lagoven has created a new department, geology, to plan and administer programs for exploring and developing deposits, among other objectives. Claus Graf, who graduated as a geology major from the Central University of Venezuela in 1962, was appointed the manager of the new department. Graf later obtained a master's and doctorate in geology from Rice University in Houston, Texas. Among other positions, Graf was coordinator of exploration at Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. MEXICAN OIL TO HAITI--Mexico City, 29 Nov (LATIN)--Mexico will sell Haiti 7,000 barrels of petroleum a day within the framework of an agreement to supply Central American and Caribbean nations signed by Mexico and Venezuela in Costa Rica. Shipments will begin in the first quarter of 1981. The announcement was made here by members of Haitian delegation, who added that Mexico also supplies 2.4 million gallons of gas a year. DEFICIENCIES IN POWER PLANTS--An urgent call to eliminate deficiencies in the operation of thermoelectric power plants has been issued by the congress organizing committee of the National Chemical, Mining and Energy Industry Workers Trade Union. These deficiencies were examined in a meeting recently held in this capital which was chaired by Politburo member Pedro Miret. In the appeal to the workers of the sector, special attention is given to the objective and subjective factors causing such deficiencies, some of which are operation and technological discipline norms as well as fulfillment in time and with quality of the maintenance schedules for power plants. The committee also calls for improving the quality of service which will result in a reduction of the blackouts. [Text] [FL251143 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 25 Nov 80]

LACK OF DOMESTIC TECHNOLOGY USED IN ORINOCO DENOUNCED

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 31 Oct 80 Sec 1 p 25

[Text] The major projects to develop the Orinoco Oil Belt, which are known as the DSMA [Development of Southern Monagas and Anzoategui] Program, violate the guidelines set down in the Sixth Plan of the Nation regarding the participation of domestic technology in the implementation of these far-reaching tasks.

The executive director of the Petroleum Chamber, Dr Carlos Alcantara, complained that in opening the competitive bidding for these ambitious projects, which represent investments of over 90 billion bolivars over the next 5 years, the government did not take Venezuelan companies into account and did not even notify them about this enormous oil development program.

"The DSMA project currently represents the largest investment in the world, inasmuch as in 5 years it will top 90 billion bolivars and exceed 150 billion over its duration. Nevertheless, even though Venezuela has 105 totally domestic companies with wideranging experience in all sorts of activities related to the oil industry, they are being completely excluded from the high technology projects and thus Venezuelans are being left with 'carpentry' work."

Alcantara stressed that Venezuelan businessmen are asking for equal treatment, not privileges in competitive bidding on basic national undertakings.

He asserted that in the case of petroleum there is no chance even to operate as a joint enterprise because the contracts are being awarded entirely to foreign firms.

He indicated that it was Venezuelan builders and businessmen who undertook such ambitious projects as the bridges over Lake Maracaibo and the Orinoco River, and thus such discrimination is completely unjustified, in addition to being unfair.

The executive director of the Petroleum Chamber underscored that furthermore, the Energy and Mines Ministry has pointed out that such large investments over such a short time could generate major distortions, such as those that occurred during the previous period, and many specialists have asserted that the Orinoco Belt development project has to be slowed down so that the nation's production apparatus can function smoothly.

He indicated that if we take a look at the technological guidelines set down in the Sixth Plan and note the actions that affiliates of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. have taken, we could come to the conclusion that the petroleum industry is going to be excluded from national planning and will function as a sector that is outside economic development over the next 5 years.

OIL PRODUCTION EQUIPMENT--Venezuelan oil workers and technicians have succeeded in transforming a piece of production equipment into a rig for drilling onshore wells, which will be brought in to help find hydrocarbons deposits on the Bolivar Coast of Zulia State, reported Mr Hector Marin Pena, the head of Maraven S.A.'s Machine Maintenance and Repair Shop Unit. Thr rig had to be converted without delay because an additional onshore drilling rig was needed. "The Hoyst H-44 production equipment," he explained, "was converted into an onshore hydrocarbons drilling rig by Venezuelan technicians and workers at the facilities of the Central Shop of the Production Operations Division of Maraven S.A., an affiliate of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc." NATURAL GAS RESERVES--Punto Fijo (Special)--The presence of major natural gas reserves on Venezuela's continental shelf has been confirmed with the recent find by Lagoven near Los Testigos Island. According to reports from the PETROVEN [Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc] affiliate, the tests done on the well, which was drilled northeast of Los Testigos, yielded positive results. Production, the note adds, could total about 480,000 cubic meters a day, close to 18 million cubic feet of natural gas, which is used as a fuel and in other petrochemical industry processes and in the hydrogenation of heavy crudes. The Los Testigos Well is located some 100 kilometers north of Sucre State and some 20 kilometers northeast of the islands of the same name. It is the first natural gas discovery in the northern basin, the note concludes. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 3 Nov 80 Sec 1 p 1] 8743

OIL INDUSTRY COSTS RISE--The repeated increases in oil prices are concealing the true rise in the operating costs of the nationalized oil industry, PETROVEN directors suggested yesterday at a meeting with legislative subcommittees. The doubts in this regard emerged when PETROVEN directors were pressed to disclose the real costs-profits ratio in the oil industry. "Since 1976, the year when the industry was nationalized, costs have remained relatively stable as a percentage of total profits," said Dr Paul Reinpell, a PETROVEN director. He added, however, that the stability was a result of oil price rises, not of the industry's own actions. According to the figures disclosed at the meeting, in 1976 costs stood at 28 percent of profits; by 1979, the percentage was 21, and this year it stands at 18.7 percent. PETROVEN directors noted that a superficial look at these figures could suggest that costs have fallen, when the situation is, in fact, otherwise. "It so happens," Reinpell added, "that the rise in oil prices, which is an exogenous factor, influences the determination of the cost-profit ratio, but the ratio must also be examined in light of other factors, such as man-hours, activities and inflation." As an example, he noted that in 1976, the year of the nationalization, the industry had 24,000 employees, drilled 285 wells and invested 1.3 billion bolivars, whereas this year, 1980, the industry has a payroll of 36,000 and invested 8.5 billion bolivars. It is obvious that if oil and gas prices had not risen, the ratio of the nationalized oil industry's operating costs to its total profits would be much higher. The PETROVEN directors explained that all of these efforts, as reflected in the industry's real costs, have enabled it to remain in the situation in which it found itself at the time of the nationalization. "The enterprise costs more because efforts have quintupled," they said. "But all of these efforts have enabled us to remain where we were at the time the industry was nationalized." INVESTMENTS OF OIL INCOME--Humberto Calderon Berti, Venezuelan energy and mines minister, has announced that more than 50 billion bolivares in oil income will be invested in development projects between 1980 and 1985. He said that this money will be used to develop the industrial and engineering sectors to levels never before imagined and that priority will be given to the fields of mechanics, construction and design. Nevertheless, he said that next year a program will be carried out to stress the need for a national effort to conserve our hydrocarbons, and that therefore 1981 will be known as the year of conservation. OIL PRODUCTION DROP--Caracas, 30 Nov (AFP)--The Ministry of Energy reported today that up to 26 November Venezuela's petroleum production was 2.19 million barrels a day, 290,000 or 8.88 percent less than during the same period in 1979. Average production to 26 November 1980 was 2,147,000 barrels a day compared to 2,356,000 in the same period in 1979. Of the total crude extracted, 29.48 percent was light, 35.26 percent was medium and 35.26 was heavy. [PA010259 Paris AFP in Spanish 1532 GMT 30 Nov 80]

HEAVY OIL TO FRANCE--France's state-run oil enterprise, Elf Aquitaine, and PETROVEN, represented by Messrs Julio Cesar Arreaza A., the vice president in charge of the presidency of PETROVEN, and Albin Chalandon, president of Elf Aquitaine, have signed a preliminary agreement with a view towards a future contract for the sale of 10 degrees API Boscan heavy crude oil, which will be used at facilities to be built at a refinery on the French coast. The pact, which is part of an energy cooperation agreement between France and Venezuela, specifies the main conditions governing the future contract and assigns responsibility for the various studies that will have to be conducted beforehand to determine the feasibility of the project. If satisfactory results are achieved, PETROVEN and Elf Aquitaine will execute the contract within 18 months and proceed to build the facilities needed to produce, transport and refine 35,000 barrels of heavy crude a day, approximately. The contract would take effect when France starts up the enhancement plant in early 1984 and would have an initial life of 5 years. PETROVEN will indicate the selling price of the petroleum whenever it deems this appropriate and in so doing will take into account the policy that OPEC has instituted in this regard, as well as prevailing market conditions. This preliminary agreement is Venezuela's first step towards marketing heavy crudes for nontraditional uses, such as the production of naphthas and distillates, which are the items with the best prospects on the world market. This new marketing option has become possible through the development of heavy crude enhancement technologies, which in the case of the preliminary pact with Elf Aquitaine, yield synthetic crudes having characteristics that compare favorably with those of expensive light crudes from Africa or the Middle East. NICARAGUAN CITIZENS EXPRESS SOLIDARITY WITH EL SALVADOR

Ernesto Corea Labor Union

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 28 Sep 80 p 10

[Text] As part of the Nicaraguan Workers Day of Unity and Solidarity held last week by the Sandinist Workers Federation (CST), the Ernesto Corea union of the El Mejor coffee enterprise issued a pronouncement in which it supports the struggle of El Salvador and Chile.

The El Mejor coffee workers express their firmest solidarity with the peoples who are still living under the oppressive yoke of dictatorships. The workers mentioned the specific examples of El Salvador and Chile, countries with an imperialist mentality which are exploiting and deceiving the people and depriving them of freedom.

As true sons of Sandino, they noted, they will defend the Sandinist revolution, and they intent not to yield under any circumstances and to always fight under the slogan of "a free fatherland or death."

Church Communities' Demonstration

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 28 Sep 80 pp 1, 10

[Text] Several hundred Christians belonging to the rank and file church communities yesterday afternoon went around the capital city from one end to the other in a beautiful action of solidarity with our fraternal people, the Salvadorans, who for months have been waging a persistent and heroic struggle to finally free themselves and against the Christian Democratic military junta that is oppressing and murdering them.

The Christians, coming from the neighborhoods of Monseignor Lezcano, Nejapa, San Judas, Santa Ana and Barrio Riguero, gathered at the Monseignor Lezcano temple and from here they began their march toward the eastern neighborhoods of Managua, starting at 1615. They ended in the San Pablo district.

The Christian solidarity demonstration for the brave people of El Salvador, who are fighting and suffering criminal genocide, accomplished its long march while from hundreds of throats arose the vibrant and revolutionary cry of "If Nicaragua triumphed, El Salvador will triumph."

It was obvious and encouraging from the standpoint of internationalism that our people are becoming increasingly involved with those who are fighting for their freedom. It was also noteworthy that there were so many young people as well as adults who embrace the faith and the eternal banner of freedom of Christ.

Slogans

With a single voice of solidarity and brotherhood toward the Salvadoran revolution, the demonstrators hurled to the winds a great many slogans, including the following:

"The Christians of Nicaragua and El Salvador, united to build a new society." "Monseignor Oscar A. Romero, toward victory always." "The people of El Salvador, victorious over the oppressor." The Nicaraguan Christians with their brother Salvadorans." "We Christians of this nation are supporting your liberation."

It was really moving when the multitudes, with Christian passion and devotion, intoned the beautiful hymn that the Salvadorans have dedicated to the one who was their greatest spiritual guide and who died sacrificed to the murderous bullets of the Salvadoran military tyranny: Monseignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero.

The demonstrators walked in the middle of the street and took the Pista de la Resistencia Road, then marched along 14 de Septiembre Street until they completed their course at the Church of the San Pablo Apostol district at the extreme southeast of the city, where the demonstration was brought to a close with words from the parish priest, Father Jimenez.

Thus, the rank and file Christians of Managua gave a clear demonstration of their own solidarity and moral and political support for those who--like their Salvadoran brothers--know how to lift themselves up from humiliation and build with heroism and sacrifice the indestructible foundation of freedom and independence.

COMMUNIST PARTIES DECLARE SOLIDARITY WITH EL SALVADOR

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 31 Oct 80 p 2

[Resolution by the Conference of Communist and Workers Parties of Central America, Mexico and Panama; date and place not given]

[Text] Whereas:

El Salvador is currently at a turning point in its history, and a wideranging people's revolutionary movement is about to deal a final blow to the military-Christian Democratic dictatorship, the latest expression of the longstanding rightwing military dictatorship that our sister nation has been suffering under for a half century;

The unity of the people's revolutionary movement is growing stronger each day. The Unified Revolutionary Leadership has recently given way to the formation of the Farabundo Marti Front for National Liberation (FFM), which lends greater consistency and solidity to the armed struggle and, in general, to all grass-roots struggles and bolsters the Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR), which is the broadest unified expression of the Salvadoran people and the nation's most representative force, struggling resolutely today for political and social liberation;

The military-Christian Democratic dictatorship, supported mainly by the governments of the United States and Venezuela, is carrying out a genocidal slaughter to weaken the revolutionary organizations and prevent the final outburst leading to the triumph of the liberating aspirations of the Salvadoran people;

Yankee and Venezuelan Government military intervention is a fact: more than 200 U.S. military advisers are at work in El Salvador, and supplies of weapons and ammunition from the United States to the rabid fascist Salvadoran military are intensifying. Yankee advisers have even been seen directing military units in barbarous extermination operations, without regard for either sex or age, and even resorting to the use of toxic substances on the civilian population. The Yankee imperialists are making use of their military bases in Panama to attack the Salvadoran people, thus violating the Torrijos-Carter canal treaties. There is a real and mounting danger of an invasion of El Salvador by American troops, which would lead to an internationalization of the conflict, because their plans include assaulting Nicaragua and Guatemala and crushing the democratic aspirations of the peoples of Costa Rica and Honduras;

U.S. military intervention against the Salvadoran people and its threat to invade with its own troops constitutes an affront and a challenge to all of the peoples of Central America, Latin America and the world, as well as a trampling on their right to self-determination, to life, to peace, to independence and to social justice. U.S. military aggression against the Salvadoran people is not a fatal menace that cannot be avoided. The strength of nations, of democratic, progressive governments, of movements, parties, eminent figures and churches that are committed to the interests of the people and social progress, international organizations, etc can join together to combat Yankee aggression. As the experience of the Nicaraguan Revolution demonstrated, a retaining wall against U.S. interventionist plans can even be erected in the OAS. Like the Salvadoran revolutionaries, we advocate exerting all necessary political and diplomatic efforts to prevent U.S. military aggression, thus saving the Salvadoran people from bloodshed, martyrdom and destruction, although in any case, the Salvadoran people, whether imperialism likes it or not, will achieve victory through its own heroic struggle and with the support of all peoples, including vast segments of the American people. Our nations, especially the nations of Central America, will not sit idly by in the face of Yankee aggression against the Salvadoran people and will respond vigorously and with an unwavering determination to overcome;

The political and military organizations that make up the FFM are dealing increasingly forceful blows to the enemy, causing him mounting losses, eroding his combat morale and lending the people's movement an assurance of victory.

Therefore, this Conference of Communist and Workers Parties of Central America, Mexico and Panama:

1. Expresses its solidarity with and support for the struggle of the heroic Salvadoran people;

2. Manifests its outraged condemnation of the genocide that Yankee imperialism and the Military-Christian Democratic Junta is committing against the Salvadoran people;

3. Calls on the peoples of Central America to prepare to resist imperialist aggression and to combat it until it is defeated;

4. Reaffirms its recognition of and support for the Farabundo Marti Front for National Liberation as the vanguard of the heroic Salvadoran people and the Revolutionary Democratic Front as their legitimate representative;

5. Reaffirms its decision to provide every kind of combative support for the revolutionary and democratic movement in El Salvador;

6. Appeals to the world's revolutionary, grass roots, progressive, democratic and humanist organizations to lend their militant solidarity to the Salvadoran people. It calls on all peoples, democratic and progressive governments on all continents, all sectors committed to peace and progress for mankind and to international organizations to oppose U.S. intervention in El Salvador, in defense of its people's basic right to decide their own destiny.

Communist Party of El Salvador, Communist Party of Honduras, Popular Vanguard Party of Costa Rica, Guatamalan Labor Party, People's Party of Panama, Mexican Communist Party.

STUDY SURVEYS COOPERATION BETWEEN VENEZUELA, CARIBBEAN

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 4 Nov 80 Sec 1 p 13

[Article by C. R. Chavez]

[Text] Venezuela has maintained a policy of continuing solidarity in its economic relations with the Caribbean and Central America, which are a tributary region for the aid agreements signed and implemented by Venezuela between 1975 and 1979 (for a little over 1.1 billion dollars), according to a research study made by the General Energy Sector Office of the Ministry of Energy and Mines.

"Venezuelan relations with the Caribbean area," it says, "are not new, because in addition to geographic proximity between our country and this Latin American area, there are links which have traditionally served as a bond, to which is now added the fact that Venezuela has been and continues to be its traditional supplier of hydrocarbons. The nature of these relations has varied with the passage of time. At the beginning, links of an historical, geographic and cultural nature predominated above all between Venezuela and the Caribbean nations, and later, at the end of the 1960s, Venezuela found in the Caribbean area a potential market for its exports, such that it began to intensify its trade relations with that region.

"To all of this," the report goes on to say, "the phenomenon of the development of a Third-World awareness has been added, thus encouraging a change in the Venezuelan foreign energy policy and therefore in the foreign policy as a whole, where Venezuelan relations with the Caribbean are concerned. This change has been reflected in the conversion from a policy focused to a great extent on trade relations to a more complete policy, consistent with the fact that the Caribbean neighbors are double allies of the Venezuelan nation, on the one hand as developing nations, and on the other as Latin American countries.

"Now then," the study continues, "there were again events in connection with the energy problem which led to a change of this nature in policy, since the adjustment in oil prices gave clear and definite impetus to the North-South clash, and subsequently South-South cooperation was among the mechanisms suggested with a view to progress toward the New International Economic Order (NOEI). Venezuela said then that such cooperation should begin with one's neighbors, and it opted for a policy of cooperation with the Caribbean nations."

Basic support of this policy has been energy, financial and technical cooperation formulated in 1973-1974, when the Venezuelan Government promised to guarantee the Caribbean and Central American nations both a supply of oil and financial aid.

In this way aid mechanisms which began operation in 1975 were established. From that time until 1979, Venezuela committed $5.7 billion U.S. About a fifth of this aid was allocated, by means of bilateral agreements, basically, to the Caribbean and Central American regions, and the balance was allocated to mechanisms of a multilateral nature such as the special fund of the OPEC and the special fund of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), and the World Bank.

Later, in about 1979, Venezuela found it necessary to evaluate the programs carried out up until that time, since the situation had changed due to the political developments in the countries receiving aid, increasing their requirements. And on the other hand, in view of the price increases effected by OPEC by 1979, the formulation of a policy with regard to the Caribbean area was carried out on a priority basis.

Thus the Venezuelan Ministry of Foreign Affairs set forth the basic guidelines for foreign policy in the Caribbean this year, as well as the strategies and specific actions to be pursued in this connection.

From the above it becomes obvious that Venezuela's foreign policy with regard to the Caribbean is based on the following:

Application of the principle of international social justice and as a result, definition of priorities as a function of the level of development and progress in the Caribbean nations;

Respect for ideological pluralism;

Contribution to the strengthening of the identity and personality of the new Caribbean nations;

Avoidance of the conversion of the Caribbean into a zone of ideological-political and economic confrontation; and Development of a policy of cooperation with this area, of an eminently qualitative nature, making it possible thereby to strengthen Venezuela's bonds with this subregion. Also, cooperation agreements should be the product of negotiations held in free and sovereign fashion by Venezuela and the Caribbean nation involved.

The strategies proposed for implementing the above guidelines can be summarized as follows:

Development of both multilateral and bilateral cooperation programs; and

Clear identification of the Venezuelan effort, since compromise on this point would work against the country's policy of foreign projection.

Where specific actions for the pursuit of this policy are concerned, the following aspects are mentioned:

Appointment of permanent diplomatic missions in all the independent Caribbean nations;

Creation of an interministerial commission for cooperation with the Caribbean, with a view to coordinating and evaluating the implementation of the promises made, and also the establishment of a foundation for solidarity with the Caribbean for the coordination of public and private sectors;

Improved communications of all sorts (air, sea and mass media);

Merger and expansion of the various Venezuelan cultural centers in the Caribbean, as well as their programming; and

In view of the importance of the energy policy in Venezuela's foreign policy, development of specific programs in this field, which would contribute to the development of the Caribbean nations.

The guidelines, strategies and specific actions pertaining to energy cooperation with the Caribbean also come within the framework of the national energy policy, specifically the provisions on international cooperation.

"To promote and maintain energy cooperation through regional and extraregional bodies."

To carry out this strategy, various actions are proposed, including the following:

OPEC: "To strengthen the role of the organization as a leader of the Third World in an effort to promote the new international economic order, to which end the following actions should be developed:

"a. Contribution through the OPEC fund to the exploration and exploitation of the various energy resources native to the countries in the process of development, particularly those with relatively limited international financing; and

"b. Intensification of cooperation among the countries in the process of development within the institutional framework of the UN Development Program."

OLADE [Latin American Energy Organization]: "To serve as a link between the OLADE and the OPEC to promote the viewpoints of the Latin American nations concerning the aspects pertaining to the world energy system and their evaluation of it.

"To reactivate energy agreements signed with the countries in the Latin American region.

"To promote within the OPEC fund the allocation of a part of its resources to financing the development of alternative energy sources in Latin America.

"To establish additional mechanisms for financial cooperation together with the other Latin American countries which are exporters and have more developed economies, with a view to financing the preliminary stages of oil exploration (geological and geophysical prospecting, the hydroenergy inventory and the development of alternative energy sources).

"To cooperate financially in those energy projects where the Venezuelan presence serves to make the obtaining of international institutional credit easier or more flexible.

"To establish technical cooperation mechanisms, as well as the designing of tools of energy planning, as well as the training of scientific personnel.

"To sponsor the participation of suitable Venezuelan service enterprises in energy activities, under conditions guaranteeing the efficient management and exercise of their operations."

As can be seen from what has been stated above, energy cooperation is incorporated in the basic guidelines for cooperation with the Caribbean, such that the development of programs along this line constitutes a priority.

Now then, since the energy cooperation programs launched in 1975 came to an end in 1979, and in order to put into practice the guidelines described, the Venezuelan minister of mines and energy announced, when the OLADE Work Group on Energy Cooperation and Coordination was installed in Caracas (May 1980) that the Venezuelan Government proposes to renew and expand the programs for financial and technical energy cooperation. These programs will be directed toward the countries in the Caribbean, as well as those in Central America, and they will come to a total of $500 million U.S. for 1980.

The OLADE Work Group on Energy Cooperation and Coordination in itself represents an effort by the members of that organization to study an alternative proposed by Venezuela at the 10th meeting of OLADE ministers, with a view to establishing a mechanism making it possible to finance and coordinate the development of energy sources on the continent, as well as to achieve greater energy efficiency in the countries in this area.

The proposal for a cooperative program for energy coordination formulated by Venezuela within the work group seeks to fill the gaps the existing programs leave, above all in the first stage of research and evaluation of new energy resources, which is where the greatest risk lies. Also, it represents an attempt to improve the coordination among the various agencies and governments participating in the continental energy projects.

AMNLAE SOLIDARITY WITH GUATEMALA--"We give our voice of encouragement to the thousand times heroic women of Guatemala, secure in the knowledge that when a nation decides to fight, it can win its freedom," said the Luisa Amanda Espinoza Association of Nicaraguan Women (AMNLAE) in a pronouncement denouncing the regime of Romeo Lucas Garcia. The AMNLAE condemnation holds Lucas Garcia responsible for directing the massive repression of defenseless Indian towns that have been bombed with napalm in the departments of Quiche, San Marcos and Solola. Delving a bit into the history of this sister nation, AMNLAE said that Guatemalans have suffered through 26 long years of terror, repression and crime, but their grass roots and revolutionary organizations are keeping up a heroic struggle that sooner rather than later will lead their people to their ultimate liberation. "We condemn the massacre of thousand of Guatemalans, of the finest sons of the people who have been slain by the enormous wave of repression, which the criminal regime of Lucas Garcia has intensified over the last 3 months," AMNLAE notes in its communique. SUPPORT FOR SALVADORAN PEOPLE URGED--The representatives of Chile's Christian leftwing in Cuba have issued a declaration urging all of the continent's progressive forces to give their unrestricted support to the Salvadoran people's struggle against the military junta, which is currently usurping power in that Central American nation. The document, released at the international conference for political commitment with El Salvador, an event held in Mexico City, also condemns Washington's economic and military aid to the Salvadoran dictatorship. The declaration finally states that the meeting was organized by the Christian Peace Conference, the Peoples Social Christian Party of Nicaragua, the Msgr Oscar Arnulfo Romero coordinating board of the Salvadoran Peoples Church and Chile's Christian leftwing. INTERVIEW WITH SAO PAULO PMDB PRESIDENT MARIO COVAS

Sao Paulo VEJA in Portuguese 12 Nov 80 pp 3, 4, 6

[Interview with Mario Covas Junior, president of the Sao Paulo PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Mobilization Party], at his office in Sao Paulo by Ricardo Noblat: "The Opposition Must Negotiate"; date not given]

[Text] Engineer Mario Covas Junior returned to politics in 1979 with the appetite of one who had been embittered by a 10-year fast. He returned without holding the office of federal deputy, which was cassated by AI-5 [Institutional Act No 5] and with the inevitable marks of time--at age 50, Covas, father of two, is a grandfather. But, drawn into the center of the political whirlwind of the erstwhile Sao Paulo MDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement], an unruly conglomeration of viewpoints and factions, he showed that ostracism had not deprived him of two virtues that contributed decisively to his rise to leadership of the opposition in the Federal Chamber, a position he occupied with undeniable talent and acknowledged tactical skill at the time he was overtaken by the decapitation in January 1969: an eloquent speaker, Covas can also exhibit competence in private conversation.

Such negotiating ability conducted him to the presidency of the MDB, later to chairmanship of the PMDB provisional executive committee and now to the chairmanship of the committee that will direct the party until late 1981. Under his direction, the PMDB elected over 400 municipal directorates, extending throughout the state of Sao Paulo the party network that will have to bring about election of the party's candidate for governor of the state in 1982--quite probably Senator Franco Montoro.

Covas is not revealing what office he intends to seek in the next election. But it is certain he will not be on the PMDB stump merely to sing the praises of his fellow party members: he realizes that, although the fact of being out of office helped him rise to leadership of a party troubled by jealous factions, only regaining at least a seat in Congress can sustain him at the party level he occupies today.

Increasingly absorbed in political activity, Covas has almost no time to devote to the engineering firm he established with over 60 friends in the profession. There, from behind a desk where portfolios of projects and engineering plans were mingled with party documents, Covas spoke to VEJA last week:

PMDB Does Not Condone Dual Membership

VEJA: As the defunct MDB, the PMDB has characteristics of an opposition front and not of a party. How long will it be this way?

Covas: The erstwhile MDB was a front because the two-party straitjacket required it to be. To the extent that its successor is consolidated it will lose the characteristics inherited from the time when it represented a federation of oppositions. In its declaration of principles, moreover, the PMDB asserts itself as a party, no longer as a front. But it is clear that in a country such as ours, with little party tradition and with such large regional differences, the PMDB--as the other associations of national scope--cannot have such a uniform conformity. What is considered the left in Amazonas is different from the so-called Sao Paulo left, and the right in Rio Grande do Sul is different from what is called the right in Rio Grande do Norte. The PMDB acknowledges that it has, and should have, different viewpoints within its ranks. But it also asserts that they must evolve toward a common will, the result of democratic internal discussion.

VEJA: The PMDB has been accused of harboring parties considered illegal, such as the Brazilian Communist Party and the MR-8 (8 October Revolutionary Movement). Is it hard to get along together under so ecumenical an umbrella?

Covas: In joining a party, a citizen declares himself in agreement with its program and commits himself to respect its statutes. Above all, the PMDB, just like the other parties, does not require an ideological certification from its members, although it cannot accept in its ranks members of other parties. This problem of dual membership does not have, within the PMDB, the dimensions that some want to give it. Party actions result from a common will born of internal debate.

VEJA: An MR-8 document approved at the organization's last congress recommends that its members join the PMDB and try to control it from within. Isn't this proof that there is dual membership in the PMDB?

Covas: I must refute that with a straightforward argument: the party's leadership --at the national, state and municipal level--is known. How can it be supposed that the influence of elements from other parties can be so great as to prevent the PMDB from fulfilling its destiny as a democratic party? The objectives of the PMDB are clear, the social alliances it desires are defined in its charter of principles, its position regarding the various grievances of society is known. The PMDB is not an entity that harbors a number of other entities.

VEJA: But it harbors members of other entities and none of them appears to be threatened with expulsion...

Covas: There is no evidence that the erstwhile MDB or the current PMDB has made any decision or has acted politically without this having been exclusively the fruit of its own discussions.

Liberalization Is Being Carried Out Competently

VEJA: Can a politician of Christian upbringing such as you get along with Marxists without problems?

Covas: I am a democrat and I see no reason to find difficulty in getting along with Marxists. A democrat realizes that society thrives on disagreements and contends that all political gtoups should be free to take positions on all issues. In a democratic regime only the people are the legitimate judge of such disagreements; only they can choose among the various alternatives placed in the political situation. The PMDB platform recommends an eminently democratic solution for Brazil. I wish to stress that the party seeks not only democratization of power but democratization of all society at all levels--political, economic and social. Anyone who thinks the same way and fights for this objective will have a place in the PMDB and will get along well with us.

VEJA: Deputy Fernando Lyra proposes that the PMDB seek dialog with the armed forces. Isn't it time for the opposition to quit courting the military and to contribute toward their staying out of politics?

Covas: I believe that a professional spirit predominates today in the armed forces. But the PMDB acknowledges that all sectors of Brazilian life must take part in the political process; none of them should be excluded. Clearly, to talk with military personnel does not signify any sort of conspiracy--and this is not what Deputy Fernando Lyra suggested. It does mean, rather, that the military represent an influential segment of society that must be heard in order to achieve the strategic objective of the PMDB: consolidation of the preconditions for finally having a National Constituent Assembly.

VEJA: Do you acknowledge that the presence of military personnel in the political debate, besides violating the disciplinary regulations of the Army, opens the way for them also to express themselves officially in opposition to the liberalization process?

Covas: What is at issue in the proposal of dialog with the military is that they cannot be left out of the legal reorganization of the nation. It would show a lack of political realism to ignore them. Without listening to them, without taking what they think into account, we could be going up a blind alley, with the threat of retrogression at its end.

VEJA: Are you afraid that there will be a retrogression?

Covas: General Golbery do Couto e Silva, in his speech at the War College, tried to show that the current political project does not present any danger to the most radical sectors of the regime. To take General Golbery at his word--and there is no reason not to do so--it is clear that this project seeks to construct a regime of a certain elitist type, restricted to some groups of society with which, in the effort to reestablish some alliances, the promoters of liberalization would be willing to share some portions of power. The project is being carried out under the strict control of the government, which decides upon its extent and its depth. For this reason, I do not as yet see any danger of retrogression.

VEJA: Do you believe that the liberalization process is being carried out competently?

Covas: There is no doubt about it. But neither is there any doubt that this project does not seek construction of the democracy we desire. The government's competence must be matched by the competence of the opposition, which captures in the midst of the people a degree of political aspiration far beyond what the liberalization project offers them.

VEJA: Has the opposition shown competence?

Covas: I believe that whether or not there is true democracy in this country will depend very much on the competence of the opposition.

VEJA: You didn't answer the question...

Covas: At this moment, the opposition would be domonstrating competence if certain basic and common postulates leading to a democracy were put above its small and temporary differences. The clarity with which the government's project is stated demonstrates the confidence its authors have in its complete success. The opposition must understand the limits of the project, recognize what degree of liberalization it carries for those interested in democracy and try to broaden it.

VEJA: For this, would it be useful for the opposition and the government to sit down at the table?

Covas: The first test of the competence of the opposition would be a meeting among themselves to discuss their differences and establish common objectives and ways of operating.

Opposition Does Not Want Economic Chaos

VEJA: Do you think merger of the opposition parties is still feasible?

Covas: We repeatedly charged, before the MDB was abolished, that the purpose of party reform was to privatize the situation and socialize the opposition. After General Golbery's discussion at the ESG [War College], anyone who still had doubts about that ceased to have them. The general admitted what we were alleging more than 1 year ago. At that time we contended that the effective democratic requirement was not the multiparty system but, rather, freedom of party organization. Today, more important than thinking about party merger is our trying to establish a concept common to the opposition groups--be they organized in parties or be they those that meet or express themselves through entities such as the OAB [Brazilian Bar Association], the labor unions and the movements allied with the Church.

VEJA: What proposals would such an opposition concept contain?

Covas: There are at least 15 points that would be agreed to by the various opposition groups. Some of them: elimination of all repressive legislation, elections at all levels, recognition of the right to strike, strengthening of union activity, agrarian reform.

VEJA: Once this pact of joint operation is signed by the opposition groups, could they then sit down at the negotiating table with the government, similarly to what occurred in Spain after Franco's death?

Covas: The Spanish situation is different from ours. In the Brazilian case, the managers of political liberalization do not acknowledge that the opposition groups have any prospect of coming to power. The formal content of a democracy requires this prospect. The opposition groups do not want, do not desire, do not bet on economic chaos. As they were prevented from influencing the nation's economic, social and political process during such a long time, they cannot be held responsible for the situation of calamity we are now in.

VEJA: But is it correct to say they remain in the position of spectators?

Covas: They are spectators to the extent that the only alternatives they are offered consist of rhetoric and certain actions for social gains, such as strikes, and even these were understood by the regime as an attack upon it. Strictly speaking, the basic rule that must be established is the manner in which power is to be contended for. Once this rule is established, the opposition will have some reason to negotiate with the government and offer alternatives.

A Long Road to the Constituent Assembly

VEJA: If invited, would you participate in discussions with the government?

Covas: If the objective were the consolidation of democracy, according to a well-defined agenda, I would hold discussions with it, and openly. But I contend that the entire nation should be invited to such a discussion. What is the National Constituent Assembly if not a means of letting the nation as a whole negotiate its political, social and economic program? This is what the PMDB is working toward.

VEJA: Would not the calling of a constituent assembly have to come about through a prior understanding between the democratic opposition and the sectors of the regime that support liberalization?

Covas: The democratic opposition has an important role to play under any circumstances. After all, the democratic opposition represents the majority segments of society--recent electoral events prove this--and expresses the will, the aspirations and the anxieties of the sectors that until now were kept out of the nation's political process. Thus, although it cannot be ignored, neither can it ignore the regime and its political program now underway. Negotiations must be started. But one must recall that, from the regime's point of view, power is not to be put in question and, if it depends upon it, it will not be put in question very soon. It is up to society and to the opposition political parties to act in such a way that power can be contended for as soon as possible. There is a long road of democratic gains to be traveled before we arrive at calling a constituent assembly.

VEJA: With [President] Joao [Figueiredo] or without him?

Covas: That is not important. The essential thing is that the indispensable prerequisites be met for calling an authentic constituent assembly, which must be legitimate, representative and sovereign. When these conditions are respected, the time will have come for a constituent assembly to be held.

VEJA: The government appears to be getting ready to introduce two novelties in electoral legislation: the vote linking the city councilman to the governor and voting by district. Is this bad for the opposition?

Covas: These are two more traps put directly in the path of the opposition. They demonstrate once again that holding elections, in themselves alone, does not characterize an open political process. To the extent that the electoral event is surrounded by false applications of the law that distort its results, the whole process becomes fraudulent and the people are disenfranchised. The "April package," for example, source and origin of all the strategy established by the regime in its recycling process, altered the composition of the Chamber of Deputies. This is because it diminished, relatively, the number of representatives of the most populous and industrialized states in relation to the less-developed states. For what purpose? Only that of distorting the public will. Clearly, the linked vote and district voting, which under normal circumstances are perfectly worthy of consideration, in this instance have a tenor of manipulating the outcome of elections.

VEJA: Some PMDB deputies maintain that there was manipulation of the party's electoral will when a single slate was formed, with you as president, for forming the PMDB executive committee...

Covas: There wasn't any manipulation. There was consensus among the most important forces that exist within the PMDB. Contrary to what is thought, Senators Franco Montoro and Orestes Quercia were not candidates to head the committee. There was also a consensus among party rank and file: in 95 percent of the municipal conventions held recently, in over 400 cities in Sao Paulo, there was a single slate running for office. The PMDB executive committee, to be elected late in November, will hold office for only 1 year.

Maluf Has Chance In Indirect Election

VEJA: Governor Paulo Maluf is preparing his candidacy for presidency of the republic. Do you think he has a chance?

Covas: It depends. The regime, as it does not want to leave overall power open to competition, surrounds itself with mechanisms by which it maintains tight control of the positions it does not want to give up. The presidency of the republic, naturally, is the most important of such positions. Until and including General Figueiredo, the choice of president was made within four walls or, at the most, by consulting the military commandants. Now, without the selection process eluding their grasp, the promoters of political liberalization appear ready to allow faithful allies of the regime to participate in it. Thus, Governor Maluf may have a chance. If the next president of the republic is, however, chosen by popular vote, there will not be the slightest chance of the governor's candidacy being launched.

VEJA: The decree expelling Father Vito Miracapillo was considered arbitrary by the opposition, but was upheld by the Statute on Foreigners. Do you agree that the government complied with the law?

Covas: The government's action is arbitrary and undemocratic precisely because it was permitted by a law that is antidemocratic and was repudiated by the entire nation. The law itself was approved in Congress by an antidemocratic artifice, that of withdrawing the majority party from the plenary session. Episodes such as that of Father Vito emphasize even more the nation's need to become fully reconciled to democracy.

GOVERNMENT ECONOMIC POLICY CALLED CRISIS OF CONTRADICTIONS

Sao Paulo VEJA in Portuguese 12 Nov 80 p 178

[Article by Herbert Levy, Popular Party federal deputy from Sao Paulo, in the column "Point of View": "Crisis of Contradictions"]

[Text] Brazil is a completely viable nation in the medium and long run. But the day-to-day conduct of its economic policy is creating a serious net of contradictions that threaten to drown us while in sight of land. The central point of this confusion is the erroneous elevation of the inflation problem to being the paramount issue in the nation's economy--and the source of most of the blunders generated by government action in this field is the disjointed series of measures adopted to deal with rising prices.

One need only note some consequences of such measures to prove the veracity of what I say. Credit restriction, provoked by the decision to keep the volume of loans by the financial system only 45 percent above the total of last year--when the rate of inflation is already over 90 percent and production is increasing at about 7 percent --undoubtedly represents a credit deflation very similar to what the International Monetary Fund insists upon imposing on nations, forcing them into crises of recession and unemployment.

Meanwhile, preestablishing monetary correction at 45 percent for 1980 discouraged savings--which tumbled from a level of 19 percent of PIB [Gross Domestic Product] in 1973 to 14 percent this year--and provoked a rush to buy merchandise and real estate. Repercussions so disastrous that the government itself announced last week its intention not to repeat the error next year, although this does not undo the harm already done. The nation's productive capacity is thus strained by an unexpected and atypical demand. There is the case--one among many--of the blankbook industry which, accustomed to a seasonal lull between April and August, continued operating at full capacity this year even during that period. But there is not enough credit to finance production, a process that obviously feeds and stimulates higher prices.

But that is not all. This contradiction prevails even in relation to sectors the government intends to favor, whose activities are explicitly given priority classification. In the farming and livestock sector, for example, credit policy forced the Bank of Brazil agency in a city such as Corumba, basic center of the Mato Grosso Pantanal [lowlands], to finish the month of September with 30 percent less lending than it had on 31 December 1979. Today, according to the reliable report of rural leaders, a heifer of breeding age is worth more dead, in cold storage, than alive. Nor is this the first time that has happened: 4 years ago, a similar situation forced the slaughter of 10 million heifers, with significant loss to the cattle herd and consequent increase in the price of meat due to scarcity.

Other absurdities can also be observed in regard to farming and livestock. There is the case of raising interest rates on agricultural loans "to relieve the Treasury of the burden of subsidies" and thus eliminate the deficit in this area. But loans for investments, at a cost of 38 percent per year, continue to be subsidized (market rates are higher) and operating credit which, because it can be provided by demand deposits, does not need subsidies, also became more expensive--a situation that forced many farmers to refrain from borrowing.

The fact is that the importance given by the government to fighting inflation was greatly exaggerated--and the worst of it is that such exaggeration did not result in a real reduction of inflation. I believe the time has come to have the courage to say that inflation is not the number-one problem of the Brazilian economy, and that to fight it amounts to chasing a shadow without ever being able to catch it, with inevitable stress and strain on responsible authorities. I repeat here the same questions I have been raising for some months. What difference did it make to Brazil to have an inflation less than 41 percent in 1978 and more than 77 percent in 1979? More than that, what difference did that make to Brazilians? No difference, I reply, in all confidence.

Mainly after adoption of the wage policy of semiannual adjustments, based on the real increase in the cost of living (if monetary correction were properly applied), the major impact of inflation in the real world is being neutralized, which cannot always be perceived merely by financial accounting. Credit deflation, however, is inevitably recessionary. Although one may try to deny it, it broadly affects production.

In fact, the number-one priority for Brazil is to escape the drain forced upon it by the need to import petroleum. And, to reach that goal, to increase agricultural production, thus increasing the supply of foodstuffs and hence exports. To assure social peace through full employment, it is indispensable that private initiative be made to feel strong and, above all, secure.

The motivation and security of this powerful, irreplaceable engine of progress and well-being that is private initiative requires economic policy to become clear in the eyes of entrepreneurs. And this will not occur as long as the current contradictions persist. I am certain that, in pointing out these contradictions, the responsible opposition is rendering a relevant service to the nation and to the president of the republic.

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS STAGE STRIKE

PY212146 Paris AFP in Spanish 1844 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Text] Santiago, Chile, 21 Nov (AFP)--Openly rebelling against the interventionistic measures of the military government, hundreds of students of the College of Philosophy of the Chilean National University, the largest of the country, today staged a strike which could spread to other colleges.

The spark which has fired the conflict is the presence of an administrative coordinating board which, according to the students, is made up of government intelligence officials.

The 8 Chilean universities have been under intervention for 7 years, that is, since Gen Augusto Pinochet's regime ousted the civilian government headed by the late socialist President Salvador Allende.

Gen Agustin Toro Davila, rector-delegate of the Chilean National University, yesterday visited the Macul campus, east of Santiago, where incidents have been taking place between students and members of the coordinating board.

"Those who are trying to create an atmosphere of agitation at the Macul campus are only 100 or 150 against the total of 10,000 students," General Toro Davila said shortly before the strike started.

When the entire College of Philosophy went on strike today, government agents were notified that a bomb had been placed in the house of Mario Ciudad Vasquez, dean of humanities of the National University. There the agents managed to defuse an explosive device before it could blow up.

In addition to philosophy and humanities [as received] the Macul campus hosts other three colleges. Together these colleges have 50,000 students, one fifth of the total number of students enrolled in the Chilean National University.

The leaders of the strike are accusing the members of the coordinating board of acting as informers and being directly responsible for the suspensions, expulsions and other punishments which affected several students and student leaders recently.

Joaquin Barcelo, chairman of the Council of Deans of Macul campus, has indicated that "if the students believe this, it is natural for them to react in this way."

However, Barcelo refuted the charges and indicated that the coordinating board is merely charged with keeping order within the vast campus to which the five colleges belong. They are entrusted with tasks such as taking away the posters and signs which have not been duly authorized and keeping away students who have been punished.

According to rumors heard here today, if the trouble at the philosophy college spreads out to other colleges it is quite possible that the university authorities will close down Macul campus with only 6 weeks to go before the end of the academic year.

The influential daily EL MERCURIO today devoted its main editorial to these incidents in which it saw political implications and the hand of center and left-wing sectors which oppose General Pinochet's government.

However, the dean of the Chilean press also mentioned indirectly the punishment of various students ordered by the university authorities and expressed some doubts about the suitability of these measures.

The groups which 7 years ago opposed President Allende had looked upon Macul campus--whose vast gardens and old buildings were today shrouded in an atmosphere of tense expectation--as the cauldron of Marxist agitation.

The teachers' institute--one of the main supporters of the broad university reform implemented in Chile at the beginning of the seventies--operated on this campus. At that point the students asked for and obtained participation in academic decisions, following the example of the French youths who staged the explosive May revolution on the streets of Paris.

CHILE THREATENS TO LEAVE OAS--Chile has threatened to leave the OAS while openly criticizing the United States and accusing it of violating the principle of noninterference. Foreign Minister Rene Rojas Galdames, speaking at the 10th Inter-American Assembly, said that if this tendency increases it would oblige the threatened countries to leave the OAS. The Chilean foreign minister repeated that the principle of noninterference is the main base upon which the inter-American system is structured. The foreign minister said there have been initiatives in the OAS that violate the principle of sovereign equality of nations, including that of respect for treaties. Rojas indicated that if this tendency increases, conditions could be created that would oblige those countries who see that their rights, independence and sovereignty are threatened to leave our organization. This is due to the double standard [given in English] policy that has been applied by the United States regarding human rights and the protectionist measures that have been implemented by the Carter government. INDUSTRY WORKERS BEGIN STRIKE--Santiago, Chile, 20 Nov (AFP)--It was learned here today that some 30 workers of the Panal Textile Company have begun a hunger strike at the Santo Domingo church to call attention to the labor conflict that has been going on for over 40 days. The workers, including several women, rushed into the church at 2100 GMT yesterday, Wednesday. The church is located in downtown Santiago de Chile, and the worship service was suspended for a moment. In the beginning, the workers indicated that the hunger strike would be indefinite, but today they explained that it will only last 24 hours. The Panal workers and employees--a total of 1,400 workers--last October agreed to a legal strike after the failure of talks with the company's management regarding salary readjustment. The wives of these workers recently asked the wife of President Augusto Pinochet to intervene and try to solve the problem. [Text] [PY211954 Paris AFP in Spanish 1835 GMT 20 Nov 80]

The communique notes that Interior Ministry investigations detected a group belonging to the outlawed Communist Party. It adds that this group had planned to create disorders and cause unrest among the people and that the group had its center of operations in Curico Province. The communique notes: In view of this, and in fulfillment of its duties to safeguard peace and tranquillity, the government has issued a decree ordering the banishment of 12 persons to the northern region of the country. M-19 URGED TO LEGALIZE BROADCASTS--Bogota, 30 Nov (EFE)--Colombian Communications Minister Gabriel Melo Guevara has asked the Guerrilla 19 April Movement (M-19) to place bids for television time instead of interfering with normal transmissions. The minister said in a news conference that the actions of the M-19, which works with clandestine equipment to interfere with television signals, could be avoided if they request program space legally. With such irony, the minister dismissed the importance of the interference by the "armed" group which has become more frequent recently although the broadcasts are only monitored by a small number of persons. Generally, the M-19 signals are picked up on Sundays when there are more listeners or when the Chief of State Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala speaks. Thus far, the authorities have been unable to capture the persons who operate the station because they do all their work from a mobile unit. ARMY SEARCHING FOR TV-INTERCEPT EQUIPMENT--Bogota--The Defense Ministry has ordered the stepping up of the search operation for the powerful M-19 equipment used to intercept television signals. This decision was made by the military after the guerrilla organization extended the radius of its operations to the city of Cali. Technicians from the National Radio and Television Institute and army electrical engineers have been holding meetings to try to track down the location of the equipment as well as any mobile stations. Although several areas of Cundinamarca and the city of Cali were searched at noon, the secret service organizations have not found any clues that might lead them to the guerrillas' operations center. ACTING LABOR MINISTER--Dr Laura Ochoa de Ardila, who is currently chief of the civil service department, was entrusted today with the Labor and Social Security Ministry. Until the new minister is appointed Laura Ochoa de Ardila will be replacing Dr Laureano Alberto Arellano whose resignation has been accepted. CLASHES WITH SANDINISTS ON NORTHERN BORDER CONTINUE

San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 7 Nov 80 p 10

/Text/ While the Rural Health Program is paralyzed in the north, local residents are suffering from collective psychosis as a result of frequent threats accompanied by machinegun fire by the Sandinist Guard of Nicaragua.

Minister of Public Security Carlos Arguedas yesterday compiled the written reports on the border incidents, and at the same time announced that the Rural Guard will provide better protection for residents at the mouth of the Sarapiqui River and the right bank of the San Juan River.

The Sandinist garrison has violated national sovereignty four times.

The most recent incident was last Tuesday, when eight officials of the Ministry of Public Health were attacked with machineguns as they traveled along the Sarapiqui River in two barges.

Minister of Health Carmelo Calvosa expressed his concern over the frequent incidents, and decided to send a group headed by his administrative director, Eduardo Carrillo, to make an investigation of the accusations.

"We have already had three shooting attacks against the barges that provide health services to the region," stated Carrillo.

"In view of this situation, and not wanting to offend anyone, Dr Calvosa has requested a thorough investigation," he said.

"We carried out such an investigation, taking statements at the Puerto Viejo health center. We decided there was an urgent need to go to the health center located in Fatima as a result of our findings."

Sandinist Attack

Carrillo went on with his story in the presence of Ministers Arguedas and Calvosa, and other officials.

He said that at the mouth of the Sarapiqui "we were traveling in two barges when the Sandinist attack took place."

Dr Maria Soledad Calderon, director of the Puerto Viejo health center, Carrillo and another official named Fernini "were traveling in the front barge. Behind us were our other companions.

"We came through the Sarapiqui to get to the San Juan River. We came within 10 meters of the Costa Rican border, and when we went by the Sandinist Guard post, without any warning to halt or any kind of notice, they began to fire at the barge," added Carrillo.

Carrillo, nervous but with some experience, gathered his courage and observed that the bullets were hitting very close to the barge, in the water. "I realized they were firing at the propeller of the engine, to stop it. . .

"In view of the situation, calculating that there were some 150 meters between the post and the launch, we decided to hide in the bottom of the boat."

Carrillo showed a wound on his forehead, which he received when he hit the edge of the barge as he tried to protect Dr Soledad Calderon from bullets.

Minister Arguedas, at a press conference in the afternoon, indicated that he had received another complaint from the director of an educational center.

The educator said that he suspended recreation for the Costa Rican children, who were afraid of being fired at, due to the constant firing from the Sandinist post into national territory.

Furthermore, the Sandinists, according to witnesses, claim that the entire San Juan River belongs to them; they do not understand the provisions of the Canas-Jerez Treaty.

Even the Nicaraguan literacy campaign workers made it clear that absolutely all of the river was theirs, and in addition they could make incursions into Costa Rican territory as far as 2 kilometers.

Residents stress that uniformed, rifle-bearing Sandinists have gone as far as Puerto Viejo and nearby towns to make purchases.

Witnesses' accounts indicated that the situation is worrisome. The priest of a Catholic church in Costa Rican territory suspended masses. "We have to ask permission of the Sandinists."

"They just come in and make themselves at home. I was very disturbed to see Costa Rican children who go to a Costa Rican school asking permission of the Sandinist guards," added Carrillo.

"Ironically, they say they are jealous because we provide health services to a population that is almost 70 percent Nicaraguan." It was revealed that so far the Nicaraguans have been unable to provide total coverage in their rural health programs.

Another View

The health officials announced that the rural health programs have been abandoned. "We have abandoned vaccinations. This is very serious, especially since it is so important to prevent polio, malaria and other infectious and contagious diseases," they commented.

Dr Carmelo Calvoza remarked that the Fatima health center cannot be eliminated because it is too important.

Dr Maria Soledad Calderon indicated that there are a lot of problems with the Sandinists, and that it was necessary to have the help of Migration officials to back up the testimony.

She claimed that officials of the National Electricity Service (SNE) and of the National Antimalaria Program were also shot at.

"I did not reach the health center because I was frightened. I was frankly scared; I stayed there and we had the clinic outdoors," stated Dr Calderon, referring to the incident that occurred on 24 October.

"The orders come from Fort San Carlos, or Zone 6, as the 'Nics' call it," added Dr Calderon.

The Sandinists charge a toll of 7.00 colons for merchandise and 20.00 colons for Costa Ricans.

One day there was a problem with some people who were going to Fatima; since they had no money, the 'Nics" turned them back.

The teachers are afraid to talk to their students about freedom and democracy.

Thirst To Kill

Dr Calderon stated that the Sandinists "tell us they have a thirst to kill, that they still feel like killing and they will go on doing so."

Meanwhile, in San Jose, Minister Arguedas met with Ambassador Javier Chamorro to study the situation and seek a viable solution within the diplomatic framework.

He announced that better protection will be provided for residents in that four rural guards will be sent to the area.

"The Canas-Jerez Treaty clearly states that only in the case of war must weapons be reported, but measures will never be taken against civilians."

Arguedas expressed concern that Nicaraguan officials are unaware of the implications of the Canas-Jerez Treaty, which clearly provides for free transit along the San Juan River for both countries.

Violation of Territorial Sovereignty

San Jose LA NACION in Spanish 7 Nov 80 p 14A

/Editorial/

/Text/ As if it were the most tragicomic consequence of our intervention in the armed conflict in Nicaragua, in which we went so far as to declare the entire border area a "no man's land" so that the Sandinists could spread out there, making it their sanctuary and setting up their bases, their training camps and their weapons trading centers, with the most candid cooperation from our Public Forces, now we cannot travel along the San Juan River without risking our lives. Nor can we travel through Costa Rican territory without the permission of the Sandinist Guard. Our Costa Rican children cannot attend Costa Rican schools, in Costa Rican territory, without getting permission from the Nicaraguan military detachments.

Several employees of the Ministry of Health who were traveling through that area as usual to carry out their work in the prevention of disease and the provision of medical care, were shot at with machineguns without warning by the new occupants of our border zone and our common riverways. Not even during normal relations with Somoza did such gratuitous and brutal attacks take place.

There is a saying that says that he who serves the Devil must pay the consequences by having to get along with him. For reasons of basic coexistence, we do not want this to be the case with the Sandinists. Regardless of any political or ideological consideration or interpretation or diagnosis of what is presently happening in the Nicaragua of the commanders, what has been happening on the northern border is pure and simple, proven, inexcusable and absolutely unjustified.

We don't know who among the Sandinist guards got it into his head that the Costa Rican border area belongs to the Nicaraguan Government. Thus, any misunderstanding that may exist in this regard, resulting from the senseless and irresponsible cession of that area to the Sandinists during the conflict, must be cleared up immediately, with the same vigor showed by the Costa Rican Government when those who were shooting at Costa Ricans were not Sandinist guards but Somozists.

Since it appears that an official response to an attack which almost took the lives of those public servants was a long time in coming, we have no recourse but to demand that the government take a stronger stand, commensurate with the seriousness of the accusations. We are not so naive as to believe that the Sandinist Guard was acting on its own authority. If that were the case, we can imagine the disorder and anarchy that must prevail in the new regime.

To start, then, from the premise that the Nicaraguan Government is unaware of what has happened or has not given instructions for its border guards to attack Costa Ricans traveling through their own territory, as the current head of Public Security has done, seems to us an inexcusably naive attitude.

The demand that has been made and the formal, immediate protest through diplomatic channels, should be firm, clear, unequivocal and convincing. The country is expecting a duly severe response due to the nature of the violation of our sovereignty that is once again being perpetrated by Nicaragua, under a different regime, a few months after the fall of Somoza.

U.S. SUPPORTS 'REPRESSIVE' DOMINICAN REGIME

PA260417 Havana International Service in Spanish 2310 GMT 25 Nov 80

["Our America" commentary]

[Text] The 3-week strike by teachers in the Dominican Republic revealed the intolerance existing in this Caribbean country which unleashed a furious repression against the strikers. The strike began on 5 November in support of 100 teachers dismissed in July by order of the Education Ministry. Several leaders of the Dominican Teachers Association held a hunger strike in a Santo Domingo Catholic church last week, but they were brutally repressed by the police using tear gas and clubs. Twenty teachers and 4 priests, as well as some 100 persons, were also injured during the police attack.

The Dominican teachers' strike is not an isolated incident, but another expression of the displeasure of the Dominican Republic people and workers with the policies of President Antonio Guzman's regime which has been noted for its administrative deficiencies, submission to U.S. imperialists and a growing repressive policy.

In spite of his electoral promises, since he came into power more than 2 years ago, Antonio Guzman has not solved any of the many problems affecting this Caribbean country. Hunger, misery, lack of medical attention, illiteracy and unemployment have become more acute during this period, while the regime insists in maintaining an economic model which has nothing in common with the people's interests.

The domestic situation has become more acute as a result of police repression against protest demonstrations in the country. The foreign policy followed by Antonio Guzman's regime is likewise unpopular. It has repeatedly given evidence of its submission to the dictates of the Washington government.

In an article published last June, the Dominican newspaper EL SOL said that President Guzman believes that his support lies in military power and police repression openly supported by the United States and coordinated by Robert Yost, its ambassador in the country.

It is meaningful that the visits of high-ranking U.S. military officers have multiplied in recent months. Gen Robert Schweitzer, director of strategy, plans and policies of the U.S. Army, visited the country in January and met with President Antonio Guzman. Some weeks later the Dominican Republic was visited by Admiral Harry Train, chief of the U.S. Navy in the Atlantic and the Caribbean and more recently the country was visited by Lt General Nutting, chief of the U.S. strategic southern command based in the Canal Zone.

Neither can we forget that the Dominican president issued a communique in support of last year's U.S. naval maneuvers in the Caribbean. These maneuvers were held by the imperialists as a threat and provocation against the Latin American nations in the region.

Also, we cannot forget that the Dominican Republic was the most recent victim of imperialist military intervention in the nations of America.

CASTRO REASSERTS NONALIGNED SUPPORT FOR PALESTINIANS

FL291748 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 29 Nov 80

[Text] United Nations--Fidel Castro has reaffirmed the support of the nonaligned countries movement for the heroic and suffering people of Palestine in a message read at the United Nations by Cuban Ambassador Raul Roa Kouri.

The chairman of the nonaligned countries reasserted that the key to the Mideast conflict is the Palestine problem and that it is impossible to achieve a just and lasting peace in that region without the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and respect for the Palestinian people's national and independence rights.

On the occasion of today's international day of solidarity with the Palestinian people, Fidel Castro said this observance acquires special significance because it takes place at a time when an intensification of Israel's colonization policy on the occupied territories is noted. He said it is evident that Israel's aggressive policy on the occupied territories with new terrorist methods and genocidal attacks against Palestinian civilian communities and refugee camps in Lebanon can only be possible with the military, economic, political and diplomatic support of the United States.

This situation, stresses the maximum Cuban leader, shows the fairness of the strong condemnation expressed by the nonaligned movement at its sixth summit conference of the Camp David agreements and the separate Egyptian-Israeli treaty as part of the imperialist policy aimed at reaching partial agreements in the Middle East.

Fidel Castro expressed in his message the conviction that the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the PLO as their sole and legitimate representative, and with the support and solidarity of the international community, will succeed in frustrating the imperialist-Zionist plans and will triumph in their just struggle.

Roa Kouri read the message of the chairman of the nonaligned countries movement and chief of state and government of Cuba on the occasion of a meeting of the UN Committee for the Rights of the Palestinian People which held a special session to observe the day of solidarity.

The house-museum is located in Aimito municipality, Havana Province. The closing remarks were made by Fabio Grobart, member of the PCC Central Committee and a participant in that memorable congress, who recalled that it had been held some 9 months after the overthrow of the Machado tyranny as part of the revolutionary progress in which the working class waged heroic battles. CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS IN ANGOLA--This year's construction plan of the various projects being built by Cuban internationalist workers in Angola has been fulfilled and two of their brigades will return home tomorrow. The internationalist workers completed the processing plant that will supply water to Luanda and built 520 housing units for the Angolan people. [FL291840 Havana Domestic Television Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 29 Nov 80]

HAVANA BUILDING CONSTRUCTION--Some 51 tall buildings will be built in Havana City during the next 5 years. These buildings will contain 7,367 dwellings. This was announced in a meeting held in Havana, chaired by Julio Camacho Aguilera, member of the PCC secretariat and first party secretary in Havana City Province. It was also reported that six buildings will be completed in 1981, five the following year, 10 the next, 12 in 1984 and 18 in the last year of the next 5-year period. It was further announced that the technology to be used in the construction of these buildings will be the 26-story IMS SP-72 and "Gran Planel." [as heard] Camacho Aguilera said that every effort must be made to limit the size of the city which is why we must grow up instead of sideways. He added that 5-story buildings will be built during the next 5-year period because of the continuing need for housing. With respect to the 1980 plan, it was learned that five tall buildings were built and, together with others about to be completed, will make it possible for the province to fulfill for the first time the annual housing construction plan of 4,113 units. PAPER URGES END TO POLITICAL BICKERING

/Editorial: "Let the Fighting End!"/

/Text/ As a result of what is happening in the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD), it is very likely that the experiment in democracy here will come tumbling down, to give way to something no Dominican wants, since we have suffered so much under dictatorships.

The ferocious battle that has gone on for weeks between the president of the Chamber of Deputies and the president of the republic (which supposedly emerged when the Executive Branch vetoed a law ordering military honors for the president of Venezuela on his visit to Congress) is already arousing fear and anxiety among the people of the Dominican Republic.

We say "supposedly" because we know that the tension between Decamps and Guzman dates back a long time, and has deep roots. It is simply a matter of dominance of the PRD. Dr Pena Gomez' exhortations to calm down have been to no avail; equally futile have been the editorials appearing in nearly all the print and radio media.

On top of all this, further aggravating the situation, the Senate (where the Reformist Party has a majority) refused to approve loans for entities such as the Dominican Electricity Corporation. According to the current administrator of that agency, the loan is urgently needed so that the country will have electrical energy for the rest of the year. Of course the Reformist Party is the opposition, and the current administration can expect no favors from it; but actually, it has approved several bills and loans of national interest. However, this delay, which adversely affects the efficient operation of the Dominican Electricity Corporation, is a very serious matter.

How far is this state of affairs going to go? Don't the legislators and presidential advisers realize that these conflicts (which give no indication of coming to an end) are doing great harm to the people? Don't they see that it is the most needy who are paying the consequences of all this? That the prices of basic necessities are going up every day without any response by Justice officials to the efforts of the Price Control Board to deal with speculators with the necessary vigor? What will become of a country where speculators, thieves who daily assault property and social order, are treated with surprising leniency, while the principal officials of the government and the highest leaders of the party in power tear each other apart over purely personal issues?

It is time to put a stop to this state of affairs. It is time for the institutions and leaders of this nation to put aside their ambitions and misunderstandings, for the people can see that all this can only lead to the destruction, the final disintegration of everything we have fought so hard for.

PAPER REFUTES IAD CHARGES OF SUBVERSION

Santo Domingo EL CARIBE in Spanish 29 Oct 80 p 10

/Editorial: "Who Is Subversive?"/

/Text/ The director of the Dominican Agrarian Institute (IAD) authorized his public relations spokesman to say at a press conference that a report published by EL CARIBE regarding the situation that official agency has caused in Constanza was "subversive."

According to the IAD spokesman, agronomer Eligio Jaquez feels that "the EL CARIBE report constitutes an incitement to violence."

In this country, that is a very serious accusation. Although certain officials of the current constitutional administration often make such harsh remarks, we think the time has come to back them up with proof. Therefore, we call upon the IAD officials to show what subversive act EL CARIBE has committed, and when and where violence was incited.

EL CARIBE has simply reported on a very serious situation that was not going to be made to disappear by being ignored. Rather, the lack of enlightening publicity could aggravate the situation and lead to injustice or abuse.

At any rate, we believe that the IAD officials must be informed of a few things that need clearing up.

EL CARIBE is not a subversive newspaper. On the contrary, it is a firm defender of our constitution, our laws and our institutions, particularly those which must ensure citizens respect for their rights and the exercise of all the prerogatives that human beings should enjoy in a democratic society. For this reason, it concerns itself with the lot of peasants, both landholders and nonlandholders. It also considers it legitimate to report on everything that happens to those human beings, whether or not this annoys the IAD.

EL CARIBE is not an enemy of the government, either. That statement applies to the current administration, the one before it and any that may follow. EL CARIBE always gives due respect to public officials in its coverage of their activities, but it also deals with them with a critical spirit, born of the conviction that all exercise of power carries with it the duty to act responsibly. Those who hold public office are in all cases and at all times public servants, and they must constantly be held accountable to the public for their activities, whether they be good, bad or indifferent.

In line with this idea, since democracy was restored in this country EL CARIBE has served as an independent and responsible voice for public information and opinion, and in so doing has made a great effort to reflect as accurately as possible the social, political, economic and cultural situation of the nation.

Maybe EL CARIBE has not always been successful, but its vocation for objectivity and impartiality has been constant, and thousands of Dominicans attest to this by buying the paper 6 days a week to satisfy their need to be well-informed, completely and truthfully.

That EL CARIBE is a reliable newspaper is known by--among others--the main leaders of the government party. During the recent electoral campaign they publicly acknowledged the effort this paper made to report objectively and impartially on what the main party groups were doing and how the Dominican electorate felt.

As could be expected, the representatives of officialdom at the time were not always pleased with EL CARIBE's attitude. But we are pleased to be able to go back over our files and note that the reports we gave our readers then were very close to the facts, and probably among the most impartial ones available. We believe that our record has not changed since then.

That behavior--which has been constant throughout the years--proves, now and then, that EL CARIBE is not the enemy of any government. But we are not surprised that our reporting of the truth has led the members of the press who kowtow to the established order to call us an "opposition" paper, or that arrogant officials call us "subversive."

Things must always be judged within the proper context. To do that, we must ask a series of questions:

Who is inciting violence: EL CARIBE, which prints what happened in Constanza as a result of a conflict over land ownership, or the IAD, which is trying to take the land away from farmers who have been tilling the land for 25 years and have only 30, 40 or 50 tareas that they cultivate intensively?

Why isn't the IAD concerned with settling on state-owned land the families who for more than a year have been suffering from poverty and deprivation after having been kicked off their property in the area of influence of the Sabana Yegua Dam?

Why has the IAD insisted on forcefully occupying the El Yunque estate, without having paid for it, in open and flagrant violation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the Republic?

Does the IAD know what legal statutes call those who knowingly disobey the constitutional provisions of a nation?

Who is here and now subverting principles that are clearly defined in the national constitution?

We are not looking for a fight. Nor are we interested, however, in being falsely accused--always a serious offense in our country--of being enemies of the government and "subversives." Even so, if by publishing without favor or fear, as is our duty, what is happening here, we must endure such accusations, then we will do so with pleasure. If we must bear that cross, we will do so with resignation, without shirking our duty.

They should not keep trying to intimidate EL CARIBE. That has never worked in the past; it will not work now. We do not fear that kind of rhetoric, which tries to cloak errors in the arrogance that a mistaken concept of power gives some people who hold public office.

On the other hand, we do not want to preach. But in view of the fact that it is becoming a customary practice to accuse us of having ulterior motives when what we are trying to do is comply, within our limited possibilities, with our social function of reporting truthfully and expressing our opinion without inhibitions, we hereby issue a warning that we will not be swayed from our stand by accusations. Although such accusations are terrible in this medium, they cannot be proven. Our readers know they are unfounded. That is enough for now.

NEED FOR TRUE AGRARIAN REFORM STRESSED

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 30 Oct 80 p 8 D

/Editorial: "Agrarian Reform and Production"/

/Text/ Because present circumstances demand it, we find ourselves in the inevitable position of having to repeat once again our opinion that a genuine and authentic agrarian reform cannot completely fulfill its lofty mission exclusively through the distribution of land.

Like any agricultural enterprise, the transfer of the landowning system and the distribution of parcels among landless peasants, in order to meet its social objective, must be accompanied by easy and timely credit, assiduous technical assistance, the opportune supply of improved seeds, irrigation; and everything should be bathed in the fertile sweat of labor.

As our own experience has shown, only when these components are obtained and brought together can agrarian reform effectively raise the standard of living among the rural poor, alleviating the anguish and bitterness of subsistence wages, wages that cannot even be considered "hand-to-mouth."

The relative failure of the rice harvest--we still have to import rice, and in no small amounts--should not give us the false impression, in vogue for a time, that the initial years of agrarian reform must necessarily result in low production and therefore zero productivity.

For these reasons we are not convinced that the new slant being given to the agrarian process is wise or socially just. This new approach emphasizes the reevaluation of parcels that have already been granted, and if the number of tareas allowed by law is exceeded, land is taken away from the owners, even if that land has for many years been very productive and the work completed has represented unquestionable acquired rights.

The Dominican Government still owns vast idle estates, and not a little of the land that belongs to this patrimony is in the wrong hands. The ground should be tilled; the peasants who want to become farmers should be properly trained; that land should be placed under their care and responsibility, under their labor, as it is the basis of their hopes for a better life.

As we have said, present circumstances oblige us to assume our responsibility as informers and guides of public opinion, to repeat truths that are so obvious they have been forgotten. These truths hold a common place in science and agrarian policy, the practice of which should not be discontinued.

ATLANTIC COAST INTEGRATION INTO REVOLUTION HAILED

Health, Food, Transportation Problems

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 28 Oct 80 pp 4, 11

[Article by Roberto Gonzalez R.]

[Text] Getting to know the Atlantic coast has become an avoidable duty for the mass media in the new Nicaragua, and thus several trips have been taken to various parts of the region, which in the future will provide us with a clear idea of the major problems there.

The point, of course, is not to describe how picturesque the coastal countryside is, much less to continue thinking that "El Palo de Mayo" is the department of Zelaya, because in that case we would be falling prey to past judgments, which only distort the realities of a people whose true dimension needs to be known today more than ever.

There are 260,000 inhabitants in this vast region of 66,000 square kilometers between the Coco River to the north and the San Juan River to the south (including the department of Rio San Juan), which gives an average of 2.8 inhabitants per square kilometer, with a 5.5 percent annual growth rate.

It rains 9 months out of the year (6,000 millimeters of rain) in this part of our country, where there are major communication routes, health care, education and farming problems, in addition to which the people have been conditioned first by English influence and then by gringo imperialism (combined with Somozism) to live without their own political standards.

The Big Plundering

Hundreds of thousands of grams of gold were carried off and 480,000 hectares of pine forests were razed from 1927, when this was the paradise of gringo plunderers linked with Nicaraguan traitors, to 19 July 1979, the day that the anti-imperialist revolution triumphed over the Somoza dynasty.

Such was the indiscriminate felling of our forests, using the "clear cutting" system, that over the 53 years of tree razing, some 150 million cubic meters of timber, including pine, cedar, mahogany and other hardwoods in great demand in other countries, were shipped off to European markets.

According to estimates by forestry experts, the region now has only 120 hectares of forests, which are located in areas that are inaccessible due to a lack of communication routes. This clearly shows that the foreign companies, in conjunction with domestic lumbering companies, did not fell trees in areas that they could not reach.

A Disease-Ridden People and the Chinese

According to estimates, the population on the Atlantic coast consists of some 150,000 Miskitos, most of whom live along the banks of the Coco River, in Puerto Cabezas and by the Rosita, Siuna and Bonanza mines, where at least 40 percent of the population suffers from tuberculosis. Venereal diseases and malnutrition are other major social problems.

The rest of the inhabitants of the coast are some 3,000 Sumos, some 420,000 Rama Indians, as well as black natives, Spaniards (from the Pacific) and a very common mixture of these races with Chinese, who have for many years been a veritable plague, maintaining control over trade throughout the length and breadth of the department of Zelaya.

The Chinese got into Nicaragua by paying large sums of money to corrupt Somozist immigration agents and heads. Even though they had the right to engage only in agriculture, the only "work" that they did was to establish their supply centers and make fabulous profits.

Most of these Chinese have left the country by now, but their children remained behind, and because they were born in Nicaragua, under the law they are Nicaraguans.

Problems and Some Solutions

But let's get back to the problems of the Atlantic coast, which does not consist solely of Bluefields but of Puerto Cabezas, Waspan, Rosita, Siuna, Bonanza, Rama, Laguna de Perlas, Punta Gorda, Sandy Bay, Prinzapolca, Bilwascarma, Kukrahill, Alamicamba and more than 180 Indian communities where the Miskitos live, as well. And there is also Ramaky Island, where the last Rama Indians live.

All of these towns, without exception, have drinking water problems, and emergency studies have already begun to provide the service in a first stage for Rosita, Siuna and Bonanza, although serious problems have been encountered in finding permanent sources in the region.

Feasibility studies have now begun in Bluefields to furnish drinking water, while work has already started in Puerto Cabezas, to be completed in mid-1981 at a cost of 7.8 million cordobas.

The transportation problem, which is simply gigantic, has begun to improve with the purchase of a number of ships valued at more than 40 million cordobas that are already in use on rivers and at sea. Some 20 trucks are also in use in different areas, but the problem is of such dimensions that improvements have just begun.

Lanica's aircraft do not meet air transport needs, and it is hoped that the service will improve with the purchase of two planes both for the Atlantic coast and Rio San Juan.

Bluefields now has a telephone link to the outside world, and Corn Island will be getting telephone service soon too. A comprehensive electrification project has begun on this enchanted island, and it will be completed in 8 months.

In the mines area, the project to build 500 housing units at a cost of 47 million cordobas is being handled by the Ministry of Housing and Human Settlements, which has encountered some transportation problems but which will start with the first 100 units throughout October.

Work has ended on a 450,000 cordoba market in Puerto Cabezas, and a public meat market is about to go up. The airport runway has been overhauled, and the two main streets in the city are scheduled to be paved.

Many projects are on tap, but as the minister of the Atlantic coast, Guerrilla Commander William Ramirez, says, we cannot keep talking about promises, because the people on the coast are tired of hearing a half century of them from Somozism.

Political-Ideological Manipulation

The needs on the Atlantic coast and in the department of Rio San Juan are very similar, as the revolution also brought telephone service and a radio station to the department. However, it is just beginning a race against time and ideological penetration by Costa Rican radio stations, which in view of the region's social, political and economic problems, are being utilized by those who know quite well what they are doing in a bid to undermine the revolution.

But the realities are there to see, which we have done on our swings through the area, and we know that the Sandinist People's Revolution will be able to come up with answers as conditions permit. Nevertheless, any aware coastal resident can readily grasp that the destruction left by Somozism has hit them with full force and that the Sandinist Government cannot undo this as if by magic.

Progress in Education, Communications

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 23 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Bernardino Rodriguez]

[Text] One of the main tasks that our Sandinist People's Revolution is accomplishing is bringing the Atlantic coast into the process of nationwide changes.

All of the towns and communities in this large section of our homeland had previously been relegated to the worst kind of disenfranchisement by bourgeois governments, especially the criminal Somoza dictatorship, which utilized the region only for the benefit of the dictator himself, of the dictator's family and of the people close to this shameful regime.

After the Sandinist people's triumph of 19 July, our revolutionary government and the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN) dedicated themselves to making the Atlantic coast a definitive part of the country and of our anti-imperialist revolution.

Medical brigades have been visiting northern and southern Zelaya since then. Hundreds of teachers have been mobilized throughout the department to eradicate illiteracy. From Bluefields, Radio Zinica transmits the revolutionary guidance of our vanguard, the FSLN, in Miskito, Spanish and English.

Nicaragua Bila Baikra (The Voice of Nicaragua) is transmitting in Miskito and Spanish from La Tronquera, some 70 kilometers from Puerto Cabezas, covering the mining zones of Rosita, Siuna and Bonanza, Kun, Puerto Cabezas and surrounding areas.

The Revolutionary Government has created the Ministry of the Atlantic Coast to more effectively cope with the region's problems and to come up with better solutions.

Significantly, the commanders of the revolution and other revolutionary leaders have been visiting communities in Zelaya to find out about the accomplishments of the revolution there and to instruct our brothers throughout the department about the proper path along which we must take the revolution.

In the sphere of culture, our revolution is bent on salvaging the true artistic and cultural values of the zone that used to be known as "Mosquitia," "Mosquito Coast" or "Mosquito Reserve." We should emphasize that the literacy campaign is being conducted in Miskito, Sumo, local English and Spanish. In addition, BARRICADA, the official organ of our vanguard, is published in Miskito, and Radio Sandino broadcasts the program "The Atlantic Coast, Present" in the language of our Miskito brothers as well.

With the ever-present realization that the Atlantic coast must be linked to the rest of the country, the government is urgently building the Rio Blanco-Siuna Highway and has outfitted ships to handle the traffic between Puerto Cabezas, Bluefields and Rama.

Finally, our Sandinist People's Army, conscious of the need to incorporate the Atlantic coast into our homeland and revolution, is also working full time to support and participate in the efforts exerted by all of the revolutionary and mass organizations, putting into practice our watchword of People, Army, Unity... Guarantee of Victory.

PRIESTS EXPRESS APPROVAL OF FSLN STAND ON RELIGION

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 8 Oct 80 pp 1, 10

[Text] The communique of the National Directorate of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] in which the position with respect to religion is established was received by most of the capital's priests as a significant and historical document that reflects the recognition by the Nicaraguan revolutionary vanguard of the work of the Christians in the Sandinist process.

Various opinions were obtained by BARRICADA among the priests of Managua to determine the impact of the FSLN's official position with regard to a problem which is being orchestrated by the reactionary sectors of the country.

Document of International Impact

Father Angel Arnaiz said: "The document gives historical recognition to the Christians for their work in the Sandinist process. It is a voice of encouragement and hope for Christians after experiencing so much denigration throughout the history of the various heads of the Church."

He said that it is not only necessary to recall the good side of the Church's history but also to fight against the reactionary capitalist sectors of the middle class which have prevented men of the cloth from giving service to the people.

Father Arnaiz felt that since the document came from a revolutionary organization, which might ordinarily take a different position within a revolutionary framework, the FSLN is being daring by taking the position it has taken. He explained his comments by saying that the document is an example for a revolutionary party in power.

"We know that when the Sandinist Front speaks it does so with sincerity; it does not speak just to speak, as do other sectors which hypocritically never do what they say," he commented finally.

'That Is the Opinion I Had Formed of the FSLN'

Father Felipe Garcia, of the Church of Our Lady of Mercy of Leon, said:

"For me, it is a great satisfaction. In fact, it is the opinion I had already formed of the Sandinist Front.

"Actually, since 19 July I have had the pleasure of enjoying religious freedom in the country.

"I think the document has been calmly thought out and gives the Christians the confidence to continue moving forward. We see in it the realism with which the FSLN wishes to define the revolution vis-a-vis religion.

"I believe the document also reflects the maturity of a modern state which respects the freedom of citizens to participate in the building of their own society and falls within the framework of respect for human rights and makes the FSLN the vanguard of revolutionary governments which also respect religion."

With regard to the FSLN's recognition of the fact that priests, as citizens, can participate in politics and in the country's social and economic life, he said:

"It seems to me that the attitude of the government is correct. It has to permit the individual to make his own commitment to the people and their situation. It is the individual who must make a decision in the face of the revolution's challenge and request for help."

With regard to the attempts to wage a campaign to pit the revolution and religion against each other, Father Garcia said that it is "abominable."

"We must be honest and accept good wherever it is encountered; however, there are interests which are kept hidden; it is regrettable that feelings are manipulated when the real causes are hidden. Such manipulation is not the act of a Christian."

'The Document Has Just Put the Reactionaries in Their Place'

For his part, Father Antonio said that the document of the FSLN's National Directorate "is significant. It has just clarified matters and removed the doubts which existed with respect to the position of the Sandinist Front on religious freedom.

"It has just put the negative individuals, divisionists and reactionaries in their place. The fact is that we were hoping for this statement," he said.

Father Castro feels the documet implies a greater commitment from the Christians to the revolutionary process, not only because it clarifies many positions--that of the revolution, basically--but also because it obliges Christians to participate in the common good, and establishes this as a right.

"The Fatherland is for everyone, and everyone has the obligation to participate," he said.

'The Reactionaries Will Not Give Way Easily'

In the meantime, Father Barnardino Formiconi said: "The document did not surprise me. It fills me with satisfaction and shows what the FSLN has been: loyal, honest and a keeper of promises.

"The document has just reassured those who were in doubt, although I am certain that the reactionaries will not give way easily; this document will not have any impact on the reactionaries.

"I believe the campaign condocted to pit the revolution against religion has a counterrevolutionary origin. That is logical. The reactionaries are doing everything they can to denigrate the progressives," Father Formiconi said in conclusion.

CATHOLIC BISHOPS ANSWER FSLN COMMUNIQUE ON RELIGION

PA261940 Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 20 Oct 80 pp 1, 9

[Part I of Nicaraguan Catholic Bishops' response to Sandinist National Liberation Front communique on religion in Nicaragua--date not given; words within slantlines in capitals or boldface. For Part III of series see JPRS 76762, 5 November 1980, No 2211 of this series, pp 114-116 article entitled. PART III CATHOLIC BISHOPS RESPONSE TO FSLN ON RELIGION]

[Text] /We present the document issued by the Nicaraguan Episcopal Conference in response to the conciliatory, well-intentioned and self-critical communique issued by the Sandinist National Liberation Front [FSLN] regarding religion in Nicaragua. As we said yesterday, this document is full of arrogance, anger at the people's Sandinist revolution, scorn for the working class, bitterness over the dislodging of the exploiting class from power and insults against priests holding official positions and priests supporting the revolution. It even repeats the infamous charges levied against the fraternal internationalist doctors and Cuban teachers.

This document, whose first part follows, is bound to trigger a reaction from the progressive clergy and Christians who have chosen the side of the poor against the exploitation structures./

To the National Directorate of the Sandinist Front and for the knowledge of the Catholic people:

/Compliance With our Duty/

In our capacity as bishops, in communion with the apostolic seat, on whose head Christian unity is based, and as the ones in charge of teaching and the pastoral leadership of the Nicaraguan church, we must, in view of the communique issued by the National Directorate of the Sandinist Front, define the nature of our churchly mission and clarify certain concepts contained in it, /at least insofar as our religion is concerned./

/Timely Declaration/

First of all, we are grateful and congratulate the Front's National Directorate for its statement of principles. Regardless of its position, any organization seeking to lead or interpret the will of a sovereign people must outline and clearly set out its goals and plans. No one can abrogate to himself or with the support of forces alien to the people the right to govern or establish himself as the people's

"representative," as otherwise we would not overcome the era of princes and potentates, /the alleged "class"/ or group /"privileges"/ which they used to impose forcibly as "sole masters" of the will and decisions of the people themselves. Any people who are not consulted under the standards of exercise of freedom are a humiliated people.

Therefore, the FSLN declaration of principles regarding its position on religion and churches constitutes the basis for a dialog with the Christian people. Only through such adialog can a new channel or relations emerge to give our revolution a humane meaning and dimensions of its own to truly and positively differentiate it from the dogmatic rigidity of other /"revolutionary models"/ known thus far.

However, not only in the field of relations with the church but in other aspects of the social, political and economic life must the political groups unhesitatingly define their principles, positions and concepts, as otherwise the people would not be able to participate "freely and as a deliberating body" in the process of creating their own history. They would be always at the mercy of the groups and systems that exercise violence over the defenseless majorities.

/The Rights of Power/

"The rights of power cannot be understood except on the basis of respect for man's objective and inviolable rights....
"The common good, which is promoted by the authorities through the state, is met fully only when all citizens are assured of their rights."

"The essential meaning of the state as a political community consists of the fact that society, and those who comprise it, the people, are /masters of their own fate."/ (John Paul II, Redemptor Hominis)

At the time of justifying the right to insurrection in face of structures which did not guarantee the good and security of the citizens, we contended that "a revolution could never belong to the people if the people did not support it." (MENS, 2 June 1979)

However, the citizens' backing does not mean a "mere instrumental participation" in favor of rigid and oppressive systems. It means the recovery of the sense of dignity and of the rights of a people as agents and creators of their history. If Christians found in their faith "motivations to join the evolutionary struggle," they certainly did not join it simply because they wanted to overthrow a regime that opposed the people's rights but to restore the people's right to /"establish a new order,"/ thereby according the /"seed of liberation"/ and the basis of a just order for all.

/Social Order for Man/

Let us then approach the duty to set up a new order based on man and the common good by focusing on religious motivations and responsibility, not on new "domination" models and "division into classes." A system is humane to the extent that it does not truncate the legitimate aspirations of the citizenry or allow destruction or injustice.

We need to explain religious views not just so the dialog between the bishops and ranking civilian and military leaders can make headway but so the people will become aware of their own values and rights and so the people will not become a /"mere mass"/ that can be used as a tool.

/We Are the Church/

To act as a church member does not just mean being carried away by a vague religious sentiment or an individualistic interpretation of the faith. It is to recognize that one is a member of an organic unit based on religious motivations of redemption and salvation. There can be no church without believing in the same beliefs and without having a motivation for those beliefs--that fallen, oppressed or humiliated mankind can be redressed. We are a Christian church because we believe and accept Christ as the one who revealed and estabished the ministering to man not just as concerns his longing for control over the world and history but also his longing for eternal happiness.

We believe in Christ and the renewing, dominant power of the spirit, not in dependence on "service to a plan" or "system" of power. Our faith calls not just for the individual's conversion, which restores an awareness of man's greatness, but also for this working to change the world. /To be a Christian doesn't mean seeking death to gain glory and power over others./ It is to seek glory by working for man's redemption in the fullness of life. To seek truth and have more life in love, even love of one's enemies, are characteristics of those who believe in God.

We Catholics are a church--a living, historical community with all the traits and weaknesses of the average individual but with a renovating force that comes from God. We sin and stumble as all men do but the Spirit of the Lord calls us to convert and transform history. If our weaknesses have caused scandal, the revival of faith, even at the most crushing times in history, is still wonderful and inexplicable.

/Dynamism of the Spirit/

The laws of the Spirit are not written on stone tablets or fashioned in philosophical abstraction. They are eternal life, stronger than the subduing forces of evil.

"The power of God which all men share grows visibly in the word through the church." (Lumen Gentium 3)

/Social, Historical Body/

The church is the visible instrument whereby "the intimate unity with God and among all men is symbolized and carried out." (Lumen Gentium 1) To the world we are a mysterious alliance through a living, eternal God. We are a visible and unmistakable historical reality. We are light, we are ferment, we are salt--the liberating and transforming force of the world.

The presence and action of the church was prefigured in the people of Israel--a people who throughout their history sought a new heaven and a new earth but never surrendered to any pharaoh or to any enslaving, idolized or atheistic form or system. To enslave is to turn man into a "mere instrument of production."

/In Search of Liberation/

Nicaragua is pursuing its historic liberation. It is not looking for a new pharoah.

We repeat: We point this out in response to the FSLN communique so these observations can set the stage for a dialog that will enrich the revolutionary process begun in the insurrectionary stage with the support of the Christian people /with their own and specific religious responsibility./ While everybody did not take up arms, who doesn't know what the people did to confront an army at the service of personal ambitions? Weapons used against the people can also easily turn into "occupation forces."

/Analysis Plan/

Let us make observations on /three planes/:

Principles, historical circumstances and mistakes which can cause serious upset and abuse.

I. /The Principles/

We are happy and encouraged at the fact that the FSLN communique clearly establishes the following principles regarding the FSLN's position toward religion and the churches:

/Religious Freedom/

1. "Freedom to profess a religious faith is an inalienable right of individuals" and "the revolutionary government fully guarantees such right." This would suggest, in turn, that the FSLN assumes the position of an armed force behind the government or that it will also guarantee such right as an ideological group. (FSLN Communique No 1).

/No Discrimination or Privileges/

2. "No one can be discriminated against for publicly professing a faith or disseminating this religious belief," or for "not professing any religious faith" (Ibid No 1). Logically, this means that persons who "do not profess any faith" cannot be granted privileges over those who do profess one. It would seem to be consistent with this principle that neither the government nor the FSLN can take pride in being atheistic or allow ideological proselytizing work against religious beliefs to be done under the protection of its organic cadres. That would mean granting a privilege to the "faithless."

/Faith Motivation and Evaluation/

3. The Christian faith, far from being in conflict with the need to make transformations for the benefit of our people, makes it mandatory to analyze and evaluate the situations and structures that work against dignity and human rights.

If faith "motivates" it is because it has something that in itself is indispensable to making man a conscious, free and responsible agent of his history. (Ibid page 2, 2d paragraph).

4. The "interpretation of religious questions is the sole responsibility of the various churches." Therefore, "no Sandinist militant, in his capacity as such, must express opinions on these interpretations." (Ibid No 6).

/Opportune Lessons of the Past/

5. There are historical situations and socio-political structures under which well-known "missionaries" and members of the church have placed themselves on the side of "political domination," historically turning religion into "ideological support" [soporte teorico] for the institutionalization of the "dominators." This has alienated the church from the people and driven it away from its specific mission of "evangelizing the poor, preaching freedom for captives, restoring vision to the blind and setting the oppressed free." (Luke 4, 18).

/Respect for Religious Celebrations/

6. "Profound respect for all religious celebrations and traditions of our people" must be shown. This means that not only must conditions be guaranteed for these celebrations to be held freely but that "their utilization for political or commercial purposes" must be avoided. (Ibid No 5).

Political corruption and mercantilism contribute to religion's degeneration and deprive man's social liberation of its moral strength. The people are left without a basis for unity within fraternity and without respect for the diversity which is typical of human creativity.

/Right To Participation/

7. "All citizens are entitled to participate in the management of the country's political affairs, regardless of their legal status." Therefore, it would seem to be unjust "to grant privileges to any ideology" or social class that proclaims itself as interpreter of the people's aspirations or as the only one that can adopt "decisions" on behalf of and above everybody.

/II. Historical Circumstances/

We feel that, for the sake of making a historical analysis and shedding light on the church's mission and work, it would be of interest to underscore certain constants that have characterized the historical actions of the church and its ministers.

/Instrumental Commitments/

1. The following points are brought out in the brief historical account of relations between the church and domination structures made by the FSLN:

a) It is reprehensible for the church to serve as "ideological support for political domination." (Ibid No 2)

b) It is equally reprehensible and harmful to the liberation needs of the people that religion become "a mechanism for man's alienation."

c) That it is intolerable that religion, according to the different systems, should serve "to justify the exploitation of one class by another." (Ibid)

Religion, therefore, should neither "identify with" nor "serve as support" for "political domination." It should not be associated with the "mechanisms" that separate man from his original responsibilities. Neither should it be in favor of the "exploitation of one class" by another.

Religion is based, not on the ambitions and cleverness of men, but on the original sources which discover and restore the mysterious grandeur of man. Rather than a "formula" that is produced by the ingenuity of men, religion is an internal dynamism which demands judgment and the organization of an entire life in accordance with a divine design.

"The church...an expert on humanity, must discern and illuminate from the gospel... situations, systems, ideologies and political life...it must do this even while being aware of attempts to use its message as an instrument." (Pueble 511)

/Loyalty to the Church/

2. It is a source of price and happiness for evangelists to realize that, throughout our history, those who acted with loyalty toward the church and its evangelizing mission were not the ones who linked their priestly mission to the interests of the colonialists or placed themselves at the service of kings. Neither did they ally themselves with the new "emerging classes" to later become the "oligarchy of domination which shoved our people aside and destroyed their organizations in violation of their sovereignty; those who, rather than preaching the Gospel and making our natives aware of their own personal grandeur as sons of God, instead forced them to "submit" unconditionally to the new lords; those who demanded that the Indians give up their lands under the pretext that they would create better techniques of production and marketing; those who preached resignation in the face of the loss of all rights of /"active participation and decision making"/ in public matters.

All this demonstrates once again that a people cannot be liberated by changing their "owners," but rather by making themsleves lords and owners of their own land /with their own forms of expression and organization./

Those who truly shared the shoving aside of the poor and suffered the reprisals of kings and the powerful, were the /few missionaries/ and the /teachers of the Gospel/ who did not submit to the ateractions of the power of the princes and the new dominant classes.

It was then that there emerged within the church the well known thesis that no prince can turn over his territory or his people to the domination of "foreign princes without betraying his own people."

Nor can the church authorize the "domination of anyone by another." This is outside of its mission. Personal freedom and the sovereignty of peoples are natural rights and decisions in this area must be made freely by the men themselves.

/Historical Instrumentalization/

3. A third principle emerges from analysis of the historical relations between the "powers and religion." Historically, religion has been used as a tool by the political powers and the dominant classes in two ways. One is by silencing it, by barring it from all actions and from all critical judgment of the "dominant powers." The other way is by subjugating it, obliging it to religiously consecrate the governments as if this were the will of God himself.

Liberalism silences the church in the socioeconomic area. It denies it any critical intervention and any contribution to dignify and humanize the mechanisms and the direction of economic life. As a result, the church bears the historical guilt of silence. It is accused of complicity with the exploitative regimes.

Totalitarian systems, by virtue of their very materialist philosophy, deny the church all "qualitative participation" in economic mechanisms. However, they /"stratetically"/ accept its "instrumental" participation. This is another form of using the church as a tool: to accept and demand /participation/ but only as an /"instrument"/ in order to consecrate and bless processes directed toward a single, absolute system. It is not noticed that this annuls and disregards the illuminating and life-giving contribution of the Christian message. The church no longer acts as a liberating force, but rather as an instrument for reducing the people to mere masses, under the totalitarian power of the state.

History has shown us that to "participate as an instrument," in participating as an instrument, one does not improve or directly serve mankind. One serves the system and the processes of domination.

The priesthood and the ecclesiastical framework are used for reducing the people to mere masses. As Christians, we must demand a /conscious and deliberative participation/ as free men, not as slaves.

BISHOP'S REPLY TO FSLN CONTINUES

PA270119 Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 21 Oct 80 p 4

[Words within slantlines in capitals or boldface]

[Text] /Part No 2/

/No to Interventionism, No to Abuses/

4. When the bishops say "no to interventionisms" and "criticize vices, corruption and abuse of authority against the humble," they are stating firm principles of the church. (Ibid No 7)

International aid is humiliating and contrary to the dignity of the people when it results in "invasions," and others occupy the places of the citizens and make decisions for them or over them.

Our people have stated on various occasions and by various ways and means that they reject new invasions that represent a threat to the originality of our process, that in fact promote aversion to the religious beliefs of our people and create useless prejudices and confused positions on those who have assumed power.

We also join those bishops and the demands being made by our people today, demands that are already the cause of disturbances and more jailing. Interventionism, regardless of where it comes from, is humiliating. The "public authorities" cannot ignore the sources of division and legitimate claims of the people.

/Priestly Ministry and Change of Ministry/

5. All these historic facts make it clearer that it is one thing for priests to participate within political positions while exercising their own ministries and another thing to practically change ministries to work directly for the power system.

We serve as priests when we preach the Gospel, criticize, and work for a Christian and humane definition of our historic situation. We serve as priests when we defend the poor, the oppressed, the weak and anyone unjustly deprived of his freedom by and system as a result of abuse of authority. We cease serving as priests, or lose the freedom to serve as priests, when we ally ourselves with any particular regime, or give the impression of "belonging" to it.

Priesthood is not a title or a simple profession. It is an active ministry on behalf of Christ and his church. As the Vatican Council II emphasizes, "commitments can be accomplished only through a hierarchic communion with the entire church." (Presb. Ordinis No 15) [as published]

/III Equivocations/

A humane and realistic society cannot be created without unity, without diversity, without diversified creativeness aimed at unity. The act of turning society into a body of simple mechanisms of force is to materialize and destroy man, to deprive man of his right to be somebody, a reality, always different.

The obsession for erasing certain values and vital conditions leads to a lack of understanding and a lack of a common integration framework.

/To Respect and To Ignore/

1. To respect is not the same as to eliminate or ignore. He who shows consideration for the principles and values of others shows respect. He who ignores or disregards the convictions and feelings or others shows disrespect. He who says "I don't care what the other people think" shows lack of respect.

If a political or social group is to "respect religion" and the religious beliefs of a people, it is not enough for that group to acknowledge their existence. It is necessary that the group does not find religion despicable and that it does not try to strategically weaken it.

An "ideology" that rejects and eliminates religious values, if it really wants to respect those values, has to admit a common basis where its opponents will have equal rights. That common basis is the real man. Not theories. Without respect there is no basis for a dialog.

To say plainly that anyone can join the ranks of any organization "regardless of religious beliefs" implies that religious beliefs will not be despised, ridiculed or attached. Otherwise "respect" would be only apparent and strategic, but neither real nor effective.

/Disintegrating Parallelism/

2. To speak of religious life and social and economic life as parallel and without ties and mutual claims is a source of mutual separation and equivocal. The phrase: "The revolution and the state have different goals and sphere of action from those of religion" comprises this parallel position. Religion and the economy are, of course, different ministries and autonomous social organs but there should be an intermixing and concurrence for the well-being of human life. If what is really wanted is an integral restructure of man and the transformation of social organizations into an organized unity at the service of man, this intermixing must not be eliminated. Integration does not mean that the state must take over and administer the religious sector. Neither does it mean that the church must assume state ministries. It means that each must promote its own ministries for the benefit of all.

Neither the church nor the state are monopolies. They are entities at the service of the complex aspirations of man.

/Religion, an Individualistic Matter/

It would seem that progress has already been made toward more universal concepts. However, the vices of "class privilege" and absolutist ambitions continue to motivate changes that do not lead to social, economic and political justice.

Enclosing religious motivations within the scope of individualism and personalism means being more "liberal" than "socialist." This suggests that "religious motivations" that promote social transformations are not really recognized or appreciated. We cannot overlook this serious mistake that detracts from the indispensable action of the spirit. It closes the door to religious motivations preventing them from giving a human and Christian meaning to revolutions, which would continue to be motivated only by mere economic interests and the ambitions of some classes over others.

/Citizens' Rights and Manipulation of Priests/

4. We believe that the less it is fulfilled in practice the more necessary it is to repeat that "all Nicaraguans are entitled to participate in the country's political affairs."

However, if it is recognized that "the interpretation of religious questions is within the purview of the church" it would be incongruous not to take into consideration the particular meaning that "the use of priests as instruments" [instrumentalizacion de los sacerdotes] has for religion and for ensuring that its actions will always be liberating and transcend any "historical form." No one would fail to notice how "the use of priests as instruments" is tantamount to interfering and meddling in priestly ministry and discipline. The priest is a minister and the representative of a church and a set of religious values that have an impact on the overall historical life.

By manipulating the priests the religion he represents is manipulated. History shows us that it is one thing to call on the priest to exercise his priestly ministry and it is another to incorporate him into a system to "justify" such system and give it an "image" of religious justice.

One need not be inside a church to sow divisions in it. It is sufficient to distort or weaken priestly actions in any field of human life. Christ Himself denounced the strategy of /"smiting the shepherd to scatter the sheep."/

It would be sufficient to introduce disorder and indiscipline among its ministers with /flattery and privileges/ through well-known human trickery. It would be sufficient to divert the actions of the priest to serving party or group interests. Religion cannot be at the service of interests. This is confirmed by the assertions made by the FSLN in its communique.

"Since pastors must be concerned with unity, they will divest themselves of all partisan political ideology that could condition their criteria and attitudes. They will thus be free to evangelize the body politic [lo politico], like Christ, without partisanship or indoctrination." (Puebla 526)

In the eyes of Christians, they are all sons of God who need to be equally liberated as to their human qualities not as simple "instruments of production or well-being" in favor of the rulers of this world in darkness.

"The church serves the people but is not at the service of power."

FINANCE MINISTER GIVES ACCOUNT OF GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 29 Oct 80 pp 1, 9, 10

/Report on interview with Finance Minister Joaquin Cuadra on 28 October 1980; place not given/

[Text] EL NUEVO DIARIO interviewed Finance Minister Joaquin Cuadra yesterday in connection with the sharp assertion contained in the editorial of a local newspaper to the effect that the Revolutionary Government is not giving an account of its expenditures to the Nicaraguan people, thus suggesting that the same things are going on as under the corrupt Somoza regime.

In this regard, the minister pointed out that he was starkly aware of the paper's gratuitous desire to question the administrative honesty of the Revolutionary Government, to the extreme that the paper contended that "it is hard to tell what is doing well and what is doing badly because the people are not being given an account of things now."

Longing for Somoza

"To begin with," he indicated, "we would have to ask those who are asserting this whether the word 'now' that they use in the editorial reflects a longing for the immoral administrative system that Somozism had in practice for a half century."

With regard to the other assertion that "public spending has increased astonishingly, parallel only to the expansion of the state bureaucracy," the minister said public spending has undeniably and obviously increased astonishingly to the pride of the revolutionary process.

Reactionaries Do Not Tire

He stated that the growth in state expenditures is undeniable because for the first time in the country's history the results of public spending can be seen in the astonishing expansion in the education, health care, social welfare, culture, citizen and national security spheres, natural resources and environmental planning, development of the fishing industry, expansion of land, river and lake transport, all of which cannot be described as just bureaucratic outlays, except if some reactionaries feel that these projects to benefit our people should not be undertaken.

In addition, he added, strictly bureaucratic outlays are made for salaries in those merely administrative institutions that do not undertake physical projects, such as the Judiciary, the Foreign Relations Ministry, the National Reconstruction Government Junta, the Justice Ministry and the Comptrollership General of the Republic, but that taken together, they account for only six percent of yearly public spending.

Nevertheless, we cannot flatly deny that mistakes and shortcomings do not exist, because they are natural at the outset of any revolutionary process, especially when many of these vices were inherited from the Somoza regime.

In-Depth Reassessment

In light of this, the government is currently doing an in-depth reassessment of the organization of all its agencies to correct these shortcomings and vices that we inherited from the previous regime, especially in connection with the many superfluous personnel that undeniably work in government offices, a shortcoming that we have not been able to rectify radically and comprehensively so far because the immediate dismissal of these employees would have boosted unemployment.

Relocate, Not Leave Jobless

The minister explained that the policy that the government is going to pursue in this regard is to seek to relocate these excess employees in other government spheres, including the area of the people's property, where they will work in accordance with their aptitudes and capabilities.

The aforementioned editorial also asserts maliciously that the Ministries of Defense and Interior "account for the largest part of the federal budget," and in this regard Comrade Cuadra stated that the best answer to this ill-intentioned assertion is a percentage breakdown of public spending among the various branches of the central government.

Education, Health Care

In a conclusive reply that completely refuted such assertions, the minister pointed out that 37 percent of the government's current expenditures budget for 1980, which totals 4.37 billion cordobas, is for the social sphere, 34 percent of which is earmarked for education and health care.

In addition, 12 percent is earmarked for the production area, MIDA, industry, Irena, and just 11 percent is earmarked for infrastructure such as housing, transportation and construction, because these projects are financed with outside funds.

Defense and Interior

It is true, he went on to say, that 22 percent of the total federal current expenditures budget is allocated to the Ministries of Defense and the Interior. We must bear in mind, however, that these outlays include all of the infrastructure projects that these ministries are engaged in, such as the upgrading of jails, training and education of the Armed Forces, etc.

An Evil Dream

"Moreover," the minister indicated, "it is highly suspicious that these enemies of the revolution are finding fault with and attacking expenditures for the comprehensive training of a new army and police force, which are not just serving the citizens and maintaining the domestic order because their basic mission is to defend our national sovereignty and the revolution itself. In other words, this is an evil dream on the part of those who would like our Revolutionary Armed Forces to be weak, shaky institutions."

He indicated that the remaining 12 percent of total state current expenditures is divided into 6 percent for Finances, Planning and Labor (the economic area) and 6 percent for amortizing the foreign debt.

With regard to the editorial's statement that "almost the only construction work that the government has been doing at a rapid pace involves nonproductive projects such as walls, remodeling houses and mansions, signs, official propaganda, political posters, public squares, etc," Minister Cuadra pointed out that this is another malevolent assertion obviously aimed at discrediting our revolution.

No Recognition of Anything

This, he pointed out, is malevolently ignoring the extraordinary program of projects that both the central government and the Managua Reconstruction Board have been undertaking since 19 July.

It means overlooking the construction of the Rio Blanco-Siuna, Tuma-Waslala-Siuna highways, the second stage of the Acaoyapa-San Carlos Highway, the La Trinidad-Llano Largo Highway, as well as the enormous efforts that have been exerted to build and repair pioneer roads at a cost of 140 million cordobas, plus the construction of the airstrip at Bluefields and the repair of the national road system.

We should also mention the construction of the Valle 15 de Julio Highway to Malpaisillo and the Abisinia-Valle del Cua Highway, the startup of construction work on hospitals in Matagalpa, Rivas and Esteli, ongoing work on the Children's Hospital, the erection of new health care centers in Monimbo, La Trinidad, Masatepe, Santa Teresa and Leon, and the building and rebuilding of many educational institutes and centers.

1.816 Billion

The minister indicated that the government has invested a total of 1.816 billion cordobas on these projects, 320.9 million of which is being financed with domestic funds.

"And speaking of public squares (the 19 July Square)," he added, "I feel that a triumphant revolution can legitimately spend 4.5 million cordobas to recall the memory of and render homage to the heroes and martyrs who made possible the overthrow of the dictatorship and the victory of the people. I really don't think that this is wasting money, and neither, for example, is the construction of the monument to Pedro Joaquin Chamorro in Luis A. Velasquez Park, nor the extraordinary projects and improvements that the Managua Reconstruction Board has accomplished, but of course those who never even pass close to our underprivileged neighborhoods do not get the chance to see them."

In conclusion, Minister Cuadra pointed out that our government's greatest satisfaction was expressed recently by the president of the IDB, Antonio Ortiz Mena, who said that "the most significant feature of our revolution is precisely its spotless administrative honesty."

FUNDS REQUIRED FOR SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH, TECHNOLOGY PROGRAMS DISCUSSED

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 4 Nov 80 Sec 2 p 13

[Article by Jose Hurtado: "750 Million Needed for Science and Technology"]

[Text] Seven hundred fifty million bolivares are needed to put the institutions and foundations intended to promote scientific and technological research in the various regions of the country into operation, according to Dr Raimundo Villegas, minister of state for science and technology.

Minister Villegas said that this precisely is the main task to which his department is currently devoting itself, since obtaining this financing will permit the launching of the activities of the International Institute of Advanced Studies and the Engineering Institute for Research and Technological Development.

As to the foundations the ministry is sponsoring, one such, the advanced studies on which may be completed this week, is the Zulia Fundacite, a foundation for the scientific and technological development of the Zulia region. The process of establishing the Center-Western Fundacite to promote the development of that region in the country has also been begun.

Minister Villegas commented that valuable help in this task is being provided by the National Council for Scientific and Technological Research (CONICIT), one of the bodies providing guidance for the foundation, which will be a kind of branch of that organization (CONICIT) in the province. He said that this is "one of the most ambitious projects we have" and that "our hope is that when the 5-year period is over, we will have established a small organization, a foundation for the encouragement of science and technology in the interior of the country, in the various regional development corporations."

"It is our desire," Dr Villegas said, "to make science a national activity, not an activity limited to the capital of the republic."

On the subject of the budget he said that the sum the ministry he heads has asked for this year is about 750 million bolivares, but that obviously this sum excludes the investment in oil and environmental research, which comes within the budget of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. and the Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources.

In another connection, the minister said that apart from the investments mentioned, the greatest interest is in substantial growth for the existing institutions, specifically the CONICIT and the Venezuelan Institute of Scientific Research (IVIC).

He was also asked about the activities of the IVIC at present and he said:

"It is working on basic research, applied research and postgraduate training."

BRIEFS

INTERIOR MINISTRY BUDGET--President Luis Herrera Campins has approved an increase of 89 million bolivares for the Interior Ministry's budget of the present year. He made this decision at the ministers' council held this week. The 89 million bolivares are in addition to the funds already approved for the country's intelligence and security services. It is the duty of the Central Budget Office to carry out this presidential resolution. [Text] [PA270010 Caracas Radio Continente Network in Spanish 2100 GMT 26 Nov 80]

MILITARY INSPECTOR GENERAL CREATED--The Defense Ministry has decided to set up a Standing Committee of Inspectors General of the Armed Forces, issuing a resolution to this effect. The committee will consist of the inspector general of the Armed Forces, who will chair it; the inspectors general of the four branches; the director of planning and research; and the head of the Planning and Assessment Division of the Inspectorship General of the Armed Forces. The committee was created in the offices of the inspector general of the Armed Forces at a ceremony at which Maj Gen Hector Rodriguez Ravelo outlined its functions, which can be summarized as follows: to draw up an inspection system for the Armed Forces; to determine the common areas covered by the inspection plan; to evaluate the functioning of the inspection system and to apply the necessary measures; to draw up the agenda for the Sixth Seminar of Inspectorships General, which will be held during the first week of December; to submit the report on the annual seminar to the Superior Armed Forces Board, and to establish the guidelines to be applied in drawing up the verification lists or inspection guide. Gen Rodriguez Ravelo stressed that one of the committee's most important objectives would be to determine the common overall areas covered by the Armed Forces inspection plan, such as education, morale and well-being, training, planning, participation in joint land, sea and air operations, logistics, drug problems and how to combat them. The committee will function as an advisory body to the Defense Ministry in connection with the programming, coordination and assessment of the joint operations and development plans of the Armed Forces. MEXICAN-VENEZUELAN OIL DEAL WITH NICARAGUA EXPLAINED

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 10

[Text] The National Reconstruction Government Junta yesterday received from the ambassadors of Mexico and Venezuela a copy of the oil agreement under which the two countries promise to guarantee supplies of 15,000 barrels a day to Nicaragua.

The pledge was signed last August by Presidents Jose Lopez Portillo of Mexico and Luis Herrera Campins of Venezuela in San Jose, Costa Rica.

Under the agreement, oil supplies are guaranteed to Nicaragua and the other countries of Central America, as well as a number of Caribbean nations, for 1 year, which is automatically extendable by another year, and so on indefinitely.

Ambassador Guillermo Yepes Boscan of Venezuela and Ambassador Julio Zamora Batiz of Mexico met yesterday with Government Junta members Commander Daniel Ortega Saavedra, Sergio Ramirez Mercado and Rafael Cordova Rivas at the Government Palace to discuss matters relating to the agreement.

Ambassador Yepes Boscan explained that under the agreement the beneficiary countries would pay 30 percent of their oil bill at an annual interest rate of 4 percent over a 5-year period.

In the event that the financing is invested in energy development projects, the interest rate would drop to 2 percent, payable over 20 years.

He added that the agreement does not rule out bilateral negotiations between the beneficiary countries and the two suppliers.

Mexico will supply Nicaragua with 7,500 barrels of oil a day, and Venezuela will send the same amount. A mixture of the two crudes has already been successfully tested at the Esso Refinery.

Ambassador Yepes Boscan termed the agreement "a disinterested form of cooperation in the name of international social justice and continental solidarity."

He added that the agreement takes on even greater importance "at a time when Iran and Iraq are waging a useless war that will cause major supply problems in the world."

At this juncture, Yepes Boscan said, many countries in the world that have more than enough money to buy oil have to buy it at spot market prices, which are higher than OPEC levels.

He also said that in the event of any future increase in the price of Mexican or Venezuelan crude oil, the pact gives the beneficiary countries the advantage that they can automatically boost their financing in relation to the price rise.

In thanking the Mexican and Venezuelan governments for their gesture towards Nicaragua, Commander Daniel Ortega Saavedra recalled the disinterested, unconditional solidarity that these countries lent to the Nicaraguan people's liberation struggle.

He went on to say that the agreement "helps strengthen the Nicaraguan Revolution in its struggle to attain economic independence and to defend its sovereignty and independence against any sort of economic and political pressure or blackmail."

He underscored that Mexican-Venezuelan aid to the Nicaraguan people "has always been disinterested and fraternal, from authentic Latin Americans."

In a communique, the Government Palace stated that "because of their status as countries that bridge the developing and industrialized worlds, both Mexico and Venezuela have a common solidarity with the peoples that long for a new international order, which must be based on social justice, peace and involvement."

It adds that the two countries have an underlying presence in Central America and the Caribbean in the form of initiatives aimed at bringing about improvements in the situation of countries that are less favored than us in terms of natural resources and which enable them to bolster regimes that respect human rights, justice and freedom.

BRAZIL'S PREDOMINANCE, IMPACT ON LATIN AMERICA EXAMINED

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 2 Nov 80 pp 3, 10

[Fides News Agency (ANF) special report No 403]

[Text] The activation of the Amazon Pact signed by eight countries in this basin and put into operation last week at the Belem meeting can be viewed as one of Brazil's advances toward its great power goal of hegemony in South America.

The Belem meeting in which the member nations of the pact participated (Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Guyana, Peru, Suriname and Venezuela) had two purposes, an obvious one and one which was concealed.

The first was reaching agreement on the exploitation of the wealth of the Amazon region, with promises to avoid causing imbalances in nature and the desire that this natural preservation should not enter into conflict with international ecological pressures which might limit the sovereignty of the nations involved.

The other goal was the strengthening of Brazil's role of hegemony on the South American subcontinent.

Useful Ecology

No one could have expected that the ecological concerns of some international groups seeking a kind of internationalization of the Amazon region to save the world from suicide due to environmental pollution could serve the hegemonic cause of Brazil in such opportune fashion.

In fact, the industrialized world has realized that we will end up choked between smoke and mud if we continue to upset the balance of nature with the destruction of the forests, the conversion of the rivers into sewers, etc. Therefore there are groups which are trying to obtain control of the Amazon Basin as a preserve or "iron lung" for the health of mankind.

Sovereignty as Bait

There is no better lure for getting states to act than reference to their sovereignty. Brazil has caused the alarm bell to be sounded. The ecologists are coming to restrict your sovereignty over your Amazon territory! And this is the basis of all their claims.

It would not be proper to underestimate the direct and visible end sought with the Amazon agreement: to preserve the respective sovereignties legimiately, to coordinate efforts for the exploitation of vast wealth efficiently, to safeguard the nature whose balance is the common heritage both of the nations in the area and mankind prudently. It is not our intention to discredit these goals.

But it does seem timely to examine the other side of the coin which Brazil is wagering in order to achieve the goals of strengthening its domination. Brazil is not acting without purpose.

Brasilia Compared to Buenos Aires

One of the first evidences of this process of Brazilian continental influence is the ascendancy Brasilia is gaining over Buenos Aires. It is a fact that both Brazil and Argentina have given evidence of mutual understanding, despite the mute rivalry which has always existed between them (at least in the diplomatic realm). The meeting of Presidents Videla and Figueiredo in Brasilia in recent weeks seems to mark this search for basic agreement.

Reading between the lines concerning that visit, the two presidents apparently established that the influence previously exerted by the United States should now be shared by Argentina and Brazil.

Moreover, both governments were to guarantee the nonintervention of "extra-continental powers" (for which read the USSR and its satellites) in the area, but now without need for recourse to the Pentagon.

The Hegemonic Bouillabaisse

The two presidents built a bridge, which is not a small thing. But by definition the bridge presumes the existence beneath it of a watercourse in some way jointly owned, and two streams, inevitably different and even contradictory. On each bank there is a native who will always try to catch the largest fish in the stream. This time the fish is hegemony.

At the meeting of the Amazon nations, Brazil sought to catch seven succulent fish for its hegemonic bouillabaisse.

Geopolitical Factors

Apart from the obvious goals of common interest in the Amazon Pact, Brazil is seeing to the strengthening of the classic geopolitical factors for its hegemony: space, population, politics.

The space of the Amazon region expanded by that belonging to the Pact nations.

The population of these countries to swell its markets, interlinking interests and cultural exchange.

In politics, Brazil is showing evidence of initiative. And he who strikes first strikes twice, according to the refrain.

Andean-Amazonian Policy

The Belem statement with which the Amazon meeting ended may become a betraying blow to the Andean Pact. Its member nations had joined together in an integration mechanism precisely to avoid being sucked up by the greedy tentacles of the Brazilian octopus. (This is only a rhetorical image suggested by the resemblance between the Amazon River network and its tributaries and the tentacles of the octopus.)

It is precisely when the Andean Pact is encountering difficulties that a prospect like that which led to the Cartagena Agreement is glimpsed for the Amazon region: an expanded market. Only with a different polarization.

The Andean Pact sought to strengthen the Andean-Amazon nations (note this compound name) precisely so that as Andean powers, they would not be dominated by the super-Amazon nation.

But the Brazilian undertaking now might be designed to effect a 90-degree swing in the direction of these countries, to discourage their rocky and difficult pursuit of Andeanism, falling prey to the sensual promises of Amazonism.

Should this swing occur, the market expansion would obviously favor the big fish and not the little ones.

Our Neighboring Country

Our nation has become a balancing point. Fate! In fact, in view of the enticements coming from the Plate River urging formation of a linguistic-ideological-political-economic bloc emerging in the muddy waters of the port of Buenos Aires, a consortium guaranteeing a multipurpose route between the Atlantic and the Pacific through Bolivia seems tempting.

From another viewpoint, Bolivia should clarify its still-precarious but now committed involvement in the Andean group and the promise of the "advance toward the jungle." Realities which are not in themselves contradictory, but which should be the subject of a priority decision, since they cannot both be undertaken because of limitations on the human and physical capacity for such vast ventures.

Brazil to Asia Via Bolivia

With the role of superpower which Brazil has taken upon itself, it cannot be content with safeguarding its Atlantic trade routes. Asia is a Brazilian goal which has depended on maritime access routes: a great distance via the Cape of Good Hope, lack of guarantees with the Panama Canal in Panamanian hands, and Argentine competition on the Cape Horn routes.

The search for alternative land routes for trade between Brazil and Asia inevitably involves crossing the Andes. Thus while the gaze of the Andean nations turned in Belem toward the Amazon-Atlantic outlet, Brazil simultaneously tried to establish firmer foundations to guarantee Andean-Pacific communications.

The most practical route for such communications is from Santos to Arica through Bolivia.

A Quotation

The American geopolitical expert Lewis Tambs wrote recently in this regard: "Since 1919, the Itamaraty Palace has supported Bolivian demands for a Pacific port. When he took office in 1974, President Geisel offered his services as a mediator in this matter to two of his guests: President Hugo Banzer of Bolivia and President Augusto Pinochet of Chile. A few months later, in June of 1974, Geisel and Banzer signed the Cochabamba Convention calling for viability studies for the construction of a railroad from Santa Cruz de la Sierra to Cochabamba, the only gap in the Santos-Arica rail route. Bolivia and Chile also sought to reach an agreement, but a Peruvian counterplan interrupted the negotiations and agreement was frustrated early in 1976. At the end of the year, however, Peru, which had been resisting Brazilian leadership since 1968, began to move toward the Brazilian orbit."

Dreams of Hegemony

This and the negotiations--rather rigid, in fact—for exploitation of El Mutun are parts of a long-range plan which geopolitical expert Tambs views in this way: "The Brazilian dream of achieving the status of a superpower calls for the establishment of a transcontinental confederation—not by conquest, but by means of economic and political hegemony in South America."

A part of the activation of the Amazon Pact comes within this context--not all.

These goals have become more worrisome since Brazilian President Castello Branco began to speak of ideological frontiers, and since someone noted that the rate of demographic growth in our great neighbor is increasing at 2.8 percent per year while the rate does not much exceed 1 percent in the neighboring countries. Where Bolivia is concerned, the figure is 1.5 percent.

Bolivian Analysis

If we must believe this noted geopolitician--which is not compulsory--we could conclude with him that "the Brazilians will continue their traditional method of indirect expansion--infiltration, settlement and integration."

What has been said thus far is not anti-Brazilian, but only an analysis. Naturally, viewed through the Bolivian spectroscope. And we are certain that mutually useful pacts are always possible.

CENTRAL AMERICAN, MEXICAN, PANAMANIAN COMMUNISTS ISSUE STATEMENT

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 29 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] Joint Statement of the Communist and Workers Parties of Central America, Mexico and Panama

From 1 to 3 October, somewhere in Central America, a conference of the Communist and Workers Parties of Central America, Mexico and Panama was held, after which a joint statement was issued, containing an exhaustive analysis of the political situation in the region. Following is the complete text of that document:

"Within the context of the general crisis of capitalism, the current situation in Central America is marked by a constant breakdown in the system of domination by the imperialists and the bourgeois-landholding oligarchies, and the irrepressible heightening of the popular, democratic struggles, which have been joined by increasingly large masses determined to free themselves from that yoke and thereby win the right to decide on the destinies of their countries.

"This crisis of imperialist-oligarchical domination, and this process of the heightening of the peoples' struggles, are under way reaching different levels of intensity and maturity; but the historical trend points to the same desired goal: the conquest of liberty, true national independence and social justice. Central America is filled with revolution, more than at any other time in its history, having already given birth to the first popular, democratic, anti-imperialist revolution, the Sandinist Revolution in Nicaragua. The Salvadoran revolution is observing its imminent victory. In Guatemala, the popular, revolutionary movement has emerged from the martyrdom of past decades, and the present genocide is not crushing its impetuous desire to struggle for national and social emancipation. In Costa Rica and Honduras, the popular movement has won notable victories against the reactionaries who are resorting with more frequency and brutality to repressive, and even bloody violence.

"The Yankee imperialists are engaging in all kinds of efforts and maneuvers to deter the process of liberation of the Central American peoples: from the fostering of genocidal slaughter, the encouragement of the Somozist counterrevolution and increasing military and political intervention, with military advisers and weapons (as in El Salvador), threatening to result in overt, direct aggression with their own troops, to a combination of these procedures accompanied by the manipulation of reformist plans.

"In a hypocritical show of 'interest in peace in Central America,' the United States Government is exerting strong pressure for the attainment of a settlement of the dispute between El Salvador and Honduras, which cropped up after the war between them in 1969. This is valid in principle, but the true, immediate goal that the imperialists are pursuing is that of reducing the obstacles which are hampering the use of the Honduran Army on behalf of the rabid fascist military who have unleashed genocide upon the Salvadoran people, and of spreading the war against the latter.

"Inthis way, Washington is attempting to assign to others the dirty, bandit-like mission of attacking the Salvadoran people who are struggling heroically for their liberation, in order to preserve its shaky prestige and conceal its criminal nature, which is still the same as ever, the same nature which brought the bayonets of its Marines through Latin America so often.

"The Central American reactionaries, particularly those of Guatemala and El Salvador, accept no other solution to the crisis than crushing out, through slaughter, the desires of their peoples, and insuring the perpetuation of the old, unjust and repudiated social and political order. There is a real danger that the Central American reactionaries will attack Nicaragua and the Salvadoran people, thus imposing a state of war upon all of Central America.

"The peoples of El Salvador and Guatemala are surmounting all obstacles and progressing steadfastly toward their victory. In El Salvador, the difficult march toward liberation, the unified will of the popular masses, the shining example of the Sandinist revolution and the maturity of the leadership entities of the revolutionary organizations, including the Communist Party of El Salvador (PCS), have, during 1980, fostered a swift process of unification of the revolutionary forces, which immediately gave rise to the unification, around them, of the vast mass movement in the urban and rural areas, and the regrouping of all the patriotic and democratic forces, both Marxist and Christian, religious and lay, civilian and military. The Farabundo Marti Front for National Liberation, which combines the politico-military revolutionary organizations, and the Revolutionary Democratic Front, which groups the latter with all the democratic and patriotic forces (including those which lack armed contingents), are the reflection and the future of this extensive process of unification of the Salvadoran people, an achievement of strategic value for their imminent victory.

"In Guatemala, the process of unifying the democratic and revolutionary forces has also started and is progressing. We salute and back every advance in the process toward the unity of the Guatemalan revolutionary left, without exception, since it will create better conditions for the struggle and triumph ot its people.

"The revolutionary armed struggle in El Salvador and Guatemala which is combined with varied types of political struggle and struggle for demands among the masses, constitutes the sure path of the revolution which found all other routes closed. We back this heroic struggle; we are and we shall be cooperating, with all the means within our reach, to help it win victory.

"Today, the prime obligation of Communists and all revolutionaries consists of doing everything on behalf of the triumph of the revolution in El Salvador, and of supporting the Guatemalan revolution for its progress and victory. We shall strive to prevent the occurrence of imperialist aggression, and we shall encourage our peoples to fight forcefully against the latter, in the event that it occurs.

"In Costa Rica and Honduras, processes of democratic and revolutionary unification are also under way, on the basis of the United People Movement and the Patriotic Front, respectively. In both countries, popular struggles are increasing, attaining encouraging victories.

"In Costa Rica, the reactionary forces are pressuring the government to resort to increasingly frequent and bloody repression against the workers' movements. In Honduras, the imperialists want to stabilize the political situation by means of maneuvers involving openness, seeking to create a propitious atmosphere for strengthening the Army and launching it to engage in action of aggressive policing against the other Central American peoples. Particularly serious is the fact that they have started using sectors of the Honduran Army in the repression against the Salvadoran people, and that there is unquestionable tolerance and support for the encampment and criminal activity of the former Somozist guards against the Nicaraguan people.

"In Nicaragua, the glorious Sandinist revolution has become thoroughly consolidated, progress has been made in the nation's reconstruction, the old problem of illiteracy has been solved within the brief space of a year, the foundations have been laid for solving the most serious social problems, and the country's strong defense has been organized, backed by the great masses, a guarantee of a certain defeat of the counterrevolution which has started to attack it.

"The all-important Central American situation is developing in the context of the Caribbean region, where the revolutionary tendencies and people's achievements are coming into open conflict with the regressive action of the imperialists and the most reactionary forces.

"The triumph of the glorious Cuban revolution marked an historic turnabout for our peoples. Socialist Cuba, after 2 decades of imperialist blockade, is today an encouraging example of the possibility (which only a revolution can afford) of carrying out the deep-seated, irreversible reorganization of the society, based on the people's interests; and it also demonstrates the historic international role that can be played, on the basis of socialism, by a people who were previously oppressed, exploited and kept in ignorance and poverty.

"The revolutions of Grenada and Nicaragua are at the present time the two most significant and influential events in continental history, since the Cuban revolution, and they are lending continuity to the long, difficult progress of our peoples toward final liberation.

"The success achieved by the Panamanian people in retrieving their sovereignty over the Canal is now being faced with the violation of the Torrijos-Carter treaties on the part of the United States, whose most reactionary forces are attempting to reverse them. The Communists and all the progressive forces of Panama, combined with their effort to make democracy advance toward an essence with deeper popular roots, are closing ranks against the reactionaries and imperialists to defend their conquests.

"In Mexico, within the context of the rise of the financial bourgeoisie and the preeminence of the monopolies, a political reform was carried out, which was a result of two main factors: the masses' struggle for political liberty, and the comprehension by the state bureaucracy of the need to change its repressive behavior. The measures for political reform have now been completed, and the working class and the popular forces are today facing a major offensive against their living standards, and are striving to win new democratic changes in political life, with a special effort on behalf of labor union freedom and the expansion of the channels for independent action by the masses and revolutionary organizations, as a means of facilitating their growing influence on the country's destiny and improving the prospects of the revolution and of socialism.

"In Haiti, the people have taken a strong position of struggle to shake off the reprehensible, long-standing Duvalier tyranny.

"In Jamaica, Manley's progressive, democratic government is fighting to defeat the wily attacks of the reactionaries, spurred on by the imperialists, who have set out to defeat it. The people of Puerto Rico and Belize are striving to attain their independence and territorial integrity; while at the same time the process of dissolving the colonial system in the Caribbean area is advancing.

"We Communists are struggling for socialism and communism, but we recognize the fact that progress can only be made toward those supreme goals at present by heightening the democratic popular struggles, strengthening and uniting the revolutionary forces as a whole and winning the objectives of the democratic, anti-imperialist revolution. The struggle for democracy, independence and progress is an inseparable part of the struggle for socialism and communism. Therefore, we are resolute partisans of those struggles; we are in agreement with all those who are bent on bringing them to victory and defending their conquests.

"We Communists of Central America, Mexico and Panama alert our people to the serious dangers entailed for their struggles by the return of the United States Government to the blackmailing, aggressive policy of the 'cold war,' the existence of military bases and the holding of aggressive military maneuvers in the region.

"We call upon the democratic and revolutionary forces of our countries to unify their struggle for the goals of the liberation of their peoples. The development of unity, the combined struggle of the workers and peasants movement, the close alliance between them and their revolutionary education constitute the main guarantee for the steadfastness, breadth and scope of the entire popular struggle.

"Our parties hail the increasing tendency of the Catholic clergy to act in a commitment to the people, a tendency taken to its loftiest representation by the sacrifice of Msgr Oscar Arnulfo Romero in El Salvador; and they reaffirm the will to continue increasing the joint action on behalf of democracy, respect for human rights and social liberation with the movements of Christian orientation and the believing masses as a whole.

"We call upon the military with patriotic sentiments, and all honorable elements in uniform, to refuse to play the role of executioners of their people assigned to them by the imperialists and reactionaries. They too have a secure place in the popular struggle and in its achievements.

"This time in Central America and the Caribbean is crucial for the final liberation of their peoples. We call upon all the democratic, revolutionary popular forces of this region to close ranks, staunchly and aggressively, around the revolutions in progress in El Salvador and Guatemala, and in defense of the Sandinist Revolution.

"We call upon the progressive peoples and forces, the democratic and revolutionary governments of Latin America and the entire world not to allow the unleashing of Yankee imperialist military aggression on the Central American peoples, and to prevent the 'cold war' policy toward which the United States Government is directed again from deploying on all continents the positioning of its military bases and its atomic weapons, destroying world peace, and from attempting to drown the people's conquests and desires in blood."

PRESS REACTION TO ROCKEFELLER VISIT

Schoenfeld's Strong Attack

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 11 Nov 80 p 9

[Article by Manfred Schoenfeld: "'Concession' of the Colon To Put It at the Disposal of Mr Rockefeller and His Guests"]

[Text] Last night, as everyone is aware, the officials of the Colon Theater kept their commitment to concede the theater, by contract, to Mr David Rockefeller, outgoing president of the Chase Manhattan Bank of the United States and mentor of our minister of economy.

Conversion Into a Hotel?

The municipal government deigned to give a brief explanation of the matter, to the effect that (as of the date in question) a "concession contract" had been concluded with Mr Rockefeller for the Colon.

Hence, for all practical purposes, the latter became the owner of the theater for an evening function, acted as host at it and had available the regular ballet corps to put on a performance for his friends and acquaintances, as well as the facilities for refreshments after the artistic performance that was given.

When an official of the Colon was questioned in this regard, he said that those who paid admission would have access to last night's function; but, strangely enough, the evening performance was not advertised on any billboards.

This kind of "semiprivate function," that act of virtually putting a glorious cultural institution (a mark of honor for many decades to our country and to all the Spanish-speaking world where its par would be sought in vain) at the disposal of a magnate, putting it at his disposal, we say, as if it were a banquet hall, so that Mr Rockefeller might hold his reception (plus performance), because actually it was nothing else, indicates a disgraceful attitude in our opinion.

We assume that the municipal government (and the national government which is responsible in such matters, for obvious reasons) have the legal right to do what they did. Morally, we are certain that they do not have it.

The Colon Theater is not a hotel, and Mr Rockefeller is not a head of state nor any other kind of official guest whom the authorities of our country or our city would have wished to host with a gala evening function, as is the traditional style in such instances.

In the Monaco Style

No, Mr Rockefeller is merely a rich and powerful man who might have been given what is commonly known as a "taste of life", thanks to the obsequiousness of our authorities, who apparently do not realize that there should be some things that all the money in the world cannot make accessible. This is so, regardless of whether or not the American banker paid for the "concession contract." This matters but little, because if we were to adopt such a criterion, in the future it would also be possible to rent or "concede" (some Saturday or Sunday, when nothing important is going on in the building anyway) the reception halls of the House of Government to any Croesus who might want to enter such a "triumph" in his memoirs as a potentate.

Without realizing it, we are reducing ourselves to the level of miniature countries, such as the Principality of Monaco, where Onassis had more power than Prince Rainier himself, because the latter had "conceded" the Monte Carlo casino to the former.

The comparison may perhaps not be too apt, but there is something essential to justify it. In any event, Prince Rainier comes out ahead, having been backed by Onassis' money, but only conceding him, commercially, a frivolous entity like a casino, and not, for example, the Monegasque Oceanographic Museum.

However, the arbitrary step of distorting the normal function of a great theater is germane to those who, it may be thought, have confused Argentina with a "banana republic" of which they consider themselves the lords and masters.

That alone should be the impression that is received "in petto" [at heart], although we realize that Mr Rockefeller would never admit it in our case. Perhaps he thinks that he is settling it with some charitable donation or by sending a small gift to the Colon Theater Foundation. But actually it is not a matter of that. It cannot even be claimed that the one in question is, in this instance, Mr Rockefeller himself, who, after all, has no reason to be more papal than the Pope, or to transcend the concept of cultural dignity of the authorities of the country that he is visiting.

The latter, instead of putting on an ethereal ballet, would have done better to have a performance of Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung." In that case, he would at least have been aware of the reality of the environment in which he was acting as host, in the style of Ludwig II of Bavaria....

Balanced Assessment

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 8

[Article: "Rockefeller's Visit"]

[Text] Nothing else could have been expected: The visit by a personage of extensive fame and monetary importance in international political and economic activity such - as Mr David Rockefeller evoked expectations and aroused controversy far exceeding what his presence in our country actually represents. Of course, it would be naive to assume that the talks held here and in Iguazu with the top-ranking national authorities should be considered mere "friendly chats" according to the minister of economy's description; but they cannot be attributed a scope which they unquestionably lacked either.

The presence in our country of such a prominent visitor, who also arrived with a large, qualified delegation of businessmen who operate in one of the largest banks in the world, has in itself a meaning apart from any other consideration. Argentina is of concern in the international economic realm and, to make a calm assessment of the arrival of this group, we must remember that, a few years ago, the conventions, assemblies and even meetings of the boards of foreign companies established here had to be held outside of the country, because Argentina did not offer security conditions nor economic attractions to warrant the trip by businessmen from abroad. Moreover, it must be noted that ours is one of four countries visited on this quick tour, and that international banks are not concerned exclusively with granting loans, for the promotion of trade and the channeling of investments in the broadest sense are also part of their business.

Mr Rockefeller only confirmed what we all knew already, when he said that he shared the goals of the economic policy pursued in our country since 1976, when he expressed satisfaction at the results accrued since then, and even when he stated that, in his opinion, Argentina's foreign debt is on a reasonable level for the volume of its trade. Generally speaking, his views on the Argentine economy did not include anything new, except that he found the value of the peso rather high; which, he claimed, makes Argentina an expensive country. The latter was a comment which no political or economic observer failed to heed.

What remains as the main results of this visit is, first of all, an analysis of the effects of the recent election in the United States, made by a man who is unquestionable well versed on the subject. Rockefeller was able to tell the Argentine Government (and the future ruler of the Argentines) that President-elect Reagan will not change his country's position regarding two points that are of particular concern to Argentina, namely, the policy on human rights and the policy of nonproliferation of nuclear weapons. Even though he expressly explained that he was not a spokesman for the future occupant of the White House, he nevertheless stated that, after 20 January, different methods will be applied, and the rest of the world will be dealt with as it is, not as it should be. He also conveyed the conviction that the election results meant, essentially, a disappointment and repudiation of the socializing economic policies which distributed poverty.

Secondly, this visit has confirmed the notion that ours is a country which has recovered importance on the international level, especially in the view of the bankers. It also suggests that it is a praiseworthy practice for large business firms to foster among their people a direct knowledge of the countries or regions in which they have major operations.

Thirdly, this has been an opportunity for the future president of Argentina, Lt Gen Viola, to transmit to the United States, through this spokesman with such a special status, two essential ideas concerning the future of Argentine-American relations.

One is that our country does not want Washington to change its policy on human rights, but hopes for a complete understanding of the Argentine situation. The other is that, there may be adjustments and corrections in the economic realm, but the doctrine of the Armed Forces will be kept unchanged. It is precisely in the name of that doctrine, set forth in April 1976, that there has been an increase in the spoksemen who are urging, among other things, rectifications aimed essentially at alleviating the situation which the country's rural areas and industry are experiencing.

MAGAZINE ANALYZES REAGAN VICTORY

PY260026 Buenos Aires SOMOS in Spanish 14 Nov 80 p 18

[Commentary by A. Pasolini Zannelli entitled: "Goodbye to the Vietnam Syndrome"]

[Text] Never before has an electorate rejected its leader and his policy in such a cruel and absolute manner. Jimmy Carter leaves the international political arena after a defeat that showed a powerful response by a people who, with a proud gesture and a moral assertion that few believed them capable of, refused to become hostages. They refused to become hostages not only of the ayatollahs but also of their fears, their burdened conscience and their resignation in the face of their own decadence.

Carter was the result of guilt feelings which Americans had carried on their backs for years. But let us not forget that we created Carter by putting the Americans on trial and building in them guilt feelings and a desire to atone for Vietnam. I have written several times, for which I was attacked a thousand times, that "one day we will be sorry that the Americans left Vietnam." We put the United States on trial and the result was that it gave up its leadership, it leading role in the world; it refused to do anything and surrendered in advance its position of power. Carter is the weak man we now have on our conscience.

The massive vote for Ronald Reagan has not been only or mainly a vote of distrust or protest; it was a liberating rite. It marked the end of an era, the cure of the Vietnam syndrome. After almost 10 years of self-flagellation, examining their own conscience, sorrow and paralysis, the Americans have elected a man who opened his electoral campaign by defending the U.S. intervention in Indochina, claiming that it had been a noble cause.

Today's man is Reagan. Despite his age and conservative leanings, which he proudly admitted, he upheld modern ideas during his electoral campaign. He is much more than a return to tradition. At the economic level he represents the neoliberalism which is the great Western challenge of this decade as opposed to the low-level reshuffling of old schemes in which the Democrats have been bogged down for the last 10 years. In addition, the myth of a welfare state had no credibility coming from the pessimism-ridden Carter. With regard to foreign policy, Reagan is the champion of a new realism, not cold like Nixon's, but imbued once again with the pride, the confidence, and the moral standards without which no great power can survive. His ideas evidence deep and optimistic individualism. All of this, no less, is Ronald Reagan.

As to the relations between the new U.S. Administration and Europe, it stands to reason that the United States will be, as of January, a difficult, susceptible and not very condescending ally. It is certain, for example, that Reagan will leave little if any room for maneuvering to those who attempt opportunistic adventures outside the framework of the overall strategy. Such is the case of Giscard d'Estaing. We have read on occasion that the Europeans are smart fellows who believe that their diplomacy is great, but all they do is play on equivocalities to disguise their own cowardice. I have a feeling that Reagan may well share this opinion.

Gerald Ford said 6 months ago that Reagan was not eligible because he was very conservative. Things changed so much in this short time in the United States that Reagan not only won but also obtained the first Republican majority in the Senate in the last 26 years and will have the strongest Republican support in the House of Representatives since Dwight Eisenhower's time. Nothing like this has happened to a conservative since the thirties. This has been an historic landslide, no doubt.

MASSERA LABELS GOVERNMENT ARROGANT, INSECURE

PY241237 Buenos Aires NOTICIAS ARGENTINAS in Spanish 1110 GMT 22 Nov 80

[Text] Bahia Blanca, 22 Nov (NA)--Former Navy Commander Adm Emilio Massera (Ret) has said here that "we should not let ourselves be seduced by a minority who believe it can solve all our problems" and warned that "if a real solution to these problems is not found," then "the fear, hopelessness and indifference we are now experiencing will become the anger, desperation and insurrection of tomorrow."

During a lecture to the local association of business employees yesterday, Massera said: We must understand that all things have a limit. We should not continue to be confounded by the principle of good and evil professed by this minority who believes it has all the virtues and who also, with unforgivable thoughtlessness, labels as corrupt and subversive anyone who disagrees."

He also criticized "the arrogance of people who despise opinions and feelings concerning the real situation of the country," and added that "definitely, this seems to be their basic attitude toward this matter. This arrogance goes to the extreme of limiting, if not denying, information on government acts, an attitude which violates the most basic republican principles."

He said: "Paradoxically, this arrogance is also an expression of the fear and weakness of people who know they are incapable of showing any goodness and truthfulness in their acts and words and have chosen arrogance instead, a position which hardly disguises their insecurity."

Massera also said that "this attitude results in a daily insult to large and different sectors of the country. Politicians are accused of being obsolete and lacking representation. They are even accused of being subversive and corrupt in a generalization which is not only unjust but erroneous. He added: "Businessmen are criticized when they disagree and react against the results of an economic policy which is more improvised than pragmatic and implemented in contradiction to the real situation prevailing in Argentina."

He said: "The workers' right to get a job and keep it and maintain their salary levels has been curtailed because their leaders have been prevented from actively participating, as citizens, in building the future."

Massera said: "Intellectuals are hurt and the press and communications media offended because of offensive manipulations. Christian principles are deceived when the difference between the rich and the poor widens, capital is placed above labor and economic matters, above social aspects. Justice is also violated when friends are helped to solve their financial problems while many Argentines, overwhelmed by debts contracted in accordance with their small assets, are left abandoned to their own luck."

In his speech, aimed at exhorting the Argentine people "to reject fear," Massera said that future President Lt Gen Roberto Viola (Ret) "will have to allow all sectors to participate in national activity in order to open an effective and wide channel in which political parties participate."

Massera warned: "The government should not create obsession among the people but on the contrary it should put an end to anguish in Argentina because we are living in permanent insecurity due to lack of information or ignorance of what is going to happen tomorrow."

ANTICOMMUNIST SOCIETY DEFINES OBJECTIVES

Leaders Chosen

Belize City THE REPORTER in English 16 Nov 80 p 6

[Text]

SOME 38 businessmen representing large, small and medium-sized businesses have put their seal of approval on a new Anti-Communist Society for Belize.

At a meeting at the Fort George Hotel on Sunday, November 9, they elected Mr. Santiago Perdomo, former Minister of Trade and Industry in the government, to head the new organization.

The meeting elected Mr. Ismael Gomez, Managing Director of Ismael Gomez Company Limited, to the office of Vice Chairman and Mr. Santiago Gomez, also a Director of Ismael Gomez Company Limited, to the office of Secretary-Treasurer.

The meeting also elected four councillors, who with the officers will constitute the Executive Committee. These men are Mr. Eddie Nisbet of the Company of Belize Supply Limited, Mr. Ian Trumbach of Bowen & Bowen Limited, Mr. Karl Menzies of Karl.H. Menzies Limited and Mr. Wilhelm Arnold of the Arnold Construction Company.

Earlier, at the start of the meeting Mr. Santiago Perdomo addressed the businessmen, outlining the objectives of the Anti-Communist Society and explaining why such an organization is necessary in Belize at this time.

If the new Society will educate the people of Belize about the true nature of Communism and of the dangers arising therefrom, it is needed, Mr. Perdomo said. If it will help to develop a Social Conscience among the business community, it is needed. If it helps to maintain friendly relations with similar bodies, and if it promotes the principles of democracy in Belize, it is needed. And if it provides a forum where people of different political persuasions can meet and discuss matters of mutual concern, it is needed, Mr. Perdomo said.

Perdomo was forceful in declaring that the new Anti-Communist Society had nothing to do with party politics. "I am a member of the People's United Party," he declared, "and I will vote for the PUP nine in the December elections. I know that some of you out there will vote for the other party. But while we have our political differences, we are all united in our opposition to Communism, and we can create a forum for fruitful discussion," he said.

The Anti-Communist Society of Belize has outlined two other principles which it will promote where consistent with its objectives. The first is an early solution of the Guatemalan dispute, and the second is the attainment by Belize of her independence.

The Anti-Communist Society is open to all - students, housewives, tradesmen, professional people, merchants, manufacturers and others. The yearly membership fee is $10.00 per person. Companies and organizations may also join the Society as Associate Members for an annual fee of $50.00 a year.

[Text] Formation of the Belize Anti Communist Society a week ago is one of the most dramatic indicators that times are changing in Belize, and though the movement is still looked upon with suspicion from some quarters, it may prove to be the first purposeful stirrings of the sleeping giant.

We have only to look beyond our immediate frontiers to see that Communism and Communist-inspired violence are all around us. There is also firm ground for knowing that the seeds of Communism planted in Belize have fertilized and begun to put down root.

We know that the General Workers Union leadership in Belize and Orange Walk have been accepting "presents" from the Soviet Union, and in recent years has been sending their top men off to Soviet Bloc countries for training. Our Ministers of Government have been visiting also. Mr. Rogers has been to Moscow and to Czeckoslovakia, though neither of these countries has supported Belize at the United Nations. The Premier, Mr. Price has been to Cuba many times and he has sent others - Ministers of Government and a contingent of artists.

Last year for the first time the government of the People's United Party formally adopted Socialism as a way of life for Belize, and while the difference between some forms of Socialism and Communism is clearly recognizable, in other forms of Socialism it is not.

The new Anti Communist Society has announced that it has four principal aims:

1. To educate people in Belize about the true nature of Communism.
2. To develop a Social Conscience
3. To establish friendly relations with similar bodies at home and abroad
4. To promote the principles of democracy in Belize.

One of the most pressing needs at the moment is a gathering of information pin-pointing the rate of Communist infiltration in Belize. This information in documented form can be used with great effectiveness to convince the skeptics. Other important work will involve the exchange of views to find out how other countries, and in particular, how Jamaica has sought to counter the Communist influence.

The existence of an Anti Communist Society in Belize should bring comfort to many. But comfort is not enough. Belize needs men and women of dedication and courage who will work and fight to keep our country free from bad influences.

We hope in time to see branches of the Anti Communist Society in every district town and in all the larger villages of Belize. For Communism will triumph anywhere if good men and women sit by and do nothing.

COMMENTATOR DECRIES BUDGET PRIORITIES--Today's commentary will be perhaps the shortest, the most objective and aggressive one I have made in recent times. The newspaper O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO yesterday carried two frontpage articles: the first one states that the government will invest 63 billion cruzeiros in the nuclear program in 1981, that is, to carry on the Angra 2 Nuclear Plant, to begin construction of Angra 3 and to import part of the equipment needed; the second article quotes the agriculture minister who said that the government will spend 68 billion between 1981 and 1985--that is, in 5 years--to meet domestic food needs, that is, to feed the people, to produce alcohol and to cover larger imports of food. We may thus draw the following conclusion: in building two nuclear plants we will be spending in one year as much as we will spend (?in 5 years) to feed the Brazilian people, to develop agriculture, to produce alcohol and to cover larger imports of food. This, gentlemen, is what we may call the perfect, magnificent planning of a scale of priorities: 63 billion cruzeiros earmarked for nuclear projects for one year, and 68 billion cruzeiros earmarked for feeding the people for 5 years. UNIVERSITY TEACHERS CONTINUE STRIKES--Florianopolis—At the same time that the 1,600 teachers of the Santa Catarina Federal University decided to carry on with their strike for an undefined period of time, the teachers of 105 first and second grade schools of the state system have begun a stoppage in several cities until Friday. They want an emergency salary increase of 70 percent in their monthly salaries. The stoppage began in Blumenau with a teachers march yesterday, according to the teachers association, and more than 50 percent of the system's 24,000 teachers joined the stoppage. The stoppage has obtained better results in Florianopolis, Blumenau, Joinville and Lages. In the smaller cities only 10 to 20 percent of the teachers joined the stoppage and in the west there was no information as of yesterday afternoon.--Maringa, Parana State—the Teachers of Maringa State University are continuing their strike (second day) because the Parana government has resorted to the labor court regarding the decision of the Maringa reconcilation board granting semiannual readjustments to those contracted by the CLT [expansion unknown]. Rector Neumar Godoy has said he will not pressure the 500 teachers and 600 employees to return to their jobs. The town council has created a committee that will ask Governor Ney Braga for a favorable solution to the teachers' problem. [PY231650 Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 19 Nov 80 p 8]

RIO GRANDE DO SUL STRIKE LIFTED--The teachers of Rio Grande do Sul State have accepted the government's proposal granting them an emergency bonus of 20 percent in December and a 20-percent salary raise in advance of the yearly salary increase [anticipacao] in January, and they have lifted the 18-day strike which involved 90 percent of the state's 100,000 teachers. In Brasilia, Education Minister Eduardo Portella talked with President Figueiredo about sending to congress the draft regarding the reorganization of the teaching career, which is one of the main demands of the federal university teachers that are on strike in 11 universities in 9 states. Advisers have said that the minister left the Planalto Palace "very optimistic." [PY242144 Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 19 Nov 80 p 1]

SANTA CATARINA STEELWORKERS STRIKE--Seven thousand construction workers at the Tubarao steel plant in Santa Catarina State have gone on a general strike in demand of safer working conditions and better salaries. The president of the civil construction workers, (Gerson Diniz), said that the salaries being paid are lower than those stipulated in the agreement signed between the labor union and the contracting companies. NOT INTERESTED IN OAS POSTS--Brasilia--Brazil is not interested in occupying the presidency of the OAS political committee, the Brazilian political spokesman, Bernardo Pericas, said yesterday when explaining the fact that Ambassador Alarico da Silveira the chief Brazilian representative to the organization, has refused the appointment. Other Brazilian diplomats have said that Brazil is not interested in occupying important posts within the OAS structure because it ends up as the victim of erroneous interpretations, even when it supports other countries for the posts. According to the diplomats, Brazil's political policies "provoke envy" in smaller countries. Brazil's concern not to seek posts in OAS management, any organization linked to it, or in any other regional organization stems from the above facts. Brazil's rule is that of only accepting the post when approval is unanimous or if many countries are very insistent. [Text] [PY221349 Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 19 Nov 80 p 13]

TERRORIST SUSPECTS ARRESTED--Recife, Pernambuco--The arrest of three youngsters as presumed car thieves on 15 November in Joao Pessoa, state of Paraiba, fortuitously led the federal police to uncover a group who might be responsible for several acts of terrorism in Fortaleza, state of Cera, including the explosion of a bomb in Ferreira Plaza on 5 November. The three youngsters, who were trying to break into a car near the Independencia Plaza of Joao Pessoa, State of Paraiba, early in the morning of 15 November, were arrested by the local police. Another man was later arrested in Fortaleza. Since the police found out that the car was owned by one of the arrested and two machineguns, a grenade and dynamite bombs were found inside the car, the Joao Pessoa police turned the case over to the federal police which is now conducting secret investigations although it reported the arrests to the Seventh District Military Court in Recife. U.S. MAGAZINE REPORT OF COUP DENIED BY GOVERNMENT

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 3 Nov 80 p 16-F

[Text] The government of Costa Rica has discussed a magazine report which has appeared in several of the communications media, which claims that a coup is rumored in Costa Rica.

In a statement delivered to the Colombian press, the embassy of Costa Rica denies a number of the points made in the article, which originally appeared in U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT.

Following is the text of the letter sent by the Costa Rican embassy:

Central American diplomatic sources at the United Nations feel that an article published by U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT, stating that a coup d'etat is possible in Costa Rica, entails "a serious mistake in perception."

The U.S. publication says that the country is living beyond its means, with imports of luxury items which are causing a deficit of over $600 million a year, and that the social welfare system is very expensive.

It also maintains that the Civil Guard is poorly armed and cannot even control the entire national territory.

The diplomats commented that while there may be economic problems, the magazine has forgotten Costa Rica's democratic tradition. They added that "if we consider isolated facts in a similar way, we could say that the great deficit in the balance of trade threatens to produce a coup d'etat in the United States."

In San Jose, the vice minister of foreign relations, Mario Fernandez, said that "we have to laugh at this information," and that the Costa Ricans "do not need a coup d'etat to solve their problems."

The magazine also says that in El Salvador, after the reforms imposed by the military junta, there is a slight possibility of moving toward democracy, despite the climate of violence.

It also criticizes Guatemala, saying that the government repression is inducing the Indians to join in the leftist subversion, but that the moderates believe that there is still time to save the country. Nonetheless, it indicates that the climate of uncertainty is causing foreign companies with investments there to leave. On the subject of Honduras, it states that the army is making a series of reforms in order to avoid the violence that is shaking the neighboring countries. It also says that the Constituent Assembly now in office was freely elected and that the army is planning to return to its own sphere of activities when a president is elected.

Commentary

1. This article in the U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT is not the first attack on Costa Rica.

2. Since the fall of Somoza, expensive propaganda campaigns financed by Somozist money have been conducted abroad in order to slander Costa Rica. There have been people, magazines, and newspapers which have worked for these evil causes. Costa Rica has borne these attacks with dignity, sure of its institutions and of its traditions of peace and attachment to the rule of law.

3. No one is thinking about planning a coup d'etat in Costa Rica. The country is suffering, as all nations of the world are, some economic and social problems, caused primarily by external sources. But the country is facing this historic situation with pride and acting through legal means.

4. Naturally, extremists of all sorts would be happy if Costa Rica were to collapse. As they can not put their evil designs into practice, they invent these lies in order to undermine the well earned prestige of the nation among the world's democracies.

5. Central America is now a convulsed area. From a distance the proper geographic and political borders are not perceived clearly. This lack of discernment and perception has led some people to make rash judgments, which only reveal bad faith or ignorance of the Central American political situation.

6. In recent decades a serious public disease has appeared--a longing for negative news. Little attention is paid to the struggle waged by a small country to preserve and enrich its democracy, while a false report appearing in a U.S. magazine, slanted against a democratic country, is given greater attention by some people than that nation's positive achievements. This pathological journalism may be the cause of the birth and flare-up of violence or the end of democratic institutions. If only negative aspects are considered, and positive achievements are ignored, people come to lack confidence in themselves and in their fellow human beings.

PDC REPRESENTATIVE DISCUSSES PROBLEMS OF UNITY COALITION

San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 9

[Interview with Dr Andres Jenkins Dobles, a representative of the Christian Democratic Party (PDC) in Congress, by Wilmer Murillo in the column "Political Wednesdays in the Republic"; date and place not given]

[Text] The legal status of the Popular Unity Party (PUP), which because it is a sort of controlled party enjoys less independence in the Unity coalition, seems destined to be a source of constant friction in it.

Failure has so far marked all of the efforts to arrange the procedures for returning the party to its former status and to end the battle among the various factions of the coalition by getting the members of other parties that today make up its national assembly to resign.

Recently, Rodrigo Madrigal managed to have his request for registration as a candidate for nomination rejected by tieing it to guarantees from the convention tribunal that the decision voiced by Unity electors at the convention would be carried out.

He recalled that on 6 February 1978 the coalition parties signed a pact whereby the existence of the Unity coalition was extended until the 1982 elections. They agreed that all candidacies for elected posts would be designated and registered by the PUP. "But this party has ceased to be a neutral faction without partisan commitments, which is essential for it to faithfully reflect the will of the voters at the convention," he said.

Speaking this week to LA REPUBLICA readers is Dr Andres Jenkins Dobles, a Christian Democratic representative in Congress and an ally of presidential hopeful Rafael Angel Calderon. He feels that the PUP case is unimportant unless Madrigal tries to seek the party's nomination.

Dr Jenkins discusses this and other current events issues in the following interview.

[Question] Many people think that Unity, weakened as it is now as a coalition, has not been able to introduce in-depth changes in the country's economic, political and administrative structures. Is this because its capacity for dialog is very small?

[Answer] Unity unquestionably has a quite different ideological orientation than the PLN [National Liberation Party]. If, in fact, these changes, which were necessary, have not been carried out, it is because our system is slow and cumbersome, aside from the fact that every government represents continuity. You cannot break with these kinds of structures overnight. An example is the case of CODESA [Development Corporation, Inc] investments. We cannot forget about them, simply because there are enterprises, such as Alunasa, that represent more than 500 million colones in investments that have already been made. Another Unity government is essential to bring about the changes that the country needs.

[Question] Unity has been jolted by recent developments, such as the resignation of two candidates for nomination as a protest against procedures that they branded amoral and illegal. Does this mean that the honeymoon of the coalition parties is about to end?

[Answer] The strength of the Unity Party lies with its rank-and-file. They demand that it act as a single movement vis-a-vis the next elections. The problems that have cropped up are personal and will not have an impact inside Unity's real structure.

[Question] With regard to certain domestic ethical problems, such as reports of corruption and improper procedures by public officials or private organizations, do you think that the Congress has sidestepped these problems or come up with constructive solutions for them?

[Answer] The current Legislative Assembly has without doubt been much more sincere and honest than others. The ad hoc committees have been set up impartially, with factions opposed to the government given a chance to do in-depth investigating. We should recall at this point how the investigating committees used to be set up; they always favored the interests of the majority faction, which in those days was the PLN.

[Question] PDC congressional action has not been very effective, in the judgment of political observers. Is this inaction ascribed to the PDC the result of its inability to set up a structure that could be seen as an innovative political force capable of interpreting grass roots desires?

[Answer] I have to admit that there is quite a bit of truth to this. Our efforts to consolidate a true Social Christian movement in the country have been based on the ideological training that we have given to more than 5,000 Unity Party members at a political education institute that we have organized. But our legislative activities have been uncoordinated, partly because we have been working under pressure. Most of the bills have been voted on as packages, and there have not been orderly legislative efforts to reflect the leanings of each particular group. We PDC deputies have been caught up in a trend of legislative pragmatism, and because of it we, the three PDC deputies, have not undertaken efforts that would really lead to a Social Christian movement.

[Question] You have given all your support to one candidate for nomination, without even voicing an opinion on the reports of internal corruption relating to the Unity convention process. To what point are you willing to carry your alliance within Unity in order to be a political option?

[Answer] The PDC has lent its firm support to Calderon's candidacy because the grass roots support that he currently has is in keeping with the PDC's desires for the people. Moreover, this movement is carrying on the tradition of the Social Christian gains that the country made in the 1940's. We think that we can work towards true Social Christianism within Unity by supporting Calderon. His very youth makes it possible for the country to find the Social Christian path that it has needed to take for years. I think that the Unity convention is being conducted very much above-board, and I can see no reprehensible development from a moral standpoint.

[Question] By lending its support to Calderon, has the PDC asserted its right to run its own candidate? Will you fight to the end for your candidate or just to keep elected posts? And if the coalition breaks up because of internal struggles, don't you think that there are very few factions that the PDC will be able to impose its ideology on?

[Answer] I don't think so at all. I think that the convention will be between Calderon and Rodolfo Mendez. They will divide up 99 percent of the votes in Unity. Any splinter group candidate will be going it alone. It has already happened with factions such as Unification, the National Independent group and others. Together they did not even get two percent of the vote. That's how it will be this time. Politics has changed. Back room manuevers are really not allowed. That is why the PLN stages a convention, and we stage ours. Candidates cannot be selected in a smoke-filled room, and parties that resentful leaders try to set up have no chance. The Unity convention is a milestone for the party. The confrontation will be the traditional one, with the PLN.

[Answer] It would have been better for Rodrigo to participate in the convention. But he simply submitted his application, knowing in advance that they would have to reject it. He was asking for conditions that the tribunal was not in a position to guarantee.

[Question] Do you think that the withdrawal of Hine and Madrigal Nieto have made Calderon the sole Unity candidate? Or do you think that Mendez could win the nomination from Calderon Fournier?

[Answer] Mendez undoubtedly has quite a few followers. I think that Calderon will most likely win the nomination. But it will not be an easy fight. It is not just a race. Calderon will undoubtedly have to do quite a bit of work if he wants to beat Mendez. I think that it will be a democratic and very close competition.

[Question] Don't you think that under the current circumstances Unity would be doing a good thing to forgo the convention process and the many millions it will cost?

[Answer] I don't think so. The convention should be held. The country demands it. The PLN staged one, and Unity ought to do likewise. Any other path would be undemocratic. It's true that it costs money, but politics is costing more and more in any case. It is a price that we have to pay in democracies.

[Question] The Calderon backers are said to control the PUP and to have kept aside a voting list for themselves with an advantage over the other factions. Do you regard this as something reprehensible?

[Answer] This voting list business is a ridiculous argument. Fifty signatures per canton were required, which are extraordinarily easy to get. Any candidate with the slightest chance to win the nomination could get them with or without a voting list. It did not used to be important; now it is. It is vital for the campaign, to seek out party members and get them to the polls. But to come up with 50 backers, it's not even a good pretext. With regard to the PUP, I am unaware of how the various parties are represented at its assembly. But I do not see why it should be important at the convention. Rodolfo Mendez doesn't even represent a party and, nevertheless, he is a strong Unity candidate. I don't see how it relates to Rodrigo Madrigal having put it forth as a condition. There will be time to reelect its assembly. I don't think that Madrigal could be the PUP candidate. We really hope that good sense prevails among all of the people from the many Unity factions that have had their differences. It is important for all forces opposed to Luis Alberto Monge to work together to shape a new administration with Social Christian leanings that can bring about the socioeconomic transformation that the country urgently needs. In all honesty, I feel that the PLN and its Social Democratic ideology have nothing to offer. All of the good that the PLN can do it did many years ago, and over the last few administrations it led the country along improper paths that, to be very frank, we have not yet gotten off, far from it.

[Question] Do you see any possibility that a faction of the coalition will break off? Do you think that politicians that have so far been part of the coalition might form a bloc around Echandi?

[Answer] I see no real possibility in that connection. Men of the standing and with the potential of Madrigal, Hine and other highly esteemed figures will realize that if there is something that the people are demanding, it is loyalty to movements. Any action that might weaken Unity and help the PLN would be unpardonable in the eyes of the voters. On account of their worth as individuals, I do not think that the people we have been talking about will make this mistake. To put it simply, they would be committing political suicide.

[Question] Well, how do you think all this affects the makeup of the Unity coalition? Do you think that the agreement guaranteeing the election of Cristian Tattembach as president of the Legislative Assembly will be complied with on 1 May?

[Answer] The deputies have been very loyal and friendly in their personal relations. You journalists must have taken note of the respect that we have for each other. It is even greater than the respect that the PLN deputies have shown for each other, inasmuch as they removed Mr Armando Arauz as head of the group and forced Dr Carlos M. Castillo to resign. Nothing like that has happened in Unity, and I think that what was agreed upon will be complied with. I do think, however, that legislative efforts have not been as consistent and systematic as they should have been. As the election campaign draws near, I think that they will be increasingly inefficient. I don't think that the legislative group has a chance to improve in this regard. Things will get worse in this important area.

ANNIVERSARY OF CHE GUEVARA'S DEATH REMEMBERED

[Front Page Editorial: "Onward to Victory Forever"]

[Text] In the Yuro Ravine, a spot of Bolivian geography that was unknown until 8 October 1967, Maj Ernesto Che Guevara fought his last battle for the dispossessed of the earth and the freedom of our America.

The Yuro Ravine has been a historic spot on the continent ever since.

In a tiny school in Higueras, a few kilometers from the ravine, the wounded man was murdered. Contrary to what the executioners of the Heroic Warrior thought, the crime conferred upon his thoughts, his ideas, and his example the structure of granite.

That is what always happens at the death of men whose essential vocation of personal sacrifice and performance of duty leads them to ideas, places and actions that become a permanent part of the people's life and memory.

That is what happened with the death of the Heroic Warrior who fearlessly and unhesitatingly faced the demands of history and for whom life was not just mere physical adventure, but also awareness of man's destiny and total dedication to the struggle for freedom, happiness, and the dignity of men.

In that sense, the physical death of Che was a leap toward glory, a path toward the immortality of his thoughts and his example, and a victory, and his coffin "a triumphal carriage."

The Latin American peoples have been more restless since 8 October 1967, and every homeless Indian, every illiterate on the continent, every child without a school, every worker without a job, every peasant without land, every exploited Latin American and every humble man is potentially and essentially a revolutionary.

In his field diary, the geographic names in the Bolivian mountains and valleys suggest the will, the courage, the human dimension of the Heroic Warrior, and in all his political literature--and his diary is also political literature--he rises above human pettinesses, common weaknesses, human adversities, and his own life.

Che is not only the guerrilla leader of our glorious Rebel Army, he is not only the man absorbed in building our Fatherland economically and socially, he is not only the organizer of a small internationalist army; he is, above all, the man that squares with the ethereal and the real of the contemporary world, the man who believes firmly in the extraordinary power of example, action, and principles, the author of a universal message of optimism and confidence, and the man who thought, like Marti, that "while there is a cave, there is not a right to the sun."

Speaking of him, our commander in chief, Fidel Castro, said, "He thought, did, and wrote many things. And there is something that should be said on such a day, and that is that Che's writings, his political and revolutionary thought, will always be valuable in the Cuban revolutionary process and in the revolutionary process in Latin America. We have no doubt that the worth of his ideas, his ideas as a man of action, as a man of thought, as a man of tested moral virtues, invincible human sensitivity, a man of blameless conduct, have and will have universal value."

Thirteen years after his death, his ideas about the problems of the underdeveloped world retain that universal value, and no one doubts that "the struggle against imperialism cannot be separated from the struggle against backwardness and poverty."

The legacy he left us works as a driving force in building socialism, in the spirit of optimism, work and duty. And he taught us that a Marxist-Leninist should be the best, the wisest, the most complete of human beings, but always, above all, a human being; he told us that the new society we are building must face stiff competition with the past; he showed us that communism is a goal of mankind which must be conscientiously reached.

To imitate him, to be like him, is the greatest homage we can pay to a man who considered himself a soldier in the army of the proletariat.

Therefore let us imitate his will, his resolution, his confidence in the future, his faith in man, his human qualities and his virtues, and let us say for the 13th time, "Onward to Victory Forever!"

JUNTA 'REPRESSION' IN EL SALVADOR SCORED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 16 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by Orestes Valera]

[Text] Seven thousand people dead, over 20,000 injured, several hundred "missing" (who later appear with marks of torture on their lifeless bodies), the bombing of rural areas with napalm and toxic substances, homes burned, crops and fields destroyed, women raped, children murdered, "strategic hamlets" (the Salvadorean fruit of the inhuman Yankee experiences in Vietnam), forced recruitment of peasants into the armed forces, the refusal of farm workers to cultivate the land, the exodus of peasants to the cities and abroad, mass closings of factories and other centers of work, bankruptcies of small businesses and industries, increased unemployment, the flight of capital, the theft of foreign currency, the reduction of reserves by at least 44 million colones, the astronomical level of inflation, the perceptible drop in the people's purchasing power, the more than 1.5 million Salvadoreans living on wages of between $.56 and $2.80 a day--this is the cumulative balance of the Christian Democrat-military junta in El Salvador since it took over the government 15 October 1979 after the fall of the military regime of Gen Carlos Humberto Romero.

Besides the military failure of those who conducted the coup, which is expressed in the insane genocide committed against the people, there is also the political and economic ineptitude of the military men and their disciples, the Christian Democrats, which has plunged the country into intolerable chaos which cannot be normalized.

The military-Christian Democrat junta's military, political and economic failures have led, with the support of Yankee imperialism--mainly Israel and Venezuela--to a mad, blood-drenched course of annihilation of the popular and revolutionary forces--which are grouped today in the Farabundo Marti Front for National Liberation--in an attempt to physically eliminate the people as a way to "pacify" the country, a goal it has not achieved and which brought about the overthrow of the previous military regime on 15 October 1979.

When they took power, the murdering military men, following Washington's orders, promised a program of reforms to benefit the dispossessed, end repression, investigate human rights violations, and form a government with participation by all forces including the left.

The coup leaders kept none of their promises.

Rightly Jose A. Morales Carbonell, revolutionary member of the Farabundo Marti Popular Liberation Forces, wrote to his father, Jose A. Morales Erlich, a member of the Salvadorean genocidal junta, "There is no longer any honest man in the world who believes that the slightest sentiment of human compassion can come from the bloody bowels of the sinister imperialist monster."

Together with the brutal genocide carried out by the Salvadorean military, the terrible starvation, and the frightful misery suffered by this country of 5 million people, the cynicism and shamelessness of these murderers goes to incredible lengths.

Now, in yet another deception, they are saying they will call a plebiscite and then an election, at the same time the Salvadorean Association of Industry Owners and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of El Salvador are confessing that "the economic picture is bleaker every day."

And it will go on that way while the murderers in the armed forces, in a shameless alliance with the exploiters, try to impose starvation, misery, and death upon the Salvadorean people.

As the genocidal military-Christian Democrat junta ends 1 year in power, the people have become stronger, more combative and more revolutionary in their daily struggle against the coup leaders and their foreign supporters.

WORK BY INTERNATIONALISTS IN NICARAGUA NOTED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 16 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Juana Berges]

[Text] The work our internationalist teachers are doing in Nicaragua is not only worthy of the principles that nourish revolutionary ideology, but also serve as a school in which character and will are shaped, and in which the feelings of love for mankind that characterize the revolutionary are developed.

Far from their families and fatherland, the Cuban teachers have found the disastrous legacy of exploitation and imperialist pillage in recently-liberated Nicaragua. Young Niurka Martin Santamaria has seen and experienced exactly that while working in Chontales department, in a district called El Arado where there has been no school for the children for 17 years.

Niurka explains that when she arrived in El Arado, she told that community that it would be necessary to begin education from the very bottom.

"The peasants and the Sandinist Defense Committees there took the job of building benches, chairs, and blackboards, and we started teaching the children to read and write under the trees.

"When I arrived in the area everything was shocking: the hunger, the unhealthfulness, the parasites, the lack of communication with the outside world, and in contrast to that, the desire to help the victims of Somozism, and the joy on the faces of children and their parents when they found that the revolution has opened a whole different world to them."

The Cuban teachers' contribution to the education effort promoted by the National Reconstruction Government of Nicaragua has been really important. They have created 706 new schools, over 170 school gardens, 137 interest groups, and at the same time they are helping with sanitation efforts.

"Since my arrival in the town," says Niurka, "my name has been changed to Teacher. I live in the home of a very revolutionary peasant whose greatest wish is for his nine children to learn.

"I also had very useful contacts there with brigade members taking part in the National Literacy Crusade. I remember how interested the youths were to learn about Cuba, its revolution, and Fidel."

During the graduation ceremony for the Second and Fourth Contingents of the Manuel Ascunce Domenech Teaching Detachment, which was summed up by commander in chief Fidel Castro last 11 July, the young teacher gave the greeting for all her comrades who are doing a beautiful job in the field of education and who, after a short vacation in Cuba, will hasten back, stanch, proud, and happy, to their second year of work in the neighboring Central American country.

"The Nicaraguan peasant is simple and noble," said Niurka. "He is used to doing everything possible with what nature has to offer to manufacture his household utensils and his home.

"The rural population suffered terribly under Somoza's tyranny. We found barefoot children suffering from malnutrition because of the chronic lack of food. Families were decimated by the repression and housed in hovels, often without any walls.

"Our work is also directed against those living conditions, and we have made substantial changes. The peasants have confidence in the work the Sandinist authorities are doing for the people, and they are determined to defend their revolution at all costs, because they see in it the security and welfare of which they were deprived until now."

Nevertheless, their stay in Nicaragua has also been an experience for Niurka and her comrades that has reaffirmed their revolutionary beliefs.

"We knew about imperialist exploitation and its evil results, but there we could see and live them every day. Sometimes you want to cry, but then the first shock is turned into a will to make changes and a deep hatred of those who caused so much sorrow. That is the lesson we have learned in the land of Sandino and Carlos Fonseca."

CURRENT INTERNATIONAL ISSUES COMMENTED ON

UK, Caribbean

Havana PRISMA LATINOAMERICANO in Spanish Oct 80 p 2

[Commentary by Jorge Timossi]

[Text] It seems that the most extreme thing that can happen to an English lord is loss of his phlegm, his reserve. That is because when this occurs he is convulsed by outbursts which violate the most basic standards of diplomatic protocol. This is what happened to Lord Peter Alexander Rupert Carrington, a gentleman of noble lineage and foreign secretary for the disheveled British lion, during his tumultuous visit to Venezuela. There, in the comfortable salons of the Hilton hotel in Caracas, after conferring with his colleague Jose Alberto Zambrano Velasco--a disciple of former foreign minister Calvani--he spewed forth the statement that "Cuba is a destabilizing element in the Caribbean."

This shameless lord, representative of a colonial power that for centuries was considered an example of oppression, can be characterized basically as follows: He is attempting to make people forget that Great Britain's colonial and neocolonial possessions in Latin America, not to mention those in Africa, constitute a genuine destabilizing and inflammatory element in the region. He is joining the United States in the economic and hegemonic yearnings aroused in these countries by the tense situation in the Caribbean and Central America; and he is trying to hearten the Venezuelan Government in the situations it created by supporting the Christian Democratic military junta in El Salvador. This is an additional instance of interference, if one considers the wave of disputes generated by this position within the very core of the Venezuelan Government and the growing opposition to the administration.

We know, too, that even disheveled lions always have tails. The month of August witnessed a true British diplomatic offensive in this hemisphere. Lord Carrington also visited Brazil, Mexico and Barbados, and in the last-named country he said, "destabilizingly": "If you want our help in the development of your police, or help with boats or technical assistance of any sort, we are prepared to furnish it." British military assistance to Barbados is already considerable, totaling $10 million, invested in coastguard services and what has been called "protection of fishing."

Other lords, and some who are not so aristocratic, traveled different Latin-American roads like lions showing their tails:

Trade secretary Cecil Parkinson visited Argentina, a country with which the Crown has long maintained a major dispute over the Falkland Islands, which are Argentine but have been in Great Britain's possession since 1833. They apparently are floating on a lake of petroleum that the lion wants, although it would entail scratching.

Lord Montgomery, president of the firm The Antofagasta and Bolivian Railway, was jubilantly received by the Pinochet regime, the government of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher having happily normalized, in March, diplomatic ties with the Chilean fascist junta and having broken the embargo on arms sales in effect since 1974.

In addition, Guatemala was visited by the secretary of state for foreign affairs, Nicholas Riddley. In this instance, the negotiations were quite something, basically dealing with British Honduras, a 25,000-square-kilometer territory which has been a British possession for over a century and which Guatemala also claims. Riddley termed these 48-hour talks absolutely confidential. This was perhaps so that the people of British Honduras would not find out what was said. In their last election they voted overwhelmingly for the United People's Party, led by Prime Minister George Price, which is calling for full independence and territorial integrity.

These talks have antecedents that are not so "confidential": This same year Riddley visited first the United States and then British Honduras, primarily to pressure the latter into making concessions to Guatemala. Later, in Bermuda, there was a meeting between delegations from Britain and Guatemala--initially an effort was made to exclude the one from British Honduras--in which "unconsecrated" formulas for that country's independence were examined.

And the British Government calls all this activity "stabilizing" the region. Lions and lords: We see their tails; for by the light in this jungle we can clearly observe the movement of the British tail in the American policy of increasing the activity of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in the Caribbean region.

In connection with that there have already been the "Readex 80" war games--involving amphibious vehicles, air and sea craft and antisubmarine exercises--carried out in this area in July with units and troops from the United States, Great Britain, Brazil and Venezuela. Regarding this, the publicly censured plans to create a military pact in the Caribbean involving the Gracious Crown seem to be progressing. This was probably one of the points discussed by Lord Peter Alexander Rupert Carrington and the Venezuelan president, Herrera Campins. As one can see, lords or lions, their tails show.

Moreover, Lord Peter Alexander Rupert Carrington: Don't the people of British Honduras, of Chile, of the British colonies and neo-colonies in the Caribbean, not to mention those in Africa, the Venezuelan people and those of El Salvador, have the complete right to assert that this new roar of the lion that lost its phlegm and is swishing its tail so vigorously is actually a destabilizing, disturbing element for this region of the hemisphere?

Iran, CIA

Havana PRISMA LATINOAMERICANO in Spanish Oct 80 p 21

[Commentary by Irma Caceres]

[Text] One year and a half after the fall of Reza Pahlavi's monarchy, the new Iran is reaffirming itself in the midst of external threats and complex internal realities. Many predictions were offered concerning how long it would take the Ayatollah Khomeyni to organize and begin guiding a country that had been directly controlled by the United States for the past 25 years.

To economic dependence (exploitation of its petroleum wealth) was added political dependence, seen in the activity of some 40,000 American military advisors and CIA agents, according to official figures, who made the shah's monarchy one of the bloodiest of our time and, in Washington's opinion, one of the most secure governments protecting what they call their "vital interests."

The United States could not resign itself to the loss of Iran, particularly after the blows incurred by U.S. policy in the southern cone of Africa, not to mention other, earlier, defeats.

With the political changes in Afghanistan occurring on top of the sharp setback of the loss of influence in Iran, Washington's fear, as well as its conspiratorial activity, increased.

From the outset, the United States added action to its threatening statements, and it has done everything possible, from the economic blockade to military operations, to destroy the Islamic revolution proclaimed by the Ayatollah Khomeini and his followers.

Despite the failures, such as the one in April, a new aggressive move is being planned now in the White House. They say it will take place this month.

Nobody can actually give the exact date, but what many experts do agree about is that it could happen before the presidential election next month.

A strike of this sort would please American militarist circles, who are interested in maintaining their influence and dominance.

Some political observers have suggested that this decision could be directed toward other regions, although the steps taken recently are an open threat to the entire Middle East.

A House of Representatives subcommittee, perhaps without intending to, revealed an indication of the consequences that could arise from U.S. activity in the Horn of Africa, with respect to the agreement to sell $40 million worth of arms to Somalia during 1980 and 1981.

In exchange, the United States will have the right to use the airbases and port facilities in Mogadishu and Berbera, regardless of the fact that they will have to spend some $11 million to recondition the installations for use by the American forces.

A glance at a map tells us that Washington has also concluded similar agreements with countries adjoining the Indian Ocean, the Persian Gulf and southern Asia, such as Oman, Kenya, Diego Garcia and Australia. The negotiations taking place with Egypt and Israel for use of a base on the Red Sea must also be added to this list.

With these installations, the United States attains the capability to conduct electronic espionage to insure the accuracy of blows struck by its strategic aircraft against predetermined political, economic and military targets.

Although it is a threat to the entire region, Iran, Afghanistan, Ethiopia and other progressive, nonalined countries have received the most serious threats from the U.S. Government.

Despite these threats and understandable internal difficulties, the antimonarchical and anti-imperialist Iranian revolution has been able to resolve differences and contradictions among the various groups and programs.

There have been difficult months of struggle to effect a genuine restructuring of the government and the Army, to institute democratic freedoms called for by progressive groups and to eliminate all the agreements imposed by the United States.

Selection of a premier and formation of the first cabinet for the new republic took the Iranian leaders a long time. This was because of external pressures, primarily from the Americans, associated with the refusal to turn the late former shah over to the Iranian authorities to be tried for his crimes, as well as their refusal to return the vast wealth stolen from Iran and transferred to U.S. banks and companies, among others.

The Ayatollah Khomeyni has said that the entire Iranian people--35 million citizens--will be a single man turned into a soldier if another American assault takes place.

The role played by Islam in the making of radical changes in Iran and in the overthrow of the monarchy cannot be forgotten.

The measures carried out nationally by the Iranian leaders for the good of the masses and the country's economy clearly appear to be an obstacle for American policy despite the fence erected around Iran through the use of bases, a familiar method employed by the United States against the socialist camp.

The Iranian leader, the Ayatollah Khomeyni, has repeatedly said that the government in Washington is carrying its aggressive plans to the utmost and resists accepting the anti-imperialist policy that is contrary to its interests, but it will only reaffirm his people's determination to adhere to that policy.

U. S., Latin America

Havana PRISMA LATINOAMERICANO in Spanish Oct 80 p 58

[Commentary by Jose Bodes Gomez]

[Text] For decades many Latin Americans believed that the investment of private foreign capital benefited their countries because it provided new jobs and contributed to development of the national economy. This view was fostered and encouraged by the investing firms themselves, their slogan for public relations purposes always having been, "We work for the country's advancement."

In Latin America, this type of investment was traditionally in the economy's primary sectors: agriculture and mining, as well as in public services: lighting and telephones, primarily. The names United Fruit, Electric Bond and Share, International Telegraph and Telephone and those of other firms became known to the Spanish-speaking public, although they often adopted names that suggested they were "domestic" firms.

However, the idyllic image of foreign investment began to deteriorate in the light of repeated conflicts that arose between those firms' interests and those of the country in which they were located. In agriculture, they became a bastion of large-scale landholding; in mining, they left us the holes caused by extraction and carried away the wealth; in public services, monopolistic practices and high rates led to major popular protests.

In view of this bitter experience, the opinion of this type of investment began to change, but there were still some who went along with it in the belief that it was a necessary evil. According to this theory, the underdeveloped countries lack the capability to exploit their wealth other than through the entry of foreign capital, which can be responsible for activities requiring advanced technology and vast sums of money. Of course, the country in question has to pay for the technology and never achieves possession of it. As for the money, we shall see what its fate is.

The United States has been and continues to be the country with the most extensive investment abroad. At the end of World War II its capital abroad totaled $16 billion. By 1979, this sum had reached $192.6 billion.

As its investments have grown, the activities of interest have been shifting from the primary sector to processing industries, while the traditional attraction of finance and insurance has remained. In Latin America, one third of the private American capital invested is now found in manufacturing firms, whereas mining's share has fallen to 5 percent.

Investors' interest in the industrial sector is not exactly due to a desire to hasten economic development in the region but rather to the benefits obtained. At the outset, they benefit from fiscal preferences granted by the governments to this type of investment, and thus they can import all the equipment and machinery, also fabricated in the United States, nearly exempt from customs duties. When the manufacturer attains the marketing stage, its products can be exported to neighboring countries under the favorable customs terms agreed upon for the region.

Brazil stands first among Latin-American countries with respect to the extent of U.S. investment. This fact corroborates the assertion that the multinational firms have chosen that country as their center of operations for further penetration of Latin-American markets. The Brazilian manufactures, largely produced with imported technology and foreign capital, enter the free trade zone that the Latin-American Integration Association is planning to develop, with preference given to goods manufactured by those same multinationals at their home plants in the United States, Western Europe or Japan.

It is significant that the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries have established a markedly different type of relationship with the Latin-American nations. In general, the governments belonging to the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance have signed cooperation agreements with some 90 developing countries; and over 3,000 works in Asia, Africa and Latin America have been constructed or are under construction through that aid.

U.S. Department of Commerce statistics indicate that country's investments in Latin America exceed $36 billion, one-fifth of private American capital placed abroad. This "preference" is abundantly justified, for the earnings obtained in our region account for over one-half of all their profits in the underdeveloped world.

Even the term "investments" is false and misleading, for it distorts reality. The current of capital does not predominantly flow from the United States to Latin America, but rather the net balance is just the opposite. Between 1966 and 1976, for each dollar entering private accounts in the United Stated as profits 75 cents went out for investment in Latin America. In round numbers, this was a withdrawal of capital amounting to $2.5 billion in 10 years from the countries that supposedly were benefited, as the Department of Commerce's own figures acknowledge.

Despite that, the World Bank's latest report insists on recommending that they grant increased facilities for private foreign investment as a means of attracting capital and developing the economies of the so-called Third World. This means that the multinationals are not satisfied with their present earnings and are preparing for larger-scale operations. Or, stated more clearly: The people should be forewarned because the investors want to take more of their money.

VARIOUS REPORTS ON INTERNATIONAL ACTIVITIES

Iran-Iraq Resolution Attempt

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 29 Oct 80 p 1

[Message from Commander-in-Chief Fidel Castro, president of the Movement of Nonalined Countries, to the chiefs of state or government of those countries involved in the conflict between Iraq and Iran, sent from Havana on 26 October 1980, the year of the Second Congress]

[Text] Excellency:

I address you concerning the conflict that opposes two nonalined countries, Iraq and Iran, a sad event for all the chiefs of state of the movement and a dangerous source of confrontation that attacks the very interests of peace and international security and the economic and social development of our peoples.

As soon as we received the first news of the outbreak of hostilities, we instructed the Cuban minister of foreign relations, Comrade Isidore Malmierca, to contact both parties with the objective of contributing to the finding of a peaceful, political and honorable solution to the conflict.

Comrade Malmierca has visited Baghdad and Tehran on two occasions, conferring with Presidents Saddam Hussein and Abol Hasan Bani-Sadr and in this way, through the presence of a representative of the movement in the area, contributing our modest and binding effort to try to put an end to the conflict on a basis acceptable to the two countries.

The results of the discussions engaged in by Minister Malmierca have demonstrated to us the utility of continuing to negotiate with both governments.

We are firmly convinced that a solution to the war that today pits these two sister nations against one another must and can be found if we start with strict respect for the rules of international law, the principles governing peaceful relations between nations that can be found summarized in the successive declarations made by the summit conferences of our movement and most especially in the declaration made by the Sixth Conference of Chiefs of State or Government.

This is why we have sent Minister Malmierca to inform the Coordinating Bureau in New York and then he will again go to Baghdad and Tehran with personal messages for Presidents Saddam Hussein and Abol Hasan Bani-Sadr in the hope of being able to inform you as soon as possible as to any progress achieved.

I take advantage of this occasion to reiterate to you my most sincere respects,

Fidel Castro
President of the Movement of Nonalined Countries

POLISARIO Support at UN

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 29 Oct 80 p 6

[Article: "Cuba Reiterates Its Solidarity With and Support for the Saharan People's Independence"]

[Text] UN, 28 Oct (PL)—Cuba today reiterated its solidarity with and support for the just struggle for self-determination and independence which the Saharan people and their legitimate representative, the POLISARIO Front, have been conducting.

Speaking before the General Assembly's Decolonization Commission, Cuban delegate Miguel Alvarez Sanchez condemned the intransigence of the Moroccan Government, whose occupation of the former Spanish colony continues to interfere with the process of self-determination.

However, Alvarez pointed out that the armed conflict has resulted in important military victories for the Saharan people against the occupation forces.

He indicated that the POLISARIO Front exercises effective control over the territory that has been liberated and is carrying out the difficult and tough job of reconstruction with priority extended to health, food supply and education, domains that had fallen into arrears under colonial domination.

The Cuban delegation stressed the fact that 40 countries have already recognized the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic, support for which from the international community is constantly growing.

It reminded us that the Sixth Nonalined Countries Summit Conference in Havana expressed its profound concern over the grave situation that prevails due to the fact that decolonization of Western Sahara has not been carried out.

Alvarez denounced the alliance between Morocco and the racist regime of South Africa, which has afforded the former centers for training in the use of arms supplied to Rabat by the United States.

The Cuban diplomat said that, whatever resolution may be adopted this year, it ought to clearly state that Morocco's intransigence is interfering with a just and final solution to the Western Sahara situation.

He added that it must once again reaffirm the fact that the only possible solution to the conflict lies in the Saharan people's exercise of their inalienable rights to freedom of determination and independence.

NEED TO END WESTERN 'DOMINATION' OF NEWS MEDIA DISCUSSED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 25 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Roberto Alvarez Quinones: "The Decolonization of Information"]

[Text] In our world of today, just as the scientific and technical revolution has become a fundamental factor in economic, social and cultural development, information, manipulated by the West, without a doubt constitutes one of the essential components of the worldwide imperialist system of domination.

Classic colonialism has been buried, but the imperialist powers go on exploiting and manipulating the media for ideological and cultural penetration and colonization.

As a vital element of progress which can and should contribute to the advance of the underdeveloped world, information has historically been monopolized by a few centers of transnational power located in a few capitals of industrialized capitalist countries.

Reading his daily newspaper in the morning, a Latin American finds that in 8 cases out of 10 the news has absolutely no relation to the problems of Latin America. And he can verify the fact that 7 out of every 10 reports come from the American agencies, UPI and AP, the English agency, REUTER, and the French Press Agency (AFP). The same percentage of news reports that are provided for him on television at night emanate from the same sources.

In Asia and Africa, the same situation exists.

It is therefore no accident that the supposed news broadcast by the imperialist transnationals contains no information on the advances made by the peoples of the so-called Third-World countries in their struggles for freedom nor on the urgent economic problems they are facing. The materials that are broadcast are aimed at extolling the Western way of life.

It has been calculated that the volume of information sent from the West to the underdeveloped world, in which 3 billion people live, is 100 times greater than the stream of news moving in the opposite direction. So practically all the radio, press and television of Asia, Africa and Latin America are tied up with the imperialist news and propaganda services networks.

On a worldwide basis, we should note that the UPI, AP, AFP and REUTER control 90 percent of the processing of news throughout the entire nonsocialist world. Up to now, the nature, coloring, intentions and suitability of what the peoples of the underdeveloped nations "should read" have been decided on in these four monopolist centers.

The United States handles 75 percent of the international flow of television, 50 percent of the films and shares 90 percent of the television newscasters with England's VISNEWS-REUTER and the FRG's DPA-ETES throughout the Western world.

Television has become one of the main channels for the penetration of the bourgeois ideology into the nonsocialist world. The sale of its products abroad brings Yankee television companies hundreds of millions of dollars a year, even though at times they practically give them away. A 1-hour television film, which costs a half a million dollars to produce in Hollywood, may be sold to Egypt for from $400 to $450, to Lebanon for from $170 to $250 and to other countries for even less than $100. In the face of such prices, so cheap, local companies give up producing their own programs.

In Latin America over 60 percent of all television programs are imported, with 80 percent of them coming from the United States. There are countries, like Guatemala, which import up to 94 percent of their total television programming, all "made in USA." The ABC, NBC and CBS, all Yankee, dominate Latin-American television. In Central America most of the television channels are nothing but ABC subsidiaries.

Another field is records and cassettes which, according to expert Tapio Varis, already produce income higher than that of films.

Five gigantic U.S. English, German and Dutch corporations dominate this field.

From the comics to the news, the films and the lyrics of many pop songs, all these media introduce the decadent values of "Western culture" into the underdeveloped world and contribute to the molding of patterns of behavior and consumption that in no way correspond to the interests of the so-called Third World. They are the carriers of a harmful ideology that seeks to universalize bourgeois standards and the aberrant individualism that is typical of capitalist regimes.

The Western hero of a film or a television series is usually a man who is above science, the law and his society. His deeds are frequently directed against the nonwhite population of underdeveloped countries. Such a "hero" is designed to give rise to an inferiority complex among the peoples of underdeveloped nations in the face of this dazzling, "superior" model and to turn the model into an ideal for our modern youth.

The campaign against this colonization of information, the battle to break the age-old imperialist monopoly and establish a new international order of information has recently gained a lot of strength. The nations of Asia, Africa and Latin America ever more clearly maintain that a new international order of information is just as important as a new international economic order.

Significant steps have been taken in this direction within the Movement of Nonalined Countries (NOAL). In defining this campaign as something vital, as important as a new international economic order, the chiefs of state and government of the NOAL have already, in the political declaration issued during the Fifth Summit Conference, held in Colombo, Sri Lanka in 1976, expressed the fact that the establishment of a new international order of information "forms an integral part of the general struggle for the political, economic and social independence of a great majority of the peoples of the world, who cannot be denied the right to inform [others] and be objectively and correctly informed."

Worth mentioning among the steps taken by the NOAL in favor of the decolonization of information are the creation of the News Agencies Pool and organization of the Intergovernmental Council for Coordination of Information as well as the creation of the Radio and Television Coordinating Council and Telecommunications Experts Committee.

UNESCO has also thrown all its weight into the battle, for which it has been systematically attacked by the "big Western press," the transnational information monopolies and the governments of the United States and other imperialist powers.

Obviously, among the objectives the NOAL and UNESCO are pursuing is the prominent one of limiting manipulation of the current flow of information, which reflects in a distorted way the real life of the underdeveloped world through a glut of news items dealing with crises, violence and disasters or merely insignificant matters, whereas it presents a positive picture — quantitatively far superior — of the industrialized capitalist countries.

These past few years, UNESCO and NOAL have pursued a well-defined policy, tending to stimulate this process of adoption of measures and national information systems in order to in this way promote autonomous organizations which are not subordinated to the transnational agencies for the purpose of eliminating injustices, imbalances and inequities in that field of enterprise.

In short, as a strategic factor in the global struggle for political and economic independence, national liberation and social progress in our time, the struggle for a new international order of information is a faithful expression of the fact that progressive humanity refuses to go on being so grossly exploited and manipulated by the imperialist powers.

It is a symptom of the fact that times are changing and that the wheel of history is constantly rolling forward.

VARIOUS REPORTS ON RELATIONS WITH ALGERIA

Solidarity, Friendship Hailed

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 16 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] Algiers, 15 Oct (PL)--The solidarity and friendship between Algeria and Cuba was reasserted here during meetings held between the Cuban ambassador, Raul Barzaga Navas, and leaders of the Algerian government.

Barzaga Navas held meetings regarding bilateral relations and completing as soon as possible the 5-year plans between the two countries.

Barzaga and the Algerian minister of public works, Mohamed Kortebi, during a friendly meeting, discussed the agreements of the first session of the intergovernmental joint commission, held in Havana last May.

Barzaga spoke with the minister of mail services and telecommunications, Abdenour Bekka, about the status of bilateral relations as well as about the methods of continuing to promote the above on the foundation of the strong ties of friendship uniting Algeria and Cuba.

Barzaga also met with the secretary of state for foreign trade, Ali Oubouzar. Together they analyzed the prospects for expanding trade links between Algeria and Cuba.

The Cuban ambassador conveyed feelings of solidarity with and sympathy toward the people and the government of Algeria, because of the present situation throughout the martyr city of El Asnam, which was assaulted by an earthquake last 10 October.

The Algerian ministers of secretary of state expressed gratitude for the speed and efficiency of the Cuban revolution's help.

El Asnam Visit

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 16 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] El Asnam, Algeria, 15 Oct (PL)--The adviser of the Cuban Ministry of Public Health, Pedro Azcuy, today traveled through the main areas affected by the earthquake that destroyed 30 percent of El Asnam.

Azcuy was given an extensive explanation of sanitary inspection and attention to the wounded and injured that is being carried out in this region.

The 20-member team of Cuban specialists, who arrived in Mostaganem on Tuesday, are staying at the Ernesto Che Guevara provincial hospital as reinforcements for the Cuban medical team that regularly works there.

The Cuban doctors and health personnel have been outstanding in their attention to those injured in the earthquake, who have been transferred from El Asnam to Mostaganem.

Medical Aid Hailed

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 20 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by Lourdes Regato: "Praise Attitude and Efficiency of Cuban Doctors in Algeria Who Attended to the Injured in the El Asnam Earthquake"]

[Text] The director of the provincial hospital of Mostaganem, Bekada Abdelkader, praised the attitude and efficiency of the Cuban doctors, who speedily aided those wounded in the El Asnam earthquake.

Abdelkader told PRENSA LATINA that he considers exemplary the care offered to the injured in this hospital, which care has been emphasized by the national press and the authorities of the Algerian Ministry of Health.

The personnel of the Che Guevara provincial hospital in Mostaganem came forward spontaneously to work in order to give immediate attention to the patients affected by the earthquake on 10 October, said Abdelkader.

He explained that upon being informed of the earthquake, he started to organize the emergency services to aid the injured who began to flow in from 4 pm that day.

Abdelkader stated that in the early moments of the disaster he asked for and received from Cuban and Algerian medical personnel their cooperation for an indefinite time in order to insure systematic treatment for the injured.

The Cuban medical mission immediately placed itself in the emergency room and in other areas of the clinic, while a group of Cuban doctors headed for the site of the disaster, recounted Abdelkader.

He explained that theirs was a totally voluntary spirit.

The Cuban doctors who work here regularly and the reinforcement group of 20 specialists sent by Cuba under the direction of Pedro Azcuy are now performing a valuable task in various specialties, Abdelkader pointed out.

Abdelkader specified that until today the Mostaganem hospital held 156 injured and lent aid above all in the specialties of orthopedics and traumatology to the El Asnam victims.

Fifty-three patients were sent to the province of Oran, 12 were discharged, and 88 remain hospitalized, while during this time there were only three deaths due to insurmountable conditions, Abdelkader said.

He mentioned that in the room for isolation cases some cholera patients are being treated at this time.

The Mostaganem hospital's capacity is about 550 beds and has a total of 32 permanent Cuban doctors and 13 Algerians.

FARN DEFECTOR EXPRESSES DISILLUSIONMENT WITH GROUP

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 3

/Text/ The Office of the Commander of the Santiago de Maria National Guard Post reported today that yesterday afternoon Alberto Lopez Mejia, 14, turned himself in to the Command of that Security Corps in Berlin. He stated that he had deserted the Armed Forces of National Resistance (FARN) which are operating in the Montanita Linares District in San Agustin, Usulutan.

When he came to the Berlin Guard, it was reported, he had no weapons or documents to identify him, but an investigation revealed that the name he gave was his own, and he provided information about the existence of numerous FARN cells and other clandestine organizations in the rural area of San Agustin. He also told of places where there are arms and explosives caches to be used by the extremists in terrorist operations.

Lopez Mejia indicated to the Berlin Guard, it was reported, that 8 days earlier he had deserted from a FARN camp because he had heard on the radio the government's amnesty offer for those who put down their weapons and left the ranks of subversion. He reportedly stated "that he was completely disillusioned with the movement because it is only devoted to the destruction of workplaces, which is not what he was told by his recruiters." It was also revealed that he was recruited 4 months earlier, and after receiving weapons training he had been assigned to a cell of the Montanita Linares District in San Agustin. There, in the company of other organized individuals, he had participated in several operations and battles against the Armed Forces.

The youth told the Berlin Guard that he was also supposed to provide security for his comrades when they were investigating villages and engaging in extremist operations. He asked authorities to grant him the amnesty offered by the government. In return, he offered to provide all the information he has so that the guerrilla cells can be controlled.

NEW TEACHERS REQUIRED TO SERVE IN RURAL AREAS

[Text] All teachers graduating from the Alberto Masferrer Normal Training City and other similar institutions will be sent to the rural sector for at least 1 year as a basic condition for engaging in the teaching profession, Prof Roberto Serrano, personnel director at the Ministry of Education, said during a press conference.

The above, he added, will give those who have worked in the rural sector an opportunity to obtain jobs in the urban areas. He said that there is a current need for more than 1,000 teachers in the country. An effort will also be made, he emphasized, to see that teachers are not appointed to places distant from their place of origin or residence in order to avoid family difficulties.

Serrano also said that many teachers 70, 75 or 80 years of age, who do not want to retire, will be pensioned from the teaching profession, because at that age they cannot continue to serve with the same efficiency as before. They will be summoned to be informed of this ministerial decision, Serrano emphasized.

With regard to the unemployed teachers, the personnel director went on to say, almost all have now been absorbed except for those who did not want to accept the posts offered them, or who have resigned because of political considerations or governmental changes. Serrano added that at the end of this coming November, examinations will be given for those who desire posts as teaching supervisors, directors and assistant directors of government educational institutions.

He also stressed that steps will subsequently be taken to ensure that a given teacher does not hold the post of director in more than one school, because it has been demonstrated that those holding more than one such post neglect some of their work, and the only ones to suffer are the students.

In connection with life insurance for the families of the teachers who were assassinated, Serrano said that payment has been made on last year's cases, but this year's, for those who died this year, are still under study. He stated categorically that for the coming year there will be no wage increases except for teaching supervisors, who had no wage increase last year. He said that there are currently some 26,000 active teachers on all levels and that the post of director of the Normal Training City will be filled on the basis of prior examinations.

In conclusion he said that all of the teaching programs are being reviewed, as well as the complete educational reform system, because what is wanted is to eliminate foreign influence from such programs, since this reform was drafted on the basis of foreign plans. Therefore the technicians revising the plan are entirely Salvadoran and competent, he said.

He said, finally, that the entire teaching body will be informed of all the steps which will be taken, and which have been announced to the media today, by means of a circular which is being drafted.

As of today, it was not known what reaction will be expressed by the teachers graduating this year with regard to the "social year" they will have to serve in the rural sector before exercising their profession in an urban area, nor is it known what the opinion of the teachers who have not wanted to retire but have continued to work will be. "This will be learned in the coming days," a spokesman for the Ministry of Education said, making it clear that this is a decision made on the highest level which will have to be implemented by all.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC RELATIONS REPORTED DETERIORATING

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 30 Oct 80 p 32

[Text] "Unilateral government measures may destroy the Central American Common Market," spokesmen for the ASI [Industrial Sectors Association] said in a statement sent to our editors today. They went on to make the following statement:

"That Central American governments should not take unilateral steps because this would be destroying 'the little we have left of the Central American Common Market' is the opinion expressed by Salvadoran industrialists in commenting on restrictions on free trade in the area.

"The industrialists are speaking specifically of the recent measures adopted by Costa Rica which, in their view, 'seriously threaten the process of integration, which has already deteriorated considerably in recent years.'

"To justify the restrictions, Costa Rica argues a current account deficit in its balance of payments, inflation and rising oil prices, the inflation in the industrialized countries, the increase in foreign expenditures, strikes, etc.

"The opinion of Salvadoran industrialists on this particular is that all of these arguments are common to the other countries in the area, but they do not therefore justify the restrictions, since basically, what an effort is being made to resolve is a monetary problem to which a solution of a monetary type should be sought, rather than taking unilateral steps harmful to the Central American Common Market, and failing to resolve the problem on the area level, as would be done if proper already-established mechanisms were used to benefit integration and the signatory nations of the respective treaties.

"Finally, the industrialists agree that as soon as possible, a meeting of the ministers of integration should be convoked, with broad representation of private business on the isthmus, in order to take up this delicate matter which affects all of the countries in Central America equally."

PDC'S CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT, ARMY COUNTERED

Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 4 Nov 80 pp 6, 67

[Text] "The government is not in the hands of the army, inasmuch as the status and conduct of President Lucas Garcia are as civilian as those of the secretary of the Guatemalan Christian Democratic Party (PDC), Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo."

This was stated yesterday by the under secretary of public relations of the presidency, Maj Rolando Archila Marroquin, in response to the document made public by the PDC last week, which is critical of the chief executive.

The government spokesman explained that he could not totally refute the PDC document because he was familiar with it only through the press.

"Nevertheless," he said, "we must point out that the staements by both Cerezo Arevalo and the PDC are untrue, as the people can clearly see what the facts are regarding the government's status."

Move Towards Democracy

Archila Marroquin stated that at no time could people say that there is no freedom in Guatemala. This can be simply observed in the functioning of eight authorized political parties.

Furthermore, he said, in taking office, President Lucas Garcia authorized the activities of four other political parties. A number of proparty committees are also preparing to register, and the hope is that they will do so in due time.

Under the law, these parties are looking for civilian and military candidates before the elections.

What Vinicio Cerezo Said

"The secretary of the PDC," Archila Marroquin went on to say, "issued statements against the government while overseas; he then comes back and repeats them, and last week party leaders get together and support these statements.

"It seems ironic," he stressed, "that they should be saying that there is, in fact, no democratic freedom when they themselves are making use of such freedom as they please, and even with slanted statements and boycotts that harm the interests of thousands of Guatemalans whom they say they are defending."

The Army Is Not in Power

Cerezo Arevalo and the PDC itself recently indicated that the army had to leave power and allow parties to operate freely as a means of preventing an imminent civil war.

In response, Maj Archila Marroquin said that we should recall that when he was nominated as a presidential candidate by the parties that brought him to power, Gen Lucas Garcia resigned from the army.

"In my case," the government spokesman said, "I am a major in the army but I resigned from the Armed Forces several years ago. In other words, President Lucas Garcia and I are just as much civilians as Vinicio Arevalo."

What the Armed Forces Are Doing

"For many years now the Armed Forces have been characterized by the wide-ranging aid that they have provided for the country's development.

"The Corps of Engineers, for example, is building the highway along the northern transverse strip and at the same time is undertaking a vast program that is benefiting thousands of peasants.

"The corps is also drilling wells to supply drinking water to numerous towns and villages that face problems in this regard.

"The Air Force is continuing its vital support of the cooperatives in the Reina de Ixcan area, and the Navy is doing the same along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

"Military bases and brigades are also making major contributions to the infrastructure projects aimed at the masses in Guatemala.

"I see nothing wrong in this. On the contrary, the Armed Forces have been engaged in social tasks for many years like no other institution. The objectives of the Armed Forces are constructive and aimed at the segments of society most in need."

LUCAS OPPOSES NICARAGUAN EXILE GROUP NAMED AFTER HIM

Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 13

[Text] President Lucas Garcia has disavowed the irresponsible statements by Mr Nemen Nader, who in a press release pointed out that an anticommunist commando group bearing the name of the Guatemalan president has been organized in Miami, Florida.

The public relations secretary of the presidency, Carlos Toledo Vielman, told the press yesterday that the president of the republic was surprised to learn of these statements because he does not even know Mr Nader, who wants to use his name irresponsibly for shameful purposes.

"President Lucas Garcia," he went on to say, "has fully identified himself, in the eyes of the world, with a clear-cut policy of upholding the lofty principle of nonintervention in the domestic affairs of other countries.

"Moreover," he concluded, "the president cannot lend moral authority to this published statement. He cannot even attempt to lend an element of truth to 'a statement like this.'"

As PRENSA LIBRE reported at the time, Mr Nemen Nader, one of the founders of the so-called government of Nicaragua in exile, was expelled from the country after it was proven that he was involved in political matters prohibited by Guatemalan law.

He was under arrest for a few hours and then sent out of Guatemala.

Mr Nader, whom the Nicaraguans point to as "a fellow of Cuban origin," has said that he was not expelled from Guatemala, but the authorities have reported that Nemen Nader was arrested along with other Nicaraguans while they were gathered at a spot in Zone 15 in this city. All of them were released, except Nader, who was later expelled from Guatemala to the United States, where he currently resides.

PDC SUGGESTS PROGRAM OF REFORMS TO END VIOLENCE

Guatemala City EL IMPARCIAL in Spanish 30 Oct 80 pp 1, 13

[Text] A national strategy designed to implement political, economic and social reforms in order to establish peace in Guatemala was outlined today by leaders of the Christian Democratic Party (PDC).

"We believe that the time for change in the country has come, for we Guatemalans are tired of the way in which we have been governed," Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo, secretary general of the PDC, said at a press conference today.

Political Proposal

In a document presented to journalists and entitled "Political Proposal," the PDC analyzes the theoretical foundations of its opposition policy and of the national reality, and sets forth guidelines for correcting the current state of affairs in the country.

Actions Toward Peace

"We have adopted the decision to propose for the consideration of Guatemalan citizens a national strategy to rescue us from the crisis caused by political factors and resulting from the excessive concentration of power and wealth with a small elite," Cerezo Arevalo said.

Tired of Everything

In this political analysis, the Christian Democrats say: "We are tired of arbitrary action, abuse and fear; we are tired of the corruption which has become a common denominator."

Specific Case

As an example of this the case of Aviateca is mentioned, citing "the extreme administrative inefficiency in providing public services."

Bureaucratic Delays

"We are also tired of bureaucratic delays, inattention to the individual citizen, the transactions of public officials, the use of ministry resources to the benefit of government political groups," the secretary general of the PDC, Vinicio Cerezo, also said.

The Peaceful Way

After rejecting violence as a means of political action, the PDC proposes guidelines in the economic, social and political sectors so that the people can have "a government respectful of morality and efficient, a government in the service of the people." The document, which runs to 15 pages, proposes immediate goals to bring about this process of change.

Process of Polarization

The PDC document says that "at this historic moment, we Guatemalans are experiencing a process of polarization leading us toward a violent clash with the characteristics of a real civil war. This is a process of polarization between two political extremes."

Democratization Process

"In view of the tragic consequences which might result for Guatemalans from this process of polarization, the PDC has pursued political actions in the past 2 years designed to promote a real process of democratization which will avoid the clash," the PDC leader, Vinicio Cerezo, stressed.

Free Organization

The PDC says that the only way in which the people of Guatemala can have true democracy is by creating the conditions necessary for the existence of free organization in trade and other union associations, cooperatives, neighborhood and communal organizations and all of those political parties willing to function within the democratic framework.

Economic Structure

In the economic sector the PDC proposes to ensure greater flexibility, such that all the social sectors, especially the middle and popular strata, can participate in the benefits of the economic development of the country through direct improvement in their income, the development of the services rendered and the education provided them and job opportunities.

Basic Changes

The PDC believes it is justified to say that in the agrarian sector "there can be no significant step forward without changes in the rural milieu. Therefore it is necessary to effect the changes designed to integrate 65 percent of the population in the economic life of the country by giving land to the peasants and organizing those who already possess it."

Other Branches

Within the reference framework concerning the needed political, economic and social reforms, the PDC includes the industrial sector, the banking and financial network and effective participation in democracy, formulating (in conclusion) a commentary and final appeal in the hope that we Guatemalans will be able to find the path toward our improvement.

Strength of the People

"We have confidence in the strength of the people of Guatemala and their capacity to achieve the grandeur they merit, in honor of our historic past and heroic sacrifices in its struggle for freedom and democracy," Vinicio Cerezo, secretary general of the PDC, said during this meeting with journalists.

The Price Paid

In conclusion, the Christian Democratic leader emphasized that "we assert that the price of change in Guatemala has already been paid and we should implement it urgently, sparing no effort, boldness or generosity. We are for access to power, to wealth and to culture for the people."

CITIZENS' RESISTANCE TO SUBVERSIVE INFLUENCE PRAISED

[Editorial: "20 October Passed and the Evil Predictions Did Not Come True"]

[Text] The evil omens foretold by some soothsayers concerning the expectation of large-scale disturbances on 20 October, the anniversary of the revolutionary undertaking of 1944, remained, God be praised, no more than that, because despite the attempts to promote them by subversive groups, in our estimate, they came to nothing, to no more than frustrated attempts, because no one responded to their malevolent intent.

The fact is that the citizenry, aware that it represents 99 percent of the people of Guatemala, no longer lends itself to this type of "perilous venture" by subversive groups, attempting through all the means available to them to alter the constitutional structure of the country. The fact is that they know from the experience in other climes on this planet that it is better to live calmly under a democratic government such as that the regime of Gen Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia represents than to be overpowered by a group of leftist opportunists, whose command post is thousands of kilometers from our frontiers, never showing its face directly, but energetically maneuvering the destinies of people who have unfortunately fallen under their nefarious sponsorship.

We have many instances of this in the world, for if we have not experienced it, we have been very closely sharing it and experiencing it personally, although thanks to our reasoning capacity we have avoided it thus far.

If we have not had this experience ourselves, we have indeed seen how other countries which have fallen under the yoke of Soviet socialism have seen their personal freedoms restricted--their freedom to work, to move about, to choose their housing--for they are not free to do what can be done in a democratic country such as Guatemala. They cannot travel without asking the permission of the commissar in charge, they cannot leave the country without being stripped by the emigration authorities of the last trinket of any value they possess. As has been seen in other countries dominated by the communists, who naturally say nothing, and we will not list them here, since everyone knows which they are.

We will not say that the celebrations were entirely calm, as we would have liked, no. Some bad Guatemalans carried out a limited wave of armed attacks, murdering innocent people, mainly public servants, entirely apolitical, who were only carrying out their duty of protecting the interests of the people, that is to say national police agents.

These self-sacrificing servants of the state were the greatest martyrs in this wave of disturbances last weekend, because according to reports, 11 policemen were treacherously assassinated in the violence launched by extremist groups. And this, as would logically be expected, was rejected by the entire people, since they are tired of "newcomers," many of them not Guatemalans, who try to establish a regime antagonistic to the democratic ideas of Guatemalans.

These groups are well aware that they cannot rally around them great masses of converts. Only deluded young people, inexpert due to their very youth and limited experience and great thirst for adventure, endorse the harmful ideas of the ringleaders of the subversive groups "preaching" the class struggle.

And they also know that they do not have the massive acquiescence of the Guatemalan citizens in their malevolent intentions, for these people prefer above all to live under a democratic government as they are doing, and not under a government of extreme socialist inclinations. The Guatemalan citizen only wants to live in peace, to relax in peace, to work in peace, in his home, and with his neighbors who desire the same thing.

/Editorial/

/Text/ Loyal Central Americans have heaved a sigh of satisfaction at the signing yesterday of the general peace treaty between El Salvador and Honduras, putting an end to more than a decade of broken diplomatic ties and commercial relations which hampered the Central American Common Market and, in general, the programs of the integration plan.

The prolongation of the so-called "dispute" between the two countries of Central America, and the consequent adverse impact on the entire region, combined to aggravate the serious situation on the Isthmus, resulting from the crisis in Nicaragua, the financial and economic difficulties of Costa Rica, the revolutionary turmoil in El Salvador, and the persistent guerrilla activities aimed at destabilizing institutional life in all the countries, on top of negative trends in the world economy.

Of course it is good news that two links that were split asunder for more than 11 years have been joined once again; but it is still disturbing to see the extent to which all the links of the Central American chain have been joined. There are still causes and common causes dating back many years that lead to disunity. Other issues arise under internal and international pressures, clearly visible (and sometimes even explainable) in many cases, difficult to detect in other cases. Some of these situations have obvious results that can be counteracted; others have more covert effects that are difficult to assess and whose force and scope cannot be precisely determined or quantified.

The so-called world "situation" obliges our countries to maintain strict solidarity in order to form a common front in these difficult times. We must pool resources and efforts to achieve the objectives of economic growth and progressive, solid social progress, objectives which can be translated into balanced development, economic growth and general well-being. For this purpose, integrationist agencies and tools must be put to good use, and should even be increased in number or functional capacity, assisted by a decisive political will and a strongly shared judgment.

But the picture we see is not promising: Costa Rica has taken unilateral steps and has imposed emergency measures, which can be explained by its economic circumstances but cannot be justified, given its commitments. It has even refused to take advantage of the possibilities of a concerted regional effort, as has happened more than once during the integrationist process and within the functions of the Common Market.

However, Costa Rica has shown--for whatever reasons--a certain coolness or indifference toward the other Isthmian nations, and has even forgotten the interests of our community by joining or cooperating with groups outside the region.

Nicaragua also seems to be straying from the unified tradition of Central America (we are speaking of the government, not the people), to the point that the Salvadoran Revolutionary Government Junta has had to combat at the Organization of American States an attitude which it considered interventionist, supposedly inspired--we do not want to think it was dictated--by the opinion of a foreign dictatorship that has been instigating and maintaining subversive movements and guerrilla activities in this region.

More serious still, and inexplicable to any Central American, is the attitude of the Nicaraguan delegation with regard to Belize at the current session of the United Nations General Assembly. It has allied itself with Mexico, Cuba and the Caribbean states that are in the orbit of the Commonwealth, although earlier it had come out on Guatemala's side and indicated that the United Nations was not the appropriate forum to resolve a territorial controversy between two member states, much less when the two are negotiating the matter by the peaceful means consecrated in the Charter of San Francisco. But Nicaragua, with an unprecedented adherence to foreign interests, has abandoned solidarity, contradicted its jurists and historians, and betrayed a traditional fraternity.

Thus, at a moment when we are facing problems throughout the region, aside from or in addition to our respective national problems, we are lacking in the indispensable solidarity to come to grips with these difficulties from a stronger position. There is no desire to cooperate to control our destiny.

We do not want to believe that our hopes are doomed for a constructive reaction, based on reality and the region's interests and resources. We are not resigned to thinking that the brotherly tradition has been extinguished under the influence of foreign seductions, and that we have ceased encouraging the political will to act in concert. Statesmen, politicians and economists, all the intellectuals of Central America should weigh the situation and draw the conclusions and express the recommendations that will allow us to rebuild and defend the destiny of our common homeland.

NATIONAL POLICE CONCLUDES SUCCESSFUL LITERACY CAMPAIGN

Guatemala City DIARIO DE CENTRO AMERICA in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 2

/Text/ In an extraordinary, unprecedented event, last Friday the General Office of the National Police marked the end of the literacy class that the institution has been giving on a national level throughout the year.

At the same ceremony, which took place at the Police Social Club, diplomas were awarded to literacy students from all over the republic, and to the outstanding employees of the institution that made the successful campaign possible.

The General Office of the National Police initiated this extraordinary program, which is benefitting thousands of people who were unable to read and write. But today they have a better future ahead of them.

In order to carry out this great social service, it was necessary to train 1,000 employees of the institution. Also, 800 handbooks for monitors were prepared by the National Police Academy. Employees were trained in a series of six courses that lasted 4 months. Among those people were holders of bachelor's degrees, accounting experts and primary education teachers.

For the present literacy education term, 20,000 students signed up all over the country, in 553 literacy posts in municipalities, villages and hamlets. Of those, a total of 14,301 students passed.

The material resources used for this effort were the following: 80,000 notebooks, 80,000 pencils, 800 monitor handbooks. It was also necessary to buy the following items of furniture: tables, chairs, benches, desks, blackboards and classrooms. All this teaching material and furniture cost a total of 3 million quetzals.

It must be stressed that the general resources used for this campaign were the institution's own property, including some contributions and donations by people and cooperating agencies.

PAPER NOTES LEFTIST OPPOSITION TO PEACE TREATY SIGNING

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 1 Nov 80 p 7

[Editorial]

[Text] Since the 1940's, when the victorious allied powers imposed on the axis countries the peace of the victors, the world has witnessed no peace treaty brought about by the mutual and constructive desire of two states.

It can be said that in the last third of a century the document signed in Lima, Peru by Honduras and El Salvador is the first serious reconciliation achieved by two peoples, and a rare occasion on which the names of two small Latin American countries are resounding throughout the world with edifying comments and praise.

Without exaggeration, it is valid to maintain that the signing of the peace treaty is inaugurating a new era in Central America.

In recent months, and particularly since the conclusion of the civil war in Nicaragua and the coming to power of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front], whose sympathies toward Cuba and the Soviet Union have become more apparent with every passing day, virtually all of the planet has been waiting to see what is happening in this part of the world.

World public opinion has followed with interest and concern the course of violence in Guatemala and El Salvador, because it is obvious that international communism is playing a role in this tragedy that has cut off thousands of human lives and threatens to destroy the tradition of freedom that (despite periodic dictatorships) has been the historic constant in the land of Morazan.

Even the least alert observers understand that if Marxist totalitarianism takes over in El Salvador and Guatemala, Costa Rica and Honduras will fall immediately afterwards, and then the Soviet expansion will travel northward toward Mexico, reaching the very edge of the southern border of the United States, and what is even more serious, controling the Mexican oil production, which is one of the largest in the western hemisphere.

In this highly sensitive situation, the peace treaty has come as an obstacle blocking the strategy of Soviet-Cuban communism. The agents of red imperialism have always viewed the split between Honduras and El Salvador with enthusiasm, since, as a result of this division, any effective action undertaken between the two states for the control of subversive maneuvers in the border area was next to impossible.

The best evidence that totalitarianism is opposed to peace and perceives it as a severe obstacle to its plans is the official statement of the tiny but still very harmful PCH [Communist Party of Honduras], which was published in a newspaper in the capital.

In this message, laden with hatred and verbal virulence, which tries to conceal the fears of the Soviet agents about a possible combination of the security forces to combat subversion, the PCH reveals itself as an advocate of violence and destruction, fiercely attacking the settlement that has brought about a reconciliation between two peoples and has opened up new possibilities for a positive future for the inhabitants of the region.

And there is more: There is a small but very significant detail that almost no one has publicly mentioned. At the ceremony in Lima the foreign ministers of Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica were present. The only one absent was the minister of foreign relations of Nicaragua.

Is there perhaps some connection between the absence of the Nicaraguan foreign minister and the statement of the Communist Party of Honduras against peace?

We believe the readers of LA PRENSA, as intelligent people, can answer that.

As for the rest, we call on all people of good will among our citizens to be aware that there is a conflagration in Central America which, from one moment to the next, may reach our house.

And we ask them to understand that the peace agreement is one of the tools to normalize the situation and to help legal means, the party system, elections, and the institutions of an open society to finally replace terror, death, guerrilla attacks and destruction.

If we clearly grasp this fundamental fact, we will all give our support to the peace treaty. And by so doing, we will be laying the foundations for a political solution to the great crisis confronting Central America, a crisis that challenges the survival of freedom, and which we must overcome for the sake of civilization, justice, development and peace.

BRIEFS

LITERACY CAMPAIGN LAUNCHED--About 27,000 adult Hondurans are attending night schools throughout the country on a daily basis with a view to learning to read and write or continuing their primary studies on 4 levels. This information, provided by the General Adult Literacy Office, indicates that the large number of students are distributed in 152 schools, 117 of them state-run and the balance private. The students are being taught by 654 teachers, who have previously been given special educational training, on the basis of flexible programs which facilitate easy learning by the students. The General Adult Literacy Office has said repeatedly that primary schooling on four levels for adults has yielded magnificent results, because it shortens the stay of those enrolled in courses and gives them the basic knowledge so they can later go on to secondary school. MANAGUA ARCHBISHOP NOTES RESTRICTIONS ON FREE EXPRESSION

PA2[illegible]1832 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0015 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Text] Panama City, 24 Nov (ACAN-EFE)--Managua Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo said here today that many Nicaraguans feel freedom of expression in Nicaragua has been somewhat restricted by decrees that ban any news unfavorable to the revolution.

According to the Nicaraguan archbishop, who is in Panama attending the 19th meeting of the Central American Episcopal Secretariat, the Sandinist government has not forbidden the spreading of the Gospel. He indicated, however, that among the middle-level cadres are those who preach materialism.

Obando y Bravo said the church helped with the literacy campaign several months ago in Nicaragua and has also collaborated in several other campaigns, but "we have also denounced other matters that have not seemed right to us."

He explained, for instance, that certain middle-level cadres have sought to abolish Christmas.

The church has denounced a certain arrogance evinced among high-ranking Sandinist leaders.

According to Obando y Bravo, the church has maintained several dialogs with the nations reconstruction junta and with the Sandinist front.

At first these dialogs were held to talk about political prisoners. In one, however, the church asked for its own television channel. To this the rulers answered that the country's television channels will always be in state hands, but that the church would have access to them.

Monsignor Obando y Bravo said the church wants a Nicaragua where hatred is not preached "because at present it is being preached."

MANAGUA'S 'LA PRENSA' URGES SENSIBLE SOLUTION TO UNITY CRISIS

PA240421 Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 14 Nov 80 p 2

[Editorial: "No Time for Sabre Rattling"]

[Text] Every crisis presents the opportunity to advance or fail. Men, like nations, grow by overcoming the crisis they must confront and crumble when their reactions are not adequate to the situation.

Confronted by the crisis caused by the withdrawal from the State Council of important labor, political and business sectors, our revolution faces the opportunity to create more solid bases or to drift into a failure of tragic consequences.

Positive reactions occur when things are seen and analyzed calmly to learn the reason for them and constructive solutions are sought.

A crisis in unity is caused by the fact that some of the united sectors began to feel uncomfortable and disappointed with the union and, therefore, decided to withdraw. Likewise, people and organizations unite precisely for the opposite reason; because they believe it is better to work together and because they see reciprocal benefits in this union. That is to say the forces uniting them are stronger than their differences and their common goals are more important than their differences.

If unity is broken today, it is because one of the members believes that this union has no reason for being. Perhaps because one or more of the reasons which made them want to advance together have disappeared.

Therefore, if a return to unity is desired, then it is the time for mature reflection and to determine what were the factors which made the other sector prefer the risks and disadvantages of acting alone, rather than continue united. A crisis in unity is solved only by sincerely analyzing the factors which damaged the relationship and admitting that mistkaes may have been made. A crisis in unity is solved by listening to the other part, establishing common goals and eliminating obstacles.

A crisis in unity is not solved by sabre rattling to arouse hatreds against those who would withdraw. A spouse does not mend his marriage by berating the one who is packing to leave. On the contrary, this attitude will only reinforce the belief that life with this spouse will continue to be very unpleasant.

In the present attitudes of the Sandinist National Liberation Front [FSLN], and its organizations, there are two trends: one is prudent, although it feels irritated at what is considers to be a senseless attitude on the part of the sectors who abandoned the State Council. It abstains from offending and calls to a return to unity. There is, however, another aggressive trend which rattles sabres and uses the terms traitors and enemies.

It would be tragic and bad for the country, and the aggressive sectors themselves, if their trend prevails. This is no time for emotional outbursts. If we analyze the crisis affecting this revolution, we will see that they have always been caused by a lack of calm analysis. If on the other hand, we analyze its successes and political advances, we shall find that on every occasion good sense prevailed. Today, the revolution's possibilities for success or failure confront the same choices of being calm or impulsive, conciliatory or hostile.

The present crisis presents problems but also offers immense possibilities for building a better base. If a crisis occurred it was because things were going wrong, perhaps had false bases. Let us again jointly find the path to coexistence and let us find this situation of solidarity and harmony which our dead and God, Himself, expects from us.

'BARRICADA' ARTICLE SCORES COUNTERREVOLUTIONARY MANEUVERS

PA141622 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1200 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Article by Federico Lopez--read by announcer]

[Text] There is a crisis in the private enterprise council, COSEP, says a militant article by Federico Lopez published in today's edition of BARRICADA that began circulating at 0600. Evidently, it was the objective of reactionaries within the COSEP and the rightwing parties to create a political crisis for the Sandinist revolution. This crisis was first supposed to affect institutions and later the entire social spectrum.

Naturally, they have the mercenary written and spoken media, whose mills of calumny and misinformation are well-oiled, to try to project that image both inside the country and abroad. Their attempt to generate that image to make the masses distrust the Sandinist National Liberation Front's [FSLN] power and decision of free fatherland or death, to secure national sovereignty and the revolutionary achievements have moved us to clarify this problem.

First, we must define the position of those who affirm that this provocation could generate a crisis. In any bourgeois state, be it a military dictatorship or formal democracy, which continues to be a dictatorship for the humble, the conformation of political power based on the political, military, administrative and ideological structures of the state could certainly generate a crisis when an important or majority sector of its parliament withdraws, that is an important sector of its bourgeois base, because the people do not support it. Such is the case of countries such as Italy, where the withdrawal or criticism of the government by an important parliamentary sector can unleash a government crisis which calls for a reshuffling of the government through a process of alliances or negotiations in which the interests of the people appear nowhere in sight.

If this were the case of Nicaragua, the case of a bourgeois state at the service of antipopular interests, with the withdrawal of the COSEP and other fossils, bearing in mind the small minority they represent, would not cause the much desired crisis, not even an office crisis.

At this point, in the case of a Nicaragua of formal democracy, which only exists in the dreams of the bourgeoisie sell-outs, their maneuver to quit the State Council even in that formal democracy they dream of, is a political decision in crisis. They must understand, even at the cost of repeated failures, that the popular Sandinist revolution has been generated by the militant action of all the people: the recent popular victory of a struggle of more than 20 years which has now been politically consolidated in the new revolutionary state and in the people organized in political power.

Therefore, in our new Nicaragua, the force of power of the state cannot be reduced to the coherence and strength of its institutions or only to the strength of its political, military, administrative or ideological instruments, no matter how powerful these may be, and they really are.

The strength of the state and of the Sandinist revolutionary process must be analyzed from the point that it involves a revolutionary project which reflects the ancestral aspirations of the exploited and oppressed, transformed in the material force which was capable of bringing about the triumph of the Sandinist revolution and which constitutes the only and principle guarantee of its consolidation and progress.

What is this force? When the natural aspiration of the people, following the triumph, was to dedicate themselves to peaceful work in view of the need of defending the revolution and echoing the call of the FSLN, that guerrilla army, the heroic militias became the Sandinist peoples army and the Interior Ministry apparatus became the backbone, around which the defense of the revolution is organized.

We also speak of tens of thousands of militiamen, who after the productive effort engaged in preparing the defense, the very same ones who are fighting the Somozist bands. Since the productive apparatus destroyed and disorganized amid the hunger and moral and human sufferings, the people took upon themselves to first collect the crops and are successfully culminating the reactivation program.

They have done this practically without any substantial improvement of their material conditions, convinced that we must first produce the means to satisfy our needs and with a Sandinist spirit, we have begun the harvesting of crops with an attitude of self-denial which will successfully overcome any counter-revolutionary maneuver.

It is the 800,000 illiterates and the 120,000 brigade members who identifying in illiteracy--the legacy of the sell-outs--an obstacle for the development of the revolution, without logistics, without experience, with few financial resources, with counterrevolutionary bands, and with the same provocations of the sell-outs as today, with abnegation and sacrifice, transformed into a vibrant reality what was a literacy campaign.

It is the technicians, professionals, teachers, employees, who despite the fewer privileges and loss of a status which separated them from the people, united with the worker and peasant to overcome the difficulties inherited from the past and the constant attacks from the enemies of the revolution in the economic and social tasks of reconstruction.

We must also speak of the patriotic businessman, who cultivated more than 120,000 manzanas of cotton, thousands of manzanas of sugar cane, produced most of the coffee and who is not in Nicaragua like a pawn of imperialism to conspire with Somozism or neoSomozism, disguised as a Social Democrat, a member of the Nicaraguan Democratic Movement or a Social Christian. He is alongside the people creating the economic independence of the country and today, when imperialism manipulates as puppets the COSEP leaders, they are occupied with the workers and technicians in securing the harvesting of crops.

In summary, given the political and social base of the state, of the solid worker-peasant alliance, around whom national unity evolves, with all the patriotic sectors of the nation, what crisis could be created by the crazed decision of an infinite minority of lackeys of imperialism.

Obviously, they cannot generate any social, institutional, political, or economic crisis. We are sure that the workers and all the patriotic sectors, including the businessmen, will know how to emerge with strengthened unity from these confrontations.

National unity gains more strength each day in the face of the attacks by imperialism and its allies and in the face of the social and economic difficulties we have to overcome to build the new Nicaragua. We are certain, and say this with concern, because this revolution has always added and not subtracted, that it is in COSEP and in the reactionary parties where a crisis is being generated--a crisis because of their political calculations, because they are being unmasked day after day as mere puppets of selfish interests and internationalist maneuvers of the enemy of humanity, a crisis because their conduct does not express the least social or political, progressive interest, a crisis because they will wind up in the trashcan and quagmire of the counterrevolution perhaps sooner than history demands.

'BARRICADA' EDITORIAL SCORES COSEP, MDN

PA241304 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 17 Nov 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Economic and Political Factors Cannot Be Separated"]

[Text] One of the Higher Council of Private Enterprise [COSEP] leaders (Rosendo Diaz) also a member of the Union of Nicaraguan Agricultural-Livestock Producers [UPANIC] speaking for the cotton growers, said, that they agree with COSEP's attitudes and are willing to continue producing. The COSEP communique says that its critical attitude (withdrawal from State Council) "does not mean that we will desist in our determination to produce with greater efficiency and to strive daily to raise our country from its economic prostration."

This support, which still has not been given by the National Democratic Movement [MDN] leadership, which pulled COSEP out of the State Council, is clumsily contrived when it now says that the producing sectors are in agreement with COSEP's political attitude.

All private entrepreneurs agree, this has been admitted by their own organization many times, that the task of national reconstruction cannot be achieved without political stability. This stability has been guaranteed by Sandinism while reactionaries, serving the MDN in complicity with COSEP's leadership, have tried to destabilize it. However, COSEP demagogically states that it will continue to produce within the framework outlined by the revolution. COSEP says this because it is aware that most businessmen are in favor of the economic reactivation program.

Rosendo Diaz himself says that "the withdrawal from the State Council was not a protest against national production but rather against the manner in which the country's future is being managed, because politics has nothing to do with economics."

COSEP, aware of the private sector's attitude in favor of economic reactivation and of its support for the government's policies, as determined at the Matagalpa assembly, is apparently asking businessmen to leave them (the MDN sectors) to handle political matters which have nothing to do with economics. This reveals the existing contradictions, which reflect the weakness of their arguments that try to justify their political clumsiness and the MDN's effort to take COSEP into the imperialist field.

CHAMORRO SAYS COUNTRY HEADING TO COMMUNISM

PA150222 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 1944 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Text] San Jose, 14 Nov (ACAN-EFE)--According to Nicaraguan journalist Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Barrios, there is evidence that Nicaragua is heading for communism.

During a visit to Costa Rica, the Nicaraguan journalist, member of LA PRENSA's Directive Council in Managua, met with Costa Rican President Rodrigo Carazo Odio, with whom he discussed his country's developments.

Chamorro affirmed that the Marxist-tendency in Nicaragua is confirmed by the formation of a state-party controlled by the Sandinist National Liberation Front.

Besides, he added, the advanced process of militarization currently underway in the country shows there is interest in forming a communist state.

According to him, this process of militarization is not being well received because the resources spent on it could be used for other, more necessary purposes.

He indicated that another proof of Nicaragua's turn to the left is the education imparted to youth in the high schools. However, he added, the tendency is more visible in the state's current control of the communcations media.

Regarding this, he affirmed that 80 percent of the radio stations are controlled by Sandinism, as are two of the three existing newspapers.

In my country, everybody knows that the one that rules--and government members admit this--is the Sandinist front's national directorate. The reconstruction junta is the administrator of the policy outlined by the directorate, he added.

According to Chamorro, it was more dangerous to be a journalist in Somoza's day, but he recalled two decrees recently promulgated by the Nicaraguan Government, which ban all information on either the economy or national security.

He affirmed that those decrees ban all information on strikes, demonstrations, the interruption of public services, shortages of basic products, armed clashes and other issues.

Further on, Chamorro indicated that in Nicaragua there is a marked difference between communism and democracy.

He described last week's incidents, when Alfonso Robelo was prevented from holding a public demonstration in Nandaime, as counterproductive.

This was to have been a democratic-civic activity, he said in conclusion, and the fact that this type of activity is being blocked leads to frustration in a country that is trying to establish a pluralist democracy.

'BARRICADA' SCORES OPPOSITION SECTORS ATTITUDES

PA200441 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 3

[Editorial: "We Warned Them!"]

[Excerpts] On 10 November BARRICADA published an editorial defining the attitudes and trends of political parties and economic groups toward the revolution. Hard facts have confirmed our predictions: the recent higher council of private enterprise [COSEP] statement, published in LA PRENSA with such great ado, and events at yesterday's session of the State Council are proof that we were right. The attitude of the various groups for some months, an attitude created by pressure from the more reactionary groups within these organizations and in open opposition to the interests of its progressive sectors, has made them commit this tremendous political error.

It is a political error because they have tried childishly to sabotage, willingly or not, the body that represents the highest expression of national unity. It is immature because it is improper for representatives of organizations to do, and because this crude sabotage can be explained only by a lack of experience, by obstinacy, by emotionalism and by mistaken political appraisals of the revolutionary process.

Blind in their analyses and conclusions, they believe these attitudes can cause the junta of the Government of National Reconstruction and the Sandinist National Liberation Front to be hesitant. Fools! They do not want to understand that actions and attitudes such as those yesterday in the State Council feed the campaigns of the revolution's enemies.

This irrational spirit, this lack of political maturity, will only lead them closer to the swamp where the counterrevolutionaries, the resentful and the deluded harbor vain hopes of reversing the process.

One thing should be made clear: none of these actions will affect the revolution. When good sense prevails and meditation and not haste cools the now heated heads, they will realize their mistake and profit from the experience. Let us hope this will help strengthen national unity before it is too late and that they will leave this dangerous path and avoid the contamination of counterrevolution.

MASS ORGANIZATIONS WANT RESPECT FROM PRIVATE MEDIA

PA192224 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0300 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] Popular organizations have asked LA PRENSA to show more respect toward the Nicaraguan people. Distorted reports by this newspaper constitute a form of disrespect toward our people, the organizations have stated.

The continuous and systematic manipulation of reports in the private communications media, such as the newspaper LA PRENSA and the Radio Corporacion Radio Station, show disrespect for the people of Nicaragua and for the memory of those martyred in the cause of national liberation. This statement was made today by representatives of popular organizations during a roundtable discussion broadcast today by Radio Deportes.

Additionally, the organizations said that those media are trying to revive the maxim of divide and conquer which was often applied by the Somozists to labor unions that were struggling to achieve their social demands.

The following are some of the statements that express the position of the mass organizations regarding the manipulation of news by the private media.

[Begin recording] [Unidentified speaker] This biased and harmful position of manipulating, with ill intentions, the information provided to the people has been manifested in the past few hours in the attempt to manipulate the latest events, which is an act of irresponsibility and provocation that causes great concern among all the popular organizations.

Radio Corporacion [illegible]ds indistinct] to the individuals who, with the most absolute indiscreti[illegible] and irresponsibility, have made statements that question the truth of the official statements made by our revolutionary government. LA PRENSA has not said a single objective word regarding the events at El Crucero, but has reported quote, arrests within the higher council of private enterprise [COSEP], unquote, portraying the logical measures that the revolutionary government must take to tie the hands of the counterrevolutionaries who are conspiring against our fatherland and against our future as measures against COSEP.

In (?omitting) the official communique issued by our government while reporting the arrests, do they perhaps intend to publish reports on the death of Jorge Salazar tomorrow? Do they wish to give the impression that he was arrested first [before being killed]? Do they perhaps wish to persist in the offensive comparison of the criminal practices of the Somozist government with legitimate actions for the defense of our fatherland, which are the duty of the revolutionary government?

We ask these questions publicly, because it is time for the organized people to demand more respect from those who control the private media; more respect for our people and for our government, which is not the product of any pact or compromise, but rather the product of the struggle and the blood of the best sons of our fatherland.

Third [as heard, no first or second given], this continuous and systematic manipulation of information is designed to divide our people, to divide the businessmen and other sectors of private enterprise from the rest of the people, to divide the people from the government, to divide the government, to divide the people from the Sandinist National Liberation Front [FSLN], and even to divide the FSLN itself with statements to the effect that there are patriotic and radical sectors within it.

There is a maxim which says: divide and conquer, and this is surely the strongest desire of the reactionary minorities which are unable to imagine a genuinely democratic country in which the people fully exercise power.

Fourth, we consider it our duty to alert all of our members and all of the national and international public to this anti-people maneuver that the reactionary sectors have carried out. The starting point of this maneuver has been the provocation and manipulation of the media that are in their hands.

Fifth, we call on all sectors of the people, including the patriotic and honest businessmen, to turn their backs on these unpatriotic attempts to disrupt national unity and on the Somozist counterrevolutionaries who wish to bloody our fatherland. Our united position will be expressed vigorously in the streets of Managua and in the highways of the department on Wednesday, 19 November, at 1630.

For this reason, we say that participation in Wednesday's rally is an act of defense of the fatherland and a vote for national unity. [end recording]

FRENCH OFFICIAL VISITOR PRAISES SANDINIST REVOLUTION

PA210416 Managua Sistema Sandinista Television Network in Spanish 0200 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] Following a most fruitful visit for Nicaragua, the French secretary of state for foreign affairs, Olivier Stirn, left the country today.

During his stay in Nicaragua, the French official this morning held a cordial meeting with members of the revolutionary government: Companeros Sergio Ramirez Mercado, Arturo Cruz and Revolution Commander Daniel Ortega. He discussed the current violence in Central America, particularly in El Salvador and Guatemala with them. The ranking French official said:

[Begin recording] [passage indistinct] As responsible men, you were able to control the situation and did not engage in reprisals that would have in fact started the cycle of violence provoked by violence. [words indistinct] Your actions left a definitely positive balance. [end recording]

Dr Arturo Cruz, in turn, summarized the results of the visit of the representative of the French Government as follows:

[Begin recording] Right after the revolutionary victory France offered us its cooperation. This was limited, however, to emergency needs, such as food, medicines and clothing. The French Parliament showed great interest in making this cooperation move effective and as a result of that, a decision was made to enter into a more formal program. Recently the finance ministers of our two countries signed an agreement in Paris for a credit of 50 million francs to be used mostly in a textile project and to help our balance of payments.

In talks with the visiting secretary of state for foreign affairs, Olivier Stirn, it was agreed that once that project is completed, efforts will be made to maintain an ever increasing exchange between our two countries, not only financially, but also culturally and politically. [end recording]

Later, the French secretary of state was invited to open today's session at the State Council.

Before boarding the plane, the French official held a news conference at the flags room at the Augusto Cesar Sandino international airport in Managua in which he said the Nicaraguan revolution is unique because of the way various economic groups have been reconciled within a climate of authentic pluralist democracy.

The Nicaraguan Acting Foreign Minister Jacinto Suarez presented the distinguished visitor with some Nicaraguan craftmanship pieces as momentos from our liberated country.

'VOA' DISREGARDS BENEFITS OF REVOLUTION

PA021925 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 28 Nov 80 p 3

[Editorial: "The VOA and Reaction"]

[Text] After affirming in its introduction to Latin America that it reflects "the U.S. Government's official policy," the Voice of America (VOA) broadcast a commentary yesterday that followed precisely the ideals of the most reactionary sectors here and abroad. We do not know if the commentary in question really reflects the official U.S. policy, but it does contradict President Carter's recent statements stressing the "pluralist and democratic" nature of our process.

We must point out, however, that the VOA's attacks on the revolution are clearly in keeping with the positions held by domestic reaction, so they might reflect the feelings of the most reactionary U.S. Government sectors.

An example of this is the station's report on the death of counterrevolutionary Jorge Salazar. At no time did the VOA mention what everybody knows: that Salazar was fully involved in counterrevolutionary activities and that at the time of his death he was carrying out activities connected with the criminal goals of the counterrevolution.

The station ignored Commander Tomas Borge's explanations, which it had broadcast 24 hours earlier and it did not even mention the confession made by Salazar's accomplices, who are currently under arrest.

By means of these voluntary and deliberate omissions, the VOA links the counterrevolutionary's death to alleged disrespect for human rights in Nicaragua. It has done so without stopping to think, let alone say, that it was Salazar who had conspired against the rights of the immense majority of our people who, for the first time in their history, have begun to enjoy these rights.

The VOA commentary--which somehow reminds one of the famous communiques released by the Higher Council of Private Enterprise's pro-Nicaraguan Democratic Movement's leaders--even hinted at economic blackmail when it affirmed that on the part of the revolution there is an alleged commitment [compromiso] to the national private sectors, guaranteed by U.S. gold.

The VOA gives priority to the interests of a minority within Nicaraguan society and disregards the benefits that the revolution provides for the traditionally forgotten majority of our people.

The VOA should not worry about the interests of that minority. What is should worry about is the negative effect that commentaries, such as the one broadcast yesterday, have on the United States and its foreign policy.

[Editorial: "An Unprecedented Provocation"]

[Excerpt] Now that the interior minister has confirmed Jorge Salazar Arguello's participation in armed counterrevolutionary activities and that the specific circumstances in which he died in a confrontation have been disclosed, one cannot avoid analyzing his death and the causes that motivated it.

One cannot lose sight of the sociopolitical context that made him choose the wrong path in an effort to foil the revolution in connivance with the Somozist guards that bled our country and with the other external forces. In other words, it was Salazar Arguello himself who, by carrying out actions that jeopardized the security and peace of our people, acted hastily and rejected the institutional paths of dialog and participation that the revolution has established for those who are sincerely willing to sacrifice in order to reconstruct the fatherland.

Commander Wheelock has already revealed both the full magnitude of the reactionary conspiracy currently being plotted to attack the revolutionary process and the serious threats hovering over our country. But while our vanguard asks the people to prepare themselves to defend national sovereignty and to concentrate on the priority tasks of national reconstruction, there are those who insist on maintaining an irresponsible and provocative attitude, opposed to the interests and dignity of the people.

This is the position adopted by the Higher Council of Private Enterprise and the newspaper LA PRENSA. The first imprudently describes Salazar's death as a "political crime," while the paper has dedicated itself to magnifying the figure of a man who died tragically but who chose his own destiny when he conspired against our revolutionary people.

Do they not realize the gravity of the activities in which Jorge Salazar was involved? Or are they deliberately trying to legitimize the counterrevolutionary path that Salazar chose when they say that "Nicaragua as a whole will be grateful for the way in which you sacrified your life."

Both these stands are extremely dangerous and it should be made clear that those who hold them have been warned by both our people and their vanguard. Our leaders have already indicated the path of true and patriotic reflection, for only by pointing out the mistaken path taken by Salazar can actions of the type that bring only pain and mourning to the Nicaraguan family be avoided in the future.

Those who reject this view and persist in their irresponsible provocations must realize that they are opposing the interests of the people and the nation and that in this area they will be fought relentlessly. However, there is still time to reflect.

FARM WORKERS OFFER VOLUNTEER WORK

PA259105 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1200 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Statement by Edgardo Garcia, secretary general of the Farmworkers Association, to "Extra" newscast; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] The participation of the farmworkers as well as all the workers in the revolution is based on our experiences, our struggle as part of the revolution. [sentence as heard] To this effect, we promoted a campaign effective 8 November, and that is our greatest achievement, not only from an economic and organizational point of view, but from the political point of view of training of workers. We hope to achieve a high rate of volunteer work to specifically show our organization's support for the reconstruction process. We also hope to form part of the Sandinist People's militias in order to defend the revolution.

The continuation of the literacy campaign is another part of our campaign and we will continue with the progress and training of the many companeros who participated in the literacy campaign this past summer. Naturally, we cannot forget that the two main aspects--understanding our contribution to the revolution in the process of reconstruction as well as defending the revolution--are taken very much into consideration in our campaign. This is now a very good opportunity for our class, the farmworkers, to join this task. Therefore, from 12 through 30 November, the farmworkers are holding assemblies in all our grassroots organizations, with the abovementioned purposes. Then, from 26 through 30 December, we will be learning of the results of the volunteer work tasks and of the process of joining the Sandinist People's militias, and other social tasks which all workers are going to organize in all the grassroots organizations.

U.S., JAMAICAN ELECTIONS PRAISED

/Editorial/

/Text/ There have been two elections in the Americas recently: in Jamaica and the United States. In both elections, the officials and parties who were in power were defeated by a wide margin in favor of a new leader and a new party to occupy the helm of the ship of state.

Why hold elections? So the people can change leaders when they want to, to approve and disapprove and thus be masters of their own fate.

Speaking of the case of Jamaica, it is almost certain that Mr Manley and his followers were convinced and would have sworn that the people were with them, but the election results were overwhelmingly contrary to their hopes.

In Jamaica Prime Minister Manley was trying to socialize the country through Marxism, and thought that the people liked that doctrine; that the class struggle, the deterioration of free enterprise, the bureaucratization of the state, the drop in the number of landowners and the increase in the amount of property owned by the people, a tendency toward single unions and single parties, the reduction of individual rights and the appraisal of a man according to his immersion in society, the massification of the people, the substitution of the God of the forefathers by new exotic doctrines that gave out the caramels that God could not give, intimate friendship with Cuba and Cuban interference in Jamaican affairs: Mr Manley thought that all this pleased the people. He implemented these ideas and continued to put them into effect, but the people took advantage of the outlet supplied by the elections and in a civilized manner said no. They used that marvelous instrument of popular power and the force that comes from being in the majority, and replaced Mr Manley with another leader with an ideology more in keeping with the will of the people.

Thanks to the elections, Jamaica has saved itself not only from the totalitarianism that Mr Manley wanted to impose, but also from violent agitation and civil war, because when people have the opportunity to express their will, when people have an effective means to influence their own destiny and approve or disapprove of what their leaders do, then there is no need for violence or wars that cause hunger, desolation and regression to change the destiny of the people.

COLUMNIST SEES NO REASON TO FEAR REAGAN

PA150307 Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 10 Nov 80 p 2

[Article by Felix Pedro Espinoza: "Let Us Show Reagan That He Is Wrong"]

[Text] Since the electoral campaign began in the United States, several Nicaraguans have voiced their concern over the government platform and public statements of the Republican candidate, former actor Ronald Reagan. This concern was even more noticeable among certain Sandinist leaders and officials of the present government, many of whom even said that if Reagan won the elections world peace would be endangered. Others, very worried over his statements on the policy he will implement toward Latin America, even believe that Reagan will militarily intervene in Central America, particularly in our fatherland.

I think this is improbable, due to the negative experiences of the United States in connection with this type of action. This is also unlikely due to the modern world's situation, the diplomatic force that the Latin American countries have proven that they have, and the support of the countries that comprise the nonalined bloc, to which we belong.

The U.S. president-elect argues that the Nicaraguan revolution is headed for Marxism-Leninism and that we will soon become a satellite of Russia through Cuba. He says that this is his major concern and that he will try to prevent this situation for the good of Central America and of our own revolution.

If our revolution does not show any signs of moving the way that Reagan thinks it will and if the current government and its leaders are sure that this process will move along democratic and truly free paths, I do not see any reason to fear Reagan. The logical thing would be to show the new U.S. president that he is wrong in his views; that this is not a communist revolution, but rather a process of profound structural changes in all areas; that we are really a nonalined country; that we are building a new sociopolitical and economic system that will not be an imitation of any other system and perhaps will serve as a model for other developing countries; and that this system will not be dependent, capitalistic or totalitarian.

If that is our goal, why fear Reagan?

Let us continue with our process within the guidelines mentioned above and we will gain greater respect from both the new gringo president and the other countries that have voiced their doubts about our revolutionary process. By then, Reagan himself will be one of our best friends.

U.S. ELECTIONS CITED AS EXAMPLE OF TRUE DEMOCRACY

/Commentary by Pedro Chamorro/

/Text/ Often we hear new adjectives that add bias to or limit the true meaning of the word democracy. It is the very people who do not believe in the single type of democracy who are interested in disterting and limiting this word. That is why we hear them speak of the "bourgeois democracy" and "popular democracy."

The term "bourgeois democracy" is applied to those of us who believe that power comes from the people through the voting booth. The term "popular democracy" is used to define the eternal power (which cannot be questioned in democratic elections) of what they continually call the "vanguard," which is supposed to represent the people forever.

Those of us who believe in democracy in the fullest sense of the word cannot recognize in this "popular democracy" a true democracy, and that is why it is commonly labeled with the political term "communism."

As simple as that, the characteristics of a communist totalitarian regime are identical to those of a regime which, in order to temporarily hide its true colors, becomes identified with the "popular democracy," because its true name has fallen out of favor.

But there is only one democracy; it is the democracy of men such as Carter, Carlos Andres Perez, Carazo Odio, Rafael Caldera, Jose Figueres and others who are capable of shedding a tear over losing the elections and then saying: "This hurts me, but the people have chosen, and of course I accept their decision."

These words, which in this case were uttered by Carter, had a strong impact on me from the first instant they appeared on the AFP teletype, because in them lies the true essence of democracy: there is no one nobler than the man who accepts his defeat because he is aware that such is the decision the people have made in their secret vote, free from coercion. There is also no one nobler than the victorious man who extends a hand to his defeated adversary, gives him a comforting embrace and says: "See you at the next election."

An endemic disease among totalitarian regimes (no matter what their grammatical disguise) has been the belief that they will last indefinitely; the failure to give others, who are also humans, the opportunity to live, to feel, to think, to express themselves, so that the people can choose who will govern them. This is an endemic and recurring illness, but never permanent. Because everything must come to an end; ideas that were praiseworthy are now ridiculous or frightening, but they are no longer the absolute truth.

Life is evolution, and within that constant evolution even political ideologies become obsolete one day, because they were written for another period in space and time.

Democracy is not a political ideology; it is believing in a just manner of distributing political power among different ideological movements by determining the degree of their popular acceptance as measured at the polls, giving all parties the same conditions of access to the means of communication, financing, transportation, etc. that the government party enjoys. A dictatorship, or narcissistic state, does not believe in these methods because the lifelong representation of the people is something it has appropriated for itself. For this reason it tries to confuse people, using pejorative adjectives to describe that democratic process and those who believe in it.

A single democracy!

The march toward democracy will not cease! Long live the unity of all democratic forces! Fatherland and Liberty! Nicaragua will once again be a republic!

REVOLUTION SCORED FOR OPPOSING EXPRESSIONS OF PLURALISM

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 8 Nov 80 p 2

/Editorial/

/Text/ Dona Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, on the occasion of the well-deserved official tribute to Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Cardenal, made public a patriotic and timely call for unity, which under the present circumstances is particularly significant.

We believe that the main problem to be solved in order to restore unity among Nicaraguans is that of overcoming the dualism into which we have fallen. On the one hand we have an almost exemplary revolution in terms of its constitutional structures, its laws, its concern for social justice, its international position of non-alignment, and all of its basic policies: it claims to be pluralist, to respect the freedom of expression and of union involvement; it has a mixed socioeconomic system; it is democratic, or in the process of democratization, etc.

However, like Janus, the revolution has another face. Its spokesmen and organs of communication as well as its leaders, in statements and analyses, label as reactionaries, biased enemies of the revolution and/or counterrevolutionaries, anyone who promotes or exercises pluralism, anyone who criticizes or simply manifests his freedom of expression. They label "divisionists" anyone who dissents; enemies of the working class anyone who organizes unions freely; enemies of the people those who are not communists. That is, we have a political traffic light that turns green to signal "go," and our leaders tell us: "It's red! Stop!" And often they give tickets for the infraction.

There is no single political line, but two contradictory philosophies.

LA PRENSA is attacked every day. Why? Isn't the freedom of expression one of the conquests of our revolution?

LA PRENSA is part of the revolution, precisely because it was and is free, and because the revolution triumphed by fighting for freedom. It is revolutionary because it exercises its right to criticize; by exercising that right it is with the revolution, but not with its mistakes. Would we be with the people if they refused to allow us to publish the people's complaints, demands or criticisms?

The dualism which is used to judge LA PRENSA is that which is suffered by the entire nation in all major aspects. Our socioeconomic, system is mixed; our production is based on socialized labor and on private enterprise labor; our nationalism is Sandinist; but one or another commander rectifies the legal truth and affirms that the Nicaraguan people consist of just one class. Professionals, clergy, businessmen, farmers, bourgois people, intellectuals, etc. (including the Government Junta, which is made up of businessmen and bourgeois people) are expelled from nationality. They are pariahs. What are we, then? Nationalists or classists? Who defines us, Sandino the Nicaraguan or Lenin the Russian? The law or the statements of those in power?

This disconcerting duality is apparent in many areas: the labor movement, the indigenous communities, the problem of continuous expropriations not against Somozists but against those who have all their "papers" in order, etc. . . .

There is no unity of methods, and that hinders us from moving forward together.

For Nicaragua to recover its ability for peaceful coexistence, those contradictory extremes must be reduced to unity.

The legal side of the country and the real side should not be hostile toward each other; they should not contradict each other. The revolution should have a single face!

JUNTA MEMBER HASSAN SAYS REVOLUTION NEEDS TRUE CHRISTIANS

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 23 Oct 80 p 9

[Text] This is a revolution in which the vast majority of the participants are both Christians and revolutionaries, Dr Moises Hassan Morales, a member of the JGRN [National Reconstruction Government Junta], said in a press conference. Also present at the conference were Dr Arturo Cruz of the JGRN, and delegates going on a mission to visit Rome.

Speaking authoritatively and with great self-possession, Moises Hassan defined the true Christians as those who have chosen the option of the poor, and they must be revolutionaries.

In that way, added the JGRN member, there is no conflict between being a Christian and being a revolutionary, because they are one and the same thing. A person who cares about his fellow human beings is both a true Christian and a revolutionary.

There are of course other people who call themselves Christians, and who are against the revolution. Without trying to be overly schematic, said Hassan, we could almost divide them into those Christians who, because of their ignorance and lack of education, are ensnared by lies and rumors that have for a long time ceased to have any foundation. Naturally, with these people the only thing that can be done is to try to educate them so that they can emerge from their errors and learn to discern what true Christianity is. This sort of individual is a Christian, and is not with the revolution.

Then there are others who claim to be Christians who, in complete cynicism, call on God at their meetings, which they did not do in the past. These are cynics who now go about beating their breast while at the same time they are exploiting their workers in their farms and their factories. They call themselves Christians, but of course they are not.

These are people whose political and economic ambitions clash with the option of the poor. They hypocritically hold on to Christianity, using it as a bastion from which they can fight, as a rallying point to combat the revolution and to try to lead astray the true Christians who are confused, of whom I spoke earlier.

But they are not Christians; for them the only gods are money and power. They are not Christians even though they may beat their breast, although they go to mass every Sunday, receive the sacraments, go to confession, even though they may shout the name of God and praise Him in their meetings. But these people are not Christians.

As for the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] document, Dr Moises Hassan said that it was not an ideological document, nor a thorough study, and it should not be misinterpreted as such, as it has been. It is an invitation to Christians who want to take part in the revolutionary process; it holds out a hand to those who are in error.

TUNNERMAN INSISTS EDUCATION BE INDEPENDENT OF POLITICS

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 31 Oct 80 pp 1, 12

[Text] Religious education is the responsibility of parents, and freedom of religion is a fundamental principle of all education at all levels. The classroom is the right place for a discussion of all ideologies, but partisan politics is not suitable there, the minister of education, Dr Carlos Tunnerman Bernheim, said on Thursday, 30 October.

He went on to say that freedom of religion is guaranteed by the fundamental statute of rights of the Nicaraguan people.

When he was asked if Marxist-Leninist education was, as has been claimed, a "sine qua non" condition for students taking exams, Dr Tunnerman said: "That is not true."

Students should know, he said, what Marxism, socialism, or liberalism mean, as well as the significance of other political movements. That is important because it is part of their general education. But this should not be interpreted as meaning that a specific political orientation is being imposed.

The Case of BARRICADA and NUEVO DIARIO

Concerning the requirements made by some teachers at some educational centers that their students buy BARRICADA and NUEVO DIARIO, the minister said: On this issue the ministry has said that references to many of the topics being debated in the curriculum, especially in the area of the social sciences, can be found in BARRICADA and other news publications.

In developing these programs, the ministry offered the possibility of using these publications, but their use is not compulsory.

What the teachers are doing is telling their students that, on a particular issue, there is an article that appeared in a given paper or a speech by a revolutionary commander or member of the government junta, which clarifies the government's position on that issue, and then the professors tell the students about the existence of that material.

It is also my understanding that if the students find articles in LA PRENSA which are of interest for their class debates, the students will use that material. It depends on the current issues which are being discussed at the time.

On being told that professors were requiring that their students buy a particular paper, the minister of education said:

The truth is that if there are professors who tell their students to buy this or that paper, that would not be right.

What the professors should do is tell the students where they can find the source, but offering them various possibilities so that they will learn to do research.

The Issue of Christian Education

In speaking of the concern expressed by parents who are asking for a Christian education for their children, he said:

"Religious education is the responsibility of each family; that is, each parent gives his children the education that he or she considers appropriate. The state provides a secular, nonreligious education. Still, in Nicaragua we have established that religious schools have full freedom to provide their own education, and that is being done. And in Nicaragua the Sandinist revolution has guaranteed, through the fundamental rights of the Nicaraguan people, the right to choose between private or public education. Religious education can be given in private schools, but in public schools the state can not become involved with any religion, because of the principle of freedom of religion.

"But beyond that," said Dr Tunnerman, "the state is giving subsidies to a number of religious schools, and these subsidies do not prevent them from continuing to give the Christian education which they have traditionally imparted."

GOVERNMENT RALLY RAPPED--One of the reasons stated by some government spokesmen for banning the Mandaime rally scheduled by the Nicaraguan Democratic Movement was that it was absurd to engage in political rallies when the country was getting ready for the sugar harvest and when the revolution's most urgent task was economic reactivation. However, a large and costly political rally is being organized for today with the support of the Sandinist National Liberation Front Party. This rally has been widely announced in the state-owned media and will cost the taxpayers and people who-knows-how-many cordobas and manhours. This rally will also interrupt the rhythm of work in the public sector. Within the pluralism that the government allegedly respects and within the most elemental sense of fairness, what is denied to one party must be denied to the other and the reasons given to one party for this must be given to the other. Justice can make unity prevail better than rallies. [Text] [PA261631 Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 19 Nov 80 p 2]

DEPARTMENTAL CABINET INAUGURATED IN OCOTAL--(ANN)--On Saturday the junta of the Government of National Reconstruction held its first departmental cabinet meeting. Similar events will be organized periodically to bring together the ministers of state and authorities of the various places where such events are held. The departmental cabinets will function somewhat like consulative councils and they will be comprised of the ministers of state and the local government juntas. Daniel Ortega, commander of the revolution and member of the government junta, said on opening the first departmental cabinet, which was held in the city of Ocotal in the central part of the country, that these councils must help to jointly confront the problems of the various departments and municipalities of Nicaragua. During the first cabinet meeting held, each of the municipal representatives explained his town's most pressing problems, especially in connection with [word indistinct], the supply of staples, schools and other such issues. They also expressed the organized people's willingness to carry out voluntary work to save the central government's resources and help the Sandinist people's revolution. STATE BANANA ENTERPRISES CREATED--The Nicaraguan Government has created the state banana enterprise which will be in charge of relations with the U.S. transnational Standard Fruit Company and national producers. The information was revealed during a meeting held by members of the junta of the Government of National Reconstruction with Nicaraguan banana labor leaders who had reported on the extremely poor salaries and living conditions existing on plantations controlled by the transnational company and by private owners. Government junta member Sergio Ramirez said that a new contract is being negotiated with the U.S. concern which will continue exporting the fruit because it controls the international market. He said that the Nicaraguan state concern will be a branch of the Agricultural Development Ministry and will have a production council on which labor will be represented. SALAZAR SLAYING--Last night the Interior Ministry issued a communique stating that engineer Jorge Salazar, president of the Union of Nicaraguan Agricultural-Livestock Producers [UPANIC] and vice president of the Higher Council of Private Enterprise, had been killed in a clash with state security forces. This tragic report has caused uneasiness and resentment in the private sector and among friends of the late business leader. When Salazar was killed he was accompanied by another person, who is being held by the state security forces and, who will be presented to the press to establish responsibility in this thorny case which has affected a large part of the Nicaraguan people. Jorge Salazar was considered a leader of the private enterprise sector, and on several recent occasions he acted as mediator between the government and the private sector during difficult situations. Several opposition parties and representatives of the private sector have widely discussed the death of Jorge Salazar, who left the Nicaraguan Development Institute at 1500 yesterday to keep a date with death. He was to have attended a UPANIC meeting, but he never arrived. Fate was waiting for him near El Crucero. [Excerpts] [PA190051 Managua Radio Corporacion in Spanish 1700 GMT 18 Nov 80]

ARCE ON REAGAN ELECTION--Madrid 12 Nov (EFE)--Sandinist commander Bayardo Arce said here today that "Reagan's election as U.S. president has spurred on the more reactionary Latin American sectors." He made this statement on his arrival in Madrid at the head of the Nicaraguan delegation that will participate in the Socialist International Congress which will open tomorrow. Commenting on Reagan's triumph, the Sandinist revolutionary commander emphasized: "Reagan's statements during his electoral campaign about Central America, and Nicaragua in particular, have encouraged the more reactionary sectors in the area." Commenting on whether the new U.S. president will carry out the threats which were made during his electoral campaign, regarding Nicaragua, Bayardo Arce recalled: "Spokesmen of the U.S. administration have emphasized that there is a great difference between what is said during the electoral campaign and the later presidential behavior." The Sandinist commander said that Reagan's election will not chang Nicaragua's policies toward the United States. "Nicaragua's policies, he said, do not depend on whoever may be ruling in the United States." With regard to Manley's defeat in Jamaica and its effects on the Central American and Caribbean area, Bayardo said: "There is a trend to the right." "Imperialism, he said, has not lost ground in other continents and has centered its attention now on Latin America." Commander Bayardo Arce will head the Nicaraguan delegation that will participate at the Socialist International Congress in Madrid. [Text] [PA142324 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2038 GMT 12 Nov 80]

DAILY CRITICIZES CARTER'S OAS SPEECH

PY261722 Asuncion PATRIA in Spanish 21 Nov 80 p 5

[Editorial: "The Swan Song?"]

[Text] According to commentaries released in the wake of President Carter's speech at the OAS inaugural session, there was surprise over the fact that the outgoing U.S. President referred almost exclusively to the human rights topic and his government's position on it as if this were the only important thing within the complex mechanism of inter-American relations.

Attention was also elicited by Carter's almost desperate announcement that the human rights policy, as he conceives it, will not end with his administration. He expressed hope that under Mr Reagan the issue may continue to be handled in the same manner.

On the same night of Carter's speech, a radio commentator said in the United States that "Mr Carter erroneously thought his defeat and Reagan's triumph had aroused jubilation in those Latin American countries which have been permanently harassed on the human rights issue by the Democratic administration and reacted with threatening anger, which is not suitable for a President of the United States."

The commentator added: "There has been no such jubilation." But a sense of relief because it is reasonably believed that the human rights policy will continue under Mr Reagan's administration, but stripped or Mr Carter's semireligious blind fanaticism and focused on a realistic political criterion which will permit the United States to recover the good will of those friends and allies it has lost because of Mr Carter's irritating way of conducting the question of human rights."

We believe that the commentator is as right as he can be on the issue since, after all, Mr Carter's human rights policy, despite being so persistent and sometimes impertinent, has neither succeeded in "destabilizing" one single Latin American country nor in promoting a "democratization" which would have pleased the U.S. radicals--except in the case of Nicaragua, whose "democratization" is inevitably taking it to communism and to indulgence in rehearsals for becoming a second Cuba by promoting terrorism abroad, as it did in our country be causing Somoza's death, and in Nicaragua itself by machinegunning to death the most prominent leader of the democratic opposition still remaining in the country.

Now, we repeat that the only reaction elicited in Latin America by the departure of Mr Carter from the White House and the installation of a new, more mature and conscientious leadership, which will be that of Mr Reagan, is a sense of relief and nothing more, relief because, above all, we are interested in strengthening the Western world, because only a strong West could force greater prudence and caution in the overwhelming advance of communism in the world. At this point, it is proper to repeat an idea expressed by Kissinger in his memoirs--that is, that the USSR did not have to follow the "divide to conquer" principle, which has been observed by all imperialist nations since early in history, because the West, through Carter's human rights policy, has served up its own divisions to the USSR on a silver platter.

A suitable summing up of these 4 years in which the West's road to hell was paved with good intentions is the conclusion of the above commentator, who more or less said that in his last and almost violent speech at the OAS, Mr Carter gave proof of what he thought the President of the United States should be: a missionary. He also gave proof of what he never wanted to be or never could be: a statesman who leads the most powerful free country of the world which, under his government, lost friends and allies, permitted communist expansion and forced his country into a status of military inferiority regarding aggressive and imperialistic communism.

Furthermore, it was not the Latin American votes, but those of his fellow citizens which caused the spectacular defeat of both Carter, his party and his policy.

PAPER REFUTES HUMAN RIGHTS ACCUSATIONS

PY262301 Asuncion PATRIA in Spanish 25 Nov 80 p 24

[Article by Gil Gonzales: "Never Has Communism Been Given so Many Facilities as With Carter"]

[Text] Marxism--which is remarkably well organized as far as propaganda is concerned, and which many times has incredible influence with organizations and persons seemingly democratic and above reproach--has catagorized Paraguay with the countries that allegedly violate human rights. The Marxists have bundled us together with Chile, Uruguay, Argentina, Brazil, Somoza's Nicaragua, Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador. They tied up the bundle and presented it to the supreme court, which was to pronounce us guilty with its usual incorruptible impartiality.

At the time the court was made up of countries of Marxist leanings. Those who feel friendly toward Fidel Castro and those who, in order to disguise their lack of decisiveness toward the Soviet Union, had decided to fight the anticommunist nations under the overstimulated pretext of demanding respect for human rights.

Never has a U.S. Administration been infiltrated so much by Marxists as the one which is now at the end of its mandate by virtue of the overwhelming, crushing decision of the U.S. people. Never has a U.S. Government evidenced so much ignorance of the Latin American status quo and never has it handled its traditional friends in such a negative manner or given so many facilities to communist infiltration in the decisionmaking mechanisms of the free countries.

This infiltration has been so deep that they even tied the CIA's hands to the absurd extent that one of the most outstanding members of the Senate proposed that the CIA be asked to report in advance on the operations it was planning to carry out abroad, even the most secret ones. Can you imagine the CIA, the investigative and espionage organization which is supposed to continually guard the security of the union and preclude the plans that communist powers may have against the U.S. allies, having to disclose its secret plans before implementing them? If a proposal of this kind is not the offspring of a procommunist, then we have to give up because it is obvious that we know nothing of politics.

But let us go back to our original subject and refute the false image of Paraguay created by the Marxists and the para-Marxists. We would like to say categorically that long before Carter, long before a lady who calls herself chairman of the Paraguayan human rights commission began her suspicious trips abroad where she must have certainly established decisive contacts--long before all that--President Stroessner's government had initiated efforts for the promotion of human rights.

We are not affected by whether Carter remains in government. Neither do we care whether Mr Reagan changes the U.S. policy toward Latin America. Our policy does not depend on this. We are not tied to instructions from some fellow abroad. This does not mean that we dispise them; it simply means that our policy is our own.

Obviously we expect the good will of friendly governments, but we will never accept being put on the defendant's bench and having them appoint themselves supreme judges. We favor solidarity and cooperation among the peoples, but this does not mean that we will let our fate be decided by others. Thus, having practiced, having exercised respect for human rights, we will continue doing so from the broad viewpoint which President Stroessner has of this issue.

ARMED FORCES ORGANIZATION LAW PROMULGATED

PY270221 Asuncion ABC COLOR in Spanish 26 Nov 80 p 12

The organization in times of war is the same as in times of peace, except that troops and equipment must be in accordance with the table of organization and equipment for times of war. [as published]

The commander in chief of the armed forces is the president of the republic, but he can delegate the command to a general. The administrative and judicial functions of the armed forces are carried out by the National Defense Ministry.

IHRC CHARGES REJECTED--Washington, 23 Nov (EFE, LATIN)--Paraguay categorically rejected today the charges made by the IHRC general report against its government. The general report is now under study by the OAS annual assembly in Washington, charges in the document directed against Paraguay are the least serious. According to the report, the human rights situation in Paraguay is definitely much less serious than in other countries of the southern cone. The IHRC is only asking the Paraguayan Government to make an effort to improve the situation. Senator Ezequiel Gonzalez Alsina spoke at the OAS representing Paraguay rejecting every charge contained in the document against his country. Gonzalez Alsina also accused the Paraguayan Human Rights Commission of being "biased" and politicized and of pretending to use the IHRC for its partisan interests. Ezequiel Gonzales said that the IHRC report on Paraguay states that his government has refused an on-the-site inspection by the commission but that in reality his government is only using its right to set the date for the instpection. He added that the report "is really mild but this does not mean it is free from error, falsehood and arbitrary conclusions. He attributed these errors to sources of information for the IHRC which based its study on individual accusations. He also said that recent times have seen the emergence of persons who make a profession out of levying charges. Gonzalez Alsina spoke for 1 and 1/2 hours to answer in detail practically every IHRC charge. [Text] [PY241727 Asuncion ABC COLOR in Spanish 24 Nov 80 p 13]

STATE REQUIRED ID--The police public relations department has released a communique recommending that the population carry their identification cards at all times in order to answer any questions asked by officials. The communique states: The chief of police, through the police public relations department, requests the special cooperation of the population in fulfilling their civic obligations by carrying their identification cards at all times in order to identify themselves whenever required by the police. In this regard, the required documents are--for men: police identification card or military discharge card; for women: police identification card, voting identification document or marriage certificate. For foreigners: immigration card, identification card of country of origin and passport. The communique also states that tourists must carry the identification card of the country of origin and the card to enter the country issued by the Customs Department. This recommendation is made because the police dragnet operation continues in various parts of the country and the population is required to show identification cards. People not carrying any identification are detained. [Text] [PY262354 Asuncion ABC COLOR in Spanish 22 Nov 80 p 14]

YPFB NEW GAS PIPELINES, OTHER PROJECTS DETAILED

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 10 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] Four projects related to the policy of replacement of consumption of heavy hydrocarbons will be inaugurated by the YPFB [Bolivian Government Oil Deposits].

They are three LPG bottling plants in Potosi, Tupiza and Trinidad and a gas pipeline between Sucre and Palca.

YPFB executives said that it will carry out these types of projects to make the use of LPG easier for the people.

The Tupiza bottling plant was built with YPFB funds in two calendar months.

It will supply LPG to the southern mining centers of Quechisla and Telamayu.

It cost about 1.2 million Bolivian pesos.

The demand for LPG in Tupiza has increased about 40 percent a month.

The storage capacity of the tanks at the Tupiza plant is about 40 metric tons.

The bottling plant has been designed to expand its capacity about 300 or 400 percent in the future.

The Potosi bottling plant has a storage capacity of 120 metric tons and can fill 1,600 containers per hour using four automatic filling machines. It was assembled in 85 working days under the direct administration of YPFB at a cost of 2.8 million Bolivian pesos.

It has receiving areas for tank trucks, parking lots and facilities to handle the LPG tank cars.

The plant will supply the city of Potosi and its geographic area of influence.

YPFB technicians have estimated that annual demand will grow about 71 percent; this is considered the highest in the country.

Another bottling plant will be inaugurated in Trinidad. It will have a capacity of 40 metric tons and can fill 120 containers per hour.

Its cost was about 5 million Bolivian pesos.

For the assembly of the plant, YPFB moved a tank weighing 16 tons from Cochabamba to Puerto Villarroel by trailer truck.

The tank was towed on the river from Puerto Villarroel to Trinidad.

The LPG plant is supplied by four tank trucks with a transportation capacity of 4.5 metric tons; they use the Santa Cruz-Trinidad highways.

YPFB bought four tank barges that have a transportation capacity of 35 metric tons each to use in the rainy season.

Gas Pipeline

Due to departmental events in Potosi, the Sucre-Palca gas pipeline will be inaugurated today. It is 114 kilometers long and can carry 7.3 million cubic feet of LPG per day.

It was constructed by YPFB in 8 months and is the continuation of the gas pipeline between Monteagudo and Sucre.

It cost about $2,995,000.

The gas pipeline ends in Palca, Potosi, but has by-pass valves that will supply LPG to the Karachipampa Polymetallurgical Complex and to a National Electricity Enterprise plant.

By the last quarter of 1981, YPFB plans to supply about 5.37 million cubic feet of natural gas per day to the metallurgical complexes in La Palca and Karachipampa. There will also be about 820,000 cubic feet per day for other uses and needs.

This gas pipeline was constructed by the YPFB industrial department with Bolivian personnel.

PLANS FOR ALCOHOL FUEL GAIN IMPORTANCE

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 8 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] Santa Cruz, 7 Nov—The possibility of using alcohol as a fuel in the short run is leading to some important contacts among industrialists, the Development Corporation, the Cane-Growers Federation and even the Eastern Agricultural Council in this district.

A preliminary exchange of ideas took place at the UNAGRO [expansion unknown] Santa Cruz sugar mill in Mineros. The industrial installation in Santa Cruz could produce at least 50 percent more alcohol but first it will have to study its application as a substitute for gasoline.

A few days ago, technicians of the Development Corporation, the Eastern Agricultural Council, the Cane-Growers Federation and other representatives made a general analysis of this possibility and its advantages.

According to Arturo Cronembold, president of the Development Corporation, an analysis of the idea will be made. He said: "Once there are frames of reference, a forum will be held to which technicians of YPFB [Bolivian Government Oil Deposits] and other sugar agroindustrial organizations will be invited in order to exchange ideas."

Agreement with Brazil

The Santa Cruz Corporation signed an agreement with the Engineers Association of the University of Sao Paulo (Brazil) a few days ago for studies on the production of methanol in this district. This step was taken after repeated announcements by YPFB about the decline in the production of hydrocarbons and with plans for the future.

The problem is not now, according to the people who began work on this idea, but in the near future. It is necessary to have definite studies on the use of methanol in the production of alcohol for automobile fuel.

New Stage

According to Enrique Roda Daza, president of the Santa Cruz Cane-Growers Federation, the meeting promoted by UNAGRO executives means a new stage for the suppliers of raw material. Until now, the Santa Cruz mill seemed to be most interested in studies on methanol although such a possibility has been mentioned in other mills. There was even a demonstration in this city showing that present vehicles can run on alcohol.

The program, which was made available to the press by Minister Tourreilles, represents the government's response to the current world energy situation, which has been aggravated recently by the war in the Persian Gulf area. It is "a program calling for the balanced use of traditional energy sources, complemented by the development of nontraditional sources and with suitable energy conservation standards."

This program does not rule out the adoption of other emergency steps that might be ordered to deal with the current situation until the problem of normal crude oil supplies can be resolved.

The following are the measures ordered yesterday:

Immediate Measures

Article 1. The public sector is hereby ordered to reduce its consumption of all types of fuels by at least 10 percent. Public institutions and agencies shall, within 5 days and within their sphere of action, stipulate the necessary measures for bringing about this reduction.

Strategic Measures

Article 2. The Ministry of Industry and Energy is hereby commissioned to review the system of sanctions and deadlines stipulated in Decree 214/79 of 17 April 1979, which empowers it to regulate the adoption and implementation of the industrial sector's energy rationalization program.

HEAVY CRUDE TO DOMINATE FUTURE OIL INDUSTRY

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 6 Nov 80 Sec 1 p 23

[Article by C.R. Chavez]

[Text] Venezuela has rationally programmed its petroleum and petrochemicals development over the next 5 years in the Energy Development Chapter of the Sixth Plan of the Nation, the final version of which will be ready in the next 50 days, said Mr Jose Ignacio Moreno Leon, the deputy minister of energy and mines, in setting forth the general and specific outlines of the energy sector plan.

"Our sector plan," Moreno Leon said, "comprises a diagnosis, overall objectives, strategies and policies for developing the petroleum, mining and energy subsectors, which according to the arrangement established by the Federal Government come under the planning and control of the Ministry of Energy and Mines as the sector's policy-making body.

"In the petroleum subsector," Deputy Minister Moreno Leon added, "although it is true that the development of the oil industry alone will not guarantee the development of the whole country (which will continue to depend largely on oil over the next few years), we have decided that the development and growth of the oil sector is indispensable, nevertheless."

Moreover, there has been a downward trend in the production of light and medium crudes, in contrast to the rising trend in the output of heavy crudes.

"We also have to boost our proven reserves so that we have at least 15 years output of the various kinds of crude, and we can also see excessive growth in the consumption of fuels, especially hydrocarbons, on our domestic market."

Because of all this, our basic goals must be to boost output potential to around 2.8 million barrels a day, in order to maintain the average level of production for the duration of the plan at about 2.2 million barrels, to intensify efforts in the production, enhancement and marketing of heavy crudes and to shift consumption trends on the domestic hydrocarbons market.

The following are the main numbers in the subsector's overall investment program: 13.7 billion bolivars for exploration; 37.8 billion for production; 16.05 billion for refining; 16 billion for the Orinoco Oil Belt, and 3.5 billion for a petrochemicals industry. Together with the investments on the domestic market and other categories, we get a figure of 90 billion bolivars that the industry has been guaranteed through a continuation of the self-financing policy.

One of the leading projects in the oil subsector is the research and development program in the Orinoco Oil Belt, which will begin under the Sixth Plan with investments of more than 16 billion bolivars. This is regarded as one of the oil sector's top priority projects because it aims at boosting output potential and offsetting the decline in production in traditional areas.

The programs to be undertaken in the belt under the Sixth Plan include an increase in exploration activities to develop a comprehensive assessment of these deposits of heavy crudes and the development of 125,000 barrels a day of enhanced crude in the Cerro Negro-Cogollar area of southern Monagas State. Infrastructure projects and facilities for the enhancement of these heavy crudes are expected to begin going up in 1983-84, with an eye towards initiating production in early 1988. In addition, the production capacity of southern Anzoategui State is slated to stand at 50,000 barrels a day of nonenhanced commercial crude by late 1983 and 75,000 barrels a day by 1988.

OIL INDUSTRY EFFECT ON STATE OF ZULIA ANALYZED

Caracas RESUMEN in Spanish 19 Oct 80 pp 63-66

[Article by Gustavo Coronel: "The Oil Industry Is Aiding the Urban and Regional System in Zulia"]

[Text] Without attempting to deny the frequent disorderly, unplanned and at times impoverishing urban growth caused by the appearance and early development of oil in the eastern and western parts of the country, we must consider the other side of the coin, namely, the advent of the oil communities, with their planned growth and relatively high quality of life. The "ucales" should have served as an example for the surrounding oil towns, but they did not; yet this cannot be blamed solely on the oil industry, but should be attributed partially to the very meager education of the average Venezuelan. As a matter of fact, today, 60 years after the advent of the first oil communities, many Venezuelans are still living under extremely neglected conditions in Lagunillas, San Timoteo, El Tigre and other oil towns located alongside the most organized oil communities. The extreme abandonment, however, is not so much a problem of poverty as it is one of improper priority attached to the basic necessities. For example, we observe that in many underprivileged dwellings there are not bathrooms, but there is a color television set, and that there is only one room for three or four persons, but there is a late-model car at the door. This situation is in contrast to what may be noted in the oil communities, which have begun by building the bathrooms and bedrooms before purchasing television sets and cars. What is even more important, the oil communities are built around the school, whereas the oil towns have grown up around the saloon and the cockpit.

Those who have been and are living in the oil communities are Venezuelans too, but Venezuelans with a different attitude and mentality. Privileged, perhaps, but in the sense of having decided early on that their path to progress included the school and the home, and not the gambling house or irresponsible parenthood. To put it briefly, the oil workers has, essentially, been a good citizen.

Perhaps we can illustrate this interesting interrelationship of the oil industry and the environment with a brief analysis of a typical oil zone.

The Eastern Shore of Lake Maracaibo: A. Main Features

A classic example of influence, both good and bad, by the oil industry on the surrounding area is on the eastern shore of Lake Maracaibo, nowadays a major interurban complex which extends from the settlement of Altagracia in the north to that of Mene Grande in the south. The three districts which comprise it: Baralt, Bolivar and Miranda, have observed their urban population rise from about 85,000 inhabitants in 1950 to some 280,000 in 1971; whereas the rural population has remained essentially constant at about 60,000 inhabitants over the same 21-year interval. By 1977, the area's total population was estimated as approximately 400,000 inhabitants; 30 percent of this population is engaged in agricultural and livestock activities, and only 5 percent in oil activities, while the tertiary sector of the economy is what essentially occupies the rest. A distressing 35 percent of the population is virtually illiterate, and only 14 percent have finished secondary school; which is, unfortunately, rather close to the national averages.

Whereas, in 1971, 30 percent of the oil workers were earning wages in excess of 2,000 bolivares per month, only 7 percent of the remaining productive sectors exceeded that level. However, it must be added that it is difficult to ascertain the real level of workers' income in rather unorganized sectors, because the vast majority of those workers do not declare, much less pay income tax.

1. The Communications Infrastructure

The transportation in the area was essentially by lake until the arrival of the oil industry, which built roads and then petrolized highways to connect the wells with the collection stations and transportation terminals. During the 1960's, the bridge over the lake, the Machiques-La Fria highway and the final sections of the very important Lara-Zulia route were built. During the 1970's, the excellent intercommunal route connecting the leading populated centers of the eastern shore of the lake was constructed. In general, it may be said that the first class road system in this area has excellent features. The same cannot be said of the secondary road system and that near the coast, which poses chronic problems of insufficient maintenance, cave-ins and problems stemming from the inconsistency of the soil which serves as its foundation.

At the same time, the area has 18 lake and river ports, six of which are used exclusively for oil. Only the port of Maracaibo is large enought from the standpoint of use by merchant vessels, and it is considered desirable to establish another one in the southern area of the lake, at Palmarito.

The area has three secondary airports: Oro Negro, Bachaquero and Lagunillas; all three maintained essentially by the oil industry. The best one is Bachaquero, which has been recently repaired by MARAVEN [a subsidiary of PETROVEN].

2. The Services Infrastructure

The most important source of water in the area is the Pueblo Viejo reservoir, with a maximum capacity for supplying 2,500 liters per second. In more recent years, the Maticora dam has been incorporated in the northern section. In general, 60 percent of the population is served by waterworks. The oil industry has built plants for sewage treatment in Lagunillas, Bachaquero and Tia Juana. The European engineers who have built those plants are surprised by the high per capita water consumption in the area: some 700-800 liters per person daily (over triple the European standard), as well as by the indiscriminate use of detergents. The sewer system is distressing. The large populated centers of Cabimas and Ciudad Ojeda have less than 40 percent of the town served by the system. Industrial waste has traditionally polluted Lake Maracaibo, and only the oil industry has made an effort to prevent this infortunate situation, as Euro Fuenmayor aptly notes (EL NACIONAL, 24 September 1980).

The electric power is already in short supply, and, in particular, rather unreliable. There are hundreds or thousands of illegal taps, and for water and gas as well; but this seems to be an indivisible part of the idiosyncracies of the area's residents. The civil and military authorities have never been able or willing to arrange things properly. The total legal subscribers to the electrical service on the eastern shore is a very small percentage of the total residents of the area.

As for the gas service, it is incipient, and still depends almost exclusively on the supply provided by the oil companies; although the vast majority of taps are illegal and pose very serious risks for the population, which apparently would rather risk its life than do things properly. Moreover, natural gas is urgently needed by the petrochemical industry, the Paraguana refineries and the oil-bearing deposits, which must be rejuvenated; and hence the rationalization of the consumption of this hydrocarbon has become doubly necessary. At the present time, a municipal gas company is installing, on its own initiative, a domestic gas system to serve the town of Cabimas.

3. The Social Infrastructure

Education in the area is typified by a high percentage of enrollment on the elementary level, with 85 percent of the potential candidates, and a modest 50 percent of the potential candidates enrolled on the secondary level. The average number of pupils per classroom in elementary schools is 40, which is considered high.

The hospital services are adequate. There are state hospitals and private clinics throughout the entire area. In Cabimas, 90 percent of the population receives reasonable medical care. There are in the area two general hospitals, three health centers and several clinics run by the oil companies, as well as many private clinics.

The community recreation centers are virtually nonexistent outside of the oil communities. The hotels are of good quality, but there is a very serious shortage of rooms owing to the great expansion of the oil industry. Good restaurants are very scarce, and concentrated in the area of Ciudad Ojeda-Lagunillas.

B. The Oil-Producing Areas and the Future Regulation of the Lake's Eastern Shore

As we have observed, the living conditions on the eastern shore of the lake are not so good as those in the oil communities of the same area; but, what is very important, they are not at all worse than those prevailing in the neglected zones of the nonoil areas. It is important to state this because their neglected status has very often been attributed to the influence of the nearby oil industry. It is obvious that the Venezuelan in Cabimas and Ciudad Ojeda does not live worse than the Venezuelan in 23 de Enero, Petare, and the outskirts of Valencia, Barquisimeto or Los Teques. It is a phenomenon that is not directly related to the oil industry, but rather to an attitude toward life. In Gramoven, for example, there is no oil, but its residents live under worse conditions than those of the Venezuelan in Caripito or Valle la Pascua.

This being the case, the oil industry has delineated extensive areas of petroliferous interest on the eastern shore of the lake, many of which already have residents. This, of course, limits the country's chances for extracting that resource, unless there is a reorganization of those populated centers. For this reason, the Ministry of Urban Development has devised a detailed study which outlines a Territorial Regulation Plan taking into account the aforementioned situation and proposing a better distribution and utilization of the physical space and existing resources. This study was made in cooperation with many public and private agencies of the region, such as Corpozulia, the University of Zulia, the Municipal Councils of the Eastern Shore of the Lake, the Zulian Planning Board and Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc., represented by MARAVEN.

1. The Oil Resources on the Lake's Eastern Shore

The cumulative oil production to date in this extensive area is about 5 billion barrels, and the oil industry estimates the remaining resources at some 8 billion recoverable barrels, a large percentage of which are located in the subsoil of the already inhabited areas. If we estimate a net income per barrel of about 40 bolivares, we are talking about net income for the country amounting to about 330 billion bolivares (at 1978 prices).

Now then, not all these resources can be extracted without troubling the residents. Actually, there is now little oil in the area that can be extracted using relatively simple primary recovery methods, such as pumping. The vast majority of those barrels will have to be produced with the use of secondary recovery, by steam injection. We are referring in particular to the oil-producing areas of Tia Juana, Lagunillas, Bachaquero, Cabimas and Ciudad Ojeda. For example, in the subsoil of populated sections of Cabimas and Ciudad Ojeda, there are oil resources with a net value to the country in excess of 30 billion bolivares. The problem lies in the fact that, in order to extract those resources, special facilities and steam injection plants must be built, and many wells must be drilled; all of which requires space.

Moreover, the operation is not devoid of environmental risks, because the work is done at high temperatures and with possible emissions of toxic gases. The same problem is posed in the existing oil camps. The subsoil of Lagunillas, Tia Juana and Bachaquero contains recoverable reserves of about 370 million barrels, with a net value to the nation of over 15 billion bolivares. Obviously, it is highly desirable and virtually necessary to find the means of reorganizing the areas on the lake's eastern shore, so that their resources may be used in an optimal manner.

2. Recommendations on the Existing Settlements

The determination of the areas of oil-producing interest and their optimal utilization has prompted MINDUR [Ministry of Urban Development] to make some strong recommendations, prominent among which are the following:

a. Cabimas and Ciudad Ojeda

Cabimas is an area of medium crude production, where it is still expected to recover over 2 billion barrels. Although much of this oil lies in areas of major urban development, where only partial recovery is possible, it is estimated that there are large resources in the suburban areas which could be frozen and relocated.

In Ciudad Ojeda, the population has spread rapidly to areas of major oil-producing interest. At the same time, the town is already surrounded by secondary recovery areas such as Tia Juana Principal, Tia Juana del Este and Lagunillas; and hence it is also advisable to freeze its growth. The urban section of Ciudad Ojeda contains accumulations of less heavy crude (20° API), which could be recovered using conventional methods.

b. Lagunillas

Its freezing and possible gradual relocation in areas designated as not being of oil-producing interest are recommended.

c. Bachaquero

Its immediate freezing, and the transfer of its population, over the medium term, to new urban centers to be created according to the study, are recommended.

d. Mene Grande

It requires a detailed study of the areas which need oil development and their harmonious integration with the agricultural and livestock industries.

3. A Future City

As alternatives for expansion toward nonoil producing areas, the study offers three main areas, all along the route from Lara to Zulia. The first is the so-called El Danto zone, at the intersection of the Lara-Zulia route and the road to Ciudad Ojeda. The second is El Menito, where the Lara-Zulia route intersects with the highway to Lagunillas; and the third is Sabana de la Plata, at the intersection of the Lara-Zulia route with the road leading from Punta Gorda.

Of these three alternatives, the study is inclined toward El Menito, for several reasons:

a. It does not interfere with the development of the areas of oil production interest.

b. It has suitable accesses.

c. It possesses very favorable soil and geomorphological features.

d. The land is owned by MARAVEN, a company which has cooperated actively in the study and which is willing to lend all its backing to the project.

e. It is located very close to the metropolitan area of Ciudad Ojeda.

f. It would have the airport very close by.

El Menito

Hence, El Menito would be the city of the future in the area, receiving the transferred population affected by oil development.

4. The Regulation of the Land

At the same time, the study demarcates the agricultural, livestock, forest, industrial, tourist-recreational, oil, mining and urban areas as follows:

Type	Area	% of the Total
Agricultural	200,000 hectares	27
Livestock	90,000 hectares	12
Forest	122,000 hectares	16
Industrial	3,500 hectares	1
Tourist	20,000 hectares	2
Oil	58,000 hectares	8
Mining	30,000 hectares	4
Urban	10,000 hectares	2
Protected Areas	190,000 hectares	28

5. Ranking of Populated Centers

The proposed reorganization would result in a center of first rank, Cabimas-Ciudad Ojeda; a couple of centers of second rank, Altagracia and Mene Grande; centers of third rank, in Santa Rita and San Timoteo; and centers of fourth rank, in Quisiro, El Consejo and El Venado, of an essentially agricultural and livestock nature.

This ranking will be backed by detailed studies on urban development, road systems, and socioeconomic, agricultural-livestock, water, fishing and industrial aspects.

C. How Will This Project Be Carried Out?

The study proposes to carry out this project through the creation of the Planning Board for the Eastern Shore of Lake Maracaibo, an entity which would supervise the regulation management and the development companies. The Planning Board would be comprised of representatives from MINDUR, MARN [Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources], MEM [Ministry of Energy and Mines], CORPOZULIA [Zulia Corporation], PDVSA [Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc], the chairman of the municipal council concerned, and the regulation manager (without vote).

The regulation management, set up by MINDUR, would execute the plans and would consist of the manager and his technical team, including oil consultants. The development companies would execute the various aspects of the project. This is an ambitious and unquestionably very expensive project which, at best, would be carried out over the medium and long term (12-15 years). It will require the good will of many people and agencies, but that good will is more than warranted, for two essential reasons:

a. It will give the lake's eastern shore a more rational appearance, enhancing the quality of life there;

b. It will give the nation hundreds of billions of additional bolivares, which would not materialize if this project were not be be carried out.

The technical and financial assistance which Venezuelan Petroleum is rendering and will continue to render for this extremely important project is further evidence of the determination of the Venezuelan oil industry to foster the harmonious development of all the economic and social activities in the regions wherein it is active.

CORPOVEN ENGINEERS SOLVE DRILLING PROBLEMS

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 6 Nov 80 Sec 2 p 22

/Text/ Two Venezuelan petroleum engineers, Alejandro Parra and Dirimo Chirinos, revealed the techniques that have allowed them to overcome the difficulties that have traditionally arisen in drilling through the so-called "shale layer," the part of the well whose depth varies from 12,000 to 18,000 feet (4,000 to 6,000 meters) and which is found above the hydrocarbon-producing limestone.

Parra and Chirinos are employed by the enterprise Corpoven S.A., a subsidiary of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. They reported on their experiences at the Second Latin American Congress on Drilling which was held in Mexico City last week.

They reported that until a year ago there was a myth that it was very difficult to drill through the "shale layer" (which consists of large masses similar to clay, whose thickness varies from 1,000 to 2,800 feet, or 300 to 900 meters), because it resisted drilling, or the equipment would become bogged down.

Among the 11 wells that have been drilled using these techniques successfully during the past year, is the deepest well ever drilled in Venezuela. It is 19,090 feet deep, or more than 6,000 meters.

Parra and Chirinos related their experiences to drilling engineers from nine other Latin American nations and observers from four European nations. They stressed the importance of a careful placing of the oil strings which line the well, the use of weight and the appropriate additives in the drilling mud, and the use of bits with teeth instead of diamond bits.

The techniques discovered by Parra and Chirinos are of interest not only in terms of science, but also in economic terms, because they can reduce from 28 to 13 days the amount of time required to drill through the "shale layers," which yields a net savings of approximately 1.2 million bolivars in the total cost of drilling each well.

The paper presented in Mexico by Venezuelans Parra and Chirinos describes the technique developed in Venezuela to drill through the Mito Juan-Colon shale layer in the western region of Venezuela. The paper also contains the results of drilling the wells at Sur del Lago, wells which penetrate down to the foundation.

This technique has been used successfully in Sur del Lago, Centro Lago and Urdaneta Garcia, on the west coast of Lake Maracaibo.

CARDON REFINERY CHANGES—Punto Fijo, Nov—Maraven has announced the completion of the electricity projects for its new alkylation plant at the Cardon Refinery. The projects are part of the programs involved in a change in refining patterns at the industrial complex. The note from Maraven indicates that the temporary electricity hookup for building the No 2 alkylation plant is ready. The work consisted of installing a 750 kilowatt transformer along with its feeder and distribution lines, the report adds. Work will soon begin on the offices for the technicians who will be in charge of the final project for the new alkylation plant. The hope is to complete all work by August 1981, the note sent by the Public Relations Department of Maraven at Cardon indicates in conclusion. NEW ORINOCO DRILLING METHODS—Venezuelan engineers have developed special techniques that are now being used to drill and complete the exploratory wells in the Orinoco Oil Belt, which are going to be enhanced by injecting water vapor. Pedro Martorano, an engineer with Lagoven, S.A., an affiliate of PETROVEN [Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc], outlined these experiments in Mexico City last week during the Second Latin American Drilling Congress. Unlike conventional wells, the high temperature steam used in thermal projects (up to 550 degrees Fahrenheit) can cause breakages, bends and expulsions in well piping and casing. Martorano explained that in the case of thermal wells the casing has to be anchored at the bottom of the well and then pulled sufficiently taut with the aid of the derrick or hydraulic jacks. The geometry of the hole must be as uniform and consistent as possible, to assure proper cementing. The cementing process, in turn, requires a high temperature additive with silica filler to minimize the risks of cement degradation because of the heat. OIL DRILLING METHOD—Venezuelan engineers Humberto Uzcategui and Jose Gregorio Tovar have succeeded in controlling abnormal breakage pressures in oil wells in eastern Venezuela. They personally outlined their experiments at the Second Latin American Drilling Congress last week in Mexico City. The study was conducted in the Acema-Casma field in Monagas State, which is operated by Corpoven, S.A., an affiliate of PETROVEN [Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc]. The field produces an average of 35,000 barrels a day of crude oil with a gravity of between 25 and 30 degrees API. Drilling engineers encountered serious problems during the exploratory phase in the field because the abnormal pressures caused blowouts, loss of drilling fluids and pipe sealing, especially when they were drilling at a depth of between 7,000 and 10,000 feet (2,000 to 3,000 meters). These problems became so serious that four of the nine wells drilled were lost. One result of the study is that for the first time Venezuela has established its own parameters for calculating the varicus well pressures. DEPRESSED OIL REGION IN ANZOATEGUI--Buena Vista, Anzoategui State--

This oilfield, once a center of oil-related activity in Anzoategui, would like once more to be part of the crude oil development programs of Corpoven. "That way there would be an active life as in other decades, when it was one of the most productive areas in the eastern part of the country," say pioneers from the forties and fifties. They recall that Buena Vista was one of the most active oilfields in Oriente. People came from all over to settle here. "Here we lived through the great era of 'black gold,'" they say. They point out that everything was happy; they never forget that the plain was lit up at night with the burners that could be seen easily from the plateau where the town of Cantaura, capital of the Freites District, is located. "Now we want Buena Vista to return to oil activity," say many people in Anzoategui. The old oilfield now has another face: it is a center of abandonment and poverty. One can still see some of the homes that were occupied by the old pioneers of oil activity. "Here all is silence," we were informed by a humble woman who was sucking on some tobacco under a leafy oak tree. Every once in a great while some vehicle arrives at the former oil center, and the neighbors all look out to see what is going on. "Buena Vista is not even a shadow of what it was during the days when the oil brought everything," locals say sadly. Now everything is brush, garbage and poverty. The church is still standing, and occasionally some priest comes to hold mass; the facilities that were the offices of the Creole Petroleum Corporation are still there, as are the old school, commissary and club. Everything is abandoned. /Text/ /Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 7 Nov 80 Sec 2 p 19/ 8926

RECENT EVENTS REFLECT INCONSISTENT RIVER PLATE BASIN POLICY

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 1 Nov 80 p 11

[Article by Martin Olivera]

[Text] After more than 170 years as a free country, Argentina would not appear to have a clear-cut policy regarding the River Plate Basin. To be more specific, it still has no policy at all for that area, since paradoxically it would seem that there are several policies in the various spheres of government.

The Finance Palace, with the power it has had since Martinez de Hoz has been in charge, gages things from a strictly economic angle or with a geopolitical approach, which not everyone feels is the most beneficial solution for the country. This, at least, is what we can gather from the tenacious defense of bilateral projects (along with the problems that they bring) as opposed to strictly national ventures.

From San Martin Palace, all of the foreign minister's men give the impression that they view things from the angle of quick solutions, which seems to be the magnet attracting all of the actions of top-level diplomacy. That which is quickest is not always best.

Emerging in opposition to these two approaches is the view of the intermediate levels (the middle-level agencies), which in this specific case are represented by the National River Plate Basin Commission, which, curiously enough, has maintained a much more "national" stand regarding bilateral ventures. Curiously enough as well, San Martin Palace not only did not listen to the commission's recommendations, but it did not even invite its president at the time, General De Nevares, to the signing of the tripartite agreement with Brazil and Paraguay, which was the most important development (positive or negative) in the basin in recent years. And now there is talk that the commission will probably be abolished.

Under this arrangement, of course, there is no reason for it, because it does not seem that anyone has to pursue a comprehensive policy to establish priorities within the basin.

In addition to the harm that this does to the country, it naturally weakens it on the external front by making it very "sensitive" to the pressures exerted by other nations' policies, which are, in fact, consistent and have specific goals.

For example, we now see that Paraguay has decided to interrupt the projects that our country has undertaken south of the Pilcomayo (whose northern arm we lost many years back to the Guaranís) by again bringing up the principle of prior consultations for international rivers.

Paradoxically, this was the principle that Argentine upheld over the long years of tripartite negotiations with Brazil and Paraguay to make the Corpus and Itaipu dams compatible, negotiations that culminated, objectively, in a defeat for national interests precisely because the other two countries stubbornly refused to accept the principle of prior consultations.

This warrants mentioning because there was a great deal of talk about the political benefits of the tripartite group (the rapprochement with Brazil, that is) but very little about the geopolitical damage it did, which is now reflected in Corpus.

Current dicussions about whether Corpus ought to be built at Pindoi or Itacua, as the consulting firm recommended, make no sense, because it makes no geopolitical sense to build Corpus with a 105 meter elevation unless we want to enhance Itaipu's operations. This is the real result of the Tripartite Commission, and it is due to the absence of an agency to regulate all activities in the River Plate Basin.

Therefore, in view of Paraguay's pressures in connection with the Pilcomayo, essaying the arguments that they did not accept Argentina, we have to open up the umbrella before it starts raining. We have to alert our authorities before we have to give away bridges, roads and free ports to our northern neighbors, as we had to do to get approval for the design of Yacyreta.

It is also odd that we continue promoting the Argentine-Bolivian Commission for the Upper Bermejo Basin, when multiple projects in the middle and lower Bermejo Basin, which are entirely in Argentine territory, are inexplicably given no consideration, even as possibilities. The people who promote bilateral ventures are obviously the same ones hamstringing national progress.

Another equally significant geopolitical mystery is why the Middle Parana Project, an admirable undertaking, is given priority over the Bermejo venture, inasmuch as the sediment that the latter carries into the Parana will literally wreck the former's dams.

But of course the Middle Parana Project is being pushed by Water and Energy (the economic sphere), whereas the Bermejo Project is under the National River Plate Basin Commission (the forgotten sphere). The same goes for Garabi, which is being pushed by the San Martin and Finance palaces although it is of use only to Brazil in connection with the Ibera.

We must then ask ourselves how much longer this disjointed approach to the River Plate Basin will continue, because its only tangible result has been harm to our country. We must not forget that in the geopolitical sphere there are mistakes that cannot be made up for, and Argentina knows this quite well from the enormous amount of territory that it has already lost.

The River Plate Basin is waiting for someone to establish priorities.

Rounding out the reports that came in from La Paz yesterday, indications are that the financial fund of the River Plate Basin (an agency made up of Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil, Paraguay and Bolivia) plans to boost its capital to $100 million. The bulk of the contributions, as usual, will come from Argentina.

PILCOMAYO INCIDENT DAMPENS ARGENTINE-PARAGUAYAN RELATIONS

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 1 Nov 80 p 11

[Text] "The Paraguayan Government will never give its consent to a project that will cause enormous damages. There are disagreements, and Paraguay has not given its consent. It therefore felt that its interests were being objectively impaired." These were the remarks that Paraguayan Foreign Minister Alberto Nogues made to newsmen in connection with the projects that Argentina is undertaking on its side of the Pilcomayo River. He went on to say that our country "acted unilaterally in opening up diversion channels" to reactivate the El Porteno River in Formosa and that "this situation must be rectified immediately." The foreign minister's statements confirm a document sent to Argentine authorities and are at odds with recent comments by the governor of Formosa, Gen Juan Carlos Colombo, who asserted a few hours before that "certain reports" of disagreements "had to brought up to date."

When questioned by newsmen, Nogues said that he had met with Colombo and analyzed the diversion of the Pilcomayo's waters to reactivate the aforementioned Argentine river.

"The issue of the Pilcomayo River has always gotten in the way of good relations between Paraguay and Argentina," Nogues asserted. "We want this incident to be rectified immediately by the Argentine authorities," he added. He noted later on that diplomatic efforts have been undertaken at the highest levels and that President Alfredo Stroessner had asked his Argentine counterpart, Lt Gen Jorge Videla, to suspend the project.

"I am certain," Nogues explained, "that after the conversation between Presidents Stroessner and Videla, the Argentine chief executive ordered work suspended on the Pilcomayo River.

"Such approaches should not arise between two countries like Paraguay and Argentina, which are engaged in major undertakings. These developments only dampen relations and our major projects.

"I read in Paraguayan newspapers that Governor Colombo said that there were no disagreements. I can say, however, that there are differences, because of Argentina's unilateral move to open up diversion channels."

He reported immediately thereafter that troops from the Excavators Battalion of the Paraguayan Engineering Command are at the site working to close off the diversion channels.

Official reports indicate that Paraguay asked the Argentine Government for technical data on the projects to reactivate the Formosa river, in order to "safeguard Paraguayan interests and the principles governing the use of international rivers." The reports also have it that the Paraguayan Foreign Ministry exchanged several notes with its Argentine counterpart and that in this connection several personal efforts were even made at various official levels.

The Paraguayan Foreign Ministry also pointed out that pursuant to the agreement signed by Argentina, Bolivia and Paraguay on 22 April 1974, the 1977 document was hammered out, which stipulates that in order to determine the most appropriate economic union arrangement and the most suitable production program, soil, socioeconomic and various other studies would be conducted in the area.

Paraguayan observers recalled that in a similar case there were reports that Bolivia was preparing to harness the waters of the Pilcomayo in its own territory by diverting them there, whereupon the foreign minister had to fly over the waterway to verify the accounts.

ARGENTINA, BOLIVIA CONTINUE TALKS ON BERMEJO PROJECT

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 1 Nov 80 p 11

[Text] The fourth meeting of the Argentine-Bolivian task force for the upper basin of the Bermejo River concluded yesterday. The 2-day meeting was held in the city of Tarija, 980 kilometers southeast of the city of La Paz.

The Bolivian delegation was headed by the director general of maritime affairs and international waters of the Foreign Ministry, Hernando Velasco, while the Argentine delegation was led by Dr Jose Maria Leandro Aletti.

The agenda at the meeting comprised the formulation of a master plan to develop the upper basin of the Bermejo, the groundwork for the aerial surveying of the region and consideration of the multinational "Las Pabas" project that is supposed to be undertaken on the river.

Separately, the morning paper LOS TIEMPOS of Cochabamba (one of Bolivia's six leading papers) underscored in a commentary the importance of the joint Argentine-Bolivian project to develop the Bermejo River Basin on the border between the two countries.

Referring to the importance of the "new integration prospects...especially within the sphere of influence of the River Plate Basin," it points to the aforementioned project and notes the significance of the "multipurpose development of the Bermejo River through the construction of navigable canals, which will be...the best avenues of trade for the departments of Oruro, Potosi, Tarija, Chuquisaca, Santa Cruz de la Sierra and El Beni, whose products will have their own outlet to the world along the Parana."

Referring to the advantages of the venture, the article indicates that "if the project is executed quickly enough, it will have an impact on the development of these regions and consolidate the trade axis, which will have beneficial side effects through population and economic shifts."

"Argentine Navy Rear Adm Gregorio Antonio Portillo," the LOS TIEMPOS commentary goes on to say, "who promoted the initial studies on the Bermejo River Basin, demonstrated what the costs and benefits were from opening up the canals, which is estimated to involve 100 million tons..."

The point has been made, the paper notes further on, that the multipurpose development of the Bermejo River "constitutes a fundamental and incalculably significant tool" because of the mutual benefits that it will yield for Bolivia and Argentina.

"The updating of the project," the LOS TIEMPOS commentary concludes, "which is under study by an ad hoc committee in our sister nation (Argentina), has not yet found a favorable climate in our Foreign Ministry (Bolivia's), in spite of its far-reaching importance in the River Plate Basin region."

MEXICAN-VENEZUELAN AGRICULTURAL EXCHANGE--The director general of the Instituted Trusts for Agriculture (FIRA) of Mexico, Horacio Garcia Aguilar, and the manager for planning of that institute, Guillermo Vasquez, are in Venezuela for the purpose of exchanging experiences in agricultural credit. The Mexican officials will have meetings with representatives of the agriculture sector during their stay here. Yesterday they met with the Board of Directors of the Agricultural Credit Fund, chaired by Dr Victor Gimenez Landinez. There they discussed the operations of the two organizations, with particular reference to supervision and technical assistance. The Mexican officials will hold meetings throughout the week with the Central Bank Board of Directors, banking associations, representatives of the Agricultural Credit Institute, the Agricultural and Livestock Development Bank (BANDAGRO) and other agencies in the Venezuelan agriculture sector. LAMBRUSCHINI: NATION MUST BECOME NAVAL POWER

[Text] "We are faced with the inevitable obligation to make ourselves into a true international maritime power, in other words, to develop the capacity of the nation for using the sea, in all that it represents as a political, economic and cultural projection.

"But it must be clearly understood that this condition cannot be achieved without sacrifice, without creative imagination, without clarity, determination, sacrifice, responsibility and persistence in action."

This statement was made by the commander in chief of the navy during the luncheon given by the Argentine Shipbuilders Maritime Center at the Argentine Yacht Club.

Solid Freedom

After the president of the body which organized the gathering, Rear Adm (Ret) Francisco Aleman, introduced Admiral Lambruschini, the latter said that "we will never have a great country thanks to any magic trick. We will not live in the solid freedom to which we aspire unless we struggle for it on a daily basis and unless we bear in mind that this inevitably entails corresponding duties. We will not see the justice which is so dear to us prevail unless each of us is increasingly more just in his conduct. We will not achieve true democracy, which is among our most heartfelt ideals, if we do not realize that in addition to the legal texts which frame it, it must be based on a society nurtured by profound ethical values, wherein no sector attempts to prevail over the others."

Freedom by Decree

Admiral Lambruschini then went on to say that freedom is not achieved by decree and that "justice is not established by decree. Prosperity is not obtained by decree, solidarity is not won by decree, and democracy is not established by decree. Nor can we achieve a status as a maritime power by virtue of excellent plans drafted on paper and fed by a dangerous lack of foresight."

Subsidiary State

Later on he gave assurance that the state should establish the major guidelines and prevent dangerous lack of synchronization, while at the same time it is necessary to provide the essential stimuli to make it immediately clear that "the state we conceive of as subsidiary but not neutral or indifferent must with noble but effective weapons protect the legitimate labor of Argentina and the domestic capital which we want to convert into great motive forces for the material grandeur of the fatherland and the increasing well-being of its people."

In another part of his address, the commander in chief of the navy stressed the importance of the sea and naval power to our country, not only for the transportation of goods but as a source of great renewable and nonrenewable resources. Following that he stated that "if we do not bestir ourselves to provide a proper response to these circumstances, we would pay for the consequences of failure to be bold enough to take up the profound challenges of modern history." Therefore this attitude does not lead to provocative actions or violent procedures but what is proposed is "the peaceful and continuing pursuit of constructive activities which will assure our effective presence throughout this zone."

Maritime Problems

After noting that 90 percent of our foreign trade is carried out via sea routes, he said that this problem "is one of the subjects which will be approached with greater dynamism in the present process," adding that "the current situation represents a truly unprecedented historical landmark, being consolidated by a series of measures and provisions which are already in effect and which are yielding positive and basic results."

Merchant Fleet

In speaking of the merchant fleet, he said that its expansion and modernization will be carried out "unceasingly," and he added that "the search for solutions to the problem of limited vessel draft in the Plate River" will also continue "through the deep-water port proposal under study, in which private capital is so important, in the renewal of dredging and buoying equipment and the improvement of conditions on navigable waterways and access routes."

BALBIN REVIEWS POLITICAL PAST, FUTURE

Buenos Aires SOMOS in Spanish 24 Oct 80 pp 4-9

[Interview with Ricardo Balbin, by Juan Carlos Araujo and Jorge Vidal; date and place not given]

[Text] To SOMOS, Ricardo Balbin is a fundamental protagonist of the political history of the past 50 years. And with fundamental protagonists, SOMOS wants to discuss some major topics: for example, democracy, and the republican system, topics on which the country has had more defections than presences. It is impossible to doubt the democratic spirit which inspired the Radical leader. However, much of the youth which headed hopefully (many for the first time) toward a new political process was caught by surprise and overtaken by the violence and the discretionary handling of the institutions from 1973 until 24 March 1976. The 1973 elections had a republican guise, and exalted a government elected by the majority, but they ended in a parody of democracy which brought the nation to the brink of disaster. That same youth, at that time, hoped that the Radical movement (so often described as a standardizing moral force) would speak seriously about democracy, play its role of opposition without faltering and show the republican spirit that should move citizens and individuals in public office. The youth did not sense that. On the contrary, it sensed that the Radical movement was allowing in silence, serious circumstances such as the release of the terrorists on 25 May or the complete lack of a democratic atmosphere in Congress, to give just a few examples. Why did this happen? Why didn't the Radical movement demand fair play? Why wasn't it the example that the youth was expecting? With these questions, SOMOS opened its dialog with Ricardo Balbin.

[Answer] We gave many examples to that youth to whom you claim we gave no examples. The fact is that, in Argentina, many things happened during the last 50 years which influenced the conduct of those who, like myself, survived all that. There are things that I can never forget. We know very well what we lose in a harvest, a flood or an epidemic, but we do not know how much human capital we have lost during the course of all those years. What went through the minds of the youth from the 30's to 43, when they went to vote and were told "you have already voted"? I was 25 years old, and we managed to fight and we overcame that distortion. We sought democracy. We reached the government in 1963. It was 33 years, almost half of my life....

[Answer] That is true. But we were a majority in the Electoral College. But that does not count. What counts (because it pertains to your question) is that we had said that there would be banishment in the country until the Radicals reached the government, and we did so. We knocked on the doors of all political persuasions without exception, including those who were from the old history of the 30's. Why did we do so? In order to find out how the Argentines could be at a common table even though they had different reasoning. And note: The individuals whom we took out of banishment arrived in Congress, and there they reached agreement on always imposing conditions on the passage of laws. But we upheld the rights of everyone, and the country was recovering. I admit to you that, at that time, after 33 years of struggle, I said to myself: This is the key time; from now on we are going to perfect our democracy. And then came the coup of 1966, a gray area in our history. Where are the protagonists? What did they accomplish? Nothing.

[Question] But, approaching a fresher history, the People's Hour brought more confusion than clarity to the strong democracy that we wanted.

[Answer] No. That would have been so if we had sought a political settlement, an arrangement with Peronism. Everyone except us made the settlement. The Radicals only went to the election, because we wanted to be loyal to the conscience of representative democracy.

[Question] But, politically speaking, the only one who won was Peron.

[Answer] It must not be thought that success lies only in successful results. Failures sometimes have more virtue than successes. We wanted to do the same thing that was done in 1962, and give that youth, to whom you claim we gave no examples, a new example of democratic coexistence beyond differences.

[Question] But the country was different. The terrorist violence had become incorporated, and Peron was not dissociated from it.

[Answer] What did we tell the youth in the electoral campaign? We told them: "No violence, national coexistence must be established, we cannot live otherwise." And what was being said at the other platform? "There are the ones who killed Aramburu." And the country voted freely. Why did it vote in that way? It is not clear. What I do know is that Peronism never celebrated its victory, much less the first one. However, the one of 1973 was greatly celebrated in the North District.

[Question] But you will continue to be criticized for having sat down at the same table with Peron, because in that way you endorsed what Peron had done and was to do.

[Answer] There has been dirty speculation on my cooperation with Peron. I had to give example and bring the people together; and that was the only reason that I went to talk to Peron. There was no alliance between him and me, but the people shook hands. And in order to do that, I had to set aside many of my troubles.

[Question] Didn't you gage the political gain that that step would cost you?

[Answer] I gaged it; but I did not do so out of self-interest, nor calculation. I did so out of a natural desire. There are some who claim that I jumped a fence. It is true: I jumped over a wall which divided the same property. But I saw a number of prominent personages jumping fences on several occasions, in search of something. Of course some of them were caught."

[Question] What does Balbin think about Peron today?

[Answer] I fought him. I did not share his political methods. We caused deep separations among the people. But I left a great deal of myself, and perhaps he has left something of himself, to talk about. I still believe that this conversation was one of the good things that happened in Argentina.

[Question] Why were you not opposed to the release of the terrorists on 25 May?

[Answer] I believe that what really happened in Congress is either unknown or concealed. When it was voted on, they were all given amnesty in the gallery of the building. They were already released, and a Radical did not go and remove them from jail.

[Question] But by voting you gave legal force to that event.

[Answer] The Radical movement believed that it was necessary to put an end to the hatred and grudges, but with a legal significance. And it voted for amnesty, but with judicial intervention. In other words, it was the judges who had to decide who was involved in a political crime and who was involved in a crime of others.

[Answer] What happened was that, since there was not the sickly rivalry that existed before, the newsmen were bored and did not publish the speeches. But it is impossible to deny the deepseated differences that we had, for example, with the economic leadership. Something there might have been mistaken, but there was no mistake about the Radicals' concept.

[Question] Many also criticize you for having spoken on television on the eve of the coup of March 1976.

[Answer] I knew about the revolution that night. I knew that, behind my chair, the Armed Forces were in formation to seize power as soon as they decided; and that, in front, there was a government that was discredited, an unfeeling government. But I also knew that in the middle there was a people, who were not to blame. Then I told them what I had to tell them: Let us not give up the idea of unity; let us defend the institutions until the last minute, because in that way serious disagreements can be avoided. And if everything collapses, somewhere they will find the cause of Radicalism talking about unity.

[Answer] I don't know what it was...it was not a government;there was no chance of governing. I don't think that it is an insult to anyone to say that 90-odd percent of the population was in agreement. In all the previous processes, the military coup was in favor of someone or some sector. This one, on the other hand, found the civilian population united. I believe that, within 48 hours of the coup, all the political parties (except a few of the extreme right or the extreme left) could have been united, to find a solution; because there was a very clearcut civil conscience. I think that an opportunity was missed because we did not recognize it.

[Question] Should we interpret that to mean that you desire the success of the process?

[Answer] I have already said so. I want the country to be institutionalized in conjunction with the success of this process, because that could be followed by a lasting solution which would insure the stability of democratic existence. On the other hand, if we organize concerning the crisis in the military government, we shall not have a political solution; we shall have a solution for the government which will not be lasting.

[Question] It has often been said that the politicians did not make a self-criticism for the mistakes that they committed....

[Answer] We are organizing courses, seminars and lectures to which the intelligentsia come and express their views; and not only Radicals, of course. On those occasions, we show the history and the disagreements, what was done well and what was done badly. And we try to coexist democratically, even while disagreeing.

[Question] Does that task of clarification include a personal self-criticism? Do you say "I made a mistake"?

[Answer] I cannot take paths of no return, and I cannot compromise the party's future. I have carried along my preaching and my convictions through my years. But I don't know whether all this that we are discussing and explaining now will be what the party thinks once it is reorganized.

[Question] Returning to the youth, there are many who express skepticism about the old politicians, and that affects you closely.

[Answer] I am heading the Radical movement because they extended my term. They say, more or less, "you will not go further," but the fact is that they do not let us go. And the most serious part is that, during this extension, there has been no chance for any youth sector to be shown. If we had closed the War College for several years, I would not want to think how old the generals would be. We are going, there is no doubt about that. But what is most important is that other generations come; because within a few years the youth of today may be old and alone. And that would be far worse.

[Answer] My only mission is to keep the Radical movement intact until it is reorganized, and not to make any decision which could jeopardize it. And in order to do this, one must leave pride each morning on the night table, locked, and losing the key. And this course of action that I have chosen offends those who do not want to live within the institutions. Democracy, with all its flaws, has a series of controls, and when those controls do not exist deterioration if more possible. Or is it that if you have been assured that no one will find out, you would not play a trick?

[Question] But those controls did not work....

[Answer] The individuals did not work. It is the individuals who are to blame, not the institution.

[Question] Do you think that when the political ban ends we shall have a surprise?

[Answer] I tour the country often. And I was used to being only among party members. Now I feel that I am among male and female citizens, including my fellow party members also, of course. And those people are interested, they want to listen, and then they will be guided. I believe that a shift in opinion is under way in the country, and someone who was with the Justicialists could change, as well as someone who was with the Radicals. Of course, I don't think that there will be a repetition now of the phenomenon of 1973 in the North District. But what I sense I am unable to show to anyone, because there is no political activity. I believe that the Radical movement is best, but I cannot prove it. And in this respect I think that it is a mistake for the government to ban meetings. Those meetings (better than any little poll) would allow them to learn how national opinion is moving. And I think that we would have a surprise.

[Question] Could Peronism be adapted to a democratic process?

[Answer] It was a vertical movement, and now it must become a party from bottom to top. It remains to be seen how this will occur. What I think is that all the Argentine parties have been divided, historically. Even socialism, which appeared not to be about to divide, did so. We paid that price twice.

[Question] Will Peronism be divided?

[Answer] It must pay that price.

[Question] Here, too, mention must be made of trade unionism, Doctor; because it played a decisive role in Peronism.

[Answer] We desire the trade union organization with all its autonomy.

[Question] With a single federation?

[Answer] We are not alarmed by single federations so long as they confine themselves to engaging in trade union politics, and nothing else. The mistake of recent times was having organized the unions into partisan entities. They must be democratically permitted to reorganize, and then we shall see what happens. I want strong unions to defend their rights, not strong unions to engage in partisan politics.

[Question] But it would be naive to disregard the fact that a large part of the trade union movement is Peronist.

[Answer] The people are, and these people, these leaders who have also been given extensions by the government are. Other leaders will appear now. I think that a shift in opinion is taking place in the trade union sector.

[Question] What do you mean, specifically?

[Answer] I think that many of the individuals who participated in the vertical organization are back seeking an organization with a democratic quality.

[Question] Doctor, what is demagogy?

[Answer] In most instances, it is rowing with the current. When one says: "You like it, you want it, we shall give it to you...."

[Question] Some are of the opinion that you were a little demagogic in certain speeches.

[Answer] The leader knows that, if he wants to be honest, he must row against the current; because the current generally ends in a waterfall which destroys everything. At the present time, wanting to pacify, and to overcome rancor and abuse, is rowing against the current. I chose the most difficult path: the opposite of demagogy.

[Question] I was referring to something else. You must know that some of your speeches have been described as "guitar strumming...."

[Answer] At times I address the people's sentiments, and I do not do so out of speculation; I do so because that is how I feel. There is a tendency to mechanize the individual, and I believe that I am defending him by lending prestige to his sentiments. I know that, after listening to me, some say: "He didn't say anything." It may be that I said nothing about a solution, but I said everything necessary to prepare for future solutions. Once, when talking with important business owners, I explained why this style of mine was not demagogic. I told them: "When you are in front of 80,000 people, you must consider that there are 4,000 or 5,000 who are worried, and who came only to find out if they could find something, seeking an illusion. And since one knows this, he stretches the argument a little farther. But it is simply so that they will not go away with the same worries with which they came; because, in that case (I told them), they would kill you all in your tracks."

[Question] Someone making an assessment of the 1973 elections recently said that it is not true that the majority is never mistaken.

[Answer] I don't agree with that. Those who are mistaken are the individuals whom the people elect.

[Question] What was meant is that the voter had sufficient information to warrant his thinking that the Peronist administration might not be beneficial.

[Answer] Anyone who votes does so with the best intentions, he does so for a good reason, except at the times when the vote is converted into a personal interest; but that is very seldom. In any event, those elections are a social phenomenon that will have to be studied seriously some time; also from the standpoint of those who vote against something or someone, and not in favor of something or someone. I would not want such voting to be done ever again.

[Question] Dr Sebastian Soler told us once that the Radical movement confused a state of law with elections.

[Answer] I have always had great respect for Dr Soler, but I have never shared his ideas. To us, the state of law is the normal activity of the institutions, and the division of powers with the pertinent controls. It is by no means the same as an election, because the state of law exists before and after the election. What we are experiencing now might be called a legal status, but it is not a state of law. I prefer to call it a state of institutional emergency.

[Question] One infers from your remarks that an election of itself does not guarantee a state of law either....

[Answer] Certainly. The election establishes the office holders, but it is the institutions which are valid of themselves and which survive beyond the defeat of the office holder.

[Question] Let us move to an economic subject. Are the Radicals statists?

[Answer] The statists have foisted that on us. But I ask: Who created the Grain Board or the Meat Board? We believe in private industry, but also in the promoter state, when there is something which private capital cannot do. We have defended and we shall always defend what relates to the country's natural resources that can be depleted, and what relates to defense and security, such as oil. Are we statists because we defend the nation's patrimony? If so, it is very easy to be statists... Well, at least we do not have any contradictions. I ask: Who amended Article 185 which states that, for the workers' protection, a bankrupt company would have to be seized, and over 200 companies were seized? We were not the ones. And note that now companies which were nationalized previously by other military governments are being made private.

[Question] While speaking with you, one often hears the term "dependence." Is all foreign investment bad?

[Answer] No; it could come, but to serve Argentine priorities.

[Question] The powers that you give the state in that regard are sufficient to warrant calling your policy statist-oriented.

[Answer] To us, that is a promoter state, which is not authoritarian, and which also wants private effort.

[Question] Some think that, after Balbin, the Radical movement will embark on a crisis.

[Answer] They said the same thing (except for the distance) about Yrigoyen, and nothing happened.

[Question] How can lines as far apart as those of a De la Rua, a Troccoli, an Alfonsin or a Leon be reconciled?

[Answer] Those individuals, and many more, are different from one another in their ways of acting or deciding, but it does not go beyond that. If you were to ask each one, he would give you a perfect Radical concept.

[Question] But some seem to be far more to the left than others.

[Answer] I assure you that it is the styles which change; and those styles lend enhancement to the party's democratic existence. When people think that the Radical movement is divided, that is when it is more united than ever.

[Question] Does Ricardo Balbin have "dauphins"?

[Answer] I spent much of my party life in La Plata, and I could have pointed to an individual to be elected more than once. But that would go against all my principles.

[Question] But when a successor has to be chosen, you will vote, won't you?

[Answer] I shall certainly vote.

[Question] Some things have recently been disclosed which may indicate your style of running the party. It was claimed that certain Radical leaders had been tempted to attend the dialog with the government. It was also claimed that you denied that possibility.

[Answer] That is not accurate. It was those very leaders who refused and, furthermore, they informed me of the contacts, giving an example of party unity.

[Question] Wasn't there any ear-pulling?

[Answer] I only pull ears on birthdays....

[Question] Aren't you bothered by the reputation of being perpetually second, which you and the Radical movement have?

[Answer] Years ago, at a campaign function, in front of thousands of people in Once Plaza, I said: "How many have come to hear us, and think that they are going to vote against us. But I know why they came: so that we shall never leave." And I tell you something else: If we had hinted to Peron that we wanted to become affiliated with the government, we would have done so, but we did not, because we had to put up the opposition. That preserves democracy, and we were born for democracy.

[Answer] My life is slightly mixed up. I am shy, though I don't seem to be. I like to listen, although I usually have to express an opinion. I like the countryside, and I live in the city. I like solitude, without being unhealthy. When there is no one at home, I wander around in it to have the sensation of a presence. Could it be meditation? I don't want to call it that. That is for the important people.

FORCED RETIREMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS ANNOUNCED

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 6

[Text] Several dozen officers have been forced to retire because they do not "identify" with the "institutional views" of the army.

Most of the officers affected by the order are majors and lieutenant colonels.

The decision by the Superior Officer Evaluation Board was sent to them in a telegram, which read as follows:

"I hereby notify you that the Superior Officer Evaluation Board, which met recently to take up your case pursuant to the provisions of Article 229, Paragraph 4, Clause e, of Volume II of the Regulations for the Army of the Military Personnel Law, 'Recruitment and Promotions' (LM-2-II), has proposed to classify you as 'unfit for the functions of your rank,' for the following reason:

"Having roused the conviction among superior officers that your continuation on active duty in the branch would jeopardize the spiritual cohesiveness of the officers, because you do not identify sufficiently with the philosophy and institutional views of the army, which has decisively impaired its prestige and people's opinions of it.

"The proposal in reference has been approved by his excellency, the commander in chief of the army.

"Pursuant to the provisions of Article 11, Paragraph 5 of the aforementioned regulations, Volume IV, 'Retirements and Pensions' (LM-2-IV), you must enter retired status.

"Having attested below that you are thus informed, you shall submit this note directly to the Army Chief Command-General Staff-First Headquarters Personnel."

DECISION ON RECENT ARMY RETIREMENTS EXAMINED

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 9 Nov 80 pp 10-11

[Article from the column "Political Week": "The Cohesiveness of the Army"]

[Excerpt] A Lengthy Investigation

Are there men in the Argentine Army who are ideologically committed to leftwing extremism?

Such a question, asked pointblank, could cause a person to spill his coffee as he browses through the Sunday paper. But perhaps it is not such a capricious question if we feel we know some of the reasons behind a lengthy and exhaustive investigation conducted in the army.

No, there are no army officers committed to leftwing extremism, but in any case it is interesting to delve into the roots of a recent decision whereby 30 top officers will have to retire, pursuant to a proposal from the Superior Officer Evaluation Board, which was backed by the commander in chief and which regarded them as "unfit for the functions of their rank."

For years a commission of generals has been examining the cases of some 90 commanders and officers, classifying them by groups, in a bid to arrive at a conclusion, and among other factors, they took into account the aftereffects on the army of the activities of 1st Lts Francisco Julian Licastro and Jose Fernandez Valoni.

In the late 1960's, the Army Superior Tribunal of Honor sanctioned Licastro and Valoni with "disqualification on account of extremely serious breaches of conduct." This penalty meant the loss of rank and of the right to wear their uniforms, but not discharge from the army.

The two were officers at the Military College of the Nation when the serious subversive incident generally known as the "Cordobazo" took place in May 1969. In its 11 June 1970 edition, the paper LA OPINION cited an alleged discussion at military installations between Licastro and a comrade-in-arms regarding the repression that the III Corps was engaged in against the rebels. Licastro contended that "the homeland" also included the barricades from which the rebels were trying to set Cordoba ablaze in a revolutionary fire.

Both Licastro and Fernandez Valoni came to identify openly during those years with former President Peron. Licastro served as "political secretary" at the Casa Rosada when Peron returned to power, and Fernandez Valoni took his seat in Congress in May 1973 as a deputy from the province of Buenos Aires. As a candidate for deputy and a member of the Peronist Technological Command, Fernandez Valoni contended in the election campaign of the summer of 1973 that "young Armed Forces officers, situated in the nerve center of their generation's reserves, will not consent to further adventures; they will immobilize the Military Party and take their place beside the people." He was referring chronologically to the generation of the present-day captains, majors and lieutenant colonels, who are still young but veterans of a counterrevolutionary war in which they confronted what were perhaps the numerically strongest, best trained and best armed subversive organizations in the West.

Licastro allegedly resides in Peru now, and Fernandez Valoni is thought to be living in Buenos Aires Province. After extremists attempted to take over the Azul military garrison in January 1974, Fernandez Valoni voted for a government bill to amend the Penal Code. The bill was one of the government's moves at the time against subversive organizations. As we know, the events at Azul triggered the resignation of Buenos Aires Governor Dr Oscar Bidegain, who was deeply involved with the Montoneros, and of eight national deputies of Peronist Youth.

Around Thirty

Last Tuesday, political circles were shaken by a newspaper article that "dozens of officers had been forced to retire." The account was accompanied by the official communication that the officers had received. The note informed them that the Superior Officer Evaluation Board "has proposed to classify you as 'unfit for the functions of your rank' for the following reason: superior officers were convinced that if you remained an active duty in the Armed Forces, you would be jeopardizing the spiritual cohesiveness of the offiers because you do not identify sufficiently with the philosophy and institutional views of the army, which has decisively impaired its prestige and people's opinion of it."

The day after the article appeared, the secretary general of the army, Gen Reynaldo Bignone, defused all of this by noting that in fact some 30 officers were involved, of the thousands that the army has. Although he did not say so, General Bignone could have noted that this is in no way an alarming number, especially if we compare it with the number of colonels who retire every year for natural reasons of institutional turnover. About 56 colonels are expected to do so this year.

Hypotheses Ruled Out

Nevertheless, what General Bignone did not explain, for obvious reasons, is that at least the majority of the officers who had been told that they must retire had been under investigation for years. This year, the investigations were further intensified through the formation of two commissions that sifted through a wide range of background information, including on family members, on the individual cases under study.

We do not yet know for certain whether the 30 cases were examined only in connection with the indoctrination work that Licastro and Fernandez Valoni tried to carry out in their time, or whether, in addition, the investigations stemmed from simple suspicions that each officer was linked with various stages of the regime that was toppled in March 1976 or that they felt nostalgia for that past.

What is, however, beyond doubts is that the reasons for the retirements are of longer standing and, furthermore, have nothing to do with the two conjectures that political circles engaged in as soon as the matter hit the papers: a) that just political misunderstandings with the current army leadership were involved; b) that these were very touchy situations, to be expected in the aftermath of any war, stemming directly from a lengthy and self-sacrificing struggle against subversion, the brunt of which which was borne by the army.

Acting as a Jury

As General Bignone explained on Wednesday, the 30 or so officers (majors and lieutenant colonels) who were told that they would have to retire can still request a reconsideration.

The Evaluation Board acted as a jury, as is done in the military. In other words, it made its decisions regardless of whether or not it gathered convincing evidence concerning a potential clash between the conduct of the officers and the spirit of the army. Or, if we prefer, the board acted on the basis of the suspicions that the lengthy investigations did not, in its judgment, succeed in dispelling.

On the other hand, according to reliable sources, some 60 other commanders and officers whose backgrounds were also analyzed at length were totally cleared of suspicions and are "completely clean."

On 1 April 1964, when the Brazilian military overthrew President Joao Goulart, Argentine intelligence services estimated that more than 10 percent of the active officers in the Brazilian Army had been won over by the left, including a general who openly said that he was a communist. After all, Luis Carlos Prestes, who was the leader of several generations of members of the Brazilian Communist Party until a short while ago, is a former captain.

Regardless of how we agree to define the left and what it means to be left-wing (Is Peronism?), at no juncture in its history did the Argentine Army experience a period like the one that held the destiny of the Brazilian Army and, of course, of Brazil in check in the early 1960's. Furthermore, regardless of what decision is eventually made regarding the future of 30 Argentine Army officers, the fact is that the army is firmly determined to plug any crack through which sentiments and ideas that might affect its identity and spiritual cohesiveness could seep in. It seems willing to pay whatever price is necessary to do this.

Promotions

Another newspaper report that appeared this week, in connection with which the Army Chief Command was forced to issue a clarification, concerns the promotions to major general that will take place late this year.

According to this article, Osvaldo J. Garcia (infantry), Alfredo Saint Jean (cavalry), Llamil Reston (infantry), Juan Carlos Trimarco (cavalry) and Jorge Pozzo (engineers), who are currently brigade generals, will be promoted to major general. Responding to this report, an official communique from the army indicated that so far the commander in chief has received only qualified counsel from the Superior Officer Evaluation Board. The communique also recalled, however, that the final decision, which the commander in chief alone will make, would be forthcoming in the next 30 days.

In any case, the names of the five abovementioned brigade generals square with the general expectations in this regard on the part of military observers. What remains to be seen, thus, is the exact number of brigade generals that Lieutenant General Galtieri ultimately decides to promote this year and whether or not some of the names change, depending on how he employs the powers vested in him.

RACIAL ISSUE, MASSERA'S MESSAGE TO VIOLA DISCUSSED

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 2 Nov 80 Sec 2 p 3

[Article from the column "The Observer"]

[Excerpt] The past week contained a great many developments, some of which were surprising because they are marginal to the political situation now unfolding and aroused suspicions that although they might not be justified, point to the improper handling of certain issues that warrant careful attention from the country's government leaders.

Moreover, the governor of Buenos Aires made statements that ought to be taken into account. Certain details were disclosed in connection with business activities that are in line with the direction charted by Humberto Volando, and a number of clarifications were made by circles close to General Viola.

Under Suspicion

A television channel owned by the state broadcast an entertainment program hosted by an employee of the Federal Government's press and publicity arm, a program that, like many others, is produced in the guise of a newscast.

The person hosting the program interviewed an Argentine citizen who belongs to the country's Jewish community, and as a result of his questions, which were posed in an openly aggressive tone, the Delegation of Israeli-Argentine Associations released a statement on behalf of the Jewish community repudiating the remarks made on the program.

As we know, the state controls the television channels in this capital, and there is no possibility whatsoever of someone practicing unfettered the so-called journalism that we see on our screens.

Therefore, our first observation is that the program's host did not act on his own, but rather in response to indications or suggestions, or at least with the approval of the authorities at the television channel and the Secretariat of Public Information.

Our second observation, hence, is that it is hard to believe that General Llamas is a Nazi, much less so President Videla. It so happens, however, that under the current administration and at a time when Argentina is the target of accusations from around the world, which we are all familiar with, someone (we do not know who) had the "bright" idea to sow the seeds of suspicions regarding an outbreak of clearly racist sentiments.

This television channel was doing its disservice to Argentine foreign policy just when the former editor of the paper LA OPINION, Jacobo Timerman, is scheduled to make a public appearance in the United States next week. Timerman was detained in the custody of the Military Junta and the Executive Branch not because he is a Jew but because he was an associate of David Graiver, the financial agent of the "Montoneros." He will be introduced by Patricia Derian, who is quite well-known in circles having to do with Argentine foreign relations.

Without going into further detail regarding the use of television channels, we can state that the incident had repercussions that are still continuing.

Volando, Massera and a Document

In light of a decision by the Labor Ministry banning a farm work stoppage that the Argentine Agrarian Federation, headed by Humberto Volando, had ordered, we had a chance to investigate some other related matters, including a message of congratulations sent by the former member of the Military Junta of the current National Reorganization Process and the former commander in chief of the navy, retired Adm Emilio Massera.

His congratulations were in connection with the success achieved at the Rosario business congress. Volando appeared 48 hours after the Rosario meeting before the interior minister, who cautioned him that his stands would suggest that he is entering an area close to dissension, which the government is not willing to tolerate.

But it so happens that Massera had sent a note supporting the business gathering staged by Volando and reaffirming his views on economic problems.

Massera's Views

In his note to the National Convocation of Businessmen, Admiral Massera recalled that "relations between the rulers and the ruled cannot become detached from certain basic assumptions that are often forgotten: the authorities must always serve the people, who pay their salaries, and no government ought to expect more respect from the people than the government has for the people."

He adds that "when this is not the case, we cannot speak of democracy, but rather of authoritarianism, which is justified solely in very few situations, in the face of extreme national emergencies in which the very existence of the republic is at stake." He went on to assert that "society must not feel threatened, because fear so corrupts the soul that it can make a totalitarian out of a democrat."

Without downplaying the impact of economic problems but rejecting the idea that they are the driving force of history, he stressed that the problem is political because it is ethical, and any deviation could prompt conceit in the holders of power, the various kinds of power, and lead them towards an irrational omnipotence, while the people become regrettably listless. But let's not forget that without slaves there are no tyrants..."

He reiterated, in conclusion, that all of these things ought to be debated by Argentines and that that is why the businessmen's gathering seemed useful to him.

RECENT CENSUS STATISTICS ANALYZED

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 31 Oct 80 p 11

[Article by Ramon Vazquez: "Census Shows Political Power Still Concentrated on the Humid Plains Area"]

[Text] Now that the figures provided by the 1980 census are known as a result of the statistics made available yesterday at a press conference by the head of the Executive Committee, Dr Guillermo C. Bravo, who was in charge of the execution of the costly operation carried out last Wednesday, 22 October, the time has begun to launch the first efforts to make the sizable mass of data intelligible in order to try to establish general trends in the country in the population sector, with their defects and virtues. The future of the nation can be seen therein. The overall results for the province of Buenos Aires were already available some days earlier, showing a total of 10,796,036 inhabitants (including 7,347,743 in the suburban belt of greater Buenos Aires). If we recall that the 1970 census showed 8,774,529 souls in that same province (with 5,380,447 in greater Buenos Aires), a simple calculation tells us that the growth rate in the past 10 years was (on an average) 1.9 percent per year.

Turning to the National Statistics and Census Institute (INDEC), we learn that the average increase between the 1960 and 1970 censuses (the preceding 10 years) was considerably higher: 2.14 percent per year.

If we add to this the population decline seen in the Federal Capital (2,908,000 inhabitants in 1980 as compared to 2,972,000 in 1970, with a decline of 2.2 percent for the decade) and in some provinces in the North of Argentina--due to migration to developed urban centers such as Cordoba, Rosario or greater Buenos Aires--we have a discouraging picture, despite the slow rate of annual growth of 1.756 percent in a country which, as we said in an earlier article, is underpopulated in the greater part of its territory, with a concentration (in 1970) of 80 percent of its population in the cities.

Tierra del Fuego (8.8 percent average annual increase) and Neuquen (4.61 percent per year) have been exceptions to this general trend. They are two poles which encourage our hopes of an incipient reversal of the traditional tendencies. In any case, the figures will have to be borne out in both cases in the coming 1990 census in order to have absolute certainty about a development which would thus become good news and perhaps might extend to other Argentine frontier zones, as is the case with Misiones.

Concentrated Population

For some decades the confluence of various migratory currents on the center of attraction, Buenos Aires, has been increasing. The percentage of the population of the country in greater Buenos Aires, which was 13.2 percent in the 1869 census, has increased successively to 19.7 percent in 1895, 25.8 percent in 1914, 29.7 percent in 1947, 33.7 percent in 1960 and 35.7 percent in 1970, with a drop to 34.8 percent for this decade.

The rent law, along with other regulations, has caused a number of families to leave the Federal Capital for the conurban complex. And more and more settlers continue to come from the provinces in the Argentine North (in intense waves during the dry season), having decided because of the droughts, lack of work, and crises in regional economies to leave their homes in search of better living conditions.

The population of greater Buenos Aires has increased by 26.6 percent in the past 10 years (some 2 million additional inhabitants), with an annual average growth rate of 2.7 percent, one of the highest in the country. In the preceding decade (1960-1970), this average was 3.5 percent, but the general slowdown in the rate of demographic growth which the country in general has been experiencing must be taken into account.

Thus if on the one hand the rate of numerical population growth has been slowing dangerously, that same population, on the other hand, is becoming increasingly concentrated in the cities (and it is already clear that the decline seen for the Federal Capital is more a question of convenience—the departing residents merely move to the other side of General Paz, where premises are more accessible to the ordinary pocket, especially for young couples).

The other spectacular case is the city of Cordoba, which has now come to be the second largest in the country (990,007 inhabitants), relegating Rosario to third place, with 935,471 souls. The provinces in which both cities are located retained their traditional positions, on the other hand: Santa Fe has 2,457,188 inhabitants and Cordoba 2,324,502. The census authorities said, to confirm this trend further, that the process of population concentration in Cordoba has proceeded since 1970 at an average rate of 25 percent. As we can see, this is somewhat less than the rate in greater Buenos Aires, although the difference is not great. In the final years of the 18th century, Cordoba was the most heavily settled province, followed by Buenos Aires.

Those who have studied the phenomenon of this century, which is urban concentration and the resulting rural depopulation, which is occurring nowadays in all countries, make a point of stressing that "concentration brings more concentration," while "the concentration of men brings with it economic, political and military concentration to be able to balance the forces, because without this balance society is destroyed." Thus a rapid destruction of the industries which absorbed manpower, without creating replacement infrastructures in other territories, in the midst of a process of growing population increase, can come to be on some future day a distorting factor, at least if the balance mentioned is altered.

The Argentine Phenomenon

Argentina, in addition to all that has been said, has its own characteristics not to be found anywhere else in the world. Although there are those who have compared us with Canada and Australia in terms of territorial depopulation, it can be said that they did not take certain peculiar features into account. One of them, the most outstanding, is without a doubt the existence of the wet plains region, on which, encircling a "sea" of vegetation growing on a surface of rich humus, Buenos Aires, Rosario and Cordoba contain more than half of the population of the country . . . and perhaps this figure would be low if we were to add the other populated centers.

Thus all the basic activities are therefore concentrated on the west plains, and they do not far exceed its boundaries. And the whole weight of the political power in Argentina lies there, with a kind of traditional polarity--now increased, according to the last census--wherein Cordoba has served as a counterweight to Buenos Aires since the distant days of the colonial era.

The need to create other poles of power becomes acute when enormous areas of land (Patagonia, the Northeast, the submeridional depressions, the "impenetrable" region, etc) and water (the Argentine Sea, the South Atlantic) still lack exploitation activities which are intensive and/or extensive enough to become critical factors for the country, despite their food and energy production potential. It can even be said that there are economic activities which have dwindled. For example, sheep breeding, for which the territory and climate in Patagonia are ideal, declined from 74 million head in 1895 to 34 million in 1977.

The same can be said of fishing, the "livestock breeding" of the future, mining exploitation and replacement crops, as well as industries adapted to the characteristics of each zone.

When the census has provided all the figures, then the time will have come to set them forth in full. In other words, to make the mass of ciphers intelligible, deriving from them conclusions valid for the building of a modern, stable and truly efficient nation. Otherwise, we can never justify the enormous expenditure and tremendous effort involved in planning for the complete paralyzation of the country last Wednesday, 22 October, to complete a survey which would only be useful to international bodies. However, we can decide many things inside our frontiers if we so desire. Or does the energy the community has evidenced on specific occasions count for nothing? Efficiency involves avoiding the waste of this incalculable source of energy.

MASSERA SUPPORTS VOLANDO--The former commander in chief of the navy, Adm (Ret) Emilio Massera today informed the head of the Argentine Agrarian Federation (FAA), Humberto Volando, that "your courage, integrity, conviction and undeviating responsibility played a great role in the success achieved" at the business meeting in Rosario. Massera sent a note to the agrarian leader today in which he said that "I have followed the development of the meeting of businessmen held in the city of Rosario on 18 October last very closely." He went on to say that "I know that your courage, integrity, conviction and undeviating responsibility to the ideals of an Argentina which is united, powerful and developed in all its aspects have played a great role in the success achieved." He went on to say that "I can tell you as an Argentine citizen that both you and those who organized and sponsored this gathering have behind them a long path covered, providing such a clear example of Argentine doctrinary consistency that there is no room for petty suspicions regarding the complex of your attitudes." In conclusion Massera sent Volando "my congratulations on the event, and I would pray God that our country continues always to have protagonists such as you." USSR ENVOY LAUDS BRAZIL'S RESISTANCE TO GRAIN EMBARGO

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 2 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] Brasilia--In a speech yesterday on the occasion of the anniversary of the Soviet revolution, Soviet Ambassador Dimitriy Zhukov said that he greatly appreciated the fact that Brazil did not give in to the pressures of certain foreign circles and thus opposed the so-called trade sanctions against his country.

In the speech made at a luncheon in his residence, he referred to the U.S. grain embargo against the USSR after the invasion of Afghanistan.

"As Leonid Brezhnev underlined in the preface to the Brazilian edition of his memoirs, Soviet-Brazilian relations today are relations of honest and mutually beneficial collaboration based on mutual respect for sovereignty and dignity, the equality of rights and noninterference in the internal affairs of one another," said Ambassador Zhukov.

The ambassador said that "on our part, we are ready to consolidate that cooperation on behalf of the people of the two countries."

Zhukov also announced the visit to Moscow in December by the president of the Chamber of Deputies, Flavio Marcilio, at the head of a Brazilian delegation, reciprocating the visit of the alternate member of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (CPSU), Deputy Eduvard Shevardnadze, last April.

Zhukov pointed out that Soviet-Brazilian cooperation has already produced concrete results, such as the Capivara hydroelectric plant on the Paranapanema River, by supplying machinery, and also the Sobradinho hydroelectric plant, which the ambassador himself visited recently.

PRESS REPORTAGE ON RELATIONS WITH USSR

Speech by USSR Ambassador

Brasilia CORREIO BRAZILIENSE in Portuguese 7 Nov 80 p 21

["Main passages" of speech by USSR Ambassador Dmitri Zhukov in Brasilia, probably on 6 November, in commemoration of the 63d anniversary of the October Revolution]

[Excerpts] USSR Ambassador and Mrs Dmitri Zhukov are inviting the diplomatic community, government authorities, congressmen, journalists and friends to a grand reception they are holding at noon today in their official residence on Avenue of the Nations South, Lot A. The Soviet Union is observing the 63d anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution.

Also among anniversary commemorations, Ambassador and Mrs Zhukov, as they do each year since their arrival in Brasilia, met in their mansion on the shore of Lake Paranoa with the Brasilia press corps, with the presence of all other Soviet diplomats accredited here. On the occasion, as he has been doing each year, Ambassador Zhukov made a speech about his country's accomplishments in its relations with Brazil.

We transcribe below the main passages of the Soviet ambassador's talk:

Relations With Brazil

Speaking about relations between the Soviet Union and Brazil, I should like to point out that relations between our countries have a long history: diplomatic relations were established for the first time more than 150 years ago. Soviet-Brazilian relations today, as Leonid I. Brezhnev emphasized in the preface to the Brazilian edition of his memoirs, are those of honest and mutually advantageous collaboration, based upon mutual respect of sovereignty and dignity, upon equality of rights and nonintervention in each other's internal affairs. Commercial, economic and cultural ties are developing successfully. For our part, we are ready to consolidate this cooperation for the benefit of the peoples of both our nations.

The official visit in April of this year by the Soviet parliamentary delegation headed by Eduard Shevardnadze, candidate member of the Politburo of the

CC [Central Committee] of the CPSU, deputy of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, was a clear manifestation of the strengthened relations between our countries. It is a great satisfaction for me to confirm that next December the Brazilian congressmen led by Flavio Marcilio, president of the Chamber of Deputies of the National Congress, will return the visit. It will be most pleasant for us to receive the guests from Brazil, who must not be afraid of the cold December weather in Russia. I am sure they will be greeted in Moscow with such warmth and hospitality that will force the winter cold to retreat.

Viewing the fruitful commercial and economic cooperation, we can note with satisfaction that Brazil did not yield to pressure from certain circles outside the country, opposing the so-called "trade sanctions" against the Soviet Union. It was very gratifying for us to receive in Moscow the Olympic team from Brazil--the largest in the entire history of your nation's participation in the Olympic movement.

Soviet-Brazilian cooperation has shown concrete results. Suffice it to mention in this regard the Capivara hydroelectric station on the Paranapanema River, for which the Soviet Union participated in furnishing the machinery. Another demonstration of growing trade ties is USSR participation in constructing the Sobradinho hydroelectric station on the Sao Francisco River which I had the opportunity of visiting recently.

Gentlemen, in conclusion I should like to cite another part of Leonid Brezhnev's preface to the Brazilian edition of his memoirs. Expressing the sentiments of the Soviets in regard to your nation, he said: "We see in Brazil a nation with a great future and, with all our hearts, we hope that future will be peaceful and happy."

Thanking you for having accepted the invitation to this gathering, I raise my glass to those wishes for your country becoming a reality.

Priority for Brazilian Shipping

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 5 Nov 80 p 17

[Text] The Soviet mission that will negotiate maritime transport with Brazil arrived in Rio de Janeiro yesterday. The Brazilian government is greatly interested in the negotiations, as they may result in an important concession: priority for Brazilian ships docking in the port of Leningrad.

The priority will lower the cost of Brazilian freight and can make feasible an ambitious plan for grain exports that Brazil is negotiating with the Soviets for 1981. The mission is led by Anatole Goldobenko, director of maritime transport for the Soviet Union.

Merchant Marine Authorities Meet

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 6 Nov 80 p 25

[Text] The vice minister of the Soviet Merchant Marine, Anatole Goldobenko, yesterday refuted criticisms made by Brazilian authorities about congestion in the port of Leningrad. Goldobenko said the situation in Brazilian ports was similar and the criticisms made by the National Merchant Marine Superintendency (SUNAMAM) were not justified.

Goldobenko had lunch yesterday with SUNAMAM Superintendent Joao Carlos Palhares dos Santos. Despite disagreement about the port situation--as the Soviets did not acquiesce to the criticisms made by the Brazilians--the meeting was cordial and also dealt with ways to encourage bilateral trade through improved service provided by the merchant fleets of the two countries.

Contract for Exporting Chicken

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 4 Nov 80 p 19

[Text] Brasilia--The Soviet Union will import 40,000 tons of chicken produced in Brazil. The contract was signed last week by the National Union of Chicken Exporters, together with another contract that provides for the sale of 60,000 tons to Iraq.

The announcement about the National Union of Chicken Exporters contracts was made yesterday by the Production Financing Commission (CFP) of the Agriculture Ministry, which did not provide further details about the transactions.

STRATEGISTS CONCLUDE THAT COUP IS NOT FEASIBLE

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 26 Oct 80 p 7

[Report from Brasilia by Guilherme Costa Manso]

[Text] Last week once again, military sources noted the dissatisfaction of some military sectors, even predicting a radical change in the course of the government's political plan on an already given date: mid-November.

In that connection, according to the sources, the statement of the chief of the 4th Army Division, Jose Luis Coelho Neto, was the first step, indicating the disapproval of the more intransigent military men of the political situation of the country, or rather, of the "advance of the left."

The next step would be a nationalistic statement indicating displeasure with the course of the economy, followed finally by the last phase: practical changes.

Reportedly at the root of all the dissatisfaction is displeasure over the "revanchism" now represented by the punishment of Dr Harry Shibata, which in the future could be extended into an offensive against the military men who participated in the hardest period of the revolution. That is regarded in the barracks as unacceptable.

Military Panorama

If the opinion of reliable military sources were not enough, it is worth examining the political-military panorama technically to confirm the word of strategists who do not consider any general in the present army staffs capable of organizing "for the purpose of a coupist adventure."

Otherwise let us see: in order for a military action without the command of the president of the republic to be successful, it would be necessary for officers of the three armed forces to meet in large regional assemblies to establish a minimum of consensus about the principles to be followed. The dissatisfaction of the military is varied: there are those in both the active and reserve services who consider the salaries low, "to the point where one cannot maintain a proper standard of living;" those who are dissatisfied over the delay in promotions; those who are unhappy with an officer of superior rank, with a colleague, with the assignment received; in short, there are normal dissatisfactions of a community of more than 30,000 officers.

There are also large pockets of political dissatisfaction. There are meetings of officers at which licentiousness, the actions of the left, the newspapers of the "dwarfish" press, pornography, corruption and even the actions of people in the government itself are condemned.

However, there is no conspiracy, or maneuvers that would culminate in a coup d'etat or that could be more than an easily controlled barracks uprising, and for that very reason quite unlikely. According to the opinion of the strategists, for a coup d'etat it is essential that one control a minimum of two armies; and for formally gaining power, the military command of Planalto Palace. The consensus of the three armed forces is also essential. Finally, there must be an economic situation that is favorable for tightening up the regime.

Principles of 1964

Why is it that the regime cannot tighten up? There are two important elements: on the one hand, in its purest principles, the historical mission of the 1964 revolution always aimed to return the country to a state of law, since it is known that the armed forces cannot sustain power indefinitely. On the other hand, the economic situation is so serious--balance of payments, foreign debt and inflation--that a tightening up of the regime would not contribute at all to the solution of the problems. On the contrary, they would be aggravated "and would certainly produce social upheavals of unforeseen proportions," as one source pointed out.

While, on the one hand, the new salary law, the new promotion law and the new military statutes will reduce the dissatisfaction in the reserve and active services, on the other hand, by formally restricting staff perquisites, submitting to the judiciary for trial the names of those who attacked the armed forces, as well as limiting the exhibition of some pornographic films and magazines of the same nature, the executive is succeeding in temporizing the more serious political dissatisfaction.

Against Golbery

According to military strategists, the acts of disapproval are directly basically against Minister Golbery, mentor and principal organizer of the political opening, "a specialist in power." According to the sources the premise of the chief of the Civilian Household "is perfect considering the results obtained." "Golbery organizes all plans based on the maxim: 'The opposition is incompetent.' Thus he makes and unmakes, organizes and dismantles, consolidates and pulverizes the forces opposed to the government."

Minister Golbery, the sources explain, is not understood by the more hardliners in the system, "who favor inflexible laws that, without any doubt and contrary to what they think, would provoke a veritable civil war."

Balance

"The principal mentor of the opening," continued the strategists, perceived what the Church had already perceived some time ago. It was no longer possible to remain too aloof from the people because situations were foreseen for which the government was not prepared, that is, in the face of concrete and imminent social problems, laws might be generated which in practice would invalidate the whole juridicial framework of the country." Thus, he began to relax the country, exchanging the retrogressive measures imposed in the recent past and creating a climate favorable for overcoming the economic obstacles.

The military men closest to the president seek to pass that strategy along to the troops, either through the orders of the day or in personal conversations. In fact, what is expected is the balance of the opposition, not provoking the more hardliners, from whom calm is also expected, as members of the first echelon confided.

Next year, General Figueiredo will be presented with the possibility of shaping the Army High Command with personnel in whom he has absolute trust, deleting from the system the names of those he deems inadvisable. At that time, it will not be difficult to perceive the strength of each line of thinking opposed to or partly opposed to palace strategy.

PRESTES ADMITS WRITING ALLEGED SUBVERSIVE LETTER

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 30 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] In a 4-hour deposition in the Federal Police Department (DPF) in Rio the former secretary general of the Brazilian Communist Party (PCB), Luis Carlos Prestes, yesterday confirmed that he was the author of the letter sent last 30 August to Ceara students, condemning the attacks against the Brazilian Bar Association and the city council of Rio de Janeiro. Prestes will return to the federal police at 1430 hours today to conclude his deposition.

The regional superintendent of the DPF, Commissioner Roberto Porto, revealed that Luis Carlos Prestes had been summoned to explain the purposes of the letter which, according to Porto, "contains insinuations and incitation aimed at rebellion against the constituted order."

The investigation concerning the letter was opened by the DPF superintendency in Ceara but in order that it would not be necessary for Prestes to go to Fortaleza to testify, a writ of mandamus was forwarded to the Rio superintendency.

Commissioner Roberto Porto explained that the investigation does not mean that Prestes is going to be charged in inquest, and added:

"What is being done now is to determine who really wrote the letter and for what purpose it was written. This is the phase we call the preinquest phase. If an inquest is opened--which falls within the competence of the regional superintendency of Ceara--it may or may not be transformed into a legal case. In that case, the decision will belong to the judiciary. As soon as Prestes' deposition is completed, it will be forwarded to Fortaleza and the course to be taken by the investigation will be decided there.

The Deposition

Luis Carlos Prestes arrived at the DPF headquarters at 1000 hours. He was accompanied by his lawyers, Aldo Lins e Silva, Anacio Salvador Caldeira, Rodolfo Veloso Neto and Oswaldo Barbosa da Silva.

The former secretary general of the PCB testified for 2 hours before Commissioner Elbio Pereira Neto, without the presence of the press. Since he arrived in Brazil after being amnestied, in October of last year, this is the first time Prestes has been summoned by a police agency for questioning.

Prestes left the federal police at 1200 hours, and went home for lunch in Gavea. On his departure, he avoided making any statements but the reporters insisted and he finally gave in. He said he did not know anything about the document in the hands of Commissioner Elbio Pereira Neto. Before taking a taxi, flanked by lawyer Aldo Lins e Silva, he said:

"I write various documents and letters to my friends spread out all over the country."

When the taxi left, lawyers Acacio Caldeira, Rodolfo Veloso Neto and Oswaldo da Silva revealed that, although he had stated the opposite a few moments before, Prestes in fact confirmed to the federal police that he had written the letter.

The Return

It was 1540 hours when Luis Carlos returned to the federal police to continue his deposition. He greeted the reporters smilingly and said he would soon return to give them an interview.

While Prestes was testifying in the notary's office, lawyer Aldo Lins e Silva went to the courtyard of the federal police building where the reporters were and distributed copies of the letter to the Ceara students, revealing that he had entered a protest into the record of the investigation against the questions asked of Prestes.

"The federal police," he said, "wants to transform a simple deposition into a veritable document of official inquiry, completely disregarding the purposes of the writ of mandamus. They asked the most deplorable questions. They wanted to know what were Prestes' relations with the Church; what he thinks about the doctrinal line of the Brazilian clergy, and if he has already had any contact after his return from exile with anyone in the Catholic hierarchy. They asked him to give a report on the history of the Brazilian Communist Party since 1922. They asked him questions about the trip he made to Cuba and also about the political activities he has been carrying out. In short, they exceeded their powers, which is completely illegal. Prestes refused to answer all questions that went beyond the purpose of the deposition.

The Interview

At 1800 hours Prestes' deposition was suspended. Commissioner Roberto Porto accompanied him to the lobby of the building where he granted the following interview:

[Question] Are you really the writer of the letter to the Ceara students? This morning, you denied it but your lawyers confirmed the authorship.

[Answer] I wrote the letter. At the request of a delegation that came to Rio to visit me, I addressed a letter to the students of Ceara, who were going to hold a demonstration against the terrorist attacks against the headquarters of the Brazilian Bar Association and the city council. Those attacks, which are already resulting in casualties, affected me strongly from the outset. It was a letter of protest against terrorism.

[Question] How did you receive the summons to testify?

[Answer] It is the right of the police.

[Question] Are you afraid of being made liable to the national security law?

[Answer] That is up to the police. I cannot know their intentions. So far, from what I know, there is no inquest. What is strange is that they asked me questions completely extraneous to the main subject, which is the letter. I have nothing to add with regard to the letter. It was written in clear, legible and even didactic Portuguese.

[Question] Does the letter have any connection with the current policy of the PCB?

[Answer] No. It is a letter by me to the students. There is not the slightest reference to communism or even that I am a communist.

[Question] In the letter, you ask the students to go out into the streets. Is that a form of incitement?

[Answer] Yes, I do call on the students to go out into the streets to protest against terrorism. But that is not incitement or an appeal to violence. To go out into the street to protest against acts of terrorism is a right and a duty of every citizen.

During the evening session of congress in Brasilia yesterday, Deputy Modesto da Silveira (Brazilian Democratic Movement Party--Rio de Janeiro) protested against the way former Senator Luis Carlos Prestes was summoned to testify before the federal police. The deputy declared that the police who questioned him all day yesterday "sought to intimidate him, asking him extraneous questions."

According to Modesto da Silveira, "the summoning of Prestes is a provocation by the forces that seek to prevent the political opening."

He added that the attitude of the federal police is "arbitrary, illegal and repugnant."

The Letter to the Students

My young friends:

It is still deeply affected, as are all democrats and patriots, by the acts of terrorism which have already resulted in casualties that I address these lines to you. We all feel insecure as a result of the attacks that have been occurring in our country in recent months against political personalities, against popular newspapers, against democratic organizations, which seek to hamper or impede the circulation of the so-called alternative press, and that have been occurring parallel with the emergence of new organizations of a reactionary nature, as if the "death squadrons" and the Department of Domestic Operations-Internal Defense Operations Center (DOI-CODI) of torture and murder of political prisoners were not enough.

These are new and more dangerous fascist manifestations against which it is essential not only to proclaim our repudiation but to organize the broadest sectors of the population, particularly, in your case, the students, with the aim of gaining the street in order to confront the fascist enemy with the force of the masses and compel the government to point out and punish the culprits, those responsible for the criminal actions against the people.

But in order to gain the masses for action, it is essential to enlighten them, to show them where the roots of those fascist manifestations lie, not letting them be deceived by the false but now generalized hypothesis that it is necessary to support the dictatorship against the supposed enemy of the "right," necessarily opposed to the "democratic opening" of Mr Figueiredo. If there is a "right," it is in the dictatorship itself and is comprised of its subordinates.

Who was it that so violently suppressed the big strike of the Sao Bernardo metalworkers if not the current rulers through the intermediation of Minister Murilo Macedo and the commanding general of the 2d Army? What are its intentions if not to intimidate the working class in order to prevent new strikes? Now the dictatorship already fears the popular movement on behalf of democratic freedoms that has been growing little by little and thereby tends to compel the dictatorship to make further concessions. But the dictatorship wants to impose its "opening" on our people as democracy--with the retention of "constitutional safeguards" and fascist laws such as the national security law, the antistrike law, the Falcao law; a "democracy" without union independence, without the free organization of all currents of opinion into political parties, without the legalization of the Communist Party; in short, a "democracy" with inflation in excess of 100 percent a year, with a galloping cost of living and starvation wages. It is in defense of that "opening," which refuses to expand, that the dictatorship tries to intimidate all the people, mobilizing the DOI-CODI's, the "death squadrons" and organizations such as "Tradition, Family and Property," the "Communist Hunting Command," the "New Fatherland Falange," the "Patriotic Falange," and others that engage in terrorist acts, in the indiscriminate murder of the Brazilians.

Therefore, instead of the deceptive support for the dictatorship, what behooves us is to intensify the struggle for democratic freedoms in close union with the struggles for the most immediate demands of the workers and the other sectors of the population. In order to defeat fascism, therefore, let us intensify the mass struggle, let us gain the streets, uniting and organizing the workers in the broad protest against terrorism, advancing in the formation of the democratic front capable of struggling for democratic freedoms, for the defeat of the dictatorship, for the deepening and broadening of democracy for the masses, for social progress.

Down with fascism.

For the dismantling of the DOI-CODI's and other fascist organizations.

For a real democracy for the workers.

CONTROL OF LIBERALS, PCB, MR-8 IN PMDB EXAMINED

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 26 Oct 80 p 8

[Text] Congressmen of all political tendencies belonging to the Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMDB) in Rio admit that the liberals led by Senator Nelson Carneiro, chairman of the provisional regional committee control from 70 to 80 percent of the party in the state; the communists who follow the line of the Brazilian Communist Party (PCB) Central Committee, from 20 to 30 percent, and the 8 of October Revolutionary Movement (MR-8), approximately 10 percent.

The two senators from the party in Rio are considered liberals, as are 8 of the 11 federal deputies and half of the six state deputies. At the present time, the major regional leaders in addition to Senators Nelson Carneiro and Roberto Saturnino are Federal Deputy Marcelo Cerqueira and Attorney Raphael de Almeida Magalhaes, all completely in tune with one another.

Internal Democracy

There are those who maintain within the party that, at the most decisive times, it is the federal deputies who rule because they are the largest bloc. Even congressmen more to the left consider the Rio PMDB to be a party of liberals which, because it is democratic, accepts other currents of opinion.

Since its origin is the anti-Chagas nucleus of the old Brazilian Democratic Movement (MDB), there is internal resistance against the bossy methods attributed to Governor Chagas Freitas, who is now in the Popular Party (PP). The two senators carry more weight and have more influence and are heeded more but there is ample freedom to differ. In the opinion of the leftist congressmen themselves, the senators "have a natural preeminence; they are not bosses." Senator Nelson Carneiro has more influence in the old capital, former Guanabara, while Roberto Saturnino wields more in the interior.

Certain congressmen relate that at some meetings of the provisional regional committee, they got tired of hearing Senator Nelson Carneiro's admonitions about the nature of the PMDB:

"This party is moderate, of the middle class and not of radicals," a reference to what is called internally the "personnel of the 8," and "horapovistas" (from HORA DO POVO, the alternative newspaper regarded as the spokesman for MR-8).

The PCB

Even congressmen regarded as radicals in the party consider the party program to be correct, basically because it is nationistic. In their opinion, there are no "wrong" points; rather they are not very deep for a more "popular" outlook. The PMDB fights for the democratization of the country, for the freedom of party organization but, according to those sectors more to the left, it does not envisage the "collectivization of the land or the nationalization of the banking network," therefore, it is not a socialist and revolutionary party.

Even the communists believe that the liberals must necessarily be in control in the PMDB. Furthermore, the communists of the Central Committee line (Giocondo Dias) assert that they do not want a command in the party for two principal reasons: they dream of the legalization of their own party (the PCB); and they consider that at the present time a communist command in the PMDB would not necessarily mean a real advance of Brazilian society in terms of structural changes. In the opinion of the communists, the PMDB is not a party "capable of operating radical changes in the structure of the country"; rather, it is a "party necessary for the phase of transition from the authoritarian regime to a liberal regime with democratic freedoms." The communists of the Giocondo Dias wing represented in the Rio PMDB do not post any restrictions regarding the other opposition parties because they also consider the unity of the opposition as basic to the transition phase.

It is admitted that the Central Committee line PCB controls the Rio PMDB in at least 10 municipal or district committees in the state. The communists say that they maintain a "party to party" relationship within the party, with respect for the historic tradition of the PCB. In short, the Central Committee line communists regard themselves as guests of the PMDB, whose program they acknowledge to be "acceptable for the current Brazilian situation" for a "bourgeois democratic party capable of operating the transition."

According to congressmen, the line of Luis Carlos Prestes (former secretary general of the PCB Central Committee) advocates a leftist front within the PMDB to force a more radical position by the party. Since that line is rejected, he is isolating himself and at the most is succeeding in identifying himself with the more leftist sectors: the MR-8. The congressmen admit that there are three communist state deputies in the Rio PMDB, one of whom belongs to the Prestes line and is considered a spokesman for the MR-8; of the four communist councilmen, one is reportedly allied with the MR-8.

"Ipanema metalworkers," "radicalized bourgeoisie" and other terms are used among liberal or communist congressmen to identify the activists who belong to the MR-8 or are attracted by it. The majority is comprised of students from the Southern Zone, among whom the PMDB has made great inroads. At the last congress of the State Students Union (UEE), it is believed that 80 percent of the participants adhered to the PMDB, which does not mean that they support the MR-8, the sources stressed. It is believed among the liberals and Central Committee line communists, and even among congressmen considered spokesmen of the MR-8, that the great mass joins the party, identifies fully with it and not with this or that movement within it.

The MR-8 is "very ill-regarded" by the congressmen not associated with it. It differs from the Central Committee line communists because they do not consider themselves "guests" of the party. It causes the liberals concern because of its concept of political activity.

A document published by the MR-8 last month in the newspaper HORA DO POVO is circulating around congressional offices. It serves as the basis for the criticism of the dominant majority in the party about the "personnel of the 8."

The document analyzes the differences in the tactics of the communist movement against the country's present regime. It advocates a "revolutionary popular alternative" contrary to the "peaceful transition led by the liberals." It questions whether the communists should or should not be at the head of the struggle against the regime.

The MR-8 refuses to be a "simple support point in the current structure of the PMDB," a party chosen by vote. Members of the Workers Party (PT) "thank God" because they were not preferred by the MR-8, by a margin of two votes.

According to the document also, the MR-8 has decided to embark "resolutely on building a solid alliance between the popular sectors and the militant liberals, isolating the moderate liberals" because it alleges that "what is important is that the popular forces be its head and its heart."

It does not consider armed struggle "a question of principle" but it proclaims "...it is the duty of the communists to prepare the masses from the ideological viewpoint for the possibility which has been confirmed without exception by all the revolutions in our century: armed struggle."

The concept that the PMDB can be transformed into a popular and even revolutionary party clashes with the other internal sectors, especially the liberals who are in control.

Example

All sectors within the Rio PMDB try to get along as well as possible and strive for unity and are aware that one of the principal differences between the PMDB and its predecessor, the defunct MDB, lies in the fact that in the face of the defeat of the armed struggle in the past decade, many groups engaged in selfcriticism and decided to participate in the political party process. One of the parties adopted by those groups was the PMDB, which does not demand "ideological credentials," inasmuch as its leaders consider party activity as a conscious political choice to be laudable, normal and legitimate. Besides, it is stressed also that the party did not receive only leftist forces.

But behind the scenes, the PMDB'ers do not hide the irritation caused by the more radical left wing, normally identified now with the MR-8. The biggest clash occurred in the 17th Electoral Zone in Rio (Botanical Garden and environs, with approximately 90 voters) between a slate "sponsored" by the MR-8 and that led by the former transportation and public works minister in the Joao Goulart government, Helio de Almeida.

There is general certainty in the party that the majority of those adhering to the slate attributed to the MR-8, termed the President Ulysses Guimaraes slate, surely do not have any notion of the movement, accepting participation simply because of identifying with the PMDB. Those accused of representing the MR-8, such as state Deputy Raimundo de Oliveira, have a different explanation:

"They are calling MR-8 the more mobilized sectors, such as the students, workers, slum-dwellers, some liberal professionals and persons connected with the Church. In fact, there is simply a difference between those who advocate an office party and those who seek to mobilize the rank-and-file," says the deputy, who denies any type of participation in the clandestine movement. He points out that he was arrested twice and was not tried either time for lack of evidence, just as occurred with Councilman Antonio Carlos de Carvalho.

According to Raimundo de Oliveira, "there are politicians who are used to conducting an office party out of touch with the masses; and those who seek to broaden popular participation are immediately labeled communists."

What is certain is that within the four walls of the PMDB, the case of the 17th Electoral Zone is being treated as fight between the MR-8 and the liberals, however, without citing the names of the members of the leftist movement.

Dimensions

The real dimensions of the problem are not yet known within the party. One congressman believes that the MR-8 only succeeded in electing one delegate among the 52 already elected to participate in the party's regional convention next month. Another believes that the movement holds positions in Flamengo, Cascadura, Gavea, Ipanema, Campo Grande and Niteroi. Even the chairmanship of a party directorate has reportedly been gained.

There is also the certainty that the MR-8 operates basically in the municipality of Rio, which is explained by the fact that the movement was born in old Guanabara in 1969. Associated with the National Liberation Action, also PCB dissidents, the MR-8 embarked on armed struggle, deciding to kidnap U.S. Ambassador Charles Elbrick in order to exchange him for 15 prisoners. After the death of Captain Carlos Lamarca in Bahia by the forces of repression, the movement began to revise its policy.

Today it retains one characteristic of its origin, that of being essentially a students movement with great mobilizing capability. Its preferred jargon in the Rio PMDB is known: "We are going to put the party out on the street." Despite the conflicts, all the sectors of the party hold a common position on the way to treat the problem: they should not assume an attitude that will serve as denunciation, even indirectly because, it is argued, at such time as the regime tightens up "it is those who are accused who will go to jail, who will go away." But the dominant majority in the party does not forgive the avidity of the personnel of the 8 in the attempt to stake out areas."

EMBRAER EXPECTS TO SELL 500 PLANES IN 1981

Rio de Janeiro O JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 26 Oct 80 p 34

[Text] Brasilia--The Brazilian aeronautical industry, which continues to be one of the government's priority goals, expects to produce a total of 500 planes by the end of the year in the Brazilian Aeronautics Company (EMBRAER) alone, with anticipated sales of 7 billion cruzeiros in Brazil and $100 million (6 billion cruzeiros) abroad. That company has also just established a branch in the United States, the Embraer Aircraft Cooperation. That information was revealed by Air Minister Brigadier Delio Jardim de Mattos, who believes the Brazilian aerospace industry already presents a well-defined profile of consolidation of a particularly difficult sector within the national production framework. According to the minister, the consequence of the oil crisis for the Brazilian Air Force (FAB) can be translated into the need to conserve the consumption of its byproducts.

Saving of Fuel

In an exclusive interview, the air minister spoke at length about questions connected essentially with his ministry, established 39 years ago, emphasizing civil aviation and the saving of fuel by the air force.

Thus, questioned about the consequences of the so-called "oil crisis" for aviation, the minister pointed out that, since 1973, the FAB has been trying to reduce its air activity without detriment to its operational level and maintenance of the desired levels of crew training.

He guaranteed that this can be done through remanaging transport lines, eliminating unessential flights, flyovers and even the deactivation of the Smoke Squadron. In that connection, and with a view to avoiding jeopardizing its operational level, the force has been proceeding with the program of converting engines to the use of alcohol, with the transfer of technical guidance to the accredited workshops. Thus, he revealed, the Aerospace Technology Center (CTA) is resuming the program of replacing diesel fuel with vegetable oils and also developing the design of an ethanol-fueled engine.

Finally, he pointed out, improvement of the flight protection system, which is going to be deployed soon via Dacta II, in addition to guaranteeing greater safety and regularity for air transportation, also favors great fuel savings. That is due to the shortening of routes and the reduction of flight times, "which was demonstrated in the 70's with the implementation of our radar network and other radio aids to air navigation," he added.

Civil Aviation

Questioned about the collaboration of the air minister in the economic and social development of the country, Brigadier Delio Jardim de Mattos spoke at length about the situation of the FAB in the different air sectors, speaking at greater length about civil aviation. He explained that at the present time, that system utilizes 363 FAB military men and 940 civilians and includes 6,137 civilian aircraft, 105 of which operate on regular lines and 67 on regional lines.

He revealed that there are 16,847 flight and 10,111 airline personnel engaged in that activity. He pointed out that on the international level, Brazilian civil aviation is present in 35 places, guaranteeing equal competition with the 23 foreign flag companies that operate in Brazil.

With regard to the aerospace industry, the minister revealed that the range of production runs from gliders; 2-, 4-, and 6-seater, single-engine planes; to turboprop bimotor planes of up to 18 passengers. The Brazilian aerospace industry also produces a training and ground attack jet and an extensive variety of specialized planes for use in agriculture, aerophotogrammetry, the calibration of radio aids to navigation, remote sensing, military transportation and maritime inspection.

He pointed out that in its 10 years of existence, EMBRAER produced a total of 2,052 planes, having built 308 in 1979 and delivered 459, of which 405 went to the domestic market and 54, abroad. At the present time, there are 100 Brazilian planes in operation in the 16 purchasing countries, located on 5 continents. In 1979 alone, the company sold 4 billion cruzeiros' worth of planes, including $58.3 million in exports.

Infrastructure

With regard to the aeronautical infrastructure, he pointed out that at the present time, the Air Ministry is directly or indirectly responsible for the establishment, construction, maintenance and commercial and industrial operation of about 1,800 public airports and 76 heliports and helishuttles.

According to the minister, the installation and administration of an infrastructure of this magnitude entailed an almost unbearable burden for the ministry, not only in budgetary resources but also in human resources. He explained: "Thus, it was necessary to decentralize those activities making possible, in addition to expediting management, the obtaining of extrabudgetary resources."

For that purpose, the Brazilian Airport Support Company (INFRAERO) and its subsidiaries were created. At the present time, they are responsible for the establishment and administration of the 42 most important airports in the country, the largest examples of which are the international airports of Rio de Janeiro and Manaus. The others are established directly by the Air Ministry through the directorate of engineering and its regional services, and by the Amazon Region Airport Commission (COMARA) the efficient work of which can be summarized by the following example:

In 1966 there were 10 macadamized runways in the Amazon; today there are 43 runways ready and 8 under construction.

Further on, referring to the favorable development of Brazilian civil aviation, he said that it continues to grow, occupying the following positions in world ranking: domestic traffic (passenger/kilometers), 6th place; international traffic (passenger/kilometers), 17th place; and domestic and international, 10th place.

INTERVIEW WITH RIO GRANDE DO SUL PMDB PRESIDENT PEDRO SIMON

Rio de Janeiro MANCHETE in Portuguese 15 Nov 80 pp 102-103

[Interview with Rio Grande do Sul PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Mobilization Party] president, Senator Pedro Simon, by Haroldo Hollanda: "The President of the Republic Will Be Elected By Direct Vote"; date and place of interview not given]

[Text] President of the Rio Grande do Sul PMDB, Senator Pedro Simon is known as one of the opposition politicians most antagonistic to the state. His aspirations to become governor were cut short by the "April package" which made elections for state governor indirect. Now, with the return of direct voting, he is one of those designated to be candidates for Piratini Palace in 1982.

In 1978 Pedro Simon was elected senator with an impressive vote. He believes that approval of the amendment reestablishing direct elections for governor is the beginning of a political process that will end in direct voting for president of the republic. The Rio Grande do Sul senator favors strengthening democratic institutions through solid political parties and consequent discussion of programmatic ideas by the electorate.

[Question] What is the political importance of the amendment reestablishing direct elections for governors?

[Answer] It is a beneficial political event. The PMDB wanted more: it also wanted direct elections for president of the republic and for mayors of state capitals. But the direct election for governor already is something. It is the beginning of a process that will end in choosing the president of the republic by popular vote. It is also the beginning of reestablishing federative power. The federation today is almost a figure of fiction. The states lost their autonomy because the governors are mere donees, as they were appointed by the president of the republic. They thus lost authority and credibility. An elected governor, even of the government party, has commitments to the voters who elected him. The central authority then receives him with respect because he has the backing of the people of his state. And the governor can really fight for the interests of his administration.

[Question] Whose candidacies for governor have been launched?

[Answer] MANCHETE has published the names of candidates already proposed by other opposition parties. The policy of the PMDB is to strengthen and respect the other parties. Although we now have the multiparty system, at an opportune moment we must sit down at the same table and discuss what is best for the opposition. The PMDB will not impose upon anyone, but neither will it be imposed upon.

[Question] How are your personal relations with Leonel Brizola?

[Answer] They are good. We had only one disagreement. Dr Brizola wanted me to enter his party. I supported the idea that we should all join a grand party of the opposition, whose name would be the Labor Party. This was not possible. We had in Rio Grande do Sul a period of political clarification. The options were made, the parameters are defined. I believe my personal relationship with Dr Brizola is the best possible.

[Question] Do you believe that Lula's PT [Workers Party] can become a definitive party organization?

[Answer] The workers represent a large mass, almost 90 percent of the Brazilian people. I believe that Lula, the labor-union leaders, the intellectuals and the sectors of the Church connected with formation of the PT can make it a strong party.

[Question] Should the opposition parties unite around the principle of a national understanding?

[Answer] I believe I was one of the first to advocate that idea. The government has a plan to remain in power until the year 2000 and the opposition is often dancing to the government's tune. We have a poor policy: we let things happen and then complain about it later. I think the opposition should anticipate the government and have its own continued strategy of action.

[Question] How can the opposition anticipate the government?

[Answer] For instance, in the false applications of electoral principles that the government may adopt, in which it is already a master, we must prepare ourselves to cope with situations that may be created. To maintain itself in power, the government has been a master at manipulating pretexts. There is the bill of Senator Sarney instituting voting by district; there are deputies collecting signatures to do away with straight-ticket voting. Others seek compulsory linkage of city councilmen with the governor; still others are seeking support for widespread postponement of elections. All are unscrupulous expedients that I classify as virtual coups d'etat. They want to force Brazil into a process of "Mexicanization," of a single party.

Favors Dialog and Opposes Merger of the Opposition

[Question] Should the opposition parties merge?

[Answer] No. I favor dialog among the opposition parties. They must establish among themselves a single strategy, at the institutional level, denouncing the deceitful application of legislation and advocating the Constituent Assembly. The Constituent Assembly must be a supraparty theme, made and developed jointly. We must demonstrate the errors of the economic model, a veritable absurdity, with the cost of living and inflation suffocating everyone. We must combat the gratuities, the government scandals. The opposition must unite around the great ideas that are common to it in order to transform the nation into a real democracy.

[Question] What is the solution to normalize the nation's institutional life?

[Answer] I see no solution other than calling a National Constituent Assembly. It is not enough to reform the constitution, even with good patchwork. The Constituent Assembly is a mandate. By means of it we will be able to promote a new social pact, in which dominant groups--made up of technocrats and multinational companies--that have been in power more than 16 years without the nation being heard are replaced. With this new social pact we will democratize national decisions, with effective participation by all. We need a new economic and social model that responds to the legitimate interests of the overwhelming majority of the Brazilian people.

[Question] Is participation by opposition parties in a government of national union advisable?

[Answer] When there were only two parties--the ARENA [National Renewal Alliance] and the MDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement]--one of the government, the other of the opposition, I was always radically opposed; if the opposition went over to the government, the people would be orphaned; there would be no one to criticize the government. At present I believe the PMDB should never participate in a coalition government: we will not solve our national problems by replacing government technicians with PMDB politicians. The PMDB must struggle for a new social pact. We must democratize decisionmaking, listen to the people. An agreement at the top will little change the substance of government decisions and will not modify the Brazilian model. We must have a democracy with freedom. It is essential to alter the economic model, because it has failed. We owe $60 billion. Brazil owes more money than any other country in the world. I don't know of any nation that has paid such a debt merely by exporting agricultural products. We produce agricultural products for export and we import other essentials to feed the people. We are importing rice, beans, potatoes, products that Brazil is in a position to furnish to the world. All this is the fault of a model that favors production for export. It is not a feasible model. It does no good to replace cabinet ministers if it is retained.

Parliamentarism Can Be Adapted to Brazil

[Question] What is better for the country, presidentialism or parliamentarism?

[Answer] I always advocated presidentialism. But making an analysis of recent years in Brazil and after my trip to the FRG, I reformulated my positions. The idea that we have of parliamentarism is that of Italy, where the frequent fall of cabinets generates instability of unpredictable effects. But the parliamentarism practiced in the FRG can be adapted perfectly to Brazilian contingencies. There, a government is overturned only when whoever is overturning it is in a position to form another government immediately. I believe that with parliamentarism we would have a more popular government, the people would participate more in decisionmaking. And we would be in a position to avoid political crises such as that of 1964. Since 1950 we have passed through successive political crises. If we had had a strong parliament we would have been able to avoid undesirable situations that eventually forced the armed forces to play the role of moderating power.

BRIEFS

EDITION OF 'REPORTER' SEIZED--Complying with an express decision by Justice Minister Ibrahim Abi-Ackel, a joint team of agents from the General Department for Special Investigations (DGIE) and the Federal Police yesterday afternoon seized the copies of issue number 35 (November edition) of the REPORTER newspaper on city newsstands. Employees of the newspaper believe its seizure--not explained by the DPF [Federal Police Department]--is due to a montage made with photographs of President Joao Figueiredo and Minister of the Civilian Household of the Presidency Golbery do Couto e Silva. On the cover the newspaper had a caption ("The Nine Bishops Appointed") for a photograph where the president and the minister appeared in cassocks. On page 20 the photograph is repeated and, referring to a fictitious expulsion of Cardinals Ivo Lorscheiter and Paulo Evaristo Arnes, the paper has the following headline: "Government Ends Conflict With the Church." The copies seized in Rio de Janeiro are being guarded by the DGIE and are to be sent today to the Federal Police, where an investigation was begun. U.S. PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION, CANDIDATES VIEWED

[Article by Fulvio Fuentes: "Threats and Insults"]

[Text] Only a few days away from the American elections, the contest is so close, neck and neck as in a horse race, that every vote is of decisive importance. The difference separating the two candidates is so minimal and so changing that no one, not even the pollsters, dares to make conclusive predictions. The outcome on 4 November looks all the more uncertain because millions of voters have not yet made up their minds and are still waivering back and forth between the two candidates. Furthermore, in the opinion of experts, the results of the elections are at the mercy of any happenstance. Any incident: a gaff, a poorly chosen phrase, a spectacular campaign gimmick, the simplest event and one candidate's chances can go down the drain.

The campaign, which for months has been centered on urgent domestic problems such as the deterioration of the economy, the energy crisis, inflation and unemployment, now turns to international issues. The problems of war and peace, the weapons race and detente, have suddenly entered the debate as a result of Ronald Reagan's war mongering. Reagan is bent on dusting off his old movie roles as the cowboy in the ten-gallon hat, neckerchief, plaid shirt, chaps and the deadly 45 on his hip, ready to draw at the drop of a hat and be the first to fire, filling the saloon with smoke and his adversary with bullets, while the mirrors come crashing down in smithereens, furniture is overturned and the mortician cautiously appears at the door of his gloomy establishment, rubbing his hands together with glee, just like the big monopolies that are now caught up in Reagan's bellicose drumming.

Nor is this a new refrain. The same beat was heard a few years ago for another presidential candidate. The reader will remember Barry Goldwater, known as the "abominable man from Arizona." Goldwater, naturally warmly supported by Reagan, who at that time was beginning his public career, does not conceal his fascist leanings. The dangerous "yeti" from Arizona" lost the election, overwhelmed by a mountain of votes, but he had set a precedent. The Hollywood actor has picked up his tradition of belligerence. His government program is enough to send shudders down the spine of even the most equanimous. It is enough to imagine the ex movie actor ensconced in the presidency, sitting in the Oval Office, his eye on the famous nuclear button and his finger twitching. He has but to make one little move to see what would happen.

That is how things look on the eve of the election. The political duel takes on the aspect of a street fight. No courtly formalities. The increasingly virulent epithets zap from one partisan barricade to the other in a reciprocal "alma mia." Carter's prose loses its evangelical Baptist tone and becomes gruff, while Reagan, the "good guy" on the screen, takes off his cowboy costume and reveals the hairy hide of the enraged gorilla. In this shady, underhanded fight, anything goes, even terrifying playing with war.

CIA, FBI 'AUTHORIZE' ATTACKS ON CUBAN OFFICIALS IN U.S.

Havana PRISMA LATINOAMERICANO in Spanish Oct 80 pp 22-23

[Articles by Gerardo Cesar Proenza, PRISMA LATINOAMERICANO deputy director: "In the Shadow of the CIA," and Victorio M. Copa: "Authorized Crime"]

[Text] Hours after the assassination of an accredited Cuban diplomat to the United Nations, American Ambassador to the UN Donald McHenry complied with formalities, as on so many other occasions, and informed his government of one more crime committed by armed bands of Cuban origin that operate freely in American territory.

On 11 September, professional killers trained and armed by the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) shot Cuban diplomat Felix Garcia Rodriguez as he was driving through the New York borough of Queens.

Alone and wounded, Garcia Rodriguez could not control his automobile and crashed. On busy Queens Boulevard, the gunmen calmly got out of their vehicles and finished off the Cuban diplomat in the best New York gangster style.

As part of the ritual of the headquarters of the American zone, it was not long before the "mysterious" telephone call came to a news agency from a person with a Latin accent, reporting that the authors of the assassination were members of the terrorist organization Omega 7, one of the fronts of the so-called Cuban Nationalist Movement whose headquarters are in Union City, New Jersey.

This new criminal act aimed at a diplomat accredited to the world organization confirms the reiterated Cuban protests to the United Nations emphasizing the impunity with which these counterrevolutionary terrorist bands operate. The terrorists have publicly confessed being the authors of numerous attacks and attempts on Cuban diplomats to the United Nations but the guilty parties have never been arrested even though they are known to the American police.

The outcry over the killing of the Cuban diplomat was not long in coming.

Following the vigorous condemnation of Cuban Ambassador Raul Roa Kouri before the UN General Assembly, numerous representatives of other countries in the world organization condemned the criminal act and emphasized the lack of security for foreign diplomats in the United States.

Just as in the Letelier case, which aroused a wave of general protest, American authorities were pressured by the outcry against the scandalous incident and said that proper measures would be taken.

A note of sympathy from the American Government to the government of Cuba promised that "no effort will be spared to find the persons responsible and bring them to justice." The mayor of New York stated that measures would be taken to guarantee the safety of diplomatic personnel and arrest the murderers, who have never concealed their identity or the place from which they have operated freely for years.

Felix Garcia Rodriguez' assassins acted with complete impunity, "with the treachery, perfidy and sureness of those trained to carry out all kinds of activities against the Cuban Revolution, its leaders and its representatives abroad," Ambassador Roa Kouri said.

Authorized Crime: 30 Attempts in Florida Alone in 1975

For 21 years, Cuba has faced aggression and attacks by terrorist groups of Cuban origin who operate with impunity in the United States under the protection of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI).

The climax to these actions came on 6 October 1976 with the destruction, in flight, of a Cubana de Aviacion plane off the western coast of Barbados. A total of 73 persons died in the crash, most of them young athletes.

Initial suspicions were confirmed almost immediately. A terrorist group that operates out of Miami, Florida, called CORU [Council of United Revolutionary Organizations (Exiles)], claimed credit for the dynamiting of the plane in a message sent to THE MIAMI HERALD.

New Methods

The Bay of Pigs fiasco, a thwarted invasion organized and financed by the American Government -- as that country officially admitted -- produced changes in American plans against the Cuban Revolution and Washington recommended that the CIA use new methods for its designs.

In 1965, several mercenaries from the abortive Playa Giron invasion -- called Bay of Pigs by the Agency -- organized the first group under the name of Alpha 66.

Since that time, this and other bands have initiated a series of terrorist attacks, kidnappings and assassinations which the investigative bodies of the United States have never cleared up.

The perfecting of the terrorist methods, especially the use and handling of explosives, the making of demolition bombs and other tactics, came about through the CIA and its connections with the Mafia, as recently reported by the American publication COVERT ACTION.

Under that cover, the bands of Cuban Americans easily launch actions against merchant ships of various nationalities, Cuban fishing boats, embassies, Cuban diplomats and officials from other countries, travel agencies, daily newspapers that objectively report the situation in Cuba and even a pharmacy in the state of New Jersey which sends medicines to the island at the request of Cuban emigres.

According to COVERT ACTION, these terrorist groups, made up of dangerous professional criminals and drug traffickers, have not only threatened Cuba, but also "the great majority of the members of the Cuban community in the United States who do not want to get involved with them and citizens of the United States and other countries wishing to establish commercial contacts with Cuba."

1. Cuban Action

3. Cuban Government
4. Zero
5. Star Youth [Juventud de las Estrellas]
6. Insurrectional Movement of Revolutionary Recovery (MIRR)

10. Cuban Nationalist Movement (MNC)
11. Cuban National Liberation Front (FNLC)
12. Alpha 66
13. Revolutionary Movement of the People (MRP)
14. Cuban National Movement (MNC)
15. Omega 7
16. Cuban Government 76
17. Revolutionary Student Directorate

More Groups

Following the appearance of CORU in 1965, different groups began to operate out of Dade County, which includes the city of Miami: CONDOR [expansion unknown], Association Brigade 2506, and out of New York and New Jersey: the Cuban Nationalist Movement (MNC) and Omega 7.

In 1975, in Florida alone, these groups claimed responsibility for some 30 terrorist attacks on hotels, airline company offices, public and private buildings and local police facilities.

Another group also enjoying impunity is the so-called Coronel Cero (Zero for the CIA and the FBI), which in April 1979 claimed participation in the assassination of Cuban youth Carlos Muniz Varela on a centrally located avenue in San Juan, Puerto Rico. It publicly claimed responsibility for the shooting of another Cuban, Jose Eulalio Negrin, member of the Committee of the 75 of the Cuban community abroad.

Both participated in the dialog proposed by President Fidel Castro in September 1978, which made it possible to pardon 3,600 counterrevolutionary prisoners and allow the visit to the island of over 100,000 Cubans residing abroad for the first time in nearly two decades.

These murders were never cleared up. Only in the case of the attack on Orlando Letelier, former ambassador to Washington of the Popular Unity Government in Chile, and his aide Ronni Moffitt, in the American capital in September 1976, was the Department of Justice forced to take certain measures because of the international scandal produced by the incident perpetrated by the bands.

At the present time, according to information from the antiterrorist squad in Dade County, these known groups sponsored by the CIA and the FBI continue their "work" in a "covert" fashion.

But the secret way in which these bands operate, according to Miami police, contradicts verything known in that Florida city and others where the Cuban community resides.

In the house at 1679 27th Avenue in Miami, there is no special sign but everyone knows that that precise location is the general headquarters of the Alpha 66 and Omega 7 groups which, according to the Department of Justice, "are being sought without success by American police" to answer charger of murder, arson and attacks on diplomatic missions.

Leaders of the Cuban community in the United States who recently visited Cuba wonder why Miami police say they do not know the whereabouts of the residents of the house on 27th Avenue in Miami.

The answer appeared not long ago in the periodical CUBA TIMES published in the United States, in which a Miami police officer stated that these are "Agency matters that do not concern us."

From 27th Avenue the path leads north, according to leaders of the Cuban community in the United States, to a house on New York Avenue in Union City, New Jersey.

They add that from this address in Union City, the operations of Omega 7 are commanded by Armando Santana, a well-known drug trafficker called the "head of the northern zone" of the Cuban Nationalist Movement, a detail which the FBI, CIA and New Jersey police also claim not to know.

An article in NEW YORK MAGAZINE by Jeff Stein refers to the New Jersey group and mentions Guillermo Novo Sampol, who in 1964 fired a mortar from the district of Queens at the United Nations Building located on the opposite bank of the East River.

"Members of that organization have been involved in major drug trafficking," he says, "and in nearly all terrorist actions of armed bands in recent years."

At the present time, says one young Cuban visiting Havana and who has lived in New Jersey for nearly 20 years, the CIA agents do not openly recruit counterrevolutionaries as they did at the time of the Bay of Pigs.

On the contrary, he adds, if these individuals are asked about their connections with the CIA, they swear that they have never even seen an agent from that organization, known around the world as the "invisible government" of the United States.

PRISMA's source emphasizes that the CIA works with Santana through "secret channels," stimulates the activities of groups in the northern zone by this means and keeps their meeting places and names of connections under its control.

The MNC also receives support from the main officials in Hudson County, New Jersey, particularly Julia Valdivia, assistant to Union City's Mayor William Musto.

The greatest evidence of the ties of these criminal bands with official spheres in the United States is the impunity with which they operate because the assassinations and acts of terrorism are committed by persons and organizations that everyone knows and which some circles in that country fear.

Perhaps, as one American weekly says, like many of the persons involved in the Watergate scandal, some of the leaders of the bands know too much....

Freedom of Action

The terrorist group which in 5 years has accumulated the highest crime rate, according to information from the United States, is the one known by the code name Omega 7.

Some of the attacks for which that group of Cuban counterrevolutionaries claims credit since 1975 include the following:

1. 1 February 1975, New York, Venezuelan mission to the United Nations.

2. 11 February 1975, Elizabeth, New Jersey, an informal get-together.

GUILLERMO GARCIA HAILS FRIENDSHIP WITH DPRK

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 16 Oct 80 p 5

[Speech given by Guillermo Garcia Frias, member of the Political Bureau of the Cuban Communist Party and president of the Cuban delegation to the Sixth Congress of the Korean Workers Party, at the act of solidarity held at the Korean-Cuban Friendship Textile Machinery Factory of Korea]

[Text] My dear comrades: It is a pleasure for me to express, on behalf of the Central Committee of the Cuban Communist Party, its members and the people of Cuba in general, our deepest thanks to the Korean Workers Party for having invited us to participate in the activities commemorating the 35th anniversary of its founding, as well as in its Sixth Congress.

We also bring a warm message from the Cuban workers for the workers in this production center, who have prepared this simple and emotional ceremony for us today.

It is an honor for us to be able to share with you the revolutionary joy of the 35th anniversary of the formation of your vanguard organization led by Comrade Kim Il-song at a time when the Sixth Congress is drawing up its plans for economic development for the next few years, and to be able to see during our visit the achievements in the building of socialism in your country in the last few years.

We also, within approximately 2 months, will celebrate the Second Congress of our party, which must approve plans for the country's economic development for the next 5-year period and will study the results of the tasks assigned by its First Congress in December 1975.

Our people have worked hard for this in the last few months, trying to reduce as much as possible the effects of the blights suffered by our sugar and tobacco crops and our hog-raising industry.

Comrades, we know that for more than 3 decades the heroic people of Korea have had to contend with the attacks, maneuvers and intrigues of that common enemy of the people: Yankee imperialism.

We recall that before the victory of the revolution, our people supported North Korea's resistance to the criminal attack by American imperialism in 1950. On that occasion the Yankees launched a vile campaign of defamation and intrigue, and taking advantage of a combination of forces which favored them at that time, they achieved their purpose of bringing several countries into their war of aggression.

Many governments friendly to imperialism ceded to its pressures and sent military troops to Korea. In the case of Cuba, popular resistance frustrated the maneuver. Through an intense mass campaign launched by the party, the attempt of the government of that period to send Cuban soldiers to fight alongside the Yankees and against the Korean patriots was soundly defeated. After the victory of the revolution and during those years of friendly and brotherly relations--whose 20th anniversary we celebrated recently--the Cuban people have made their own the indefatigable struggle of the Korean people in the just cause of the reunification of their fatherland.

This has taken form in the development of many solidarity activities throughout our country and in the firm and decided support offered on the international level to the aspirations and the right of this brother country to live and work for social progress, justice and peace in a single fatherland for all Koreans.

Comrades, the effort of your party and your working people in the building of socialism during these years has been heroic due, among other reasons, to the constant maneuvers and provocations of Yankee imperialism and the puppet regimes in Seoul. Notwithstanding these conditions, which forced you to divert human resources and efforts to the defense of the country, you have made significant achievements in the development of various economic branches and sectors, in science and culture.

At this time, as we understand it, and as a salute to the 35th anniversary of the party and to the Sixth Congress, the goals set for this year have already been basically achieved. For this reason we congratulate you, and for their conduct, all the Korean working class which, through its unceasing efforts, makes possible the beautiful reality of building socialism in the fatherland and raising the people's standard of living.

While you are working for a better future, the puppet gang in power in the south is murdering, persecuting, sowing death and misery and encouraging the characteristics of capitalist society: prostitution, gambling, drugs and disregard for mankind and true human rights. The recent events in the city of Kwangsu and other places, where hundreds of fighters for the democratization of South Korean society were vilely murdered, concretely reflects to what point hatred and fear of a reunited Korea has come. Another more recent fact is the death sentence imposed on South Korean fighter for democracy Kim Dae-Jung, a penalty which our people repudiate, joining the energetic international protest being made at this time.

The international situation has worsened in the last few months as a result of the aggressive armamentist policy of American imperialism and its allies, endangering the advances achieved in detente, in the consolidation of efforts designed to end the armaments race and in the search for a firm and lasting peace.

But history shows that the people do not give up when reason is on their side, and they have made a firm decision to fight and to win. There have been victories on all continents. Here, in your own region, the people of Korea and Vietnam have soundly defeated imperialist aggression. In faraway Africa, one of the last colonial empires has collapsed, and Angola, Mozambique, Guinea-Bissau, Cape Verde and Sao Tome have obtained their independence and are now looking toward a better future, while the heroic Ethiopian people are consolidating and deepening their revolution. After a long struggle, and resisting pressures and threats, Zimbabwe has achieved its independence. Further north, our dear Yemenite comrades offer a worthy example of the decision of a small and poor people determined to advance by the bright path of socialism.

In America, closer, geographically, to imperialism, the Cuban Revolution 20 years ago started on its path to true and final liberation. Now we are no longer alone in the Western Hemisphere: the revolutionary victory in Grenada and the heroic victory of our Sandinist brothers in Nicaragua is giving new impetus to the Latin American and Caribbean people's will to resist, and they are determined to free themselves also from imperialist influence.

Other peoples must still fight bloody battles for their independence and to shake off the yoke of fascist-type military dictatorships. But the victorious culmination of their struggles and the firm decision to resist demonstrated by the self-sacrificing Palestinians, the Saharan fighters, the oppressed peoples of Namibia and South Africa, the fighting popular masses in El Salvador, Guatemale, Bolivia, Chile, Uruguay or Haiti reflect precisely the new times that humanity is living as a result of the deep political and social changes which have taken place in the world and which were only possible because of the victory of the Great October Socialist Revolution.

The dangerous situation in the Middle East, as a result of the war between Iraq and Iran, must have a political solution, and we must put all our efforts as nonalined countries into it, because that war between two peoples who are in the midst of revolutionary processes weakens the forces confronting imperialism and Zionist aggression; it divides the forces of the Nonalined Countries Movement and its economic consequences can be disastrous for many of the countries of the so-called Third World and will worsen the international economic situation, which is already critical in itself.

Comrades, from this friendly ceremony we want to congratulate this great event for Korean Communists and to wish them with all our hearts much success in implementing their agreements and resolutions which, based on Marxism-Lininism, are a sure guide to deepening the building of socialism in the country and which will doubtless translate into greater benefits and prosperity for its people.

Through you, my dear Korean workers, we desire to reiterate to your people once again the definite support and fighting solidarity of our party and our people with the just cause of your struggle for the peaceful and independent reunification of your fatherland, while at the same time expressing our most energetic condemnation of the aggressions, intrigues and maneuvers of Yankee imperialism against the sovereignty and self-determination of your people.

Long live the 35th anniversary of the Korean Workers Party!

Long live the Sixth Party Congress, its commitments and resolutions!

Long live the ties of friendship and solidarity between Cuba and Korea!

Working nights, Saturday afternoons and Sundays, the construction workers have begun remodeling the buildings to be used by the Cuban medical brigade which will come here to advise the Vietnamese in hospital management.

In addition, they expect to salute, with their volunteer work, the "Camilo and Che" ideological rally, Health Workers Day (3 December) and Construction Workers Day (5 December).

The workers are striving enthusiastically to comply with the commitment they made to the Cuban Communist Party cell in Vietnam and the Union of Young Communists to complete their task before 5 December.

The group of 33 workers will continue to work on finishing up the hospital at Dong Hoi in Binh Tri Thien province, 490 kilometers south of Hanoi.

The work includes the construction of walls, hydraulic installations, sanitary facilities, the repair of doors and windows, the electrical system and painting.

These projects, undertaken in salute to the Second Party Congress within the framework of three very important historical dates, were begun last 8 October, the day on which the heroic guerrilla, Maj Ernesto Guevara, fell in combat.

The rally will close with a political-cultural ceremony in the brigade headquarters at Dong Hoi on 5 December, in salute to the day of the "fine men in the white helmets."

[Text] Havana (AIN)--In honor of the 20th anniversary of the founding of the land artillery on 2 November, Army Gen Raul Castro gave the following address.

Dear Artillerymen:

FAR PROPAGANDA DEPARTMENT HOLDS MEETING

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 2 Nov 80 p 12

[Article by Pablo Noa: "Meeting of FAR Propagandists"]

[Text] A meeting was held with the heads of propaganda and agitation subsections of the various commands and the managers of the national communications media of the Armed Forces; the meeting had been organized by the Directorate of Propaganda and Agitation, Central Political Directorate, FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces].

The activity, which was held in the Central House of the FAR, was primarily intended to analyze the work done during the phases of introduction and systematization of the propaganda campaign concerning the Second Party Congress.

The sessions began with the presentation of a central report which analytically reviewed the main achievements and the shortcomings observed during the inspections made to the various units.

The report's content and the remarks from the participants contributed practical elements to the execution of the campaign, introducing a note of exchange of experiences and initiatives.

The reports presented by the Western and Eastern armies and the DAAFAR [Anti Aircraft Defense and Revolutionary Air Force] contributed positively to this result. The comrades clearly and in detail explained how they accomplished the first stages and the training which they have to develop for the remaining ones.

Another major aspect consisted of the remarks made by officials from the Party Central Committee who specifically took up the campaign for the Second Congress and the organization of that event, as well as compliance with the pledges of the First Congress relating to internal party life.

A summary of graphic propaganda which was printed and which is now in preparation, was also presented. There was likewise an audiovisual exhibit, as one of the media that can be used by propagandists in disseminating the tasks relating to the Congress, its history and its conduct as such.

In addition to providing specific guidelines for tackling the stage of campaign intensification, the meeting also gave the participants extensive information regarding the activities carried out by the various media of the FAR in mass agitation work.

The afternoon hours were devoted to film materials covering important topics.

During the concluding remarks, the speakers called attention to the factors involved in the conduct of the campaign in the unit in order to bring about its successful culmination through the outstanding accomplishment of the planned objectives.

MILITARY ENTERPRISE WINS SPECIAL EMULATION REVIEW

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 2 Nov 80 p 12

[Article by Jose Casanas: "Special Competition During the Second Congress—100 Percent Results"]

[Text] With 100 points won during the third quarterly review, the "Grito de Baire" military industrial enterprise is in a strong position to win the Second Congress Special Competition in the group of so-called smalled enterprises.

The activity took place on Saturday, 25 October, and its results to a great extent signified that this group, the best enterprise of the FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces] during 1978 to 1979, stayed in the running for the honorable pennant awarded earlier.

During the final go-round, this enterprise, which also has the banner for the special competition of the 11th Festival, was able to win by 1/10 during the first review over the Center Ammunition Enterprise. During the second phase, likewise running neck-and-neck, with 2/10, the Ammunition enterprise came out ahead. As we can readily see, neither one of them could afford to lose during the next review.

The competition, as carried out within the enterprises of the FAR, is the most important test for the workers and a tremendous impetus for production. It is made up of two fundamental figures: Compliance with the technical-economic plan and labor discipline.

To give the reader an idea of the serious and sustained effort made by the civilian workers, the officers, sergeants, and managers of this enterprise, we might say that, during the quarter reviewed here, the production volume came to 101 percent, planned compliance in keeping with the itemized list came to 100 percent, the daily output figure came to 121, the production activity increase was 287 percent, general profitability rose to 392 percent, savings plan accomplishment came to 164 percent, the cost of gross output per peso according to the plan was 73 percent, all of this having been achieved at a satisfactory pace.

As for the aspects taken up by the Higher Competition Commission regarding labor discipline, we can say that, in view of the good work done by the "Grito de Baire" enterprise, it certainly deserved all of the points it got.

This was a happy day, as had been expected by every member of this fighting outfit. This is how they work and fight and this is how they win another well-deserved victory. Now they continue their activities, looking forward to the final review from which they undoubtedly will emerge victorious.

HISTORY, OTHER ASPECTS OF PEOPLE'S TRIBUNALS DISCUSSED

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 6, 12 Oct 80

[6 Oct 80, p 2]

[Article by Juana Maria V. Sol: "The Lay Judge"]

> [Text] With the victory of the revolution a process of democratization of the judicial system was begun in our country in which the participation of the masses is very important. We propose to discuss here, in a series of articles, the origins of this revolutionary change.

The lay judge—as I learned in the instructions we received as part of our training for that position—is completely responsible to the law; but, how can he reconcile his conscience with his duty?

Now I will try to recall my first experiences as a member of the Municipal People's Tribunal.

The first time I entered the place, I thought about the respect those words inspire in honest people. As I went upstairs to the criminal section, where we were to meet before beginning our task, I recalled that Fidel almost always speaks, in the 28 September ceremonies, of the need to strengthen revolutionary justice, and some of his memorable words and the deep impression they had made on the CDR [Committees for Defense of the Revolution] organization returned to my mind: "The revolution is a great union of honest people."

During the capitalist era and by heredity we had learned to live isolated and alone. Now the people were beginning a new form of collective life, which had special significance after the subculture of the Cuban people up to that time.

To introduce representatives of the masses into the methods of legal procedure was a challenge to the bourgeois system; a wise way to democratize the judicial processes and to instruct the citizens.

In the Courtroom

After the brief meeting we entered the courtroom. Facing the bench we found a heterogeneous group of people—strangers—as the president of the session had warned us. The trials took place in an orderly manner; testimony was heard from all parties—the victim, the accused, the witnesses—and when this was concluded, we began our deliberations.

Before proceeding I must give you another detail: the lay judge in his position as a non-professional is a representative of the masses; because he lives within the municipality which he serves, he is familiar with the way of life of the community, and when he is confronting the accused or the criminal, in a short time he has an infinity of associations, as if they had been explained to him beforehand.

Another important detail is the internal disposition of the judge: the fact that he is willing to carry out a mission on behalf of the masses strips him of any personal interest; in the deliberations he neither gains nor loses with respect to what is being discussed, and he is very pleased if he is absolutely convinced that he has acted with justice.

The First Lesson

The first cases were disposed of quickly enough, demonstrating the facility the president had acquired in his functions.

But the fourth, being a primary crime committed by two young women scarcely 20 years of age, presented some problems.

The law establishes a minimum sentence in such cases of 6 months' imprisonment or a fine to be established at the discretion of the judges. The president was in favor of the prison sentence, but my friend and I were for the other: the fact that the two were mothers and that they knew the social value of having a morally healthy childhood led us to defend, at least insofar as it was defensible, what we considered the human part of the problem.

"When a youth enters prison," the other judge suggested, "he runs the risk of learning there from real criminals, and in my opinion, these young people have made a serious mistake, but they are not criminals; they are workers." "The crime is serious, very serious," replied the president, "forbidden and punishable by law. Let us study the case bit by bit."

"They work and receive good wages. They received their technical training in schools subsidized by the working people. They took advantage of the facilities in the business: using its materials, they faked the label of a foreign trademark and reproduced it; the contents was a talcum powder—of the same brand—to which they added fragrance, passing it off as a fine cosmetic, and then they tried to sell it to the people at black market prices. And we should let them go because they are young!"

After these words there was a silence, and the president asked us to take all the time we needed to study the problem: if we convinced him, we would come to a decision by vote.

We were not completely naive: we had taken our first steps in a difficult task. There is no doubt the accused had taken part in an antisocial act motivated by the desire for profit, and one might also call them thieves, swindlers and counterfeiters, not to mention the possibility of harm to whoever might use the "product." Their activities must be stopped, as the law indicates.

The president was right, but the lay judge is not a "sleeping" member of the bench; we have the right to discuss our point of view. That was the first lesson, the first concrete notion of the sense of doing justice. Many times I have meditated on Fidel's words: "The revolution is a great union of honest people."

[12 Oct 80, p 6]

[Article by Juana Maria V. Sol: "The Common Man's Sense of Justice"]

> [Text] An interview with Dr Denio Camacho, legal adviser to the Ministry of Higher Education (MES), who played an active role in creating the People's Tribunals beginning in 1962.

One of the experiences of the rank and file People's Tribunals which has remained in my memory was getting to know the common man's sense of justice. I am seated now opposite Dr Denio Camacho, legal adviser to the MES, who was among those charged with creating the first People's Tribunals at the beginning of the revolution.

This task was begun under Fidel's guidance approximately in 1962, with an experimental plan headed by professors and students of the University of Havana law faculty in coordination with political and mass organizations.

At that time I was a professor. We were looking for materials concerning the judicial systems of the socialist countries, and with these as a basis we began our own. We started with the mountain areas, places where the peasants had never even seen what a court was like.

The experience was begun in Loma de La Candela, in Pinar del Rio, and then others were created in El Cangre and in San Nicolas de Bari.

I remember one specific case--I have many anecdotes, but I would like to tell of this one impression of mine. In one of those impenetrable places we also wanted the people to learn to deal with civil litigations; we married elderly couples who had been living together under common law, for example, and finally they began to have an organization such as had only been found in the towns and cities.

In this area, which was Cienaga de Zapata, if I am not mistaken, a divorce case came up. And how was the problem solved? In the most extraordinary way! The best court in the world could not have done it better.

Those people's judges, elected from among the population because of their moral values and revolutionary sentiments, decided the division of property, taking into consideration the needs of both: to the man they awarded his yoke of oxen, his working gear and tools; to the woman, they gave the cow, which would assure her of milk for her children, and the house. They had gotten to the real heart of the problem. Who could argue with them!

The results were positive, and the creation of the tribunals was extended to areas of the Sierra Maestra: La Alcarvaza (deep in the Maestra), El Uvero, Ocujal del Turquino; to the south toward Matias, Los Negros, Mon, Cayo Guam, Mambi, etcetera.

The people's judges received instruction from the final year law students who visited the People's Tribunals and observed the work; on many occasions the most intense periods of work took place during vacation time.

We had another interesting experience, Denio commented--already enthusiastic about the work started by the revolutionary change in the judicial system--in the fishing zone of Manzanillo, because there they had a lot of customs inherited from the capitalist society, which affected the life of the community: the behavior of men who were not criminals or bad men, but workers who had become addicted to certain habits such as drinking, frequenting places of ill repute--one would have to combat this, change it.

And the action of the judges, along with the repudiation shown by the people during the public trials, with their opinions and standards, as well as the measures which were taken, was changing those inadequate ways of life.

In 1965, after having done some arduous work on the organization and development of the tribunals in which the judges were elected by the masses and carried out this duty outside of working hours, it was possible to make a general evaluation which included opinions of the political and mass organizations, the people, the police, prisoners and their families. The result was very positive.

People's Justice Comes Into Being

We recall the capitalist past, the story of Realengo 18, where some peasants rose up with machetes in defense of their rights. But in other places there was not the slightest notion of what justice meant; the humble classes were the first victims of bourgeois legislation, in which the defense of private property and the power of the rich prevailed.

When the People's Tribunals began to function, a new way of life was also beginning: the revolution was changing everything as it went along.

From that happy experience, Denio Camacho says, they proposed unprecedented measures in our legislation, which are contained today in the Penal Code; others, although they were good at the time, are now obsolete.

Crimes punishable by sentences of up to 6 months' detention were argued in those courts; the crimes had to have taken place within the locality, because the worker-judges themselves investigated them.

For example, there was no appeal of sentences; the People's Tribunals (which eventually replaced them) established a court of appeals which was headed by the advisers. And let me make it clear to you, he said, that I never heard of an unjust sentence--inadequate, perhaps, at most--but the evaluations of the criminal were always exact.

Contact was established with some sectors, and for the first time prison sentences began to be served on farms, where the prisoners worked and received wages; detention without internment (serving out the sentence in social work on a schedule outside of working hours), and provisional suspension of the sentence when incarceration might affect the life of the accused, as for example, a pregnant woman, etcetera.

There was one very interesting punishment called banishment, which consisted in taking the prisoner away from his place of residence and returning him to his place of origin; or transferring him to another place until he improved his behavior; suspension of his social rights (prohibition of walks or of frequenting places where the prisoner had frequently caused disorder or trouble in the community. This measure was very effective for those who disturbed the peace at fiestas or night spots.

People's Feelings Brought In

The initial projection with which the People's Tribunals were created has varied. The formation period ended throughout the country between 1966 and 1967, and in 1968 these tribunals continued to act under the direction of the Ministry of Justice; later there was a merging process, and the present structure was adopted, in which lay judges and professionals participate together in the legal procedures.

In essence, however, our interviewee reiterated, the lay judge continues to bring the feelings of the man in the street to the legal procedure. He lays the foundations, with eloquence and human feelings, for what is established by law with respect to the treatment of criminals.

COMMUNICATIONS PROJECTS IN NATION REVIEWED

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 31 Oct 80 pp 16-23

[Article by Gregorio Hernandez: "Five Years of Cuban Communications"]

[Text] With the date of the Second Congress of the Communist Party of Cuba drawing near, we have wanted to make a general review in this article of the work done in the past 5-year period in the communications branch in our country.

Coaxial Cable

There are several areas of information to be discussed. Before that, however, we shall start with the most important work of infrastructure undertaken, the coaxial cable, following that with other subjects which range from television, radio, telephones and international communications, to postal, telegraph and press distribution services, among others.

"We must advance as much as possible in the installation of 1,800 kilometers of coaxial cable, a service which guarantees the introduction of national telephone dialing during the 5-year period. At the same time, the long-distance network must prepare to absorb the increase in traffic during that period."

This is what is stated textually in the resolution on transportation and communications approved by the First Party Congress.

We can state, therefore, that the objective of the coaxial cable consists of satisfying the needs for telephone, telegraph, data transmission and long-distance channels for radiobroadcasting in our country. It will also be used as a reserve for one television channel in case of a breakdown in the existing National Microwave Network. Moreover, the coaxial cable can serve as a means of press transmission via facsimile, eliminating the need for its transportation by air to other provinces.

First of all let us say that at the beginning of the 70's the governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Cuba, respectively, signed a technical-economic cooperation agreement, and among the agreements reached, was the planning, construction, installation and placing in operation of a cable communications line. This line will join the 14 provincial capitals from Pinar del Rio to Guantanamo, with branches to other large cities: San Cristobal, Artemisa, Guanajay, Guines, San Antonio de los Banos, San Jose de las Lajas, Mayari and Palma Soriano.

Although the entire system will be completed in the next 5-year period, its execution had been scheduled in such a way that it could be used in sections, that is, when two points have been linked and they have the necessary equipment, planned telephone channels or links between those points could be put into service.

Cooperation With the USSR

From the beginning, Soviet help has been decisive. At first Cuban technicians did not know this new system and it was necessary to obtain Soviet help and the necessary vehicles and machinery. In this 1973-1974 period, the technical contribution of 40 Soviet specialists (communications engineers, civil engineers, architects, geologists, topographers) who worked with Cuban technicians was outstanding. In this aspect they traveled and studied many variants of routes for the coaxial cable.

On the basis of this work, the technical and execution plans of the technological part of the project were prepared in the USSR and contracts began to be signed for the shipment of machinery, transportation, technological and electrical power supply equipment, cables, materials, and diesel plants, which made up the complete equipment for the construction and installation activity of the coaxial cable.

Cable Installations

All this complex of installations, which are now being built, is to continue under construction during the next 5-year period of 1981-1985. At this time around 20 Soviet technicians are in Cuba to provide help in the construction and laying of the cable, installation of repeater houses and the installation of technological equipment. A large quantity of machinery has come from the Soviet Union for this purpose: bulldozers, tractors, excavators, cranes and cable-laying machines, all necessary for the execution of a project of such large scope. The quantity of material received reaches some 6,000 tons, with a value of 12 million pesos.

On the Cuban side, work is going on in the construction of 11 exchanges, of which three have been practically completed, and five of a total of 46 installations to be completed have already been delivered. This year it was proposed that nine more installations be initiated, which will provide great possibilities for long-distance service.

Parallel with civil construction work, there is the digging of trenches and the laying of 380 kilometers of symmetrical coaxial cable of a total of 2,179 kilometers. In the construction of telephone ducts, which total 80 kilometers, 30 of them are already available. The installation as such has run into difficulties such as 650 highway crossings, 235 river and dam crossings, construction of 250 unattended repeater houses, as well as the installation and placing in operation of the equipment necessary in each unattended telephone exchange, semi-terminal and repeater station.

Present Status

As of 1978, with the creation of the First Front in the municipality of San Jose de las Lajas, cable excavation and installation work began. In 1979, the Second Front was inaugurated in the municipality of Ranchuelo.

Up to date, nearly 400 kilometers of cable have been installed and 35 kilometers of ducts are available. There are 28 repeater station houses in the process of installation. So far this year, a good boost has been given to civil construction by the Ministry of Construction, with contracts for 27 installations distributed to 11 provinces.

Telephone Distribution

Going on to this subject, which is always of much interest, we can show as a statistical figure that at the end of 1975 the number of telephones existing in the country was 3.18 instruments per 100 inhabitants, this figure being affected by the City of Havana, which had around 11 instruments per 100 inhabitants.

In the 5 years between 1975 and 1979, the number of automatic switching telephone exchanges increased by 94, which represented an 87-percent increase in growth, making it possible to offer this service to localities and towns, primarily in rural zones, whose communications in some cases were manual and in others were entirely lacking. As is logical to conclude, the increase in telephone exchanges brought with it an increase in the availability of equipped subscriber lines, broadening the possibilities of providing this service to a larger population in keeping with the economic development of the country. The installation or automation of 57 exchanges of this type was planned for 1980.

As a result of the increase in the number of automatic telephone exchanges in use, the number of equipped lines increased by 41,600 in the 1975-1979 period, which meant a growth of 14.8 percent. The foregoing has allowed a substantial increase in facilities for facing the growing demand for telephone service in the state and residential sectors, depending on existing priorities.

These installations also made it possible to increase automatic telephone lines by 458,000 nationally, an increase in growth of seven percent between 1975 and 1979. This year, according to schedule, this figure will increase by 12,100 new automatic telephone lines installed. By the end of this year, this will allow a level of telephone service automation in the country of about 97.7 percent.

Telephone terminals in service, which include every type of instrument in use—main sets, extensions, public telephones, and so forth—have experienced an increase of 58,800 new instruments from 1975 to 1979, which means an increase of 19.7 percent. The installation of 29,200 new terminals is planned for this year.

The result of all the foregoing demonstrates that the number of telephones, which at the end of 1975 was 3.18 instruments per 100 inhabitants, increased by December 1979 to 3.63, it being estimated that by the end of 1980 it will have increased to 3.88 telephones per 100 inhabitants.

The increases we have listed have resulted from compliance with installations plans for new telephone exchanges, primarily in rural localities and towns and the installation in the main cities of private switchboards with their corresponding extensions.

The main difficulty faced in this period is in the City of Havana. This is due to the fact that exchanges in this province are very large by comparison with those of the rest of the country and because in their majority they are of an old technology of capitalist manufacture. This also is the case in the cable network of the outside plant, which consists mainly of lead-sheated cables installed more than 40 years ago. In some areas, because of the lack of underground cable conduits, the network has not been able to grow, as is the case of the Marianao zone, for example.

Therefore, the increase in equipped telephone lines in the City of Havana during the 1975-1980 period has been practically zero and the increase in telephone stations has been possible only because of the installation of private switchboards with their corresponding extensions, which means that in this period the number of telephone instruments in the City of Havana has practically remained static.

Television

As we all know, radio and television are services shared in our country by two central state agencies: The Ministry of Communications in matters relative to installation, maintenance and operation of the systems, and the Cuban Institute of Radio and Television (ICRT), the latter with similar responsibilities with respect to studios and programs.

In the Cuban long-range broadcasting plan, television occupies a prominent place due to the important role it plays in the education, information and recreation of the people.

Before the victory of the revolution, television in Cuba had been developed under the control of private commercial interests and, therefore, service was provided to those areas with the greatest buying power such as the cities of Havana, Matanzas, Santa Clara, Ciego de Avila, Camaguey, Holguin and Santiago de Cuba.

To see television in the rest of the cities or towns of the country, it was generally necessary to install home antennas of unconventional heights and complexity, which in most cases only allowed the reception of mediocre pictures. In other areas there was absolutely no service.

To improve that deformed structure, which did not benefit genuine national interests, the revolution decided to establish two national programs or channels--what is now Channel 6 and Tele-Rebelde--and to extend the service to as much territory as possible, using existing equipment for that purpose. This made it possible to add the service to other important cities or regions such as Pinar del Rio, San Cristobal, the Isle of Youth, Guantanamo, Baracoa, Moa and Nicaro, although with only one channel to some of them.

The positive results obtained in the first year of the decade of the 70's were very superior to those found in 1959, without having made any expenditures of any size. However, it was necessary to attend to other needs in areas not covered or poorly served and to confront the limited possibilities and aging of the equipment which made up the system as a whole. The means used to carry the signal originating in the studios of Havana to each of the transmitters installed in the country from Pinar del Rio to Baracoa can only be described as exceptional. At that time that was the greatest problem and the reason why the service to more than half of the national territory which enjoyed the service was of inferior quality or absolutely intolerable.

One of the directives of the First Congress of the Communist Party of Cuba, dealt with this problem and it oriented the work of the 1976-1980 5-year period in four main directions:

The planning, acquisition and installation of a new main artery of the National Microwave System, which would serve as a support for the national telecommunications services from Pinar del Rio to Santiago de Cuba, to replace the insufficient and obsolete means in use up to that date.

To extend television service to new areas and improve it in others, all of this in both channels.

Replace that equipment, which because it no longer had spare parts on the international market or because of deterioration, no longer guaranteed the quality of service.

Introduce the technology required to make possible color transmissions on Channel 6.

After important studies, intensive planning and installation work by workers, technicians and engineers of the Ministry of Communications and its enterprises, the plan conceived was mainly completed around the middle of 1977. As we shall see further on, it consisted of four main areas of work.

National Microwave System

At a cost of almost seven million pesos, the main artery of this system was installed. It is of French technology, of high capacity and quality, and it performs the function of linking the main national centers by microwaves, by means of which--using secondary links--information handled by the national telecommunications services (telephone, telex, telegrams, radio, television and so forth) is distributed through local networks. Essentially, this main artery has the capability for satisfying present needs and those of the immediate future of the country, with 960 telephone channels, two video channels and the national radio programs, all of this in both directions, that is, in both directions between Pinar del Rio to Guantanamo.

The system consists of 27 stations or buildings provided with equipment, towers and antennas, suitably distributed throughout 1,000 kilometers, stations which like links merge with the next one and make up the chain.

Particularly for television service, this new artery has meant changes which are hardly comparable to the previous situation, because even when installations for providing the service existed in the interior of the country, the signal they had to handle (video and audio) was poor when not useless.

At this time, this network allows the same high degree of fidelity and definition from one end of the country to the other on both national channels and, at the same time, the same facilities in a reverse direction.

As far as the Isle of Youth is concerned, a branch of that network was made available, which allowed the same high level of quality on both channels.

Another important task performed during the 5-year period was that of providing all the installations belonging to Channel 6 with the equipment required for color transmission and now this channel has those facilities for color transmission to the entire country.

Radiobroadcasting

The systems which provide radio services in Cuba are organized into three basic structures called "national networks," "provincial networks" and "local stations."

The national networks (5) are individual systems made up to a number of installations scattered throughout the territory so as to transmit a certain program. They are RADIO REBELDE, RADIO LIBERACION, RADIO PROGRESO, RADIO RELOJ and RADIO MUSICAL. The provincial networks (14 at this time) have a similar responsibility but restructed to the province in question, while the local stations are restricted to a municipality or city.

These three structures took shape as of the victory of the revolution in response to needs of a political nature, for which reason it was necessary to change the availability of the largest part of the infrastructure inherited from capitalism and bring this important mass news medium to the entire country. With the exception of a few transmitters acquired in the decade of the 60's, the equipment for the service in these systems had more than 20 years in use in 1975, much of it made by hand in the country for profit. In the early years of the decade of the 70's, the radio service thus organized was also affected by other problems:

Large areas of national territory with scant population had acquired new socio-economic value.

The political-administrative division of the country caused an increase of from six to 14 provinces.

The technology inherited and acquired to that date was not enough to satisfy even the minimum coverage required by the political division of the country.

Because of a certain suitable geographic configuration and formation in some regions of the northern coast, the only radiated signals used were those produced by biased foreign missions.

Some of the 118 transmitters which made up the three systems had to be withdrawn from service because they did not meet the minimum requirements.

All these problems led to the preparation of a long-term development plan, a part of which was to be put into execution in the 1976-1980 5-year period. This part of the plan had two main objectives: increase the coverage of three of the five national networks and develop and expand the provincial networks in accordance with the new political-administrative division. For this it was necessary to make the following major investments:

Acquire 11 10-kilowatt, and 28 1-kilowatt transmitters made in Japan with all their auxiliary equipment.

Provide the trunk network of the French-made National Microwave System, also in the process of installation in the 5-year period, with the suitable facilities for carrying the five national programs to the various distribution points throughout the country.

Build 24 galvanized steel towers averaging some 100 meters in height each.

Build 24 buildings for the new radiobroadcasting installations.

Relocate 24 of the 118 transmitters in service.

The total amount of these changes brought the following results:

The equipment of the five national networks was increased from 54 transmitters in the entire country in 1975, to 73 in 1980, and that of the provincial networks from 25 transmitters in 1975 to 47 in 1980.

RADIO REBELDE, RADIO LIBERACION and RADIO PROGRESO programs were provided with more power or were heard for the first time in Bahia Honda, the Isle of Youth, Trinidad, Media Luna, Mayari Arriba, Pilon, Guantanamo and Cienfuegos.

The 14 provinces each had a system to transmit their provincial program to all their territory.

As a conclusion to this radiobroadcasting aspect of communications, we can say that the general quality of all the service improved appreciably and the basic technical conditions were created so that in the successive stages of development the programs of national coverage would have the same quality as they had in the capital of the country.

International Communications

Dealing with this other area of work, let us say at the beginning that the services of telephone, telegraph, radiobroadcasting, and generally any means of long-distance communications by electrical means between two or more countries, are international services.

To the overall means of communications, such as submarine cables across the seas and oceans and communications satellites, are joined the national systems to make up among them the world communications network, these being the means whereby traffic of these services is moved.

When the revolution triumphed in 1959, the international services of the country were handled through the United States and the two means available for it were a submarine cable with a capability for 24 telephone channels and a microwave link using the mode known as "tropospheric scatter," with a capability of 36 telephone channels and one video channel occasionally, the latter being used at the expense of a reduction in quality of the telephone channels. Economic relationships established before the operation of those means were such that the loss in foreign credits for that purpose, and other obvious reasons, led to the establishment of other means such as short-wave links.

These links were established with 13 countries for telegraphic services and were of extraordinary usefulness until 1975 when the Caribe earth station of the Intersputnik system was put into operation. This system has a capability of 24 telephone channels and one television channel with socialist countries.

As services were consolidated by means of the space system, short-wave links were abolished or placed in reserve because of their inferior quality.

During the 5-year period about to end, two important international events were held in Cuba: the Eleventh World Youth and Student Festival and the Sixth Summit Meeting of Nonalined Countries. Because of their nature, they required international communications facilities, which added and adapted to the future plans for these services, led to the significant increase achieved in this period. We shall make a short review of them.

The capability of the Caribe earth station was increased from 24 to 60 telephone channels. At the same time, it began to operate permanently with geostationary satellites, avoiding the four daily inoperative periods to which the system was subjected during the changes in satellites in elliptical orbit. This was an important advance in this link system.

Another earth station near the previous one was installed for operation of the Intelsat system. It has 24 telephone and one television channels.

The link capability with Jamaica was increased from two to 24 telephone channels.

An international automatic exchange with a capacity of 120 lines was installed.

The sum total of these new capabilities meant a considerable increase because there was an increase of from 93 telephone and one television channel in 1975, to three channels [as published], which meant the establishment of new direct relationships with several more countries, and the way to reach others was made possible without having to be relayed through other nations, thus deriving economic benefits.

Together with the increase in capabilities, important changes in the methods of operating these services were accomplished, for example: The automation of international telex through four international automatic communications centers located in other countries. This allowed any user of our national network to dial directly any of the 124 countries in the world having this automatic service. These facilities increased the capabilities of telegraph channels from 16 in 1975, to 64 in the 5-year period.

International telephone service began to operate in semiautomatic form for outgoing traffic (from Cuba abroad) to the more than 80 countries which had the facilities for it, significantly reducing the waiting time in this service. This also took place in incoming traffic from many countries, but automatically, which had these facilities.

These facilities were obtained, increasing direct telephone links between Cuba and other countries from 10 in 1975, to 17 during the 5-year period.

Finally, with respect to international communications, let us say that our Caribbean island has enough facilities to establish television links with more than 100 countries when necessary.

Postal Service and Telegraph

On this subject, which also includes distribution of the press and times of delivery, we hope to write an article soon, given the amount of information available.

We do want to say with respect to the efficiency of the postal service from 1975 to 1979, that there were no significant improvements because times of delay in handling correspondence remained almost at the levels of 1975.

The various factors which have contributed to this situation are more or less problems of operational discipline as well as supervisor laxity, low rate of development with respect to the rest of the communications branch in our country, organizational shortcomings, difficulties with the labor force and in the training of skilled personnel. Also present are difficulties with personal and other transportation.

In 1980, although the situation mentioned above persists, there has been some improvement in the quality of that service, which tends to approach the levels planned.

With respect to telegraph, we wish to state that since 1978 some recovery has been made, not all that is necessary, of course. As a negative example we cite the fact that in 1979 approximately 700,000 telegrams were delivered with delays of more than 5 hours.

With respect to messenger service, the most outstanding negative facts are shortage of messengers and the existence of a system of incentive which does not guarantee quality standards or the permanence of the man in the job.

Press Distribution

There has been a constant increase in the distribution of national magazines and weeklies since 1976 due to the increases in copies printed, assimilation of the distribution formerly made by some publishers and the appearance of new publications.

The quality goal for the present 5-year period establishes that 85 percent of the morning newspapers must be distributed by 1300. The goal has been met, although there was a decline in 1979 caused, among other things, by the temporary closing of the Camaguey and Guantanamo airports, cancellations and changes in schedules of Cubana de Aviacion flights, late publication by some publishers and the closing for nearly a month of the Jose Marti Airport due to Hurricane Frederick.

During that time, the press of the eastern provinces and Camaguey was taken by highway to the latter and from there by light aircraft to each of the provinces mentioned.

We also wish to add that all direct distribution made by some publishers was taken over by the Ministry of Communications.

Elsewhere, the creation of a commercial network of newsstands specializing in the sale of newspapers and magazines has greatly improved the facilities for acquisition by the population, although it is still not enough to satisfy that need completely.

At this time, work is going on in developing another type of newsstand, using less costly materials than lumber. This is a prefabricated prototype, which allows an increase in their production. It is expected that the next 5-year period will end with the construction of 1,000 newsstands and establishments for the sale of the press.

National Telex

This system is one of the main means for the exchange of information between the agencies of the economy, as well between the political and mass organizations. It is the first step in the development of the public network for the transmission of information.

The telex system began to operate in 1964 in the City of Havana with 110 lines, rapidly spreading to the rest of the country. Thus we see that in 1972 the telex system had 800 lines installed and 430 subscribers connected to the network. When the First Party Congress was held, it consisted of 14 automatic exchanges scattered throughout national territory. It already had 1,380 lines, of which 700 were in operation.

We can also report that the telex network will continue to grow and it is expected that by the end of 1980 only 3,660 of the 4,220 lines planned will be installed, since Santa Clara and Camaguey will not have the buildings required (now under construction) until the end of this year. Around 1,941 of these lines were in operation, which means there are 195 subscribers per million inhabitants, a ratio lower than the 333 per million forecast. This was due primarily to nondelivery of telegraph multiplex equipment by the usual suppliers which meant they had to be acquired elsewhere, with the subsequent delay since it could not be obtained in what is left of the year.

Data Transmission

Parallel with the national telex system, and in experimental form, a transmission network is being installed in coordination with the Ministry of the Sugar Industry for obtaining daily reports on the harvest. A pilot plan, which includes the interconnection of the sugarmills in Cienfuegos Province with the computer center installed in the capital of that province, has been prepared.

It is the intention of the Ministry of Communications to study and develop a national public data transmission network. The old State Science and Technology Committee included that study as a princiapl state problem for the 1976-1980 period, calling the study which consisted of six subjects the PPE-022-Data Transmission.

Within the framework of the plan of this PPE, several pieces of equipment have been developed with satisfactory results.

With respect to the connection between the computer centers, a large investment is being made, which consists, as we said at the beginning, of the installation and placing in operation of the coaxial system with the help of the Soviet Union. This will allow the availability of high quality links for this purpose.

This is the end of this picture, highly summarized, of the main areas of developing and providing services in the communications branch, so important in economic, political and social relationships, during the 5-year period about to end.

MINIL BEGINS DECENTRALIZED FINANCING OF LOCAL OPERATIONS

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 25 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by Jose Norniella]

[Text] MINIL [Ministry of Light Industry] and all its enterprises and budgeted units will begin experimentally to finance investments with their own resources on 1 January 1981.

This experiment starts a very important process of decentralized investment to improve the mechanisms of the SDPE [Economic Management and Planning System] by involving the management of the enterprises in the financing of their investments.

Financing investments with its own resources means that MINIL, as the central organization, and all its economic entities will use the resources that they create in a given period of time as new sources to pay for the work that the construction enterprises do for them. These new sources are the sale of idle basic means (not to be confused with idle inventories which is another thing) and amortization discounts for repairs.

The state budget will be used only as a complement when the created resources are not sufficient to finance the investment.

The sale of idle basic means as a source of financing will not be accumulative; that is, these resources will be used to the degree they are needed. What is not spent must be contributed to the state budget. The amortization discounts will also be used as a source of financing. The surplus will be contributed to the superior organization--in this case, MINIL.

Planning of the investment financing will be done quarterly. There will never be immobile financial resources in the enterprises. The superior organization will centralize surplus resources and distribute them to the direct investors that need them because their payments exceed these financing sources.

Officials of the BNC [National Bank of Cuba] Investment Department gave a seminar to all the enterprises and budgeted units of MINIL to explain in detail the principles that will govern this process and the form of accounting.

To solve problems, the BNC has taken measures to facilitate the use of simple credit when a direct investor does not have immediate resources to pay the builder.

This measure will prevent a possible increase in nonpayments and will force the enterprises to worry about their finances.

The direct investors will not have to suffer the "pain" of telling the builder that they do not have money to pay. However, if they do not learn to develop under the conditions of economic calculation, they will suffer the "pain" of having to pay interest on the credit and the even greater "pain" of informing the workers that the economic stimulation funds of the enterprise have been reduced or do not exist because of lack of discipline and irresponsibility in the financial management of the enterprise.

This experiment at MINIL to finance investments with its own resources responds to an investment policy initiated this year in fulfillment of one of the economic guidelines of the 1981-85 5-year period: "To finance part of the centralized investments of the ministries with profits from their own enterprises."

This year very important changes have been introduced in this sector. One of them is the delimitation of financial and investment plans. Another is the use of provincial and municipal budgets to finance local investments.

MINAL MINISTER DISCUSSES AVAILABILITY OF FOODSTUFFS

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 28 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Ramon Alberto Bendoyro]

[Text] Alejandro Roca, minister of the food industry, answered 18 questions asked by a panel of journalists during the most recent broadcast of the Public Information program on Channel 6 Television.

He answered the first question, saying that milk production and processing will increase in the next 5-year period. The industry has taken positive steps for development during these years and will continue during the coming period with the construction of new installations in Las Tunas, Guantanamo, Cienfuegos and the Isle of Youth.

As to rice, he reported that its production will also increase and the industry has adequate drying and milling capacity although it will be necessary to transfer some installations to Vertientes, Sancti Spiritus and Granma to increase drying capacity in those provinces.

He emphasized that the investment program in the meat industry will culminate in the coming years. This will permit industrialization and insure planned delivery.

Referring to canning, he said that the industry is prepared to process the increases produced in the beginning years of the next 5-year period. The conditions are right for increasing the assortment. He added that there is the capacity to process 200,000 tons of tomatoes in 100 to 120 days. However, it will receive some 120,000 tons next year which will satisfy the demand.

He emphasized that the same situation exists for guavas and mangoes since they are processed in the same factories as tomatoes. There is a problem with some regional shortages so increased capacity is planned in Santiago de Cuba, Villa Clara and Camaguey. This will fulfill the plans in those provinces.

He explained that a similar process occurs in the citrus industry where the capacity is 50,000 tons. The construction of a complex for 100,000 is planned for Jaguey and for Ciego de Avila.

In tobacco, one frequently questioned aspect is the quality of cigarettes. The minister said that the quality is seriously affected by the incorporation of 50-percent imported tobacco because of losses from blue mold. Uniformity has not been achieved in the mixture.

He added that the imported tobacco is characterized by a very fat central vein (stick). The existing machines cannot always extract them. In other countries, these varieties are processed and the stick is not noticeable in the cigarettes because they have expensive machines that homogenize (grind) it and include it in the cigarette without hurting the quality.

Roca said that 5,000 caballerias of tobacco would be sown for the next harvest and there are chemical products to fight blue mold. He added that the situation will not be solved until October 1981 since the results of the harvest will not be known until then.

The minister reported that the quality of beer had benefited from a series of measures to eliminate the presence of foreign objects. Nevertheless, he made the exception that there is unjustifiable negligence in places like the Miguel Oramas enterprise (Polar) where the leaders did not act responsibly. About 1,000 cases of poor quality beer were distributed to the people. Four of the leaders have been replaced and must make restitution.

Concerning the increased production of beer and malt, he said that 29 million cases of the first and 2.8 million cases of the second will be processed this year but this is not enough. To alleviate the shortage, investments totaling 65 million pesos have been planned to modernize the breweries and to build a new one in Camaguey.

Milk

Concerning imports of powdered milk, he said that our country has imported more than 500,000 tons of powdered milk--more than 5 billion liters--in the past 10 years. He explained that a ton cost $100, $600 and $1,000. Therefore, in the next 5-year period, part of the national milk production will be used to replace some of these imports.

He discussed the price of 80 centavos per liter and stated that the cost of imported powdered milk is high. The state subsidizes evaporated and condensed milk and it costs less than its production cost. Also milk will still be sold on the free market next year.

He talked about the variety of ice cream. There are problems because of a shortage of imported cardboard. This is being solved with the production of other types of packaging in the factories of light industry. He added that the shutdown of the dairy complexes in Havana and Bayamo was also an influence. Their refrigerators are being rebuilt. They have the greatest possibilities for producing the scoops, small containers, liters and half-liters.

He stated that the bulk of the production fell to old factories and the Escambray dairy complex. There are plans to buy equipment in the Soviet Union in the next 5-year period to increase the supply.

A question about bread quality was answered by the minister, pointing out that the people's government inherited certain problems. It has resolved some like production in Camaguey. He said that there are objective factors like a double shift in the bakeries but only one shift in distribution, packaging and the poor condition of bakeries which decreased productive capacity although there was increased consumption.

He spoke of negligence in using the ingredients of the recipes, lack of compliance in processes and poor management by local administrations in obtaining the means with which the bakers work.

As to matches, he reported that production will be fulfilled through stabilization and increased quality. In the next 5-year period, a factory will be built in Bayamo.

The minister explained that, to guarantee the supply of meat to the people without affecting the number of cows needed to maintain the production of fresh milk, more than 100,000 tons of chicken have been imported in the last 7 years. There will be small increases in the production of beef, pork and canned meat.

The minister indicated that some investments will be completed in the meat industry which will permit better exploitation of meat, especially by-products and canned meat.

In confections, the minister announced the problems of transporting cans to the interior of the country. The solution is to build a factory complex in Pinar del Rio, Camaguey, Havana and Banes. A temporary solution is to transport it in plastic bags.

As to prospects for expanding the production of canned soup and vegetables, the minister said that this year 6 million cans will be produced. This is inadequate because there are problems with tin plate, installations and raw materials. He also reported that there was an agreement with Bulgaria to construct a complex in the next 5-year period.

There was an improvement in soft drinks due to new investments in some provinces, according to Roca. Some of them are being put into operation now. There are new varieties that can be obtained only in the new factories because of their technological process.

The replacement of bottling was analyzed by the minister. He indicated that the objective is to deliver filled bottles throughout the country without needing empty bottles by putting a price on the bottle.

He said that the system of purchasing bottles for liquor, wine and beer has recovered 43 million bottles. A higher figure is expected next year.

He stated that there is no tradition of wine consumption in Cuba. However, an increase in variety has been stimulated. For example, a factory in Havana produces papaya and orange wine; Ciego de Avila will soon have another factory to produce pineapple wine. Other citrus wines can be developed.

Concerning the demand for pasta, the minister agreed to adapt the assortment to what the people need. With the start-up of a factory in Santiago de Cuba, this can become reality. This year 12,000 tons more will be produced than last year. The distribution and assortment are complements to satisfy the demand.

Labeling was the last topic covered by the minister of the food industry. He emphasized that the most important thing is the link between the product, the brand and the prestige it acquires through its quality. In this sense, the biggest problems are in beer, malt and soft drinks. He said we need larger installations and more paper for the labels; this will be a future reality. He stated that the brand will be lithographed on the plate; this can be done in the Sancti Spiritus factory which is being assembled and will begin to operate next year.

Because of the time stipulated for the program, JUVENTUD REBELDE will publish the remaining responses in its Public Information section as it has done in the past.

NEW SUGARCANE PLANTING TECHNIQUES EXPLAINED

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 3 Nov 80 p 2

[Article by Nelson Garcia Santos]

[Text] In his speech closing the Sixteenth Congress of the Sugarworkers Union, Commander in Chief Fidel Castro pointed out the positive experiences of Villa Clara in the application of the system of planting cane in beds or ridges and he urged the rest of the provinces of the nation to take those results into consideration because of the benefits that may result for sugar production.

For this reason JUVENTUD REBELDE thought it proper to interview Victor Garcia, chief of the Agricultural Section of the Ministry of the Sugar Industry in Villa Clara, so that he could explain what the method is about, its advantages and how up to now it has been shown that its use in low zones (with little drainage) is the most logical for obtaining good sugarcane germination.

So that the reader may have a good idea of what planting in ridges has meant for the province, we shall provide the following information.

In spring planting this year, which amounted to more than 2,500 caballerias, only 38 were lost. The planting on the northern coast of 800 caballerias, using the aforementioned method was of decisive influence in those results. Last year losses amounted to 40 percent, while the rest of the area planted had problems in the germination process.

"It is necessary to point out that together with the introduction of the new method, the application of good cultivation practices (weeding, fertilizing and cultivation) and the proper preparation of the land and selection of seed was also decisive."

Victor Garcia explains to us that "the planting in ridges is not a new idea. It is being done by countries which have soil with poor drainage such as Nigeria and other African nations, Louisiana in the United States and the Lesser Antilles. It was even recommended for Cuba by specialists Bent and Allison as far back as 1928."

He said that Villa Clara adopted the principle of this method but it was adapted to the specific conditions of our soils and changes have been made in it with respect to the size of the ridge, which in addition to yielding excellent results, shows the creative initiative of our technicians.

Planting in ridges means raising the level of the soil by 30 centimeters for the purpose of increasing the effective depth of the soil. It helps the cane roots to develop broadly, since that height allows water (either rain or irrigation) to run off quickly and excessive moisture will not affect the germination of the seed.

This variation in the planting system (the normal method is to plant below the level of the ground), which is only advisable for land with poor drainage, a flat surface and irrigation (raising of the surface in ridges causes an even greater drying of the soil during droughts), allows better external and internal drainage of the soil and makes possible the application of suitable irrigation.

It also improves the physical conditions of the soil profile, helps germination, growth and sprouting of sugarcane, facilitates cultivation activities (by providing a better runoff of water it prevents flooding by rain or irrigation), extends the planting period and contributes to the mechanization of the harvest.

The Villa Clara technicians have resolved a difficult problem, which for years has been affecting the northern coast of the province, through the use of that planting method. The problem, in a large sugarcane area of more than 4,000 caballerias, was that of a thin stand of cane due to poor germination caused by excessive retention of moisture in that soil.

The results obtained show how correct the implantation of that system has been, a system which will continue to be improved through studies being made to improve the techniques of preparing the soil, as well as the leveling of the soil and other aspects related to the crop.

AGRICULTURAL ACTIVITIES ON ISLE OF YOUTH REPORTED

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 31 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Rosa Solsona and Marcos Llanos]

[Text] There among the lemon, orange and grapefruit trees of the Isle of Youth, the students of tens of schools are making a daily reality of the principle of combining study with work.

However, this is not a matter of students mobilizing systematically toward an area of work, remaining there a certain time and even performing some work. What is being sought is for the young people to learn exactly the formative objectives being pursued and the specific activity to be accomplished.

To accomplish it, they must leave at the scheduled time for the assigned place, have a knowledge of work and have the necessary tools; for example, if a machete has to be used, it should be of the right size, its blade of the proper material; it should not weigh too much and it should be sharp.

The work of organizing and planning the students' productive activity is complex. In this work the person responsible for the lot, the camp counselors, the production subdirector, teachers and members of the management council of the camp all take part directly. All know that it is necessay to measure compliance with quotas and to inform the student of the scope and value of the work performed.

A Survey

There are 53 farm work schools on the Isle of Youth with more than 500 students each. It is, therefore, an ideal place to investigate how work is organized for a large mass of students and, particularly, to observe how the essential objective is attained, the objective of productive work truly contributing to the communist formation of the young.

On occasions we have heard the opinions of some students on quotas; that they are high, that sometimes they cannot be reached. However, this problem does not seem to affect the boys and girls of the special municipality.

"We reach quotas without great problems. Only in some cases, when there are many weeds, do we have a little more work, but that does not happen every day," declare the active students of the IPUEC [Preuniversity Farming and Academic Institute] Viet Nam Heroico.

They are not the only ones to speak this way; the Pinar del Rio students of the 14 de Junio IPUEC, the Oriente students of the Orestes Moreno IPUEC and the young Mozambicans from the Eduardo Modlane ESBEC [Basic Secondary Farm School] also say they can meet the established quotas. Everything seems to indicate a better organization of a socially useful activity in this zone of the country.

Scheduling of Work For Each Student

Every 15 days a meeting is held in which the chiefs of lots of the citrus-growing district in which the school is located, production subdirectors of the centers, the chief of productive work of the municipal directorate of education and the representative at that level of the Citrus Enterprise of the Isle of Youth, all participate.

The reporters of JUVENTUD REBELDE attended a meeting of this type at the beginning of October at the Hendrick Witbool ESBEC.

The agricultural representative, Osvaldo Armas Rodriguez and Ismael Luis Hernandez, the representative of the Ministry of Education, discussed the peculiarities of the plan to be put into effect in the next two-week period with the lot chiefs.

The great concern of both bodies is to achieve an exact and coordinated scheduling so that each student will have work during three hours every day and that he have tools which are in a good condition.

War Against Idle Time

The Agricultural Enterprise instructs the districts to schedule all tasks so as to take good care of citrus trees. However it is guided by economic factors. Sometimes there is a period of waiting so that the weeds will grow higher (this does not affect the tree) so that the chopping of weeds can be done more gainfully. This results in the students not having any work for some days.

In turn, the Ministry of Education insists that there cannot be a road without drainage ditches, an unpruned tree or high weeds. "We should be able to play marbles under the citrus trees."

There is a Work Agreement between the Directorate of Education and the Agricultural Delegation on the Isle of Youth in which it is stipulated: "The Citrus and Miscellaneous Crop Enterprises, or in their stead the districts and the farm schools, through the lot chief and the production subdirector will prepare work schedules every 15 days."

As can be seen, there exists a basic agreement between the controlling agencies (Agriculture and Education) in which it is stipulated that the work program shall be prepared through a proper combination of the interests of the enterprises and the school.

The objective here is to impose, above any other consideration, the formative aspect of work in this type of center and the idea that profit be subordinated to this principle. In other words, a lot chief must think that his work contributes directly to the education of the young who work in his area, and that this is more important than the results obtained from it in terms of values.

If the quota is attained, if safety measures are used and time is used properly, if the student sees the results of his work, educational work has been performed.

Safety and Work Methods

Safety provisions for the harvesting of citrus fruits stipulate that a ladder must be used. This insures that the young person will not fall from the tree. The enterprise has ladders but some groups of students prefer to work without them "Because that way we do not have to move them from one tree to the next," they say.

Here we have an example of the role that should be played by the counselors and lot chiefs as work organizers and as educators of youth. They must insist and demand the use of ladders. They must be persuasive and explain the reasons why this safety measure must be used.

A Great Harvesting Force

"Without the students the enormous citrus groves could not be harvested or cultivated," says Osvaldo Armas, representative of the Agricultural Enterprise. He also says that the students generally make efforts to perform the productive task and if it is organized, they do it efficiently.

He says that the students from Oriente are very hard-working and he adds: "The Cristobal Labra ESBEC of Havana students and others of students from Pinar del Rio, have a well-deserved fame for being hard-working. The Vanguardia IPUEC of Havana has begun in excellent form this school year."

On the participation of teachers in agricultural work, Jose Echevarria, chief of one of the agricultural districts, believes that it has increased this school year, which makes it possible for the educational aspect of work to be strengthened.

It is more difficult to supervise the productive activity of the student than his educational activity because camp personnel in the field are few. That is why the active presence of the teacher in the fields is decisive for transmitting a lesson, pointing out a detail or for calling attention to work which is not being done with quality and organization.

Ismael Luis, chief of the Productive Work Department on the Isle of Youth, believes the students now work better than ever and that is why there are good results. On the other hand, he says that emulation existing in the schools and among them is the driving force behind activities. Each school is evaluated and methods for assessing the group (brigade or individual) are now being perfected.

A Productivity Committee exists in each school, each of them headed by the director of the school and consisting of the production subdirector, the UJC [Union of Young Communists] secretary, the SNTEC [National Union of Education and Cultural Workers] secretary, the chief of the lot, and the senior leader of the FEEM [Federation of Middle School Students] or of the Jose Marti Pioneer Organization at that level. This committee analyzes the work performed every 15 days.

Work Remains To Be Done In the Educational Field

There are differences between the Agricultural Enterprise and the school, although they need each other. The latter is interested in having work scheduled every day and that tools be in good condition, in short, good working conditions.

The chief of the lot and the counselor have to become more aware that either they are also teachers or it is a matter of reaching a quota. From the educational point of view there is work to be done. However, a great result has been achieved with respect to productive work by the farm schools on the Isle of Youth.

Undoubtedly there are details to be refined, although the degree of organization and achievements are coming close to the objective pursued: Productive work must be a real part of the teaching-learning process.

IMPORTANCE OF GUARD SERVICE EXPLAINED

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 2 Nov 80 pp 4-7

[Article by Unit Service Section, General Staff: "A Combat Mission"]

[Text] Guard duty is performed in garrisons and military units of the FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces] for the purpose of watching and defending the Battle Flag, the camps, the weapons depots, combat equipment, other equipment and military property as well as military government installations.

Because of the importance of this type of duty in peacetime also, it is believed that its performance is similar to the accomplishment of a combat mission which is why it required the strictest possible compliance on the part of personnel with all established rules, unalterable determination, and a high level of alertness and initiative. This is why, in line with legislation currently in force, violators of guard duty requirements bear a severe criminal or disciplinary responsibility.

This type of duty is carried out according to the requirements of the Regulations on Garrison and Guard Duty which spell out the organization, training, relief, execution, and supervision of guard duty, the internal regulations of the guard force, the weapons employment regulations, the system of access to facilities guarded and other aspects of this type of duty.

Responsibility for the organization, execution, and supervision of guard duty in garrisons and military units of the FAR rests upon the respective commanders of these units.

For this purpose, they determine which facilities must be watched and defended and with what forces; they prepare a chart for guard duty assignments, they draw up the duty station diagrams and note the specific locations of those stations, and they issue orders to the commanders and other members of the guard.

The Regulations establish that personnel be drawn from one and the same minor unit, that guards be relieved every 24 hours and that the same military personnel must not be assigned to further guard duty until at least 24 hours have elapsed since the time they were relieved.

Assignments must be communicated in writing to the minor unit 5 or 6 days before the start of the new month with a view to adequate planning and correct training of personnel who will be carrying out this assignment. No less than 10 days prior to the start of the new month, the military unit which participates in garrison guard duty gets the extracts for the designation of personnel to go on guard duty, the guard post location diagrams, the duty station charts, and the instructions for the commanders.

Next, 3 days before it goes on garrison or interior guard duty, the minor unit must receive, from the chief of staff, the diagrams for the locations of the guard duty stations, the duty station charts, and the instructions for the commanders which will be used for the training of personnel who will put in this type of duty; these documents are then returned to the military unit's staff.

The guard is generally made up of the guard commander, his deputy, and the guard NCOs and the sentries. There is no specific need to appoint a deputy for the guard commander and in that case the deputy's functions are taken over by the senior guard NCO. Guard NCOs are so designated that each one of them will be responsible for all reliefs covering no more than five posts.

Personnel training for guard duty is a factor of the utmost importance and must include both theory and practice. The Regulations prohibit the assignment of new recruits to guard duty before they have taken the Military Oath or before they are correctly familiar with military duties.

Personnel must be selected in keeping with their level of training, conduct, and attitude of discipline when it comes to rendering this kind of service.

The best soldiers are assigned to the most important guard posts and they must be selected by order of the military unit commander for the period of training.

In selecting personnel, the minor unit commander will analyze personnel performance in the light of political work and will get together with the Secretary of the UJC [Union of Young Communists]; only then will the sergeant-major reveal the names during night-time inspection.

The garrison commanders and chiefs of staff play a decisive role in the training of personnel for guard duty; they are obligated to help the minor unit commanders and they must not allow any simplifications of requirements spelled out in the Regulations.

Minor unit commanders (company and battalion commanders) are directly responsible for guard personnel training and have the obligation to hold training sessions personally. Besides, on the eve prior to going on duty and during times of individual study, military personnel must study the fundamental aspects of Regulations and the documents connected with guard duty. They must emphasize the particular aspects of guard duty performance at each post.

The political work of the minor unit must be designed to insure exemplary compliance with the assigned combat mission, devoting special attention to problems dealing with the guarding of each facility, discipline while on guard duty, exemplary discharge of obligations by each member of the guard and use of arms.

Before going on duty with the personnel, a practical training session is organized in an area specially prepared for this purpose. It includes the following: Training for loading and unloading arms as well as the various operations which the sentry may perform at his post (repelling an attack, use of weapons, fire-fighting, etc.); very detailed study--using models--of the characteristics of his post and its boundaries; location and employment of means of communication, signals, and fire alarms; study of the precepts of the Regulations in this respect; checking on the knowledge of all members of the guard, especially the commander, the guard NCOs and the sentries.

The guard training area is a sector of terrain which includes the reproduction of the facilities to be guarded (posts); a place for loading and unloading weapons, a fire-fighting station, trenches, as well as means for signaling and communication.

The class should last no more than 1 hour and 30 minutes and of that time 30 minutes must be set aside for theoretical training and for checking on the knowledge of personnel; the rest must be taken up by practical training. The practical training class consists of the following points:

Training in repelling an attack against the guard post (under the direction of the guard commander);

Weapons employment procedure (under the direction of the deputy guard commander);

Loading and unloading weapons (under the direction of a guard NCO);

Fire-fighting (under the direction of a guard NCO).

The company's CO will direct and generally supervise the class.

The formation and inspection of the guard is a solemn moment. It consists in checking on their readiness to perform guard duty, the subordination of guard personnel to the individuals indicated in Article 113 of the Garrison and Guard Duty Regulations, and the authorization of the release of outgoing guards. This should not last more than 40 minutes.

Just 15 minutes prior to the formation and inspection, the members of the guard must be ready and must be under the control of their respective commanders (Article 143).

Training of personnel for guard duty does not terminate prior to the relief but on the contrary continues throughout guard duty, before each relief, during standby duty, etc.

During the period of training,the deputy commander of the minor unit in charge of political work will for this purpose appoint the UJC actif generally consisting of one organizer, one editor, and the agitators in order to develop political-educational work among personnel under the direction of the guard commander.

The plan for this activity includes talks, political briefings, reading of press articles dealing with guard duty, and study of guard regulations as well as the feats achieved by the sentries and the acts of heroism performed by members of the FAR. The commander will organize competition and selection of the most outstanding members of the guard.

Inspection of guard duty performed by sentries in particular and by the guard in general constitutes another decisive aspect in guaranteeing exemplary accomplishment of the combat mission assigned to the minor unit.

This is why the Garrison and Guard Duty Regulations provide the right and obligation to check on the guard, in addition to the individuals who are members of the guard, and this obligation must be discharged by all direct commanders of personnel involved in this mission; the commanders must make sure that the guard is checked out during all intervals between reliefs and that the person conducting the inspection will note in the guard post book any deficiencies detected; these reports must then be signed; the information is then taken into account when the summary report is prepared in the minor unit after the relief.

This summary is furthermore based on the observations of the guard commander concerning the type of guard duty performance rendered and the summary must mention the most outstanding members of the guard.

In conclusion, the commander of the UM [military unit] is informed by the chief of staff and by the officer of the guard concerning the results of guard duty performance, he analyzes the guard post book and orders measures that must be taken to correct deficiencies detected and to improve the guarding and defense of military installations.

This work done by commanders and staffs in an efficient manner will guarantee that the combat mission is accomplished satisfactorily.

The sentry is an inviolable person. His inviolability consists of the following:

Special protection--by law--of his rights and personal integrity;

Subordination to strictly specified persons: Guard commander, deputy guard commander;

Obligation of all persons unconditionally to comply with the demands of the sentries having to do with guard duty performance;

Right to make use of arms in cases spelled out in the Regulations.

The performance of guard duty signifies the accomplishment of a combat mission and demands of guard personnel the strictest compliance with all provisions in the Regulations plus unalterable determination and a high level of alertness.

Violators of guard duty regulations bear a severe disciplinary or criminal responsibility.

NEW REGULATIONS ON DIRECT HIRE OF EMPLOYEES TAKE EFFECT

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 1 Nov 80 p 1

[Article by Juan Varela Perez]

[Text] As of today, 1 November, direct hiring of the labor force will begin except in Havana Province where it will take effect later.

The execution of this measure means a major change in the mechanisms of placement and distribution of the work force.

Speaking on this topic to the delegates to the 16th Sugar Congress, Joaquin Benavides, minister president of the State Committee for Labor and Social Security, stated: "It is important that it be understood by all the workers that signing individual contracts does not mean and cannot mean that the rights of the workers will be violated."

He explained that the decree law that establishes individual labor contracts indicates very clearly that, when the contracts are signed, the conditions existing at the time of signing must be respected.

The minister explained: "It is also established that when the contracts are signed, it is necessary to respect all existing legislation. Contracts that are signed which contain clauses that violate the legislation--that is, that hurt the workers or the economy--will not be legal."

Joaquin Benavides said that direct hiring of the work force is an indispensable mechanism for the application of the Economic Management and Planning System.

He emphasized: "With the present mechanisms of centralized distribution of the work force, it is impossible to fully develop economic calculation."

He explained that centralized placement of the work force does not encourage responsibility in the enterprises for efficient use of their human resources. It gives the enterprises the feeling that the labor problem has to be solved by someone else.

He added that it also does not create the awareness in the management of the enterprises that it is necessary to provide good conditions so that the workers want to stay at that enterprise.

In his explanation, the minister president of the State Committee for Labor and Social Security indicated: "The centralized mechanisms that we have had until now made it very difficult for a worker to transfer to another place if the enterprise did not agree to that request. Direct hiring gives management the opportunity to select its work force but, at the same time, gives the worker the opportunity to select the enterprise where he wants to work. It is a mechanism that reconciles the interests of the worker with those of the enterprise."

PORT, TRANSPORTATION, WAREHOUSING FOR SEPTEMBER NOTED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 6 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Emilio del Barrio Menendez]

[Text] In the ports sector and in the rest of the categories of the chain being completed in transportation and warehousing for the domestic economy, September ended throughout the country on a positive trend: the monthly average since June of over 700,000 tons unladed was maintained. Cargo unladed exceeded arrivals by 96,000 tons and extraction and reception exceeded unladings by 39,000 tons.

As the result of the month's work, the volume of merchandise afloat as of 30 September had decreased 267,000 tons; and warehousing in the ports had decreased by 250,000 tons. These immobilized tonnages are very close to the parameters considered normal for the current import plan, which permits us to say that, from this standpoint, the emergency port situation will soon be ended.

During September, from the port standpoint, the Nuevitas maritime terminal was outstanding. Its men made up lost time and with their productivity and efficiency are reminding the rest of the country that they can always be counted upon.

Mariel, Matanzas and Santiago de Cuba have also done meritorious work, as have the transportation personnel and warehousemen of the domestic economy of the country, although we must continue to point out the work done in Pinar del Rio, Las Tunas and Granma, in general, and the workers who have reduced to almost unprecedented levels the inventories of the Havana maritime terminals.

The positive trend now being observed is the result of the combined efforts of port and transportation personnel and warehouse workers of the domestic economy which permitted the unlading of 2,831,000 tons of merchandise during the June-September 4-month period, for an average 707,000 tons per month. The tonnage delivered to the domestic economy exceeded unladings by 50,000 tons.

However, not only this was accomplished, which is a very important achievement, but also port management gained in economic efficiency: in the June-August period, there was a 1 centavo reduction in the per peso cost of production, compared to the previous 5 months of the year. The wage-production ratio improved 7.1 percent, while the per ton cost experienced in that quarter was 22 centavos lower, compared to the January-May period and 38 centavos compared to 1979.

With respect to productivity, there was an increase of 9.6 percent in the first 8 months of the year compared to 1979; and the average wage increased only 1.9 percent.

As the result of all the work performed in previous months, in September it was noted that there was the start of a descending curve in payments for demurrage in all the country's ports operated by the Union of Port Enterprises, since the negative balance was lower than that experienced in prior months.

There are many ports, such as Santiago de Cuba, Cienfuegos, Matanzas, Isabela, Casilda, Puerto Padre, Manati and Guantanamo, in which difference between what is paid for demurrage and what is taken in for prompt dispatch was entirely favorable.

At present, the conditions are right to permit the month of October to end with a favorable balance in all of the country's maritime terminals operated by the Union of Port Enterprises; however, in order to accomplish this, on the basis of forecasts of arrivals and timely distribution, the effort maintained up to now must be sustained. There must be greater firmness in the meeting of adopted standards, in control and in effective performance by and among all the factors involved in the circulatory stream of the national economy, from the smallest port to the most modest of the warehouses of the domestic economy, like the mobilization of all the workers in the port-transportation-domestic economy workers up to now.

October should successfully initiate the last quarter of the year.

BRIEFS

DIRECT TELEPHONE SERVICE--Bayamo (AIN)--Direct telephone communication between this city and Santiago de Cuba has been established via long distance dialing equipment as a tribute from workers of the sector to the Party's Second Congress. As the result of work performed during the last 3 years, the Granma capital now has the same systems of hookup with the rest of its municipalities and with Havana City. In this stage 164 km of telphone and telegraph lines were strung which hooked up to the territory. Seventy-four km of these telephone lines were strung for local service. NATIONAL HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION--Cancelaria (AIN)--The Havana-Soroa 64-km section of the National Highway has been completely paved, while work was done simultaneously on four bridges, two of which will be finished this year. From the Mediodia Highway to the city of Pinar del Rio, the roadway will total 158 km, while the network for the whole country will be 1,023 km. Highway Engineer Jesus Gomez, deputy technical director of the Engineering Projects Construction Enterprise No. 2 of Pinar del Rio, has reported that in 1980 it is expected that an additional 2 km will be paved and that the bridges over the Santo Domingo River and the overpass of the Soroa highway will be completed. Construction work was started in April 1968; and its total cost will be approximately 94,500,000 pesos, with nearly 31 million pesos having been invested to date. Work is also being done on the Hondo and Guama Rivers while grading is being done prior to paving. This highway will have a four-lane section, two in each direction, for a total width of 27 meters, making it possible for a flow of 7,000 automobiles per day at speeds of 120 km per hour. Each lane will be 3.75 meters wider than those available on the Central Highway. [Text] [Havana GRANMA in Spanish 2 Oct 80, p 3] 8143

AMNLAE CELEBRATES THIRD ANNIVERSARY

Greater Participation Demanded

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 30 Sep 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] The Luisa Amanda Espinoza Association of Nicaraguan Women (AMNLAE) demanded from our leadership that women be given greater participation in national politics during the historic commemoration of the third anniversary of the organization, held yesterday morning at the Espana stadium.

Comrade Gloria Carrion, of the AMNLAE Executive Committee General Secretariat, said that up to now this organization has been entrusted with organizing events which, although important, do not involve efforts of a serious political nature.

Present at the celebration were: the leader of the revolution, Victor Tirado Lopez; guerrilla leader Omar Cabezas; Comrades Doris Tijerino Haslam and Gladys Baez, mothers of Sandinist heroes; and members of local and foreign mass organizations.

Comrade Carrion pointed out the need for the problem of women to be made known and studied within the Sandinist People's Army.

Comrade Doris Tijerino Haslam stressed that in spite of the unquestionable victory of our leadership, the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front], women's participation in the revolution continues to be a big problem.

She observed that women have not been given the importance they deserve in this process. "It is men who have greater opportunities than women in the revolution. Women have been confined to working in the service areas, not the productive ones."

For his part, the leader of the revolution, Victor Tirado Lopez said regarding the concerns of AMNLAE, that he will support its proposals "because women's interests are intimately linked to those of the revolution."

He also invited women to discover the heroic landmarks in the revolutionary history of Nicaraguan women; bourgeois historians have distorted the facts regarding the role of women in the victory.

In the name of the Federation of Cuban Women, Haydee Villavicencia scored the acquittal by a Venezuelan military court of terrorists Orlando Bosch, Luis Posada (both Cuban "worms") and Hernan Ricardo Ricardo, who in 1976 sabotaged a Cuban airplane in which 73 persons died, among them an athletic team from the Socialist island.

She also condemned the oppressive regimes of Paraguay, Uruguay, Bolivia, Argentina, El Salvador and Guatemala.

For her part, Yamilet Lopez, of the Alliance of Costa Rican Women, denounced the false human rights policies of President Rodrigo Carazo Odio.

The event was dedicated to mothers of Sandinist martyrs.

FSLN Salutes Women

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 30 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] The National Directorate of the Sandinist National Liberation Front greets with special revolutionary satisfaction the Luisa Amanda Espinoza Association of Nicaraguan Women on the occasion of the celebration of the third anniversary of its founding.

Throughout the history of the struggles of the Nicaraguan people for national independence, sovereignty and social liberation, the growing participation of women in carrying out various tasks represents an example and a victory of deep meaning and historic scope.

Summing up this tradition of struggle and representing clear progress in terms of quality, AMPRONAC [National Association of Women Concerned With the Nation's Problems] emerged as the organized expression of this participation and of the attainment of higher levels of awareness and devotion to the revolutionary cause. This was clearly shown during the people's war for the overthrow of the dictatorship and continues today, when AMNLAE represents the vanguard of Nicaraguan women fully committed to carrying out all the tasks demanded by the progress of the Sandinist People's Revolution.

In the literacy campaign, in the efforts for economic reactivation, in defense, in promotion of social organization, AMNLAE is present, as it is in all those efforts of the people to implement revolutionary victories, in the daily efforts of the working masses, in the building of the new society anticipated by Sandino and Fonseca, and for which Luisa Amanda, Maria Castil and Claudia Chamorro gave their lives.

National reconstruction presents greater challenges to us and demands many sacrifices. We want this greeting to AMNLAE--and through it to all Nicaraguan women fighters--to be both a recognition and an exhortation: a recognition for the great work carried out in these 3 years, and an exhortation to redouble efforts on behalf of the consolidation of the Sandinist People's Revolution which demands from women, as members of Sandino's people, greater participation and the attainment of ever higher levels of awareness and political clarity. The revolution also demands the development and strengthening of their organization.

With the conviction that this third anniversary will be translated into new advances and new goals in the revolutionary commitments of AMNLAE, we end with fraternal greetings.

Free fatherland or death!

ACTS OF TREASON TO BE DEALT WITH HARSHLY, REVEALS SENATOR

Lima LA CRONICA in Spanish 25 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] There will be no provisional freedom, nor conditional sentencing for perpetrators of acts of treason against the homeland, according to the bill Senator Javier Alva Orlandini will introduce to the Upper House. In such cases, imprisonment will be imposed.

The basics of the bill indicate that in various places in Peru, acts of sabotage have been committed which not only alarm the public but harm the national patrimony as well.

These violent deeds, the expository part of the bill points out, are obviously planned by antidemocratic, antisocial elements who endanger the lives and health of the people, cut off public communication, destroy property and various state offices' documentation.

According to the bill, these acts constitute treason against the homeland: the intentional destruction, total or partial, of roads, bridges, trains and their tracks, town water and sewage services, dams and agroindustrial installations.

Likewise established as the same crime are: the intentional destruction, total or partial, of electrical and thermal stations and their transmission lines, machinery and branch lines; fire stations, storage tanks and other installations for the production, distribution and sales of fuel and its derivatives; docks, piers and other navigation structures; telegraph, telephone, postal and like communications; public offices, buildings and their files, and vehicles owned by or for the use of the state.

Also considered acts of treason against the homeland: the destruction of machinery, equipment or other tools for newspapers, magazines, television and radio stations, and in general any act of sabotage against the patrimony of the Republic. The perpetrators of such crimes will be sentenced to imprisonment.

Ledesma: Laws in Force Sufficient

FOCEP [Student-Peasant-Worker Popular Front] Senator Dr Genaro Ledesma Izquieta strenuously denounced and condemned the terrorist acts of damage to public property that have been reported in various places around the country. Ledesma stated that this extortionist activity is a crime and should be punished by the laws in force.

Attacks against high tension posts and municipal buildings are a crime which should be strenuously censured.

He stressed, however, that he does not believe that these acts are provoked by truly revolutionary leftists. These methods are not the ones the people use to attain their demands. The FOCEP senator said that he tends to favor the right wing.

"Terrorism is a typically counterrevolutionary attitude and thus I do not rule out the possibility that the ultraright might be involved, wanting to harden the government's hand against the left," he said.

Ledesma Izquieta, who went to Jorge Chavez International Airport to see off writer Miguel Scorza who was flying to Paris, said that terrorism only favors the right in the final outcome.

About the bill introduced by Senator Alva Orlandini to create a special law for the suppression of terrorism, Ledesma pointed out that within the Peruvian laws in force there are abundant articles which punish and sanction damage to public and private property.

He said that increasing this legislation with special laws would be irresponsible and counterproductive. "Among the terrorist acts in question are 20 attacks on Popular Action offices. Attacks on those places cannot be called treason against the homeland even though the owners are in the government," Ledesma averred.

Eguren Bresani Demands Drastic Sanctions

President of the Supreme Court Dr Alberto Eguren Bresani demanded the most drastic sanctions against those responsible for recent terrorist acts committed in various places around the country.

The terrorist attacks "should be sanctioned drastically," Dr Eguren Bresani said when his opinion was asked regarding the recent attacks.

Expressing his support for Senator Alva Orlandini's bill to the effect that it is necessary to pass laws against such acts by declaring the perpetrators "traitors against the homeland," the judge said that specific laws condemning terrorism should be passed.

He also said that recently in the Lima judicial district, 20 new hearing courts, 14 civil courts, 7 correctional courts and 2 civil halls have been created.

All of this was done to decongest the administration of justice, which has become very deteriorated in recent years because of the terrible slowness in hearing and settling legal cases.

APRA: TERRORIST ACTS ENCOURAGE AUTHORITARIAN RULE

Terrorism Law Studied

Lima LA PRENSA in Spanish 25 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] While APRA [American Revolutionary Popular Alliance] leader Dr Luis Alberto Sanchez said yesterday that terrorist acts could bring about the return of a government of force, his colleague in the banking sector, Dr Alfonso Ramos Alva, not without beforehand condemning violent actions, said that his party considers the draft law which typifies perpetrators of acts of violence as "traitors to the Fatherland" to be inappropriate.

When interviewed briefly as he was leaving Congress, Dr Sanchez said that agitation "being stupid, is predictable because of the state of affairs and because of the permissiveness of the situation."

Intimating that the present economic crisis is behind this situation, he said, "It is inducing some persons to think about the return of a government of force." He described such a thing as "an absurdity."

For his part, Dr Ramos Alva, after reporting that next Monday there will be a joint meeting of the National Defense and Justice committees to review the above-mentioned draft law, said that the term "traitors to the Fatherland" is used in Article 235 of the constitution.

He explained that the term "traitor to the Fatherland," according to the constitution, is applied only in time of war and that the death penalty is applied to such traitors. He noted that in this respect the article states: "The death penalty will be applied only for treason against the Fatherland in the event of a foreign war."

Therefore, he said that attributing this expression to other situations would be "dangerous" and furthermore is not contemplated in the constitution. He clarified the fact that this did not mean they are in favor of terrorism but rather totally opposed to it, whether it be supported by the extreme right, left or center.

Therefore, he said that as a member of the Justice Committee he would propose in lieu of approving the draft legislation under discussion that the Criminal Code be changed to include a new crime, as a separate chapter, which would have the title of "Crime of Terrorism."

He said that it is more appropriate for terrorism to be punished by the Criminal Code rather than by a law to avoid distortion of the image of democracy which should be definitively institutionalized in the country. This, he added, is not to confuse democratic governments with military governments like that of Garcia Meza (Bolivia) who has already issued a decree law which declares "Bolivians traitors to the Fatherland."

After saying that terrorists should not even be called "human beings" because they endanger the lives of children and old people, he asserted that much thought should be given to this debate because bad authorities might mix honest politicians in violent actions. He said that there have been such cases in history.

'Sinchis' To Combat Terrorism

Lima LA PRENSA in Spanish 26 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] The intervention of "los Sinchis," an antisubversive police group in Peru, has been requested by the prefect of Ayacucho, the department hardest hit by an escalation of terrorism in the country.

The prefect, Marcelo Cavero, confirmed the capture of 170 leftists during a roundup and the arrest of four others, with dynamite charges, fuses and detonators in their possession.

Cavero said that although after the roundup apparent calm exists in Ayacucho, the presence of "Los Sinchis" could prevent repetition of acts of violence such as those experienced in the region in the past few days.

The "Los Sinchis" group was established by the previous government of the current president, Fernando Belaunde, when in 1975 there was an upsurge of guerrillas in the central sierra of Peru. Its personnel received special training from American instructors for the antisubversive fight.

In the meantime, leaders of the left have rejected draft legislation by the government which would label and punish those who commit acts of terrorism and sabotage as traitors to the Fatherland.

After stating that they condemn terrorism no matter what its political coloration may be, they said that they are also rejecting "the use of terrorism as a pretext for legalization of repression against the left."

Spokesmen for the left said that the law which "Popular Action" wants to have approved in parliament "is as draconian as the previous security law which was enacted by former dictator Manuel A. Odria" who governed Peru between 1948 and 1955.

Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa said that there is no justification for violence since the country has returned to democracy and reiterated that the government "will act with firmness and will bring to bear the full weight of the law" against those who attempt to create chaos and anarchy.

Invasions of Lands

The still unresolved problem of the invasion of the lands of cooperative enterprises by thousands of native villagers in Pasco Department is another critical front for President Fernando Belaunde's government.

Members of the cooperatives gave a new deadline of 48 hours, which expires tonight, Sunday, after which they will dislodge the invaders, in the event the police fail to do so.

According to reports from reliable sources, the bands in control of the lands have revolvers, rifles and dynamite.

A commission sent by the government is continuing to negotiate with the parties to reach a peaceful solution to the conflict created by the annexation of lands belonging to native communities by the cooperative enterprises which sprang up with the implementation of Agrarian Reform.

The villagers are maintaining that by invading the land they have done nothing more than recover what belongs to them and are showing yellowed deeds which date back to the time Peru was one of the principal Spanish vice royalties.

The government proposes to pass a new agricultural-livestock development law which, according to the plan, will define, among other things, the form and sphere of action of all the kinds of peasant organizations existing in the country.

However, the announcement of that law has been received with distrust by various peasant organizations which have expressed the fear that the present government is attempting "to distort or weaken" the achievements of Agrarian Reform.

The Agrarian Reform process which was implemented during the previous military regime awarded over 8 millions of hectares to some 380,000 peasant families out of a total of 9 million hectares of land affected.

The Federation of Agrarian Cooperatives for Sugar Production, with over 2,000 workers, said in its latest statement that if there is any change in the spirit of Agrarian Reform "it will take appropriate measures and actions" to defend it.

Rumors of Subversive Plot

Lima SUCESO in Spanish 26 Oct 80 p 2, Supp.

[Article by G.H.B.]

[Text] The various reports about the alleged existence of a subversive plot in the country, which seem to be supported by several acts of violence in different parts of the national territory for approximately the last 2 months, are gathering unusual strength with the arrest of almost 200 persons in Ayacucho alone, one of the most active focuses of actions by the extreme left in the country.

Six of those persons were caught practically red-handed just after a dynamite attack against the monument of Argentine army colonel Felix Cobado, in the Oval of Las Magdalenas in Ayacucho.

The six prisoners identified themselves as members of the leftist group known as Sendero Luminoso [Illuminated Path]--the same group which is claiming responsibility for almost all the acts of terrorism which have occurred in the country. At the time of their arrest, the Ayacucho Civil Guard confiscated from them firearms, sticks of dynamite, detonators, a metal-detector and the layouts of places where they had decided to plant explosives.

An additional 170 prisoners are now making statements about the blowing up of the doors of public places in Huamanga and Huanta, which took place last Tuesday during the early morning hours.

On this subject, Marciano Cavero, prefect of Ayacucho Department, said, "Evidently they want to hamper the municipal elections just as they did the general elections in May 1980." However, few persons believe that this is the terrorists' objective. People in the streets and plazas are saying that what is doubtless happening is the first step of a great subversive escalation.

Some time ago, Interior Minister Dr Jose Maria de la Jara y Ureta, denied the existence of a plot of this kind in the country and repeatedly described the destructive acts as isolated cases of little importance.

A few days ago, on the other hand, the president of the Council of Ministers, Dr Manuel Ulloa Elias, said, "The government is united behind the plan presented by Dr Javier Alva Orlandini, second vice president of the republic and national senator, who proposes to declare the perpetrators of acts of terrorism traitors to the Fatherland. This will also protect the rights of the agrarian cooperatives whose lands have been invaded."

He added that the draft legislation "reflects the government's firm intention of preventing the propagation of acts of violence and terrorism" and of severely punishing their perpetrators.

Pasco, Huancavelka, Ayacucho, Ancash and Huancayo are some of the departments in which terrorist acts have taken place repeatedly; and it can be said that if there are terrorist acts in the country but not a subversive plot, the difference, or better yet the distinction, between those acts and this possible plot must be so small that only the experts can detect it.

APRA SENATOR REVIEWS ADMINISTRATION'S FIRST THREE MONTHS IN POWER

Lima LA PRENSA in Spanish 27 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Bernardino Julian A.: "'Ninety Days of Democracy Have Gone Very Well,' Sanchez Says"]

[Text] Yesterday Senator Luis Alberto Sanchez evaluated the country's 90 days of constitutional life which have gone, he says, "much better than I thought they would."

Answering reporters questions, the senator said that his party, APRA [American Revolutionary Popular Alliance], without renouncing its ideological position, will continue to collaborate with the government's initiatives on everything that serves national interests and benefits the people.

He announced that tomorrow, Tuesday, the Senate will complete the modifications on the bill--already passed in the Chamber of Deputies--regarding 120 days of legislative authority for the executive to solve the problem of the newspapers, radio and television. The senator, who is president of the Constitution Committee which is in charge of this matter, said that the bill is much shorter than the one passed in the Chamber of Deputies and makes no reference at all to the aspect of compensation to those media for confiscation.

In answer to another question, Sanchez said that it was not necessary to pay any homage to MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left] warrior Dr Luis de la Puente y Uceda, formerly an APRA member, who died in Cuzco.

The mass for the health of the senator, who just turned 80, had just ended when reporters asked his opinion on the country's 90 days of constitutional life and specifically on the work of the Legislature. "These 90 days of democracy seem very good to me, much better than I thought they would be," Sanchez replied.

He added that in Parliament's case, "these 3 months (of work) have been good, after 12 years with inexperienced people and even having to make regulations (to guide the debates in the houses). Sincerely, the work has been fruitful, at least in the Senate."

Collaboration

He was asked if his party, APRA, would continue to collaborate with the government in Parliament, and he answered: "APRA will continue collaborating in Parliament with everything that serves national interests, whether or not they are government initiatives."

"Wouldn't that mean a renouncement of the party's own principles?" another asked.

Sanchez quickly replied: "There is no renouncement when it is a matter of doing good for the country and the people."

Newspapers

Asked about how the Senate bill on legislative authority to solve the problem of the newspapers, radio and television was progressing, the senator said: "I suppose that all modifications (of the bill) will be presented Tuesday (tomorrow). However, it is much shorter than the one passed in the Chamber of Deputies." When reporters pressed about what was involved in the shortening, he answered: "We do not speak specifically about compensation (for confiscation), but leave (the executive) completely free and set no limits on it. We also considered the rights of the owners, workers and labor communities."

He added that for this there had been a consensus of AP [Popular Action], APRA and PPC [Popular Christian Party] representatives.

De la Puente

A short time ago, the leftist contingent in the Senate paid homage to deceased guerrilla leader Dr Luis de la Puente Uceda, former APRA member and active MIR member at the time of his death.

However, when pursuant to the Left's gesture, Senator Ramiro Priale spoke about de la Puente's life, Senator Sanchez left the area, obviously disapproving of the homage. Thus he was asked yesterday:

"You were not in favor of the homage to de la Puente?" Sanchez quickly answered: "I do not think it is necessary." When the reporter again asked why, the senator replied: "Because I do not see why it is necessary to pay him homage." Another colleague persisted: "But he was an APRA member." "He had been, but he was not any longer," the senator responded.

EDITORIAL, OTHER COMMENT ON REAGAN ELECTION VICTORY

Carter Rejected

Montevideo LA MANANA in Spanish 9 Nov 80 p 6

[Editorial: "President Reagan"]

[Text] Defying the predictions of a close race by the best-known polls and interrupting one of the most stubborn traditions in American politics, the reelection of an incumbent president, former actor and former California Governor Ronald Reagan defeated the current resident of the White House, James Earl Carter, by a landslide, winning almost 10 times as many electoral votes as Carter, and culminated an unusual and controversial political career with his spectacular victory on Tuesday.

It is not hard to discern the reasons for the unexpected outcome, which confirms another tradition in the history of U.S. elections: the regular swing of the political pendulum whereby a more or less liberal-minded president is followed by one with clearly conservative views. Basically, it would perhaps not be too bold to state that the election results reflect more of a resounding rejection of the outgoing chief executive than a clear-cut acceptance of Reagan, whose image is, to be sure, not totally convincing.

Two years ago, when American voters voted in the mid-term elections for the House and some Senate seats, the Democratic Party repeated its comfortable 1976 triumph and confirmed its wide majority, which was often intractable and balky, for the former peanut farmer. We said at the time that Carter, whose presidential image had already been seriously eroded, could not claim responsibility for the victory, which was basically due to a sort of political immobility prompted by the lack of clear and attractive options. But from that point on, the president's growing image of indecisiveness and incompetence became more deeply rooted and irreversible, while the problems that he had to grapple with as chief executive became more acute, pressing and complex. He was unable to smooth out the economic, financial and social vicissitudes that the international economic situation was causing his nation; he was unable to maintain the cohesiveness of the Western alliance, whose ties were becoming increasingly loose and fraught with apprehensions and touchiness, and over and over again he lost ground in dealing with Bolshevism's aggressive policy of world expansion, thus damaging the prestige and trustworthiness of the United States in the eyes of other countries.

On Tuesday, the voters took the opportunity to cast their ballots for a candidate whose suitability for the job is still a question mark (it could hinge greatly on his future staff of conservative advisers) and who ran an election campaign based on simple, but precise and categorical premises marked by authority, strength and even chauvinism in dealing with domestic problems and international issues.

The new Republican administration will undoubtedly bring about in-depth changes that will affect Americans and non-Americans alike. But no one can be certain about the results that such changes will yield. No one can tell whether at home the United States will be able to alleviate the problems of inflation, unemployment, economic recession, budget and balance of payments deficits, racial discrimination, social violence, deteriorating public services, an overblown bureaucracy and the bankruptcy of social services. Nor can anyone wager whether the foreign policy of the Grand Old Party will restore the United States' image as an invulnerable, first-line world power, whether international tensions will wane or be heightened to dangerous levels, whether the human rights issue will be handled more objectively and consistently or whether Latin America can or cannot expect the friendly, supportive and generous treatment that it has vainly been waiting for from Washington for decades.

But aside from these question marks, which only time will be able to erase, the major valid moral of Tuesday's election is the reaffirmation of a nation's unwavering devotion to democracy, expressed without gaps for more than 200 years, under the same constitution (with some amendments to keep it in step with the times) that the founding fathers signed, a nation that has been able to live, fight and thrive under a system that in practice has been invariably bipartisan and that has operated with exemplary smoothness and normal efficiency without the need for strict standards of discipline.

Main Election Issues Outlined

Montevideo LA MANANA in Spanish 7 Nov 80 p 6

[Editorial: "The Defeat of Carter"]

[Text] There is not the slightest doubt that the U.S. presidential election was one of "punishment." The unexpected landslide for Ronald Reagan was not so much a show of enthusiasm for him or an acceptance of his conservative ideas as a clear-cut, categorical vote of censure for Jimmy Carter and his foreign and domestic policies.

Uncertainties prior to the election and the indecisive results of polls proved that voters were vacillating and unsure of the merits of the two candidates, but at the moment of truth most Americans opted for a change, regardless of its consequences.

The reasons for their decision are not at all mysterious. The American people want a strong leader capable of upholding U.S. prestige in the world. The unfortunate issue of the hostages in Tehran and the tragic failure of the rescue attempt symbolized the loss of U.S. authority in the world more than anything else.

Contrary to what a number of analysts believed, the negotiations for the release of the hostages hurt, rather than helped the president. By setting four conditions, three of them virtually unacceptable, the Iranian Government again placed the United States in an extremely difficult situation. Once again the irascible Iranians decided to inflict another humiliation on the Americans, and as a reaction, the latter elected a president who might stand up to them firmly and vigorously.

But if relations with Iran and the hostage problem were the main foreign policy issue, they were not the only one. The American public was clearly tired of hearing bad news about the increase in Soviet military might and influence in the world, while American power seemed to be shrinking in an increasingly hostile world. Their election of Reagan was clearly an assertion of faith in the United States' role as the leader of the free world and an expression of the desire not to fall behind the Soviet Union in the geopolitical struggle for influence in the world.

America's domestic problems unquestionably also played a decisive role in Carter's defeat; in fact, more people probably voted for Reagan on domestic policy grounds than for foreign policy reasons. The two major problems in the eyes of the electorate were inflation and unemployment, which were symptomatic of economic leadership that was unable to halt a continued downward slide. But there were other problems that also stemmed from the absence of clear-cut policies: the vacillations in the field of energy, the inability to pursue a social policy for the minorities, especially blacks, and the absence of clear-cut programs to solve the economic impasse.

Carter's defeat marks the end of an era. In electing Ronald Reagan, the American people have moved boldly by choosing a traditional politician in a world that is less "traditional" and more intractable every day. We do not know whether Reagan's simple answers will suffice in grappling with mankind's complex problems in our times.

But for the time being the United States and its people have gained a clear advantage with this election. Its enemies in the four corners of the globe will have to reformulate their entire strategy and decide whether what they could take the liberty of doing under Carter they can continue doing under Reagan.

Election Process Praised

Montevideo EL PAIS in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 2

[Editorial: "The American Elections"]

[Text] Reagan's victory should surprise no one. Prior forecasts were beyond any margin of error. Thirty years ago, the polls pointed to a Dewey triumph, but the election went to Truman. Methods of canvassing public opinion have become more sophisticated over the last three decades, as computers have been brought into play, and because of the competition in interpreting electoral trends, there has been an amazing increase in the number of surveys. Thus, for months now, with one or two exceptions, the hundreds of polls have been monotonously pointing to the winner. The percentages have varied, but the final outcome has been the same. The landslide for Reagan did, of course, exceed final day estimates, but it merely reinforced the ongoing trend.

What was it that lifted the former California governor to the fore and what brought Carter down?

With hindsight, historians will be able to discern various factors that might escape time-pressed journalists. The incumbent president's prestige was pierced by many arrows: inflation, mounting joblessness, the falling value of the dollar, the various indicators of economic mismanagement, his inability to get along with Congress, in which he theoretically had a majority but which recast his major bills, such as the one aimed at overcoming the energy crisis. But above all it was the damage to the United States' role as the leader of a free world faced with the most difficult dilemmas. Not only did the communist tide paint more nations Red on the map of the world (Angola, Nicaragua and Ethiopia) through the brazen intervention of its satellites, but Russia itself self-assuredly took over Afghanistan as well. Reactions against the imperialist invasion, such as the grain embargo, harmed the United States itself, and while the onslaught moved forward, the military gap narrowed until the Soviets gained superiority, as Nixon points out in his illuminating book. "Unarmed prophets shall perish," goes one of Machiavelli's maxims, not all of which are invalid just because the Florentine said them. This one is an irrefutable truth. And as the final development in this decline there was the hostage episode: never has a powerful nation had to undergo a more bitter affliction of insult, revilement and frustration. The upshot, as we said on Sunday, was the deterioration of the U.S. image in the eyes of its friends and enemies.

And just as Carter, the man with the evangelical halo who guaranteed honesty of word and spirit in contrast to the deception and double-dealing of Watergate, drew the voters to him, Reagan's rhetoric, centering on the need to return the United States to its rank of world leader, has attracted the ballots on this occasion. Yesterday, public opinion favored the man who symbolized faultless conduct; today, it has favored the man who reflects firmness in contrast to vacillation and who has offered a direction and a course in contrast to the man who seemed to be navigating between indecision and doubt.

But how many facets of this election there are to underscore! How splendid this electoral contest was! How it projects, irrepressible and vigorous, the traits of a democracy, which despite its errors and shortcomings is still the only system compatible with human dignity!

Freedom of speech, and the people themselves dictate the standards of prudence. When in the heat of the campaign Carter went too far in finding fault with his opponent, he immediately realized that his affront clashed with how the citizenry felt and he had to correct himself and apologize. But the damage was done, and he lost votes.

Freedom for the mass media, with admirable sensitivity to their demands. One of Mr Reagan's advisers, Mr Allen, was charged with involvement in certain improper deals, an accusation that was immediately followed by his resignation.

The laws of a democracy demand the neutrality of the government at stake. Even though one of the contenders was the president himself, no one in his opponent's camp ever rose up to protest an arbitrary move, report an instance of coercion or point to the exercise of improper influence! Hence, we should not be surprised by the rise of the opposition party and the weakness of the one in power. The standards of parity were respected to such an extent that on television, for example, the candidates were assigned equal time spots, and the major networks could not show movies that starred Reagan because they were considered publicity that would have to be included in the Republican's time allotment.

The denouement was also in keeping with the grandeur of the process, as Carter rose above the grief of the election returns to congratulate his successor and offer him his full support.

Fundamental changes in U.S. policy? We think that they will be reflected more in the new administration's attitude than in its directives. Private enterprise will be given more latitude. The activities of the paternalistic state will be curtailed. Excessively indulgent treatment will be put aside. And the United States will seek to regain its status as the undisputed helmsman of the free world. Of course all of this will be in keeping with a tradition that will remain unchanged because not even the passage of 200 years has managed to dent it. We are talking about the tradition of belief in freedom, of respect for the rulings of judges, of adherence to the sovereignty of the law, of the separation of powers, of respect for human rights, of the ones that Jefferson talked about in the Declaration of Independence and that in the midst of the last world war Roosevelt raised up like a flag that united wills on a tormented globe.

Let us hope that the new U.S. president lends a new vigor to American policy, that it carries a challenge that will shake up the present-day generations and, as Laski wanted, wake up the crusader in every man! It is the world, not just the United States, that needs this.

Hope for Improved Relations

Montevideo LA MANANA in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] State adviser Dr Federico Garcia Capurro told LA MANANA last night that "when a person is faced with something that he is not familiar with, he has hopes," adding that "any change that might improve our relations with the United States is welcome." The member of the legislative branch made these comments after midnight, when Republican candidate Ronald Reagan's victory was considered certain.

Dr Garcia Capurro began by noting that "my impression is based mainly on Uruguay's interests. To me, the United States is the leader of the Western democracies, and lately we have had a number of misunderstandings with that leader that have altered the traditional relations between the United States and Uruguay from 1830 to the present. So, any change that could improve our relations with the United States is welcome.

When asked then whether he thought the new government might enhance our relations with the United States, Garcia Capurro said that "it would be very offensive for me to quote an old Spanish refrain having to do with what one is and is not familiar with, but undoubtedly when one is faced with something that he is not familiar with, he has hopes."

Hostages and the USSR

In conclusion, in answer to the question of whether Reagan's policy towards the USSR and the problem of the American hostages in Iran might achieve better results than the Carter administration has had, he pointed out that "we are one of the Western nations, whose leader is the United States. What interests me first is U.S.-Uruguay relations. Then, I hope that the United States, with its wisdom and knowledge, can seek solutions to all of the problems that you have brought up, but the first main thing is for us to continue our age-old understanding with the United States without any disturbances."

No Major Change Expected

Montevideo LA MANANA in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] The minister of industry and energy, Francisco D. Tourreilles, has asserted that a change in administrations in the United States will surely not bring major changes in its policy towards Latin America. He also stated that the constitution that will be put to a plebiscite at the end of the month in our country is superior to the one that currently governs the United States, inasmuch as it gives the elected president a majority in the legislative houses.

Tourreilles spoke with newsmen as the first major election returns were coming in from the United States.

Our Constitution Is Better

"Logically, this is a problem that is up to the people of the United States, and faithful to my doctrine of not getting involved in the affairs of other nations, it is not up to me to voice an opinion," Tourreilles asserted. "But I would like to mention to you that if Reagan does win, his Executive Branch will be up against a Legislative Branch with a Democratic Party majority. This is a situation in which it will be hard to have a government in which the Executive Branch can function as it should. Such a situation," he went on to say, "cannot happen under the new constitution that we have just approved and that will be submitted to a plebiscite of the people, because under the draft constitution the Executive Branch, the president, will have his party in the majority in the legislature. I should point out in this regard that I feel that the constitution we are submitting for the approval of the Uruguayan people is superior to the constitution governing the United States."

No Major Changes for Latin America

Tourreilles pointed out that in the event that Reagan wins, U.S. policy towards Latin America would change very little. "I think that U.S. policy is obviously determined to a certain extent by the Executive Branch, but since a series of factors are involved, the Legislative Branch among others, as well as the bureaucratic machinery of the State Department, which we know is very strong and has very clear-cut ideas, I think that a Reagan presidency is going to alter U.S. relations with Latin America very little. And if it changes at all, it will be for the better. In other words, I think that a Reagan victory can only lead to favorable developments, and therefore without interfering in what is the decision of the American people, we have to tackle the problem with the same high-mindedness, with the same independence and with the same determination with which we have always tackled it. We have our position and we have to defend it on the basis of the convictions with which we uphold our ideology and our political philosophy vis-a-vis any administration, be it Democratic or Republican," he concluded.

Difficult Situation Foreseen

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 6

[Text] Dr Maximo Gurmendez said early this morning that he foresees "a difficult situation in Reagan's relations with Latin America because in prior statements the candidate said that they would have to be reassessed."

Dr Gurmendez, a member of the Commission of the Six of the Colorado Party, made his remarks when it was announced that Reagan was 10 electoral votes away from becoming president of the United States.

In a talk with EL DIA, he asserted that the international juncture that Carter had to grapple with "was tremendously difficult, which gave rise to Republican election hopes that dictated the success of a man like Reagan."

He asserted that the Republican candidate's victory cannot be compared with Carter's 4 years ago when there was a crisis of values.

He attached particular importance to the international situation, basically "the war in the Middle East, the consequences of which are unpredictable today."

Dr Gurmendez asserted that in bringing up foreign policy, he was not just thinking about the hostages in Iran; he was also talking about a series of fronts that pose very touchy situations.

Referring to the U.S. Government's future relations with Latin America, he placed special emphasis on the fact that "prior statements do not permit a precise assessment."

He asserted, nevertheless, that "in keeping with the political philosophy of the Republican Party and the statements by the candidate himself, relations with the subcontinent will be reassessed."

Democratic Awakening

Dr Gurmendez had been monitoring from early on the electoral count developments in the United States at the center that was specially set up at the Uruguayan-U.S. Cultural Alliance.

Describing the juncture at which Ronald Reagan would become president of the United States, he said that it is "a moment when a democratic awakening is taking place in Latin America."

He considered it difficult "to guess at the assessment that the president-elect would make" of the current situation on the subcontinent, adding that "we know that the talk about human rights in the United States has not only been the banner of Carter and the Congress."

He said that "this policy has not just come about lately; it has a prior origin and it is a demand of the American people because of the country's internal situation."

He felt that the policy has been projected as "the American people's standard of morality and political-electoral conduct, which is why I have described it as a demand by the people, not as a government-imposed policy."

Dr Gurmendez said in conclusion that the American people's awareness of human rights issues has been reflected recently in connection with "labor conflicts, especially the strike in Poland."

Dr Maximo Gurmendez was one of the many leading figures that the U.S. Embassy in Uruguay invited specially to follow the vote-count at the Artigas-Washington Library.

Reagan Team More Competent

Montevideo LA MANANA in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] Voicing very cautious assessments as to what might happen under a Reagan presidency, the president of the Central Bank emphasized that his election platform was marked by quite a bit of compromise and could not be judged in itself because other factors are involved. In any case, Mr Jose Gil Diaz indicated that the Reagan team would seem to be more competent.

He said that he was at the Uruguay-U.S. Cultural Alliance as just another observer of an election that was not preceeded by a brilliant political campaign, adding that perhaps the candidates were not brilliant.

"But it was an event characteristic of American democracy, and many people took part, and to a certain extent it foreshadows all of the problems that modern democracies are to have," Gil Diaz noted.

He stressed that it was a great event and a day of rejoicing for the United States, although only Americans could vote, and everyone is very interested and concerned about what happens in that country.

With regard to the interests of our area and the election's impact on them, he said that his opinion was very much his own and that he was not all that interested in U.S. policy towards Latin America; what ought to interest our region, he said, is a strong West, which is the case when the United States is strong.

"In my area, what interests me is for the United States to have trade, fiscal and monetary policies that bolster economic freedom."

He underscored that Carter's policies in this regard were contradictory and that the international monetary system was weakened, which can be seen in the weakening of Western currencies.

Closer Relations Seen

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 14

[Excerpt] Closer Relations

Finally, the Interior Minister discussed the results of the U.S. elections, pointing out that if Reagan "does some of the things that he has talked about in previous statements, there might be closer relations between our peoples, as there used to be in the past, because for various reasons they have drifted apart."

He then added that "words are often spoken just to be heard. Let's hope that they become actions.

"I do not think that Reagan's victory can have any sort of repercussions on our country. The new administration and the new president will have to continue the avenues of trade that this nation has always had, and small nations like Uruguay will go along with them individually."

When asked in conclusion about possible changes in policy towards the Latin American region, Gen Manuel J. Nunez stated that "if he does some of the things that he has talked about in prior statements about the system of government that he is going to establish, there might be, because in that event there would be changes in the methods of governing the country."

RELATIVES OF MISSING PERSONS DEMAND INFORMATION

Bar Association Aid Asked

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 28 Oct 80 p 10

[Text] Rio--For the first time since 1973, when the present military government of Uruguay was installed, relatives of the country's persecuted politicians decided to assemble to denounce to the world the disappearance of 133 citizens, including 12 children, arrested or kidnaped by the forces of repression of that country. The group called the Group of Relatives of Missing Uruguayans began its activities in Rio yesterday with a series of depositions given to the president of the Brazilian Bar Association (OAB), Eduardo Seabra Fagundes. The participation of the OAB was requested by various international organizations for defense of human rights and will limit itself to gathering the depositions, which will be forwarded to the Task Force on Missing Uruguayans of the UN Human Rights Commission. Uruguay does not permit the entrance of UN representatives to investigate those cases.

Four mothers of kidnaped persons yesterday gave their depositions to the president of the OAB, including Maria del Carmen Almeida Quinteros, whose daughter Helena was kidnaped inside the Venezuelan Embassy in 1976. The case resulted in the breaking of diplomatic relations between the two countries. All four mothers declared that, despite every effort, they have been unable to locate their children. In addition to those four persons, 32 representatives of families of missing Uruguayans are in Porto Alegre and will be heard by the local branch of the OAB, and their depositions will be forwarded to the United Nations. The travel of those people to Brazil was shrouded in absolute secrecy so that there would not be any hindrance by the Montevideo government.

Brazilians Sign Petition

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 1 Nov 80 p 8

[Text] Sao Paulo--A list asking for information about the whereabouts of 13 Uruguayans, missing on various occasions in Uruguay as well as Argentina and Paraguay, was handed over yesterday to the Uruguayan consul in Sao Paulo, Augustin Ortega, along with a petition by Sao Paulo congressmen, union leaders and students.

On receiving the document prepared by the Association of Relatives of Uruguayan Missing Persons with headquarters in Paris, the consul promised to forward it along with the petition to the embassy in Brasilia without guaranteeing a reply. He declared, however, that all prisoners in Uruguay are being tried and that the country is now going through a process of democratic institutionalization which assures "the return to normal rules" shortly.

According to the association, in the 13 cases cited in the list, the participation of the Uruguayan police or military "as well as the participation of the repressive forces of Argentina and Paraguay, in some cases," has been confirmed. The number of missing persons in Uruguay totals 135, according to the association.

DEMOCRATIC CONVERGENCE SEEKS BRAZILIAN SUPPORT

Opposition Leaders Visit Brazil

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 22 Oct 80 p 6

[Text] In the first visit to Brazil by leaders of the Democratic Convergence of Uruguay--which includes most of the forces opposed to the regime--the chairman of the group, Juan Ferreyra, and one of its leaders, Diego Archard, are asking Brazilian democratic forces for "concrete solidarity" in the struggle against the Uruguayan dictatorship. One of the forms of that solidarity is the participation of Brazilian groups in the International Commission for Democracy in Uruguay to be created in Washington next month, that is, on the eve of the plebiscite convened by the Uruguayan military for 30 November.

The Convergence also wants the Brazilian democratic forces to approach the government to help support a vote by the Foreign Ministry in favor of the report prepared by the Inter-American Commission on Human rights, which represents "a strong condemnation of the timetable set by the dictatorship," according to Diego Achard. The report will be submitted to the OAS General Assembly which is to meet in November, also in Washington. The excerpts already published consider the implementation of the timetable, consisting of two stages--the constitutional plebiscite in November, and the presidential election with a single candidate in 1981--a massive violation of human rights.

Juan Ferreyra, who is the son of former Senator Wilson Ferreyra Aldunate, the principal Uruguayan political leader, declared that "the government has already been defeated in the plebiscite regardless of the figures that may be made public, because that consultation was a factor of internal mobilization that changed the correlation of forces in relation to the dictatorship." In addition, said the Convergence leader, the referendum also has not achieved its other objective, that of "cleansing the regime's international image."

Ferreyra recognizes, however, that that political defeat does not mean the end of the dictatorship. "It is a first battle," declared the Convergence leader, who mentioned another important factor generated by the convocation of the plebiscite: "If the dictatorship chooses to hide the real figures, as it appears it is going to do, that will not prevent the real result of the voting from becoming known within the armed forces."

The two Uruguayan opposition leaders make it a point to distinguish the military men who became directly involved in repression from the armed forces as a whole, but Ferreyra clearly indicated the alternative that is set before the military: "Either they understand that it is inevitable to return the destiny of the nation to the hands of the people, or they risk suffering the natural consequences that befall the armies that are defeated by their own people."

The Uruguayan leaders arrived in Sao Paulo on Monday. They have already talked informally with Ulysses Guimaraes, president of the Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMDB), and the day before yesterday they saw Dom Jose Thurner, representative of Dom Paulo Evaristo Arns, and the members of the Justice and Peace Commission. They have explained to everyone, especially reporters, that "the solidarity that comes from Brazil has much more influence than that of other countries because of its proximity and the influence Brazil has in Uruguay."

Support for Uruguayan Opposition

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 23 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] The chairman of the Democratic Convergence of Uruguay, Juan Ferreyra, yesterday obtained the support of all Brazilian opposition parties for the condemnation of the "election farce" in his country.

Ferreyra and Diego Achard, who is also a member of Democratic Convergence, talked to the presidents of the PMDB, Deputy Ulysses Guimaraes, of the Popular Party (PP), Senator Tancredo Neves, and of the Workers Party (PT), Luis Inacio da Silva.

They are to meet today in Rio with the president of the Democratic Labor Party (PDT), Leonel Brizola. Ulysses revealed that a formal condemnation of the Uruguayan political process will be studied at the next meeting of the leadership of his party.

"By the fact that we are also suffering a lack of freedom," said Ulysses, "our solidarity bears the meaning of our struggle, of our existence under authoritarianism."

The president of the PMDB said that "the problem of freedom, of democracy, is indivisible. When there are problems, restrictions in Uruguay, in Argentina, in Bolivia or in Chile, they impinge on Brazil.

"Our struggle for freedom, therefore, must be a common one. After all, democracy is a heritage of mankind. The Uruguayan democrats, therefore, have our solidarity," said Ulysses.

Other Support

Brasilia CORREIO BRAZILIENSE in Portuguese 29 Oct 80 p 7

[Text] The leaders of the Brazilian opposition yesterday expressed their solidarity with the Democratic Convergence of Uruguay, denouncing the farce of the plebiscite that will be held on 30 November to approve the country's new constitution.

Deputies Freitas Nobre, PMDB leader, and Thales Ramalho, PP leader; and Alceu Collares and Airton Soares, PDT and PT leaders, respectively, related the attempt to legitimize the Uruguayan dictatorship to others that have occurred in the Southern Cone, where "the conservative forces allied with the large international economic groups seek to institutionalize themselves in power."

The document states that: "Once again, in this process also, the "Brazilian model" seems to serve as an inspiration and pattern. The slow, sure and gradual opening advocated by General Geisel when he occupied the presidency of the republic, now consumed in the relative democracy farce supported by the residual authoritarian regime, was followed by General Pinochet's plebiscite, the announcement of the "Argentine opening," and now the attempt to legitimize the Uruguayan dictatorship."

Taking advantage of the visit to congress by Juan Ferreyra and Diego Achard, leaders of the Democratic Convergence of Uruguay, the deputies condemned the attitude of the military in that country when they established an "opening" timetable without any consultation with the citizens. They also consider it absurd to convoke the Uruguayan nation to express itself at the ballot-box on the government's proposal for a "democracy" when everyone is aware of the reports of the Red Cross and Amnesty International concerning the human rights situation in the country.

"There are still thousands of citizens banished, thousands in exile, thousands suffering the worst horrors in prisons such as Punta Rieles, where the Brazilian Flavia Schilling suffered for years. There is no freedom of speech or any freedom of association. There does not exist the minimum climate for holding elections in Uruguay. In this climate of repression and terror, the Uruguayan regime is preparing its plebiscite with the expectation of afterwards conducting a directed election process which will do nothing but confirm the rule of intimidation," declared the opposition deputies, expressing their criticism.

In this context, the Brazilian opposition reinforces the proposal of the Democratic Convergence, which calls on Uruguayan citizens to vote "No" in the November plebiscite "pointing out that the democratic forces will pursue the struggle by all legitimate means for the reestablishment of democracy in the Oriental Republic of Uruguay."

COUNTRY SAID TO HAVE LOWEST ILLITERACY RATE IN LATIN AMERICA

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 19 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 13

[Article by Claudio Paolillo]

[Text] Uruguay has the smallest percentage of illiterates in Latin America, according to a report published in LA EDUCACION, an inter-American educational development magazine.

The article by Professor Ruth Verdejo de Northland, entitled "Atlas of Education Shortfalls in Latin America," establishes that there are 137,700 illiterates in Uruguay, according to the last census, conducted in 1975.

According to the magazine, the percentage of illiterates in Latin America stands at 20.7, which represents almost 35.7 million people.

In Uruguay the percentage is 5.7, with Argentina next in line with 7.1 percent and 1.3 million illiterates.

According to Professor Verdejo de Northland, "over the last 20 years there have been persistent, major gaps in providing schooling for children and youths, in spite of the significant efforts that countries have made."

"Extraordinary and intensive action is required over the next few years to carry out development programs aimed at the masses who have not been incorporated into the educational systems in our countries, in order to overcome the tragic economic, social and cultural situation of millions of persons in the region," she notes.

A table listing the percentage of illiterates in each Latin American country shows a wide gap between the nations with the highest and lowest illiteracy rates.

In this connection, while Uruguay has an illiteracy rate of 5.7 percent for the entire country, more than half of Guatemalans over age 10 (51.8 percent) do not know how to read and write.

Professor Verdejo de Northland says that over the last 20 years "problems have arisen and intensified in the field of education, prompted by the high demographic growth rate in a number of countries and by the explosion of knowledge from the rapid pace of scientific and technological innovation in the developed countries."

The challenge posed by the status quo in education in Latin America means that we have to identify and quantify the segments of society and population groups that have to be attended to most urgently.

A quick look at the table below is enough to grasp the gravity of the situation; more than one-fifth of Latin Americans over age 10 are completely illiterate.

Another obvious fact is that in almost all of the countries with the highest illiteracy rates, there have recently been major social upheavals, and in some cases they are still taking place.

Such are the cases of Guatemala, El Salvador, Bolivia, Honduras and Nicaragua, to cite examples of countries with the highest illiteracy rates.

Professor Veredjo de Northland asserts that "in connection with illiterates, their status is still considered of far-reaching significance because they constitute a group of individuals with a below-minimum level of schooling, which makes it difficult for them to participate in society."

Uruguay, followed by Argentina, Costa Rica and Chile, can be taken as exceptions in relation to literacy in Latin America, although it is impossible to predict future developments.

Keeping this in mind, we would be hard-pressed to ignore this assertion of Professor Verdejo: "Illiteracy and poverty are still closely linked and are to be found where political and social inequalities exist."

WHEAT CROP IN EXCESS OF 250,000 TONS ANTICIPATED

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 17

[Interview with Agriculture and Fishing Minister Juan Carlos Cassou at the La Moras industrial plant; date not given]

[Text] Agriculture and Fishing Minister Juan Carlos Cassou, an agronomist, yesterday estimated the wheat harvest at over 250,000 tons. He also stressed that his ministry would have reserves of 170,000 to 180,000 tons for the next harvest inasmuch as industrial demand was down, adding that it is now looking into an operational arrangement for storage capacity. He disclosed that he would soon submit his position on wheat marketing to the economic team.

Cassou, whom EL DIA interviewed at the Las Moras industrial plant, said that the return of the banks to the livestock fairs "is being handled at high levels." With regard to the EEC's announcement that it has met its meat import needs for 1981, he said that "conditions remain unchanged." The following is the interview with the minister:

[Question] What new developments have taken place in the meat business?

[Answer] The new developments are that we are still exporting at a good pace and producing fattened cattle at a very good pace, which is what basically matters to the country. So then, cattle production and exports are at good levels. I don't have the dollar figures at the moment, but at this point we are practcally above the past decade's levels, which I think is a very significant development.

[Question] The Rural Federation has in recent hours questioned a meat deal that was made overseas. Was it profitable for our country?

[Answer] You know that all meat deals operate around international prices. In the case of Egypt there was an open bidding and then a "run-off," a second bidding. In this case it was a private firm, which runs all of the risks that are inherent in the various dealings involved. Therefore, the prices are the ones that the bidder feels he can offer at the moment in light of the world price, but he must later have available the raw material to carry out the transaction.

[Question] Two speeches were delivered here today that contained a number of claims by the owners of the firm, as well as some comments by the president of the Rural Association. We would like to know your opinion of these speeches and the measures they call for.

[Answer] I think that the president of Macer, S.A. delivered a very well-reasoned address, stressing basically that today's problems are problems of growth pains. Such comments are very important because these results are based on the measures taken in 1978 and because freedom in the marketplace always brings a number of problems.

This also goes for the participation of slaughterhouses in helping exports. You know about the ruling that the Executive Branch submitted to the Council of State, and thus it is now up to the council to issue the law to remove the elements working against the involvement of the slaughterhouses in exports. Once the Council of State passes the bill that the Executive Branch sent it, the Agriculture Ministry will quickly implement the elements needed for the slaughterhouses to get involved in exports.

Mission to Egypt

[Question] What about the mission that visited Egypt and the EEC?

[Answer] Well, we have no new developments to report, because it has just recently arrived in Egypt, and we have not yet had reports from it as to whether it has begun formal talks with the Supply Ministry, basically, which is the official Egyptian purchasing agency.

[Question] There is concern in the coastal region over a number of tons of wheat that have not yet been marketed.

[Answer] What I can basically tell you in this connection has to do with the overall wheat picture. You know that for the upcoming harvest the ministry is going to have reserves of 170,000 or 180,000 tons because there has been a drop in the industrial consumption of wheat. In this regard, we are arranging things for future marketing, and a number of regions in the country obviously have a lot of wheat in warehouses, but the reserves are owned by the Agriculture Ministry. We are looking into a way to get this wheat ready for the future harvest so that we can take normal advantage of our warehouse capacity for the upcoming harvest. I don't think that we are going to have any snags. Operations are going to be normal, and our studies are quite far along, almost completed. So, I can tell you that in just a few days we will be submitting to the economic team our position on the upcoming wheat sales and on mobilizing our wheat reserves.

We estimate that the upcoming harvest will be around 250,000 tons. These are just estimates, however, because you find out about the harvest when the wheat is in the bushel.

[Question] We received official information from the EEC in Brussels that the community has totally covered its meat import needs for 1981. Thus, it will be buying only special cuts and the already contracted for mutton from Uruguay. Will this bring changes in the official meat marketing policy?

[Answer] I don't see any problem so far with what you have pointed out, inasmuch as we know that Uruguay markets only special cuts in the EEC. In other words, Uruguay has been granted a quota of 1,000 tons pursuant to negotiations, and aside from that there are all of the clauses connected with GATT and the EEC itself. I don't think that the EEC is going to be reluctant to take in the amounts that Uruguay normally markets. As far as mutton is concerned, the last agreement with the EEC stipulated 5,100 tons, but Uruguay has obviously never reached that level in the marketplace. So it is my understanding that conditions remain unchanged.

A Developing Common Front

[Question] What about the agreement that Uruguay and Brazil are trying to hammer out and that Argentina, Paraguay and Colombia will reportedly join, thus setting up a single meat marketing front? Is it beneficial?

[Answer] This is a longstanding idea that has always been talked about in terms of setting up a Latin American common market. Now, the new constitution of the Latin American Integration Association is going to allow a much quicker and more effective form of integration for the various countries in the area. So then, this quicker form of integration will enable the countries you have mentioned to undertake joint action vis-a-vis already existing blocs, such as the European Economic Community.

BRIEFS

ELIMINATION OF PRISONERS--The Justice and Human Rights Movement of Porto Alegre yesterday charged that there was a plan to eliminate the 64 political prisoners in Uruguay who are in Libertad prison. According to the chairman of the group, Jair Krischke, 43 prisoners have already been removed from their cells to a place called "island" to "facilitate their extermination." The charge was made in a document prepared by the mothers and relatives of Uruguayan political prisoners and sent yesterday to the International Red Cross, the UN Human Rights Commission, the World Council of Churches, Amnesty International and the Vatican. The document includes the names of all the prisoners who allegedly are threatened with death in Libertad prison. [Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 18 Oct 80 p 9] 8711

EXILES OPPOSE CONSTITUTION--Uruguayan political parties operating underground are calling on the people to vote "No" in the plebiscite scheduled for 30 November to approve the country's new constitution prepared by the military forces. That report was made in Rio yesterday by union leaders exiled from their country and members of the National Convention of Workers of Uruguay, an organization that already has representatives in 23 countries to publicize the political situation in Uruguay. According to the union leaders, who did not want to be identified, the new Uruguayan constitution established a constitutional court which they termed a "superpower" set above the executive branch and regarded as unprecedented anywhere in the world. According to newspaper and magazine clippings which they showed, the constitutional court has been compared to the "courts of the inquisition at the peak of the obscurantist period of the Middle Ages." APRIL 1981 DEVALUATION--The Central Bank of Uruguay has ordered a 1.18 percent devaluation for April 1981. The decision by the bank assures continuity in exchange rate policy by announcing the dollar rate 6 months in advance at the close of each month. There will thus be a 5.34 percent devaluation over the first 4 months of next year. According to the Central Bank announcement, which is published on Page 17 of this issue, on 1 April the dollar will be pegged at 10.419 pesos for purchases and 10.444 for sales, whereas on 30 April it will stand at 10.534 and 10.560, respectively. The 1.18 percent devaluation for April is slightly higher than for March. The pace of devaluation for the first 4 months of 1981 will be 1.7 percent in January, 1.179 percent in February, 1.175 percent in March and 1.18 percent in April, which comes to 5.34 percent for the 4 months. Next year will begin with the dollar pegged at 10.008 for purchases and 10.033 for sales. The minidevaluation for April confirms the exchange policy guidelines outlined by Economy and Finances Minister Valentin Arismendi in a message to the country last May, when he said that the government intended to announce the exchange rate 6 months in advance at the close of each month. EDITORIAL DISCUSSES EFFECTS OF 'REAGAN PHENOMENON'

Caracas EL DIARIO DE CARACAS in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 6

[Editorial: "The 'Reagan Phenomenon'"]

[Text] Ronald Reagan's victory is going to make a great many people more humble. Although they said he was in the lead towards the end, both editorial writers of influential media and most pollsters never predicted the Republican candidate's landslide triumph. The "Reagan phenomenon" will keep political analysts in the air and momentarily throw foreign capitals off balance.

Everyone will now begin searching for an explanation of the "Reagan phenomenon."

Looking back, it is easy to analyze and come up with reasons that were overlooked previously, and no doubt a lengthy list of causes and motives will be drawn up.

But basically Americans--again--cast their votes for the man who promised to control inflation and restore his country's prestige and presence in the world.

Although he was an actor, Reagan is no magician, and the economic problems in store for him are enormous. Milton Friedman backed president-elect Reagan, who is expected to follow the economic prescription recommended by the Chicago School. Nevertheless, the transition from one economic philosophy to another will be relatively lengthy, especially for a trillion dollar economy like the United States'. In foreign policy, Reagan will be able to rely on the direct or indirect counsel of Henry Kissinger and his personal diplomacy.

Thus, it will take some time for the pieces to rearrange themselves, and once all of the components are in place, we will see whether his measures and their results are radically different from the ones that Jimmy Carter proposed, because in the final accounting although Ronald Reagan, like all of his predecessors, can emphasize and underscore general trends, he needs a majority consensus of the U.S. power structure to bring about in-depth changes.

There are those who are already rending their garments and asserting that Reagan's election means the strengthening of dictatorships in Latin America and the beginning of the reactionaries' triumphal march. It is probably too early to try and draw valid conclusions from the "Reagan phenomenon." He only promised what the middle class longs for: law and order, economic stability and international respect, and such concerns, we must remember, are not just limited to the people of the United States of America.

CTV PROPOSES JOINT MANAGEMENT AT EIGHTH CONGRESS

Caracas RESUMEN in Spanish 2 Nov 80 pp 26-27

[Article: "Eighth Congress of Workers, Joint Labor Management"]

[Text] At the Eighth Congress of the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers (CTV), held recently in Porlamar, there were many agreements (over 40 were made), including one for the initiation fo the process of joint labor management in the country. Since the majority of the Venezuelan population does not have a clearcut idea of what CTV interprets as being the joint management which it advocates, we deemed it fitting to approach the sources in CTV itself, an entity which expressed its ideas on joint labor management in a report entitled "Current Analysis and Diagnosis of the Society." This document, which may be described as the cornerstone of the philosophy that the present CTV embodies, states:

"...We proclaim as a starting point that democracy, in all its dimensions: institutional, political, economic and social, and the full significance and projection thereof, with its vast potential for progress toward loftier forms and essence of social and personal fulfillment, with its primary foundation in the sovereignty of the people and the genuine exercise of freedom, is the system of organization for the Venezuelan nation that will allow for the activity of the factors and insure the set of conditions favoring attainment of the goal of development, from the standpoint that has already been defined. Democracy is not a rigid pattern wherein the institutions are pigeonholed and obsolete, but rather a dynamic, flexible system based on principles, fostering transforming action to evaluate the prosperity, and adaptable to the changes which the historical process makes necessary.

"Democracy is not merely a system of government, a regimen of law or a method for organization of the state, but also, no less importantly, a method for the functioning of the society. Thus, the free, open, progressive, nondiscriminatory democratic society is the most authentic and complete representation of democracy. The democratic society is necessarily participatory, not in the sense that it participates in the process of the decisions that shape its destiny, but that process is an indissoluble part of social life, with all the organic, institutional and personal components of the society actually, totally and constantly participating in that decisionmaking process. Hence, a clear distinction must be made between representative democracy, in which the society, the people, periodically or possibly delegate their sovereignty, and their decisionmaking and control power, and participatory democracy, wherein, without ceasing to produce and reproduce its organs and agencies of leadership, administration, control and execution, systematically, the power continues to be exercised by the majority of its rank and file organizations, in its active natural mechanisms and its multiple forms, which reveal in a live fashion not only the presence, but the action of the people. The present type of democracy in Venezuela is representative, incomplete and indirect; we aspire, ourselves, to participatory, total, direct democracy, with popular activity."

Growing Significance of Labor

"The most all-important demonstration in the contemporary history of both the Eastern and Western world is that labor is the irreplaceable foundation for progress in all realms and dimensions, and that human genius, whatever the scale for evaluation used may be, is a superior quality in the labor potential. We have established this unchallengeable principle, because everything else is the result of labor, and of the growing participation of the organized workers in economic and social management on all its levels and in all its processes. The workers are the real majority, both quantitatively and qualitatively, in Venezuelan society; and in this respect we are not considering in any sense the presumed, formal or conventional contradictions between workers and employees, between urban workers and peasants or between manual and intellectual workers, but rather the solidarity and essential consistency of the world of labor, among those who earn their living through the use of their work force. Therefore, in the participatory democratic society, the workers must be a basic factor in management, not only in the creation of wealth, but also in the entire process of production, reproduction and transformation of social life."

Joint Management in Three Dimensions

"The organized workers assert to the nation of which they make up a majority portion, their readiness to strive to win the goal of joint management in the business-owning economic area, and in the entire range of production of goods and services of the public sector and of the private business sector. The features, scope and types of operation or implementation of this type of joint management are described in a separate document, owing to their special importance.

"However, we think and maintain that the principle of joint management should not be limited to the business-owning area alone, but should apply to other realms of social activity and public management. It is possible that another term might be applied to this type of managerial participation in activities that are not associated with business, but related to the economic process and to the life of the community. By way of illustration, we might cite the agencies which devise or consult about economic policy, social policy and cultural policy...."

The opinion expressed in the private and public sector: Economist Ciro Anez Fonseca, president of FEDECAMARAS [Association of the Chambers of Commerce and Industry], in commenting on joint management, stated: "We expect that, based on that criterion, it will be an important means of democratizing capital and improving the productivity of the business firms which, as we know, are on very low levels of development, so as to successfully meet the challenge of the nation's economic development and social progress."

Mr Antonio Diaz Martinez, a representative of the meat business in the central part of the country, and former president of FEDECAMARAS, said: "The workers' joint management in business firms is not clear, and hence the analysis is very difficult; because it would not be appropriate to express views on hypotheses which, at best, are not included in the concepts of the labor movement." In the opinion of Mr Diaz Martinez, "We need to learn the essence of the concept and the nature of the participation by the labor mass."

COPEI [Social Christian Party] Deputy Dr Abdon Vivas Teran is of the opinion that, "CTV has taken the most important political initiative that has been available in recent decades, by agreeing that we must seek new and different forms for the workers' participation in the leadership, management and planning of the country's productive units." According to Dr Vivas Teran, "Joint management introduces gradual changes in the country's political system, in sufficient depth to start changing the groundrules on which the structure of our economy is based."

The minister of interior, Mr Rafael Andres Montes de Oca, reportedly stated: "The government is willing to lend all its support to the CTV Executive Committee for the attainment of the goals which will make it possible to implement joint labor management as an economic system to insure the freedom of the individual and his complete betterment."

Economist Domingo Felipe Maza Zavala, chairman of the Economic Commission of the Chamber of Deputies, declared: "There has been more success than failure in the experiments with joint management in capitalist countries;" noting that, "The workers have no reason to burden themselves with a poor management that is dissociated from them." He recommended: "The government should start joint management in the business firms that the Venezuelan Development Corporation has offered to the private sector."

At the VIASA stockholders' meeting, at which the tragic situation confronting this company, with losses estimated at about 180 million bolivares, an amount that it is hoped the Treasury will replace, was announced, according to "high-ranking sources in the Executive Branch," some one stated that, in order to make VIASA a profitable enterprise, it would even be desirable to try "a system of joint labor management, but with its own doctrine; that is, the the workers' sharing in the stock, not as conceived by some of the labor leaders in the country who are inspired by foreign experience."

For the industrial and, specifically, the metallurgical sector, according to engineer Esteban Godayol, head of AIMM [Association of Industrial Metallurgists and Metalworkers], "There is not as yet a clearcut idea in the country of what joint management is" in business firms. In making statements to the press on various topics, and commenting on joint management, he stated: "We know about different experiments with this type of participation in business management, such as that in West Germany, where, it is said, there were good results; on the other hand, this was not the case in Peru where it was claimed to have resulted in failure." He concluded: "Every country has its own features and its own individual traits; therefore, it is difficult to make general judgments concerning the implementation of a type of joint management, particularly since there is not as yet a clearcut idea in the country of what it is."

GALLUP POLL FINDS CALDERA 'MOST INFLUENTIAL' PERSONALITY

Caracas EL DIARIO DE CARACAS in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 5

/Text/ The economics and business magazine, NUMERO, did not trust the data supplied by other publications to determine which Venezuelans and institutions had the most influence in the country. It preferred to obtain its own results, so it commissioned the Gallup Institute to undertake a survey, published in this week's issue.

The poll's first conclusion is one that is very relevant to the country's current political scene: Former President Caldera is the most influential Venezuelan. Two places below him is President Luis Herrera Campins. The results of the first question are as follows:

--Who, in your opinion, are the ten most influential Venezuelans?

Rafael Caldera	6.37
Romulo Betancourt	5.99
Luis Herrera Campins	5.52
Carlos Andres Perez	4.88
Gonzalo Barrios	4.70
Rafael Andres Montes de Oca	4.29
Jose Vargas	4.27
Eduardo Fernandez	3.97
Pedro Pablo Aguilar	3.41
Ciro Anez Fonseca	3.31

Then people were asked about the ten second-most influential people in the country. In order of preference, they were: Godofredo Gonzalez, Jovito Villalba, Humberto Calderon Berti, Alejandro Izaguirre, Jaime Lusinchi, Luis Pinerua, Jose Vicente Rangel, Jose Humberto Quintero, Tomas Abreu Rescaniere and Luis Ugueto.

Another question was asked about institutions: "Which institutions have the most power in Venezuela?" Gallup computed the results thus:

Presidency of the republic	7.34
Armed Forces	5.97
National Congress	5.72
Democratic Action	5.65
Social Christian Party (COPEI)	5.42
Confederation of Venezuelan Workers	5.33
FEDECAMARAS	5.29

Television	5.23
Newspapers	4.84
Radio	4.12

The ten second-most influential institutions chosen were: the Church, the Ministry of the Interior, the Judicial Branch, the banks, Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc., the Governorships, the Secretariat of the Presidency, the Finance Ministry, the Municipal Councils and the Ministry of Energy and Mines.

NUMERO also wanted to know people's opinion about the actions of the current Parliament in comparison with the previous one. The question asked was: "If you had to evaluate the actions of the National Congress during this session in comparison with the previous one, how would you evaluate it?" The answers:

Much better	8.54 percent
Better	18.29 percent
Same	36.59 percent
Somewhat worse	14.63 percent
Much worse	15.85 percent
No response	6.10 percent

Then a question was asked about the implementation of worker comanagement in Venezuela. The results were:

Agrees with the measure	51.22 percent
Current private enterprise system without change is preferable	29.27 percent
Self-management would be better	15.85 percent
State ownership would be better	3.66 percent

Although the first part of the poll did not refer to the issue of candidacy (Rafael Caldera was chosen as the most influential person, not the best candidate), the Gallup Institute research could give rise to numerous speculations that are most certainly circulating in political circles.

EDUARDO FERNANDEZ DISCUSSES STRUGGLE WITHIN COPEI

Caracas RESUMEN in Spanish 2 Nov 80 pp 4-9

[Interview with COPEI Secretary General Eduardo Fernandez; date and place not given]

[Text] In an intelligent interview with RESUMEN, the secretary general of COPEI [Social Christian Party], Eduardo Fernandez, establishes his position concerning the internal strife within the green party, which many observers have described as virtual division.

RESUMEN: The analysts and observers of Venezuelan politics have reached the conclusion that COPEI is technically divided. By technically divided, they mean that there is a state of internal confrontation of such an intense and critical nature that the step from the decision or secession to another party that would be cut off from COPEI is just a matter of time, place and method; but, from a psychological, mental structural and human standpoint,it is already a virtually decided fact.

The observers have reached this conclusion after noting, during the past 2 or 3 months in greater intensity, but particularly since the last convention at which you were elected the party's secretary general, a series of events wherein coincidence, fortuitousness or chance is completed precluded, because they appear to be events based on an established strategy as to their purposes, goals and the means for attaining them. What is your assessment of this observation on the part of political analysts?

Eduardo Fernandez: The first thing that I must say is that this is obviously an exaggerated view that is not warranted; particularly with the objective facts and concrete data that we can offer, attesting to a different situation insofar as the party's structure and fundamental unity are concerned.

COPEI has for many years been a case for interesting analyses on the part of observers, among other reasons because, in a country wherein anarchistic trends often prevail, wherein there is an inclination toward division and wherein the centrifugal forces predominate, our party has given admirable, exemplary evidence of unity that is worthy of study. It is the only major political party in contemporary Venezuela which has not been the object of significant, important splits. Of course, we do not disregard the fact that certain individuals or small groups of persons have become separated from the party; but, fundamentally, the concrete fact is that COPEI has not become divided. With a complete sense of responsibility, in my capacity as not only secretary general of the party, but also a member of the party, I dare to predict that we shall not become divided; and I would like to elaborate a little on this.

What is happening? COPEI is, of course, a party which, in addition to not being divided, has another typical feature. It is the only Venezuelan political force which has been in a process of constant growth and expansion. From a party of relatively slight significance from the numerical standpoint, concentrated in certain geographical areas of the country, it has become converted into the leading Venezuelan popular political party, with a very broad national audience and with a presence and force among all social sectors and over the entire Venezuelan geographical area.

This has complicated the internal picture somewhat. Things which could in the past be resolved more easily and satisfactorily are now more complicated to resolve. Furthermore, the homogeneity of our leadership cadres in the past, and the similar basic training of all our leaders, used to help solve problems. Now, we are a far more complicated, far larger and far more heterogeneous party, wherein it is, moreover, quite understandable that a plurality of opinions, viewpoints and even tendencies must be recognized. This is a fact related to modern politics. The serious aspect is not the tendencies, the serious aspect is not the internal pluralism; and of course the serious aspect is not the evidence of internal democracy that exists and has always existed in the party, which we are willing to uphold at any cost at the present time.

The bad aspect is the tendencies toward factionalism. This is, indeed, a galloping, deeply negative disease in the organic body of a party; when what is respect for internal democracy and pluralism is confused with what is factionalism, which I would describe as "the organization of groups within the organization with a different discipline from that of the organization, with different strategic goals that are often contradictory to the organization's goals, and with an appearance before public opinion, looking like a lack of consistency with the national projection of the organization itself." I do consider this factionalist phenomenon to be a deeply negative situation, and I do not think that COPEI is an entity completely immune to this tendency. But, because of our tradition, our background, the values embodied in the party and the commitment to the future that we have, the entity is in a position to reject any tendency toward factionalism that would threaten the survival or the very health of the organization. Thus, with all due respect for those analysts who have made such comments, I flatly reject the hypothesis that the party is involved in a critical situation that is seriously threatening to break its internal unity.

And I would like to add the following: In this regard, it sometimes happens that, on the basis of irresponsible actions by the party's own members who have chosen the path of publicizing their own views without having processed, discussed and analyzed them in the spirit of solidarity required by membership in an organization itself, there are found in certain news media repercussions disproportionate to the importance of those leaders. Sometimes, leaders who do not hold any responsible position and who lack any significance or representative status within the organization are nevertheless accorded front page headlines or very extensive coverage in major organs of public opinion.

RESUMEN: Do you think that the president of the republic has little significance?

Eduardo Fernandez: No, of course I am not referring to the president of the republic, for whom we have great respect, great affection, great esteem and great admiration.

RESUMEN: Undoubtedly, but those are the comments of the president of the republic regarding the party, and the conduct of the president of the republic, particularly on his tours to the interior; and they are also the comments of the minister of interior and the comments and conduct of the former secretary general of COPEI, Pedro Pablo Aguilar, and of a major national leader such as Cesar Perdomo Giron, who have gone to the news media describing the internal status of COPEI as critical. Thus it is not a magnification out of keeping with the importance of the individuals whose remarks are reflected, but rather a reflection of the internal reality of COPEI. We have information and are certain that the tours of the president of the republic to the interior are devoted largely to efforts of a partisan nature; and, I daresay, following the definition that you make of factionalism, of a factionalist partisan nature. The obvious, undeniable aspiration of the interior minister for the presidency of the republic also puts this critical scenario in an unquestionable contest. Any candidacy for the presidency of the republic, and even any pre-candidacy for the presidency of the republic, requires money and requires time. And in the effort to seek both, the function of the interior minister could be, and actually is being considered seriously harmed, and relegated to a secondary status. This situation, Dr Fernandez, not only relates to a crisis in a political organization; it also relates to a crisis in the entire Venezuelan state, which is personified at present by that political organization, appearing in the eyes of the public, rather accurately I think, as a state of factionalism.

Eduardo Fernandez: Of course, there is in your statement a series of aspects with which I obviously disagree and which, furthermore, do not relate to the information that I have received. But let me discuss the matter from the angle of a more important perspective. The party's fundamental unity is guaranteed by the sense of responsibility and the human, political and moral quality of the organization's main leaders. The first of them is, of course, the leader who was founder of the party, the party's top-ranking leader, Rafael Caldera. Secondly, there is the president of the republic, Luis Herrera. If the party's unity is of concern to anyone, if anyone has to preserve it with special care and special assiduousness it is the president, for two reasons...

RESUMEN: Hence the bewilderment of the observers....

Eduardo Fernandez: First, because the success of his government depends largely on the consistent, organized and systematic backing of the party, just as it is being guaranteed at present by the COPEI National Directorate and the Regional Directorates. Then the president must assess, stimulate and foster the party's unity. But, secondly, for a reason of an historical nature, Luis Herrera offered, at a very feeble time in the history of our party, when we had just suffered a very severe electoral setback, Luis Herrera offered to be the champion of COPEI's return to the government, and had the satisfaction of meeting that goal.

At the present time, the president of the republic, without saying so explicitly, because it would not be in keeping with the esteem that is owed his office, but, in point of fact, he is under obligation to be the champion of COPEI's continuity in the government. And that historic goal, in addition to the fact that it must represent and mean a great deal to him, necessitates active effort on behalf of the unity, growth, good image and respectability of the party, so that the party may merit the confidence of the public.

Therefore, we are intent on a unified line and a broad line, respectful of the internal democratic guarantees, one of active, militant solidarity with the government and with its fundamental commitment to program, which we in COPEI do not consider to mean ceasing to speak well of Luis Herrera in order to speak well of Caldera, or vice versa. Rather, we think that we should proclaim the pride that all of us party members have in our possession of such enlightened personages as the current president of the republic and former President Rafael Caldera. We all adhere to this line; we are striving for the country to have confidence in us, for the country to believe in COPEI's word and for the country to put its increasing trust in us.

And this is the line that is of concern to the president of the republic. But there are others also who are vitally concerned with the party's unity, and anyone who has presidential ambitions for 1983 or for the future, would adhere to it; because a divided party, a party without the opportunity to offer the country a guarantee of a consistent, serious and reliable presence, or a party exhausted by petty, trifling disputes or major ones, will not have sufficient merit to win the degree of confidence that is needed to win the 1983 presidential election. And I don't think that anyone is happy to have in his biography the fact that he was once a candidate for the presidency, like a footnote at the bottom, but just to be among any of the highly distinguished party leaders mentioned as possible presidential candidates for the present or future. What one seeks is just to attain an electoral victory which will allow us to continue implementing our historic plan of the economic, social and political model that we hope to achieve.

Now the opposite would be assuming a very pygmy-like, small, insignificant mentality that would not be in keeping with the desires and the calling of the party. So I would tell you that, despite appearances to the contrary, common sense, aware that there are many who speak, which is the least common of senses, common sense obliges us to act sensibly and with a sense of responsibility. I believe that this is the line that will prevail in the long run. Note that I am not denying that there are people who may be holding irresponsible attitudes, and who are helping to supply ingredients for setting up in a manner that I regard as exaggerated, the lie about the internal state of conflict in the party.

As secretary general of COPEI, I can attest that the situation is not at all related to what I sometimes read in certain news media. I have a very cordial, very respectful and very fraternal relationship with all the party's regional sections; and I know for certain that any of the factional efforts that have been expended recently have met with a categorical repudiation among the overwhelming majority of the party's regional and national leaders.

RESUMEN: Now we are beginning to understand one another, because the final part of your reply does admit the existence of factionalist efforts, which you consider to be great or small, forceful or not; it is a matter of calibration, but the fact is undeniable. Now, in your answer, you disclose the following: you disclose what is perhaps an overestimation of force, logic and common sense, and an underestimation of the upsetting capacity of the pygmies. History has taught us that the pygmies have often succeeded in abusing, seriously damaging and even halting and aborting great plans, great ideas and great men; beginning with Simon Bolivar (the "trifling thing" was certainly also cooking in Valencia). Thus, another possible example is the case of Democratic Action, wherein the pygmies obviously became owners of the party.

Everything that you have said is an abstraction which no sensible person could deny; but the concrete reality is that there seems to be, or there unquestionably is, an obvious, overt desire on the part of the interior minister, Mr Montes de Oca, to be COPEI's candidate for the presidency of the republic, or that of a party broken off from COPEI. This seems to go along with and be connected, as the wheels of a mechanism are joined, with what appears obvious to any political observer, namely that, within the microcosmos, the micro-world of a dozen prominent leaders of COPEI, there would appear like a hopeless situation, the fact of the candidacy and possible presidency of Rafael Caldera and his permanence in the COPEI general secretariat.

Hence, for these individuals, interests related to this personal status take precedence over the interests of the party's status, inasmuch as they have no hope in the party's situation. So it is more worthwhile for them to die fighting like "mouse's heads" rather than dying without fighting, like "lion's tails."

Eduardo Fernandez: I have known Rafael Andres Montes de Oca rather well and for many years, and based on my knowledge of him, I can claim that he would never lend himself to anything that would represent division of the party, or any irreparable damage to our organization. Furthermore, if any of those grim advisers that individuals usually have when they hold high positions of political, administrative or party influence, and we all have them, if any grim adviser were to have the notion of suggesting to him such a foolish idea as that, I who am familiar with the intelligence of Minister Montes de Oca am certain that he would give the following response: He would tell him, in the first place, that through division no one wins, we all lose; and, secondly, division is not made by those who want,but rather by those who can; and there are in our party very few who can afford to say that they are in a position to cause a serious, considerable split in the party.

Now then, "Pepi" is also a provincial leader trained in a very praiseworthy, very esteemed and very beautiful struggle. I do not hesitate to admit great respect and regard for his political career within the party; and I am sure that his performance and his conduct will always be directed toward seeking the strengthening and growth of the party and maintaining our option as a leading force in Venezuelan political life. Now I am also aware that there are many people who nurture an underlying appetite, and I want to mention this, because it represents an inversion of values in the party. COPEI was not founded as an instrument for achieving political, professional or personal careers for each of us. COPEI was founded to give evidence of integrity, social progress and institutional political change, in order to achieve a new economic and social model.

The selection of our presidential candidate, or of the party officials, cannot be made on the basis of the personal appetites of each of the leaders, but rather on the basis of what is in the interests of the party as a whole, for making the political plan that we wish to accomplish progress. What is important to determine, like a manager when he is managing a baseball team, is not the career of each of the players, but rather the collective interest of the team that is involved in a particular play.

RESUMEN: Don't you think that the collective interest of the country would also be at stake?

Eduardo Fernandez: Oh, no! That is in the very first place. Obviously the party is subordinate. It is a tool in the country's service, and it is precisely for that reason, when we must contemplate the great problems of this final portion of the 20th century and the great challenges being proposed to us by Venezuela at the end of the century, and when we see, for goodness sake, such important and significant things happening in the world, I refuse to be a tool in village fights and I feel like the secretary general of a modern party that must give imaginate, creative responses capable of arousing the emotion and hope of all the responsible people in this country, in a forward direction, toward the future.

I cannot believe that we are going to exhaust our political destiny on "squabbles" between the beloved and esteemed colleague Cesar Perdomo and the highly regarded Senator Juan Jose Rachadell, or with the highly regarded colleague "whatever his name is." I consider it important for all of us to strive together to progress in a task that will make Venezuela feel that there is a responsible leadership, which can measure up to the challenges and commitments that we must keep.

RESUMEN: Well, you have taken this conversation to the area where it was to end, namely, what Venezuela thinks and feels about that leadership, and that economic, political and social model that you have mentioned. The country is truly and sincerely upset about what appears to be a ridiculous inability to solve or start to solve the problems facing it, many of which are, of course inherited from the previous government, and even from earlier governments. But there is the impression that they are not being handled with the skill, diligence and efficiency needed to start solving them. So the country is not very sure what this famous COPEI economic, political and social model is; it is not very sure whether the COPEI members are sure; and it is not very sure that an economic, political and social model exists, but rather it would appear that there are models which are contradictory and even the antithesis of one another; and hence this would appear like a split between the party and the government, and like a split among the different tendencies in the party. Don't tell me the story that, obviously, the existence of different tendencies or concepts of the socioeconomic dynamics of a country are proof of its fertility, fecundity and vitality; we already know that. But they could also be proof of a dreadful confusion.

Eduardo Fernandez: That is so; and sometimes the ideological causes are used as a tool for underlying political intentions, and are not associated with a serious, well thought out consideration of the nation's future, or the analysis interpreting its present. I am aware of that, and I shall not conceal the realities. But, nevertheless, I think that we are experiencing a critical time in the country, in Venezuela as a whole. And I use the word "crisis" not in its apocalyptic, catastrophic sense, but rather in the sense of a new birth, an occasion for revitalizing many important ideas. I am not a pessimist about the party's destiny, nor am I, of course, a pessimist about the nation's destiny either. Between 1958 and 1980 slightly over 20 years have elapsed, with four administrations, as well as the provisional government, and this would appear to be a suitable occasion for making an assessment of what has been achieved with the democratic model in the political realm, and with the economic model that has been in effect during the past 5 years, as well as with the social system. And there are signs in advance which invite a discussion that I hope will be fruitful and constructive. The "Maracaibo Charter" contains good ideas, as well as some questionable and objectionable things. But there is at least an endeavor on the part of Venezuelan business owners to make a thorough deliberation. That has been preceded by studies contracted by the national government, such as the famous "Merhav Report," which your magazine certainly had the good idea of publishing in consecutive installments.

There are also elements in the report on the discussions of the Eighth Congress of the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers which show a far more mature and far more responsible working class, which does not confine itself to mere demands, but rather wants to make contributions to the process of discussing the plan for our future and our prospects. I can tell you that we have arranged, for 5-6 December, the convening of an event of a national nature, that of the party's National Board of Directors, at which there will be a discussion on an essential plank involving our contribution to what that plan should be. Of course, we cannot be asked, nor have we ever sought to have a dogmatic plan, such as the Marxists or the complete liberals want to have, a dogmatic plan of what the economic development model should be.

Our position is very flexible, and hence it may seem confused at times; but it is geared closely to the changing requirements of the actual situation. Now, in the democratic and the political realm, we must progress from a purely representative democracy, and to many this is simply confined to an election at 5-year intervals; and we must make room for a group of mechanisms that will allow the citizen to have a far more effective participation in the process whereby the decisions are made, and in the distribution of the benefits of development. In the economic area, I believe that if this government has any merit, it lies in having called to the attention of the national conscience that we could not continue along the path that we had been following, a path of exaggerated protectionism, a path of intolerable paternalism, a path on which we were heading toward increasing socialization, amid the collusive applause of those who should have called attention to the dangerous aspect of this tendency.

Now the government's present economic policy is an invitation, with all its mistakes, which we are not attempting to conceal, and with all its flaws and all its problems, a courageous invitation to review whether we can continue with the system that we have had, or whether the time has come to have more confidence in the real productive factors of the economy, captains of truly entrepreneurial enterprises, and not people living under the aegis of the state's protection and privileges, and workers who have an increasing responsibility in the country's productive process; and not remaining in the hands of a "paternalistic state" supplying everything. And, of course, the situation could not be maintained any longer, because, regardless of how abundant our oil deposits are, they could not provide any more.

So, as you can see, we are involved in a truly interesting situation, to say the least. To this situation there is the response of a party which is not only the government party, but the leading popular party in the country, according to the results of the last elections, which is the objective information to which we can refer, and a party with the future appetite that we have, because COPEI is nearly 35 years old. We consider those 35 years the "prolog" of the book that we are about to write. It is only the introduction to the tasks that we would like to perform. So, faced with this situation that Venezuela is experiencing, we want to be a party which makes an intellectual endeavor and a political endeavor that will contribute to this creative work of imagination that is being demanded of us.

For example, I cannot accept the notion that the creative genius of Venezuelan political thought was exhausted with the Constitution of 1961, or with that congress which was without doubt admirable; I call it that without attempting any absurd comparisons with previous realities that gave rise to the republic. But the Congress of 1959-64 was a congress with enormous production. Well, I refuse to keep living, or to have our generation keep living on what that marvelous generation which made that entire contribution produced. Now, it is up to us to make a contribution of a different kind, updated to meet the needs and the realities of the time in which we are living.

Therefore, I stress that the news media could help us greatly if they attached more importance and more significance to this type of proposal than to the fact that a few idle politicans met, which is the most dangerous thing that exists, because idleness is the mother of all vices, and when one has nothing to do, then he engages in inventing who knows what kind of fantasy, and since he sometimes likes to find his fantasy reproduced in the news media, he engages in this activity more intensively.

But I think that what the country is demanding of us is evidence in three directions: First, of reliability, since this country badly needs evidence of reliability, and not of upheaval, nor hollow uproar. Second, of unity; unity cannot be fictitious, it must be an affective and effective unity, it must be a unity achieved on the basis of a mutal commitment, and a clear awareness of where we have come from, where we are and where we are heading. And anyone who does not feel identified with that commitment which the party has now and plans for the future, anyone who feels in any way dissociated from the background and commitments of the party, would do best to exclude himself and not hamper the progress of the organization. And that pertains to unity. And, third, the country and the public demand that we give evidence of being on an intellectual and political par with the challenges of contemporary Venezuela, and of responding to the major problems posed by the country, and not wasting time on insignificant matters.

RESUMEN: Well, RESUMEN is very pleased to hear what you have said, and, of course, we shall not assume the role of a defender, per se, of the news media. But your strong insistence that it is the news media that exaggerate things that cannot be exaggerated on their intrinsic merits nor by the individuals who stage those incidents does seem to me to be a little unfair. Let me tell you that those who raise an uproar with their internal problems and attempt to take those internal problems to the streets when they should be kept at home are the political parties themselves. And in this connection, I think that we would agree, and the entire country would agree, with the rejection that you seem to have made of holding another internal election in COPEI within a short time, in 1981; because, basically, the country has had its fill of these elections, especially in a party which has government responsibilities that would inevitably be upset by this new election. Therefore, I call upon you, very cordially, to reflect on the notion that it is the parties themselves, and the personages from the parties themselves, who are taking their trivialities and petty domestic quarrels to the streets, giving them precedence over the significant, major debate that is truly of interest to the country.

Eduardo Fernandez: Well, if you will allow me, I shall make a comment on that. The question and the statement seem very good to me. I would like to recall that, if my memory does not deceive me, I said in my first answer that "there would be no room in the news media for news that was supplied by people acting irresponsibly." So the original sin lies with those members of the political organizations who, instead of airing with the discretion that solidarity demands the problems which should be aired domestically, air them to the media per se.

Thus, I am very certain of where the responsibility lies. I do not wish to lay the blame, nor am I laying the blame on the media. The original sin lies with the members themselves who succumb to such weaknesses.

RESUMEN: Allow me to engage in a little prank, which may seem contradictory to the line that I am pursuing in the question. From the standpoint of pleading a little for the other side, because it would appear that, either with an excuse or with the reason of not upsetting the country and devoting oneself to more important things, that would represent a "status quo" within the party; and no one could aspire to elective office within the party, because there would have been created a kind of "mineralization" or stagnation that would preclude the advancement of others to those positions.

Eduardo Fernandez: One cannot speak of "mineralization" or "stagnation" with respect to a national directorate or regional directorates which have not yet completed a year since being elected. That would really be an exaggeration and an absurdity. The previous national directorate of the party, certainly, or at least the previous secretary general of the party exercised responsibility for 8 years. Two conventions had been held, the first taking place at the end of President Caldera's government, and then it was time to hold a new convention, in early 1974, and the national board of directors met and extended the term.

I make the observation that it was certainly not for the reason that we were engaged in an election campaign, but rather that we had just finished an election campaign, and a new constitutional term was beginning; but, nevertheless, the party's directorate, and the national board of directors, with my vote in favor to be sure, agreed to extend the term of the authorities until the convention which was held toward the end of the government of President Perez' term in office, 8 years. And this simply proves that our statutes and the associations of the authorities were devised at a time when it was very easy to hold a convention and have a commission meeting; and those convetions, moreover, did not have the effect, the impact or the significance that the functions of the major national parties have now.

I recall that when COPEI held a convention in the past, when I was already a party member, we had to make an effort to have the news media concern themselves with reporting on our convention once it had ended. On the other hand, now it has not started yet, and it is having a great influence on public opinion. With a very firm foundation of a statutory nature, I have taken the liberty to state that, for the peace of mind of public opinion externally, and that of the party's public opinion internally, in 1981 we can relieve it of the anxiety of internal electoral processes.

Since the 30-month interval which the statutes grant for calling a new convention expires during the first half of 1982, at that time we could and should hold a meeting of a national board of directors of the party that would analyze the situation and assign responsibilities. Now in making this proposal, I made it after having talked with the most qualified heads of all the regional sections, and after having found the broadest support, I would almost dare say that there was unanimous backing for this position, with one or two exceptions. Furthermore, I am not disregarding the obligation that I have, as secretary general, nor does the party's national directorate disregard it, to give strong evidence of broadness, and to do everything necessary to guarantee that the party's national directorate represents and reflects the entire party universe; and, in addition, that any of the decisions which are made, whether they be of an electoral or a political nature, are decisions on which the entire party's views have been sought.

From the respect that I note in the party's regional directorates and from the compliance and willingness to cooperate with the national directorate, I do not believe that there is any reason, or any evidence to disprove that we are trying to do the best possible job in this directorate. For example, I have been told that we need to reinforce the national directorate, and I do not doubt it. Some have also noted that the executive cabinet needs to be reinforced. And I do not hesitate to say that, in a potential reorganization of the cabinet, which might occur in the future, there might be some individuals left who could be used by the party, some highly important figures in our organization, who would be joyfully received in the party, so that they could work together with us in the tasks that we have ahead of us. I do not think that anyone will be surplus in the party; and, on the contrary, I believe that we need many people to come and help in our work as well. I do not want to go further and mention names, but there are prominent individuals in the cabinet who, if for some reason the president were to relieve them of their present administrative responsibilities, could well be given quite remarkable consideration for the responsible tasks on the highest level of the party's directorate.

MINERVEN PREDICTS HIGH YIELD IN GOLD MINING OPERATION

Caracas EL DIARIO DE CARACAS in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 10

[Text] The Venezuelan Mining Company (MINERVEN) will produce 5,000 kilograms of gold a year in the future, according to the director of mineral resources of the Ministry of Energy and Mines, Simon Rodriguez.

Rodriguez pointed out that "this is a high production figure," and that "Venezuela will thus become one of the principal gold producing countries in Latin America."

The director of mineral resources told Vengres that MINERVEN recently acquired all the concessions of the foreign enterprise "Maca," which operated for many years in the El Callao area of the state of Bolivar.

MINERVEN is the national enterprise whose majority stock is held by the Venezuelan Investment Fund (FIV). The firm was founded in the middle of 1979 with a financing of 200 million bolivars provided by the Fund.

"The mining enterprise is in the middle of the Venezuelan gold country in Bolivar, which covers an area of 1,000 square kilometers and has not been explored in detail," explained Rodriguez.

He indicated that the precious metal is found in that region in the form of lodes, but associated with other minerals. "The mining is done by strip mining and under the ground," he explained.

"MINERVEN is engaged in underground mining, which makes the gold development program costly," he indicated.

The category study is being carried out by the Ministry of Energy and Mines, and will be the basis for the exploitation of the El Callao and El Peru gold mines (where the "incredibly" rich deposits are found). It will provide for the operation of between 10 and 15 mines, he said.

Rodriguez pointed out that MINERVEN is now operating all its ore treatment plants, and in 1981 the first drilling will begin, using local miners.

"It is the ministry's intention to incorporate local prospectors so that they can become stockholders in other enterprises that will be created in the future, because these people know the geography and the work in the mines," he stated.

The official reported that the other company operating in this area is the Venezuelan Gold Company (VENORCA), which is a service enterprise charged with purchasing gold from local producers. "At present VENORCA is producing 30 kilos of gold a month," he stated.

Rodriguez stressed that it is now profitable to mine gold, because the prices of the precious metal are quite high on the market: $700 per Troy ounce (30.3 grams).

He added that "all of Guayana is full of gold," and that the ministry initiated last October a program of mining cooperation with VENORCA.

ITAIPU TO OPEN OFFICIALLY IN 1983; PAULO AFONSO 4 BEGINS THIS WEEK

Itaipu Uses Domestic Components

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 8 Nov 80 p 18

[Text] Pindamonhangaba--The Itaipu hydroelectric power station should be inaugurated in February 1983, generating 2,100 megawatts the first year. From that point on, there will be four more units of equal potential per year, said General Costa Cavalcanti, president of ELETROBRAS [Brazilian Electric Power Companies, Inc] and of the Itaipu Binational Company.

He was at VIBASA inspecting the schedule for manufacturing parts ordered for Itaipu, totaling 30 percent of the equipment needed for the plant.

"We have begun," he reported, "installing the first turbine, which will be ready by the middle of next year. The collaboration of domestic basic industry has been invaluable for accelerating the project.

"The Itaipu goal," he added, "is already met. Now we are going to accelerate construction of the Tucurui hydroelectric plant in the Amazon region, which we also intend to inaugurate in 1983, to serve as the energy base for the Carajas project."

At VIBASA, Costa Cavalcanti was pleased with the rate of parts production for Itaipu. "This gives us confidence and shows that domestic basic industry is now on a par in terms of operations and quality with the best in the world, attesting to the conscientious effort of businessmen who believe in their country's development."

CHESF's Largest Facility Yet

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 17 Nov 80 p 13

[Text] Recife--In Paulo Afonso next Thursday, President Joao Figueiredo will inaugurate the Paulo Afonso 4 hydroelectric power plant, the largest yet built by CHESF [Sao Francisco Hydroelectric Company] on the Sao Francisco River, with final installed capacity of 2.46 million kilowatts.

Paulo Afonso 4 is the fifth hydroelectric facility of CHESF in the Paulo Afonso region, where the Paulo Afonso 1, 2 and 3 and Moxoto power plants are already installed.

Begun in 1973, Paulo Afonso 4 is installed on the right-hand side of the Sao Francisco River canyon. A cavern 210 meters long, 24 meters wide and 54 meters deep was opened in the rocky massif. Six generating units with capacity for 410,000 kilowatts each are installed there.

The small reservoir of Paulo Afonso 4--with a length of 16 kilometers--is fed through a 5,600-meter diversion channel dug out of rock. The spillway has a flow of 10,000 cubic meters per second. The generator now in operation has one of the largest capacities yet installed nationwide.

Construction of Paulo Afonso 4 was possible thanks to opening a diversion channel on the right-hand bank of the Moxoto basin. This channel is 5,300 meters long, up to 235 meters wide and an average of 15 meters deep.

Transfer

All power generated by Paulo Afonso 4 will be transferred to a 500-kilowatt substation installed on the Alagoas side of the Sao Francisco River.

CHESF announced that, at prices of June this year, Paulo Afonso 4 cost 25.48 billion cruzeiros, of which 23.57 billion cruzeiros were invested in the power plant and 1.9 billion cruzeiros were invested in the substation. Domestic funds totaled 23.98 billion cruzeiros, while foreign credits--IDB, Credit Lyonnais, KFW, Deutsche Bank, Eximbank and suppliers' credit--amounted to 1.49 billion cruzeiros.

Installation of Paulo Afonso 4 caused a geographic change in the region, since the channel connecting the Moxoto lake to the reservoir of the new power station separated the city of Paulo Afonso (7,000 inhabitants) from the mainland, transforming it into an island. All access to the city as well as to the CHESF campsite had to be by bridge over the channel.

Even with inauguration of Paulo Afonso 4, the fear persists that there will be a power shortage in the Northeast after 1983, a fear already expressed several times by state governors.

In fact, Itaparica, slated to be the largest hydroelectric facility on the Sao Francisco River, generating 2.5 million kilowatts, should have been started 3 years ago, according to Antonio Carlos Magalhaes, governor of Bahia. Last May the Northeastern governors sent a joint document (to which they have not yet received a reply) to President Figueiredo asking for appropriation of 2 billion cruzeiros to accelerate construction of the Itaparica and Xingo hydroelectric stations. The former's construction site is now almost ready, but for the latter, according to Luiz Carlos Menezes, CHESF president, there isn't even enough money to pay for the project plans.

The first stage of the North/Northeast power interconnection was inaugurated at the end of last month, with CHESF beginning to furnish electric power to Imperatriz, Maranhao, from the Boa Esperanca hydroelectric stations in Piaui. But the system's construction, with a power of 500 kilovolts, will be finished in July 1981, when part of the power generated in the CHESF hudroelectric stations will be transported to the North, which will permit deactivation of thermoelectric power stations that serve mainly Belem.

The project, however, counted upon inauguration of Tucurui in Para in December 1983 to make up the power shortage in the Northeast. For CHESF, transporting electric power from Para to the Northeast after that date would permit optimizing deadlines for hydroelectric stations to be installed on the Sao Francisco River, notably Itaparica and Xingo.

It appears, however, that these deadlines will have to be revised, because Tucurui as well as Itaparica are falling behind their construction schedules.

COAL: PRODUCTION GOALS; FRENCH TECHNOLOGY; NEW DISCOVERIES

Coal Program Production Goals

Rio de Janeiro GAZETA MERCANTIL in Portuguese 10 Nov 80 p 7

[Text] Porto Alegre--In 1985 the nation will reach its goal of producing 27 million tons of coal annually, the equivalent of 170,000 barrels of petroleum daily, Mines and Energy Minister Cesar Cals promised Friday, refuting criticism by Rio Grande do Sul businessmen about delay in the program that is to develop the mineral: "Anyone having other figures is misinformed. We are going to reach the goal. PROCARVAO [National Coal Program?] will have the same amount of funds, the same standing as PROALCOOL [National Alcohol Program] and the pricing policy for the energy sector will benefit the product, keeping its cost to the consumer at about 37 percent of what will be established for fuel oil."

The president of the Brazilian Electric Power Enterprises Support Company (CAEEB), Ney Webster de Araujo, told this paper that so far the various projects approved or under study assure a production of 25.7 million tons for an already identified market of 22 million tons. The difference in the figures is explained by the fact that the minister continues to speak about goals, while Webster de Araujo is referring to plans made so far.

Cals, reminded of the fact that coal provides about 4,000 kilocalories, while the fuel oil to be replaced has more than 10,000 kilocalories, asserted that the government will adopt a price policy to maintain this cost proportion, in order to benefit and motivate consumption of domestic fuel. "As we intend that private enterprise will undertake the alternative-energy programs, we are not going to subsidize anything. Rather, we will increase the price of petroleum derivatives in order to encourage demand for the domestic alternative."

To support mining projects, the government will build two thermoelectric power plants every 2 years, each of them with a potential of 300 megawatts: "A program for this purpose has been sent to President Joao Figueiredo. The first two, one for Rio Grande do Sul and the other for Santa Catarina, will include a domestic component of 60 percent. The next two, to be installed after 1984, will have 70 percent domestic equipment."

According to Cals, the concern of businessmen about the coal program is unfounded. He explained that offers of loans from abroad make it possible to execute projects capable of meeting the goal of 27 million tons a year and private initiative must keep pace with the government's effort and interest in solving the problem: "Substitution of petroleum derivatives is a serious objective and, in turning responsibility over to private initiative, unlike what has been done so far in terms of energy policy, the government made a very important decision. We hope, the nation hopes, that everyone will live up to expectations."

Petroleum

According to Cals, in 1985 petroleum imports will be only about 500,000 barrels a day, rather than the 800,000 barrels at present, to meet a demand of 1.5 million barrels a day. This year consumption was 1.25 million barrels but the nation reduced its imports to 800,000 barrels a day. "The 300,000 barrels a day we expect to save in 1981 imports will represent a saving in foreign exchange of $2.5 million [as published; billion?]."

In 1985, PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] will produce 500,000 barrels a day and in 1981 that production will already be 300,000 barrels a day. "There will be 135,000 barrels from Bahia (today there are 97,000), plus 50,000 from Alagoas and Sergipe, plus 45,000 from Ceara, plus 10,000 from Espirito Santo and 300,000 from Campos. This includes nothing from Amazonas, Maranhao or PAULIPETRO." This is how the nation will get to 500,000 barrels, rising from 230,000 barrels, which was the peak daily production this year.

Furthermore, the equivalent of 170,000 barrels in alcohol, 170,000 barrels in coal, 120,000 barrels in wood, 25,000 barrels in shale oil and 15,000 barrels in biogas, solar and wind energy will be produced. With the 500,000 barrels of imported petroleum, he reaches a total consumption of 1.5 million barrels in 1985. According to the mines and energy minister, PETROBRAS is using 70 percent of its funds in exploration (it was 37 percent in 1978), a geologist was raised to the level of director and the more sophisticated equipment used increased drilling capability from 3,000 to 5,000 meters in depth.

Gasification Technology From France

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 17 Nov 80 p 13

[Text] Brasilia--France will transfer to Brazil the complete cycle of technology for coal extraction and gasification and will install three thermoelectric power stations in the coal-bearing regions of Santa Catarina and Rio Grande do Sul, according to information received yesterday from a highly-placed government source.

The decision was made by the governments of the two countries during the visit of Mines and Energy Minister Cesar Cals to Paris last September pursuant to the treaty of bilateral cooperation signed by the two countries in May of this year.

According to the same source, Brazil's intention is to acquire coal technology from different sources, in order to have total mastery of the coal sector within 5 years. Besides France, which is to install three power plants in Brazil, the government is also holding talks with Czechoslovakia, since the second source of technology transfer should be an East European country, which for a long time has been negotiating to broaden commercial exchange with Brazil.

Joint Ventures

In a first stage, Brazil and France will sign agreements for forming joint ventures for the thermoelectric power stations. These agreements may be signed during President Joao Figueiredo's visit to Paris in January.

In a second stage of Franco-Brazilian cooperation--the two countries will hold a series of technical meetings from now on--three to five plants for coal gasification and conversion to coke, coal appropriate for industrial use, will be installed.

This second stage, said the same source, aims to substitute domestic energy sources for fuel imported now, in large quantities, by the paper, cement and ceramics industries, large consumers of imported petroleum.

Coal Discovered in Acre

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 8 Nov 80 p 19

[Text] Rio Branco--Djalma Lacerda, superintendent of the Mineral Resources Prospecting Company (CPRM) for the Amazon region, informed Governor Joaquim Macedo yesterday of discovering three large coal deposits of very pure content in different regions of Acre. He also announced that the company has 120 million cruzeiros available for exploring the discovered areas beginning next January.

Of the three deposits discovered, CPRM experts say the most promising is 150 kilometers from Rio Branco, in a rubber-tree forest in the municipality of Xapuri, served by highway BR-317. The other two are located on Serra do Moa in Cruzeiro do Sul municipality and in the Labrea region on the border with the state of Amazonas.

The news even caught Governor Joaquim Macedo by surprise, as he did not even know that CPRM geologists were prospecting in the state. According to information from State Transportation Secretary Fernando Moutinho, the exact potential of these deposits is not yet known, although CPRM experts are sure they are of high-purity coal and, what is more important, are surface outcrops.

According to the exploration schedule established by the CPRM, evaluation of the first deposit, in the Labrea region, will begin in January. Exploration in the Xapuri rubber-tree forest will begin in March and shortly thereafter the coal potential of the third deposit, that of Serra do Moa, will be evaluated, in a region where deposits of gold and liquified petroleum gas have already been discovered.

Ten years ago the company, which has headquarters in Porto Velho, Roraima, prospected for ores in the Territory of Rondonia but now, due to these discoveries, its attention will be directed more to Acre, where there are indications of large deposits of combustible minerals.

Simultaneously with exploring the coal deposits, the CPRM will make studies for using the clay in Acre for the civil construction industry. As there is no stone in the state, the government will try to obtain funds from SUDAM [Superintendency for the Development of the Amazon Region] for the research aimed at utilizing clay. An agreement for this purpose will be signed within 10 days between the CPRM regional superintendency and the state government.

PROALCOOL, AFTER 5 YEARS, IS WITHIN 60.7% OF ITS 1985 GOAL

[Text] Brasilia--The National Alcohol Program (PROALCOOL), created 14 November 1975, completed 5 years yesterday with guaranteed annual production (from both existing and approved distilleries) of 6.5 billion liters, which represents 60.7 percent of the goal of 10.7 billion liters set for 1985.

This year production of fuel alcohol should reach 4.1 billion liters, surpassing by 300 million liters the goal set for 1980 at the beginning of the program. This production is enough to supply a fleet of 1.7 million alcohol-powered vehicles for 1 year, consuming 200,liters per month (the average consumption of gasoline-powered cars is currently 125 liters per month).

Fleet of Vehicles

According to estimates of the Industry and Commerce Ministry, by October there were about 140,000 original alcohol-powered cars and about 18,000 cars converted for alcohol use in Brazil. Conversion of 100,000 and production of 300,000 vehicles is expected for next year.

Nationwide, there are 3,148 stations that supply alcohol and 5,000 more have been authorized to install special tanks and pumps for alcohol. With the latest authorizations 2 weeks ago, all Brazilian states now have alcohol stations.

Through the end of this year, the PROALCOOL budget will reach 37 billion cruzeiros, and should increase to 55 billion cruzeiros next year. By 1985, according to the Industry and Commerce Ministry, investments of 305 billion cruzeiros, at today's prices, will be needed.

The surpassing of annual production goals and the rapid increase of production capacity (approved projects) are already causing the government to think about increasing the PROALCOOL goal of 10.7 billion liters in 1985 to 14.6 billion liters in the 1986-87 crop year. That increase, however, still depends upon availability of funds from the World Bank (IBRD) for the program.

In marking the 5 years of PROALCOOL, the Agriculture Ministry published a document prepared by its coordinator of energy programs, Antonio Arantes Licio, who participated in preparing the program. In the document, Licio defends PROALCOOL against criticisms that have been made.

According to him, PROALCOOL has been meeting and surpassing all its goals, "so that neither the government nor the private sector can be accused of inefficiency." Nevertheless, the economist admits that, although "unquestionably successful from the quantitative point of view," PROALCOOL does have some problems.

In his opinion, "there is a relative unconcern for diversification of the monoculture established by sugar cane (which can be disastrous in terms of diseases, as the latest crop year in Cuba verifies), and the specific opportunity to solve problems of regional income inequalities through a policy of utilizing the North and Northeast for alcohol production is not being taken advantage of."

EFFORTS TO OFFSET OIL CRISIS SUMMARIZED

Santiago LA NACION in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 3

/Text/ Chile is taking effective steps to meet the challenge posed by the global oil crisis which has been further aggravated by the conflict between Iran and Iraq, two of the major Persian Gulf suppliers. As a result broad plans of action have been prepared, especially in the area of hydrocarbons.

Under the direction of this administration, 3 years ago a program called "Offshore" was started. It consists of offshore exploration, prospecting and exploitation of the continental shelf within the 200 kilometer limit under the direction and administration of the ENAP /National Petroleum Enterprise/.

Strait of Magellan

In September 1976 the drilling vessel Nugget, leased by ENAP, began operations in the Strait of Magellan. This was the start of the offshore program. The Nugget discovered a series of deposits, the most important of which are Ostion, Spiteful, Posesion, Anguila, Mejillones, Jaiba and Catalina Norte. These represent a significant oil reserve for the nation.

At the same time, ENAP established a support infrastructure to meet the demands for services and operations that were required during the exploratory phase. This led to the construction of the Laredo plant which is designed to contract for the construction of drilling platforms and assemble the submarine pipeline which will extend from a dock where all the material necessary for the offshore operations will be loaded and transmitted.

Drilling Platforms

To date, the following operations are underway:

Name of Platform	Location	No. of Wells	Start of Production
OS-1	Ostion	9	January 1979
SP-1	Spiteful	9	December 1979
Sp-2	Spiteful	10	February 1980
PO-1	Posesion	9	June 1980
SP-3	Spiteful		September 1980

Drilling is also taking place now at the sixth platform--SP-4 at Spiteful-- and it should began producing in early 1981.

Drilling Platform Built in Chile

At the end of June construction of the Magallanes drilling equipment was completed in Chile by ASMAR /Naval Docks and Yards/. Use of the Magallanes, Nugget and ENAP-10 enables Chile to drill 70 exploratory and developmental wells per year.

In 1981 plans call for the addition of three and a half drilling platforms per year until the entire area currently being explored has been completely covered.

A 50 Percent Increase in Production

The Offshore Program has insured that Chile can meet one-third of its demand for petroleum and derivatives. In 1980 production will increase by 50 percent over last year.

The Offshore Program is not ENAP's only program since it is exploring and prospecting in areas north of Magallanes.

Central Mainland Zone

In its annual report ENAP states that "exploration in the Central Zone in 1979 was limited to the Arauco Basin and included Mocha and Santa Maria Islands. Geological studies and seismic tests were conducted and exploratory wells were dug in the northern tip of the Arauco Peninsula (Rumena and Mocha Island).

At the Osorno Basin surface geological studies and seismic tests were conducted. During the year 8 wells were drilled in the Arauco Basin--one at Rumena and seven at Mocha Island--for a total depth of 10,953 meters. Each well had an average depth of 1,369 meters and the maximum depth was 1,725 meters.

The annual report states that in 1979 Team No. 8 drilled a total of eight wells for a total depth of 10,953 meters in Mocha Island and Rumena. The results of the drilling are as follows:

Two exploratory wells produced gas; three wells were dry; the classification of one exploratory well is pending and one gas well was expanded.

Rate of Production

The Magallanes deposits last year produced 1.202 million m^3 of crude oil with an average daily rate of 3,293 m^3. Over the past 3 years, production in cubic meters was as follows;

	1977	1978	1979
Tierra del Fuego	512,362	444,825	362,566
Mainland	619,533	553,703	502,501
Offshore	------	------	336,981
TOTALS	1,131,895	998,528	1,202,048

Natural Gas

During the same period, natural gas production was 5,732 million m^3 and production during the 1st 3 years was as follows:

1977	7,719 million m^3
1978	6,167 million m^3
1979	5,732 million m^3

The lower production figure, as compared to prior years, reflects implementation of the natural gas conservation policy.

Gasoline

The Posesion plants--Cabo Negro on the mainland and Cullen in Tierra del Fuego--processed 4,316 million m^3 of natural gas.

Production per 1000 m^3

	1977	1978	1979
Processed natural gas	4,600,000	4,549,000	4,316,000
Liquid gas produced	481	480	443
Natural gasoline	157	160	149

ENAP continues to expand its work in Magallanes and Region 8 to other areas as we shall see in other articles. This demonstrates the concern of General Pinochet's government over the future of our energy supplies. What is being done in the field of petroleum is complemented with plans and developments in other areas such as coal, geothermal energy, water and atomic energy.

Exploration Over 12,000 Square Kilometers

ENAP is expanding its prospecting operations in an offshore area approximately 12,000 square kilometers in size which lies at the mouth of the Maipo and Bio Bio Rivers where the sedimentary basins of Navidad, Mataquito, Chanco and Itata are located.

The program which will begin next month calls for 12 probes which could be expanded to 18, according to Carlos Mordojovich Kaplan, head of ENAP's Contract Operations Division. Mordojovich attended the Third Academic Conference of Civil Engineering and Mining held recently in Santiago. The purpose of the conference was to analyze the outlook of oil exploration in Chile's southern zone.

Large Reserves

It was explained that exploration extends to only one part of the continental shelf which extends from Valparaiso to Cape Horn and is some 100,000 square kilometers in size.

These operations do not mean that there is disregard for what is taking place in the Magallanes area where the results have been very successful.

The official said that given the size of the area which will be explored and its geological configuration, it is not possible to predict whether reserves here will be 10 times greater than those in Magallanes.

Most of these resources are found at depths greater than 120 meters so that costs will be quite high.

NEW ELECTRICITY RATES STRUCTURE NOT TO HURT CONSUMER

Santiago LA TERCERA DE LA HORA in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 21

/Text/ The new electricity rate structure which went into effect on 25 October "does not represent a real increase (aside from the CPI) for 95 percent of the nation's consumers," Bruno Philippi, executive secretary of the CNE /National Power Commission/ said.

The official gave assurances that government subsidies would continue for those residential users using less than 250 kilowatts per month. Subsidies will be paid in full in those cases where less than 40 kilowatts per month are used.

Philippi gave a detailed report entitled National Energy Strategy during a seminar organized by CORFO's /Production Development Corporation/ Development Management section and attended by prominent ECLA /Economic Commission for Latin America/, U.S. and Japanese experts.

The CNE executive secretary emphasized that the reason for the establishment of three different rates (simple rate, contract rate and hourly rate) for electricity users was that "in many cases the rates were lower than each company's cost of production." He said that as a result, government subsidies--"provided by the people"--were given equally to "large and powerful companies and to low income consumers. In many cases, the low income consumers appeared to be subsidizing these firms."

Insure Profits

During his speech, however, Philippi acknowledged that all of the reforms and innovations undertaken or to be undertaken in the area of electricity "are designed to insure a business profit, otherwise no one will want to invest in the company."

Among the changes the Power Commission is considering is one which guarantees that any business or private investor with its own plants or distribution network will be able to use ENDESA's /National Electric Power Company/ communications network to transmit its electricity.

Bruno Philippi said that "FRONTEL /Frontier Electric Power Company/ and SAESA /Southern Electric Power Association/ are examples of this alternative" and the two are now receiving bids for private management contracts.

Private Sector Philosophy

Philippi pointed out that the philosophy behind the new electricity rates and the regulations to be adopted in the future "provide clear guidelines for the private sector: resources exist and their development is basically your responsibility."

The CNE estimates that in the next 15 years--1981-1996--some $5 billion will be invested in the electric power interconnected system. In the next decade, $3.5 billion will be invested in oil and gas, $400 million in the Norte Grande electric power network and $150 million in coal.

"The idea behind this is that regardless of who the investor is financing will be possible," Philippi said. With respect to eventual government participation in future electric power projects, he said that "government involvement will be limited to those areas where resources are poorly used."

As part of the new CNE policy, "electricity prices will be able to reflect the costs of production and distribution. There is no justification for basing rates on the type of consumer and rates should be determined by the demand and location."

The Three Rates

According to statements made by the Ministry of the Economy on 25 October, the "simple rate" will be "very similar to the one currently in effect for residential users," and is composed of a set monthly rate (independent of kilowatts used) and an energy fee (which is caluclated by multiplying the total number of kilowatts used by the rate per kilowatt). A surcharge will be added during May and September which will be identical to the current winter rate.

The rate for "contract energy" will be based on a yearly contract which will set a maximum amount of energy each consumer can use and it will consist of a fixed monthly rate, a surcharge on the maximum contracted for and an energy fee. The first charge would be paid regardless of the amount consumed and the second fee would be calculated by multiplying total kilowatts used by the rate per kilowatt.

Finally, the "hourly rate" calls for a rate on consumption during peak hours (between 1800 and 2100 hours from May through September) and a different rate for use at other times. Thus those who use power during the off peak hours will benefit from lower rates.

Which One to Choose?

Bruno Philippi said that for the vast majority of users the "simple rate" would most closely parallel current rates. "Contract energy" would benefit those who use more than 210 kilowatts per month and the "hourly rate" would benefit those who can greatly decrease used during peak hours (1800 to 2100 hours) in the winter.

According to the CNE executive secretary, these new rates "do not mean that each power company will earn more than before. On the contrary, they will earn enough to stay in business."

HYDROELECTRIC COMPLEX ON LAJA RIVER NEARS COMPLETION

Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 9 Nov 80 p C-5

/Text/ Los Angeles--Among the slopes of the La Polucura mountain, 80 kilometers east of here, construction is being completed on the nation's most important hydroelectric complex which is composed of the Abanico, El Toro and Antuco power stations. Together they will generate 3.8 million kilowatt hours per year and will make possible the irrigation of nearly 200,000 hectares adjacent to the Laja River basin .

Since 1942 when the Abanico power station was built, when mules were still being used to remove stone and prepare the ground for the station, to the present, 38 years later, the National Power Enterprise has invested some $800 million and built over 100 kilometers of roads, 8 towns, schools, hospitals and several buildings.

It has also moved millions of tons of rocks and dirt, diverted rivers, built dams, trapped streams and dug underground tunnels which weave under hills carrying the water which will generate electricity.

The terrain is harsh, wild and inclement in winter and very hot in the summer. Men and machines work day and night to complete the last section of the hydroelectric complex.

Some 5,000 people work at Antuco for five contract firms and ENDESA /National Electric Power Company/. Daily 10,000 sacks of cement are used. Some go into the making of 400 tons of concrete each day. The quantity of materials being used could be used to build a 10-story tower every 3 days. The number of explosives used to carve out over 50 kilometers of tunnels totals 6,315,000 sticks of dynamite weighing 960,000 kilos. Placed end to end they would stretch from Santiago to Ancud.

The only jobs requiring 4,000 tons of steel are shielding and pipes. The laser beams was first used in our country to lay out the tunnel network.

Nine Years of Work

Antuco was begun in 1972 and its cost was estimated at $300 million. It will generate 300,000 kilowatts and it will use the waters expelled from the El Toro power station, which generates 400,000 kilowatts, and the Abanico power station, which generates 136,000 kilowatts. To this volume of water must be added the waters of the Laja and Polcura rivers in addition to that of small rivers such as the Pichipolcrua River, the El Toro stream and others. The combined volume of these waterways would activate the two turbines in the powerhouse which would stimulate the generators into producing electricity.

Each of the turbogenerators weighs 360 tons and is being installed by Japanese technicians. To lift the equipment into place it was necessary to bring a bridge crane from Holland which can lift 400 tons.

The quantity of concrete which has to be used would be enough to build a road between Santiago and Linares. One of the valves which controls the passage of water into the powerhouse is five meters in diameter and is the largest of its kind in the world.

To build the intake over the Polcura River it was necessary to inject a mixture of cement and bentonite into the ground. The intake, which is also the largest of its kind in Chile, was built on top.

Antuco is scheduled to be tested in January. If the tests are successful, it will begin operating immediately.

The Long Trip from Mountain to Turbine

The major river which will enable the hydroelectric complex to operate is the Laja which was formed by successive lava flows which blocked the Rio Laja Valley and limited its waters to a level of some 1,360 meters.

From here, by way of underground pipelines, the El Toro power station pumps the water down a distance of 9,000 meters to the powerhouse where four 158,000 horse power turbines turn the generators which produce electricity. Afterwards, the water is emptied into the Polcura River.

Downstream, over 30 meters high and 170 meters wide and spanning the river bed, is the intake which will divert the waters from this river which originates near the Argentine border. The river's volume is fed by hundreds of streams flowing from the mountains.

The intake is the largest of its kind in Chile. It consists of five spillway gates which are 10.20 meters wide and 16 meters high and two "openings" or gates for gravel removal and dumping. To build the intake it was necessary to remove nearly 300,000 m^3 of dirt and its foundation extends 25 meters below the water level. The dam will have a capacity of 1 million m^3 and will cover a 100 hectare area.

From this point to the valve room at the Antuco power station, the water will travel through 5,000 meters of tunnels. The tunnel is 6.60 meters at its widest point.

Laja River

At the same time, the Abanico power station feeds its generators by diverting water from the Laja River through canals and forcing it through six pipelines to the powerhouse where it is converted into electric power. Then the water is emptied into the Laja River.

Since this river's volume of flow was increased by the effluence from the Abanico power station, it is held back by a new intake that is almost 35 meters long and has three service gates and three minor ones. The water travels through over 7,000 meters of tunnels, covered and uncovered canals. As it flows toward the common duct which will carry it, along with the entire water supply, to the Antuco powerhouse, it is joined by the Pichipolcura River through a tunnel-like intake.

The turbulent volume of water moves toward the valve room where it is diverted into two pipelines (like a pair of pants) which drop vertically 600 meters to the turbines in the powerhouse.

Shortly before the water is diverted it goes through a surge tank which removes the air pockets from the water. It is 95 meters high and 20.3 meters in diameter. It is the size of a 36 story building.

In the powerhouse the water surges through the turbines with a force of about 26 kilograms per centimeter of area turning a steel rotor weighing 360 tons. This action activates the turbogenerators, weighing over 360 tons, which will convert the water into electric power.

BRIEFS

OIL WORKERS FORM FEDERATION--Vina del Mar--Over 80 union leaders from Magallanes, Concepcion, Concon and Santiago, representing petroleum workers throughout the country, yesterday formed the National Federation of Petroleum and Petroleum Derivatives Workers Unions of Chile. The ceremony, which was held at the O'Higgins Hotel at 1830 hours, was attended by ENAP [National Petroleum Enterprise] general manager Ernesto Silva, Concon Plant and Refinery manager Jose Munilla, AIFLD director Bruce Jay and national union leaders. A representative from the Vina del Mar Labor Inspectors Office was also present. The union leaders approved the articles of incorporation and elected five directors. The directors will decide among themselves what offices they will hold. The National Federation of Petroleum and Petroleum Derivatives Workers Unions of Chile will be under the leadership of Antonio Mimiza Kbrazevich of Magallanes, Ernesto Barrientso de Giorgio of Concon, Emilio Ceballos Prosser of Concepcion, Marcos Munoz Barra of Santiago and Hugo Morales Guanel of Magallanes. OFFSHORE DRILLING--Exploratory drilling for oil off Chile's southern coast will be resumed in the next few days. The drilling is being conducted by ARCO Petroleos Chile, S.A., ENAP announced yesterday. The first well in the new project, Chepu No. 1, will be sunk approximately 50 kilometers east of Chiloe at a depth of 148 meters. The well will be dug to a depth of 1,707 meters and will be located some 15 kilometers southeast of the exploratory drilling done in the Lacuy formation in November 1979 and March 1980. The drilling will be done from the Bean Ocean Lancer, a 154 meter long drilling vessel owned by the Ben Odeco Firm of Bermuda. The ship has apowerful stabilizing system which uses its own power to remain in position above the well without using traditional anchors. The ship entered the Strait of Magellan yesterday (Tuesday) and it is expected in Chepu on Sunday. The Danish ship Danwood Ice is already drilling the first oil well, Lacuy 1, under an agreement between the Chilean government, represented by ENAP, and Atlantic Richfield of the United States. BECHTEL SAID TO BE MANAGING FIRM FOR ORINOCO DEVELOPMENT

Caracas EL DIARIO DE CARACAS in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 9

[Text] "The planning and bidding procedures that have been carried out need to be frozen, so that the consensus proposed by the minister of energy and mines, Humberto Calderon Berti, may have a goal."

A member of the National Energy Council expressed this opinion upon learning of the minister's decision in conjunction with the subsidiaries of Venezuelan Petroleum Inc. (PDVSA).

The source claimed that there is an obvious contradiction in the minister's statements, in the fact that he said that there would be a consultation and, at the same time, announced through all the news media that the plans to produce 370,000 barrels per day in the Orinoco Belt are still being maintained.

LAGOVEN is planning a huge commercial module the size of which can be gaged from the fact that 1,100 wells will be drilled to produce 170,000 barrels per day, and there will be 60 flow stations and at least 15 steam generator stations.

Owing to its size and the responsibility for developing it, LAGOVEN christened this project a "mega-project."

The source noted: "The project is so large-scale that it is larger than the Guri, SIDOR [Orinoco Iron and Steel Works] and the one to change the refining standard at Amuay, all together."

'South Development of Anzoategui and Monagas'

This development, known in oil industry circles as the DSAM [South Development of Anzoategui and Monagas] project, was assigned by LAGOVEN, a subsidiary of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. (PDVSA), to the Bechtel Corporation, and the bids for contracting for the total management of the project were opened on 14 October of this year. The Venezuelan firms will act only as executors of the project.

This is a project for development, and is by no means associated with exploration and evaluation.

This report was made by the LAGOVEN board of directors, headed by Guillermo Rodriguez Eraso, on 2 October of this year, to a committee from the National Congress, led by Pompeyo Marquez, Francisco Mieres and Guerra Ramos, members of the National Energy Council.

Documents sent by the minister himself stated that, insofar as both LAGOVEN and MENEVEN were concerned, the development phase would be undertaken.

Moreover, the source remarked that if, in fact, a correction is to be made, through consensus, then the entire matter should be turned over to the aforementioned National Energy Council, an agency which has not been called upon for consultation even once since its creation.

In conclusion, the source claimed that the main backer for the research field should be comprised of the Venezuelan Institute of Petroleum Technology (INTEVEP) and the Ministry of Energy and Mines. Other entities could act as support facilities for the research.

CALDERON BERTI DISCUSSES ORINOCO OIL DEVELOPMENT POLICY

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 19 Nov 80 Sec 1 p 15

[Text] The minister of energy and mines, engineer Humberto Calderon Berti, announced a national consultation on the plans devised for the operations in the Orinoco Oil Belt.

On a television network, the head of the Ministry of Energy and Mines made the following statement:

"The oil policy has been carried out with the spirit of 'consensus' proposed in the government program.

"The most extensive publicity has been given to the oil issue. The country has been kept constantly informed, and an open dialog has been held with all sectors of the populace so that, through its participation, it might contribute ideas, observations and comments on the features of a truly national management.

"Venezuela is an active witness to a tremendous expansion and intensification of its oil industry, as reflected in a progressive fashion since nationalization, and with constantly increasing intensity.

"We are in a process of making nationalization more deepseated. It is not limited to the nationalization act of January 1976, but, in view of its importance and significance, it must be continued so that the county may make its oil and industry not a mere producer of tax revenue, but converted into a tremendous instrument for national development and international negotiation.

"A great effort has been expended in all of the industry's activities. Of particular importance has been the renegotiation of the contracts involving technology and marketing on terms that are quite different and far more favorable to the nation's interests than those which had been in effect since January 1976.

"President Herrera Campins promised that the oil industry would not be politicized in terms of partisan manipulation. In nearly 2 years of this administration, the nation recognizes the government's earnestness in keeping that commitment.

"The industry's operational continuity has been maintained and the pace of the programs has been intensified. A sustained effort has been made in exploration involving the Cretaceous area of Lake Maracaibo, the continental shelf (with major gas discoveries) and in the Orinoco oil belt. In the latter area we are conducting a very promising exploratory program which calls for the drilling of over 150 wells this year, a number exceeding that of all those drilled in this area during Venezuela's oil history. This task is being performed through our four operating companies, and its purpose is to afford us sufficent information by 1983 to enable us to calculate the hydrocarbon resources in that part of the nation's geographical area.

"We are progressing with the crude in the belt, with research and development programs geared to determining, among other things, the volume of hydrocarbons there which we can produce, and the methods for improvement that will make them more marketable.

"We intend to notify various sectors of the country concerning the plans devised for the operations in the belt. Once the Council of Ministers has been consulted, we shall make reports of information to various institutions, in order to hear their views. This consultation is related to the spirit of participation that is one of the essential aspects of President Herrera Campins' government. We shall incorporate the ideas and comments that will help to improve the plan, without shirking the responsibilities incumbent on us with regard to decisionmaking.

"The strip must be thought of as a program for total development for the country. Its dimensions and duration in time afford a remarkable opportunity for Venezuela to achieve major progress in its native engineering design capacity, in the establishment of a strong metal working industry and in the affirmation of a national capacity for constructing industrial facilities.

"We are striving to integrate the oil operations with the interests of regional development. Therefore, in the case of the belt and any other future oil activity, we favor the making of agricultural-livestock, agroindustrial and territorial type studies and plans, as well as those involving environmental conservation, so that all this may allow for harmony and complementation in the programs with the overall growth of the areas in which they are being carried out.

"In the petrochemical field, we have been making substantial progress. For the first time, all the plants are being kept in operation. There has been a considerable reduction in losses, and we are optimistic about the industry's definitive recovery.

"One of the most novel and important features of our oil policy is the 'concept of totality' in the international trade of hydrocarbons. The days of cheap, plentiful oil are far distant. The guarantee and reliability of supplies are acquiring increasing importance. We cannot be content merely with demanding in return for the oil supplies additional advantages for the country such as: the opening of markets in the consuming countries for our industrial export products, a guarantee of food supplies for the populace, and a commitment to carry out programs for agricultural development, housing or other kinds.

"We have diversified our customers and markets, and we have reduced the 85 percent of the oil that we were marketing through the multinationals at the time of nationalization to under 50 percent.

"We have maintained a position of constant creativity and imagination within OPEC. We have brought forward some major proposals. The OPEC news agency was established at the initiative of Venezuela. The status of the developing countries has been a constant matter for our concern. In this regard, we have proposed substantial replenishment of the OPEC Special Fund and, with Algeria, we have called for the creation of a development agency or financial entity with sufficient efficiency and flexibility to cooperate in a more effective manner with the Third World countries which are suffering the onslaughts of worldwide inflation, increased interest rates on the international financial markets and increased oil prices.

"We have intensified bilateral relations with all the countries which are members of the organization, through constant personal contacts and institutions with all of them.

"As part of this effort for rapprochement, special significance was attached to the visit paid by the president of the republic to all the Arab countries in North Africa and the Persian Gulf that belong to OPEC, in order to bolster still further the excellent relations which Venezuela has with all its OPEC associates. The effort expended to strengthen the diplomatic missions in those countries has proven very useful.

"We had the honor and the great responsibility of holding the presidency of OPEC during much of the 20th anniversary of its founding.

"The organization is experiencing some difficult times because of the absurd conflict between two of its founding countries. We are optimistic about its future. We have made individual proposals and joint proposals with other members of the organization for ending the conflict. We are on the eve of a regular meeting of ministers. On that occasion, we shall make every effort to restore normality to OPEC.

"An important item on the agenda for that conference will be the consideration of the prefeasibility study prepared by the secretariat on the proposal of President Herrera Campins to create an institute of higher studies for the Third World countries to be financed by OPEC, the location of which has been offered by Venezuela.

"Our proposals and accomplishments in the realm of inter-American energy have been particularly noteworthy. We must underscore the Venezuelan proposal for the energy cooperation program for Central America and the Caribbean, signed by Presidents Herrera Campins and Lopez Portillo. Through the guarantee for oil supplies and financial cooperation on special terms for nine countries of the region, palpable proof of international solidarity is being given and a major contribution is being made to the region's economic and political stability. This Venezuelan-Mexican proposal has received broad international support.

"We are deeply gratified by the achievements that we can offer the country from our oil administration. The task must continue in a sustained manner, and with the most compulsory willingness to carry out the commitments made to develop an authentic, creative policy in the fundamental area of oil."

CENDES STUDY GIVES ALTERNATE ORINOCO DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

Caracas EL DIARIO DE CARACAS in Spanish 16 Nov 80 p 13

[Text] The Economic Development Studies Center (CENDES) submitted a forecast of the tax revenue from oil from this year until the year 2000 to the Ministry of Energy and Mines.

The CENDES researchers based their findings, among other things, on the fact that the Orinoco oil belt should not continue to be viewed as the country's "economic salvation," insofar as the volume of tax revenue is concerned.

This tax revenue from oil is nothing more than the sum of the dividends turned over by the industry to its only stockholder, the nation, after having paid the operating costs and determined the reserves required for investment.

The forecast of the tax revenue from oil submitted to the Ministry of Mines expresses concern over the present development strategy for the industry, focused on the accelerated development of the Orinoco oil belt, "because it is leading to an escalation of costs and to investment volumes which cannot be offset by the foreseeable hike in oil prices."

Relatively speaking, the government's participation will be reduced from 65 percent on sales to 35 percent, and from 81 percent of the gross profit (without counting the royalties as costs) to 67 percent.

These results are based on an average increase in export prices of 3.5 percent, over the annual inflation rate. If that average declined one point interannually, it would suffice to make the tax revenue drop to 31.5 billion in 1990, and to 17.37 billion in the year 2000. This represents a reduction of over 50 percent in two decades.

Alternatives

Although the development of the belt is of strategic importance to the oil consuming countries, especially the United States, as a major consumer, Venezuela must consider its overall interests related to development, and assign to the belt project the pace that is most in keeping with its internal objectives.

An attempt has been made to evaluate whether what best suits the country is to reinvest a substantial portion of the present oil revenue in the production of an oil that is far more expensive in investment, extraction and improvement, paying a large amount of those costs to multinational companies for designs, technology, equipment and input, while at the same time making the agricultural frontier undergo a setback.

The CENDES report states: "Admitting that the development of the belt is subject to international pressure, this project is an irreversible reality. Therefore, its rate of progress should be reduced. The goal for the year 2000 should be half a million barrels per day, instead of a million. This quantitative goal seems more in keeping with the objective of making the development of the belt a 'major research project,' because it will allow for the solid formation of human resources and, at the same time, adhere to the evolution of the world energy picture."

DIFFERENT ASPECTS OF ARGENTINE-BRAZILIAN REGIMES DEFINED

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 8

[Article by Miguel J. Culaciatti]

[Text] Brazil began a cycle of military governments much earlier than Argentina did, and for this reason it could be looked at as a valid example, with certain exceptions, for studying the future of our country.

Although the circumstances that gave rise to the establishment of a military regime in Brasilia were different from local circumstances, there are some elements that both cases have in common.

Here and there the Armed Forces have entered power in an as yet unheard of way. The three branches of the military acted in concert to occupy power, as an entity without a head. There is a president, but he has been imposed, and answers voluntarily to the dictates of the high commands together. They in turn give orders to the mid-level ranks, giving the exercise of military power a vastness never seen in the democratic life of either country.

The Brazilian process did not achieve the philosophical profundity of the Argentine system, in which the Armed Forces have formulated the concept of military institutionalization. This concept is unlike the Brazilian system, but it is in keeping with the spirit of its historical development.

Because they stemmed from different origins, the regimes, although parallel in many aspects, differ in tactics and strategy.

Brazil played the card of alliance with the United States, and tried to dynamize its tropical structure by implementing Pharaonic plans, in accordance with the country's traditional propensity for grand national projects.

It planned the future in the long term, building a powerful basic industry with the support of foreign credit and the development of important state plans in the area of nuclear and hydroelectric energy, education and communications of all kinds. In a politically dormant atmosphere, the necessary semivoluntary social tranquility was guaranteed in a tame and unaware population.

Coinciding international and internal circumstances permitted this plan to yield positive results during the first part of its application.

These were the years of "Brazil the new power" and the romance with the United States, when an attempt was made to set up a zone of Brazilian predominance in South America.

Brazil undoubtedly reaped great benefits from its bold policy. The nation transformed its structures, and above all, made a great effort to integrate its most poor and isolated sectors into national life.

It would be unfair to detract from Brazil's accomplishments, no matter what errors were committed in the process.

However, Brazil's plan suffered from some important strategic defects. There were erroneous or improvised tactics which led to contradictory results.

In my opinion, the shortcoming that can be pinpointed in this plan is in the area of foreign dependence.

The development of a nation can be approached with long-term or short-term objectives in mind, and with a certain timing that is necessarily conditioned by the political pressures exerted against governments in the eternal challenge to demonstrate the validity and success of the proposed policy.

For this reason, the tactic adopted will also be conditioned by the availability of political time.

In the case of all military governments in modern nations, political time is running out rapidly. The life of these regimes is perforce a short one, and it can only be prolonged through success, or due to fear stemming from internal or external factors that behoove the people to maintain a regime of forced security.

Time ran out for the Brazilian Government before it achieved its objectives, forcing it to enter into political transactions in a position of extreme vulnerability.

The international energy situation which upset Brazil's balance of trade acted as a detonator which set off the explosion of long-contained internal forces.

All actions by the military government were placed under the microscope of public scrutiny, a situation which made it very difficult to reason impartially, especially during times of crisis. The opposition objected to the enormous foreign debt and to the use of investments. The most important and sensitive government projects, such as the $50 billion nuclear plan or the Itaipu Dam, were severely threatened.

In a multiplier effect, the criticism damaged the credibility of the nation's leaders, leading to successive changes of personnel even though the regime proved to be capable of responding firmly.

If the sovereignty of a nation must be measured in terms of its real ability to act independently on the international scene, certainly Brazil is not in its heyday.

The political process would have been quite different had the liberalization been initiated firmly 6 or 7 years earlier, when Brazil was going through the best years of economic progress.

The Brazilians of that time were understandably proud of the development of their country, and would have firmly supported the pursuit of the political, economic and social process proposed by the military government.

Today, on the other hand, things are quite different, and we should beware not to make the same mistake. If we really want to prevent our country from falling into new demagogy or changes in the nation's legal and institutional life, we must create the economic and social conditions that will enable the people to have faith in a medium-term government program.

In Argentina it is more difficult to stir that faith than it is in Brazil, because we Argentines have experienced the consequences of the defeatist skepticism that encouraged demogoguery and the malfunctioning of our institutions. However, we must harbor that faith without hesitation, considering that the world is no longer a compartmentalized checkerboard of isolated nations. It is an ever-growing market for goods and services, ideas, lifestyles and aspirations in common, in which due to certain circumstances, we occupy a privileged position. We repeat ad infinitum: territory, geographic location, population, oil, uranium, food, technology, sea, culture, etc. We have all these things, and we should use them with the responsibility of an adult nation that no longer looks to copy Europe or the United States in terms of their decadent cultures. Now we should draw from our national roots the proud strength that will enable us to find once and for all the true Argentine personality, integrated into the Western world and the particular region in which we live with solidarity and independence.

I have not tried to draw a parallel between the two systems of government, but to point out that in certain aspects the Brazilian regime is older than ours, and is beginning to show the ravages of time. These signs should be heeded so that errors in political planning in Argentina can be rectified, to avoid a new disillusionment.

Political liberalization amid a social crisis only benefits those who are responsible for it; it transfers to the new leaders the hard-to-solve problems that might lead to their downfall. And of course, the eternal aspirants to the de facto presidency are always ready to take advantage of such failures.

It is also necessary to bear in mind that institutionalization means "burning the ships" of the Armed Forces.

The one who fails, if anyone, will not be man, but the military institution, the mainstay of our national life. Thus, the Marxist ideology will triumph, and the dissatisfied people will turn to the organized left.

BRIEFS

SUPPORT OF JUNTA CRITICIZED--The first international conference of Christians for political commitment with El Salvador ended in Mexico City with a strong criticism of international Christian democracy for its support of the Salvadoran military junta. It also recognized the Revolutionary Democratic Front and its vanguard, the Farabundo Marti National Liberation, as the legitimate representative of the Salvadoran people. Representatives of more than 80 religious organizations from Latin America, the United States, Canada and several European countries criticized the treachery carried out by the Christian Democratic Party in power in El Salvador, which is playing up to the local oligarchy and reactionary forces which are massacring the people. They also criticized U.S. participation in the repression unleashed in El Salvador and also the U.S. government's attempts to manipulate international Christian democracy and some governments in order to control the revolutionary process after failing to break down the people's resistance. The conference, which was held under the title: "The Church That Emerges From the People and the Insurrection in El Salvador," recognized the existence of this new church and criticized the church high officials, the majority of whom are siding with the exploiters and refusing to admit that the people's Christian communities are legitimate. PAPER VOICES ALARM OVER BOLIVIA'S NEW SECURITY LAW

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 31 Oct 80 p 8

[Editorial: "Intimidation in Bolivia"]

[Text] The government of Bolivia has announced the imminent approval of a new state security law providing for the death penalty for "subversives and extremists." It is not the extreme penalty which arouses the greatest concern. The death penalty is a debatable question, the subject of conflicting opinions, but within the legal procedures and the required guarantees for the proper defense of those charged, it is currently applied in countries with a high level of civilization. On the other hand, justified apprehension is caused by the ill winds encouraging or inspiring the legal proposals seeking its use in Bolivia as a tool of national security. This inspiration appears distorted by ill will or political passion, rather than based on a healthy and thoughtful juridical base.

The minister of interior of this neighboring nation himself has publicly stated that "there will be pardon for no one, so that the subversives, extremists and rumormongers should travel with their Bibles under their arms. Those of us who have administrative functions will take up machineguns to settle accounts with shameless people . . . It does not disturb me to send 'innumerable shameless persons' to the wall," he said.

The president of the military government of Bolivia for his part has said publicly that the former presidential candidates and trade union leaders in his country, all of them identified by first and last name, fall within the category of "traitors to the fatherland." The president explained that they have been demeaning the country by "launching slanderous charges."

Certainly, as we have said, it is not objectionable for this neighboring country, or any other, to adopt strictly protective legislation with regard to its internal security. What is censurable in the case on which we are commenting is the instructions formulated concerning an incipient law by no less than the president of the republic and his interior minister, a general and colonel, respectively, in the Bolivian air force. It seems excessive to classify as "traitors to the fatherland" the opposition politicians and certain trade union leaders. It makes a very unfavorable impression when the high public official to whom we have referred states that there should be no hesitation in "taking up a machinegun" to eliminate "shameless people." Finally, it is highly disagreeable to hear talk once again within the framework of our continent of sending people "to the wall." It is well known what this phrase symbolizes as a sign of political barbarism and the ominous slaughter of those who have dared to challenge the conduct or the ideology enthroned in power. Equally worthy of condemnation, because of its evident extremism, is the threat of the death penalty for simple circulators of rumors whom, we repeat, the Bolivian authorities instruct "to travel with their Bibles under their arms." It would also suffice, one can conclude from the reports, that the generic and subjective charge of "shamelessness" be attached to someone in order for him to be condemned to die "at the wall." Statements such as those we have quoted coming from the highest levels of Bolivian government do not reveal the serenity of mind necessary to deal with the political and social dangers which presumably they are called upon to face. However, it will not be possible to achieve final success on the basis of a regime of terror. The strictness of the necessary repression of subversion and extremism is compatible, necessarily so, with the justice and the rights which should inspire all law, the more so if it leads to the elimination of human lives for the commission of certain crimes. These latter, naturally, must merit the maximal penalty.

The imprudent statements we have quoted will give rise to a legitimate state of alarm among the civilian population on the continent, and very markedly, in those bodies or persons who have focused their concerns or activities on the protection of human rights. This cause, so very important in itself, has been as is well known acutely politicized and invoked more than once in ignorance of the real situation certain countries are experiencing, or in bad faith or with too precise an evil political intention. The effort to place the cause and the concept of the defense of human rights in its proper balance is frustrated by the kind of statements on which we have commented here. It is to be hoped that, when the Bolivian state security law is approved, it will be applied by the judges will apply it in accordance with the procedures and guarantees appropriate for a state of law.

VIOLA TO APPOINT MORE CIVILIANS TO KEY POSTS; SIGAUT MENTIONED

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 22 Nov 80 pp 10-11

[Article in the column "Political Week": "The Preparation of the Path"]

[Text] Appointments

The first firm indications that there might be about the appointments Lieutenant General Viola will make for his government will certainly not come until early 1981, but there will inevitably be some exceptions to this rule.

The armed forces are preparing their leadership cadres for the term of office following the present one well in advance of the end of December, as is traditional. Thus, then, the names of commanders and higher officers on active duty whom the new president hopes to include in his administration will have to be discussed within a more or less peremptory period with the commanders in chief involved. Once this has happened, it will be difficult to maintain secrecy about the appointments of this sort which Videla's successor will finally make.

Lieutenant General Viola has already made one appointment, not publicly announced but instead reported by the press. At least until March, Mr Alfredo Olivera will serve as the main channel of communications between him and Argentine and foreign journalists. Olivera is a member of the editorial staff of the monthly DISCUSION, which began to be published here in the middle of the 1970's. He has written extensively on current political and military subjects.

It has been learned that a part of the relations with the communications media, in particular the audio-visual media--radio and television--will be the responsibility of the largest stockholder in the company which holds the license for Channel 3 in Rosario, Mr Alberto Gollan. This channel is regarded as the most important of the non-state channels throughout the country.

New Team

From the very moment he resigned as commander in chief at the end of 1979, the discreet but intensive activity pursued by Lieutenant General Viola with the most widely varied sectors of national activity has been coordinated by a limited, efficient and above all loyal team of military officers in active service.

The members of this team carried out these tasks like a service mission assigned by superiors, providing proof of the distinctly institutional nature the campaign of Lieutenant General Viola for the presidency had at all times for the army.

But things have now come to be different in nature. Viola is now a president-elect and therefore attention to the matters which must be studied and resolved has become, if possible, substantially more complex than before. Very shortly, then, a committee to coordinate his activities will be definitely appointed, and it will work moreover on preparing the path which will lead Lieutenant General Viola to the Casa Rosada on 29 March next.

The composition of this committee will be an exact reflection of the political relations existing between Lieutenant General Viola and the leadership of the army he has left behind him on retiring from active military service. Moreover, it could be said that this identifying link is proportional to that governing the relations of the president who will depart in March and the man who will succeed him.

One General and Four Colonels

This committee to coordinate the activities and the preparation of plans for the installation of the new government is headed by a brigadier general in active service. It can be presumed that he is a general familiar with the study of political matters. Four colonels will work with him, three of them retired and one in active service.

The current representative serving as interventor in the General Labor Confederation, Col Jose Lagomarsino, will serve, among other functions, as the institutional link with the political, trade union and business association sectors. Colonel Lagomarsino is expected to resign from active army service at the end of the year.

Col (Ret) Manuel Pena will take charge of relations on the specifically individual level with leaders and personages functioning in various sectors of national activity, including sectors of the state as such. In this connection, he will also bear responsibility for the contacts with the government communications media which, for reasons of a military nature, it is best to keep separate from the civil sector, so to speak, of Mr Olivera.

Col Roque Presti, who also is retired, will for his part serve as the personal representative of Lieutenant General Viola in the efforts which it becomes necessary for him to make with regard to affairs pertaining to international policy, and in particular the foreign policy of Argentina.

The foreign diplomatic representatives accredited to Buenos Aires are naturally embarked upon the stage of establishing links with the men who may represent the thinking of Lieutenant General Viola. These representatives must know, then, that it is desirable to make a note of the above-mentioned Colonel Presti's number in their personal telephone directories.

As far as we know, a fourth position on this coordinating committee has not yet been filled and is being saved for a colonel who will continue in active service in 1981.

However, the higher officers and commanders who were the nucleus of the small team which supervised the development of the tasks having to do with Lieutenant General Viola throughout these 10 first months of 1980, while retaining their military posts, will be assigned specifically military functions.

In such matters as this, the military must adhere to rules of the game which are different from those governing the civilian sector. Therefore some of those who have been his closest collaborators in the extensive operation culminating in the decision adopted by the military junta early in October will not go to the Casa Rosada with Lieutenant General Viola, unlike what would have happened with a civilian president.

Reliable sources say that the establishment of an eminently military staff to collaborate seriously with Lieutenant General Viola in the next few months is in no way in contradiction with a decision he has already made and which the military junta has approved: under the next government, the participation of civilians on the highest levels of the administration will be given priority from the very outset. Such participation will be reflected not only in the national cabinet, but also in a number of provinces yet to be determined, but likely to be five or six.

Offices

It is known that the military junta has informed Lieutenant General Viola of its desire to make available to him offices enabling him to pursue the work he must deal with until March in comfort. The possibility that these offices may be in premises of a military sort has been excluded.

Apparently, the likelihood is that the new president will be assigned, until he takes office, some offices belonging to the national congress. If indeed the military junta formally has its headquarters there, and the Legislative Advisory Commission is even located just there, the congress has premises other than the buildings which represent in the minds of the citizens the truest expression of the Argentine parliament, in Entre Rios and Rivadavia.

The advantage of using one of these other buildings and avoiding overlapping has obvious political pluses for all—the junta, Lieutenant General Viola and the CAL [Legislative Advisory Commission].

For reasons equally easy to understand, there has not at any time been the slightest suggestion that Lieutenant General Viola and his immediate associates should occupy offices the same as or similar to those the government of President Aramburu offered Dr Arturo Frondizi after the 23 February 1958 elections.

These offices were a part of the then-Ministry of Trade.

Continuing Silence

If the military junta functioned throughout September in an atmosphere of definite reticence about the decision it would finally make on the presidential matter, the discretion into which the president-elect has retreated further since his appointment is without a doubt equally great. This caution does not seem to be pleasing to some secretaries of state in the economic sector, anxious perhaps to have some word of indication from Lieutenant General Viola about matters particularly pertinent to the functions they carry out.

In any case, Viola is committed to pursuing his silence cautiously for some time further. In the final analysis, even in private conversations, he is the kind of man who, seeming to talk freely enough, is basically often doing nothing other than constantly questioning the interlocutor involved without that individual's realizing it.

It is possible that this has occurred to the minister of economy himself, when prior to his last trip to the United States, while the military junta was meeting as the great electoral body, he talked with the man who was to be chosen to serve as president between 1981 and 1984.

There are reports that this interview took place at the home of Dr Gerardo Schamis, a former diplomat and politician close to the leading figures in the Popular Line Movement and those in the radical faction of the Popular Federalist Force. Schamis and Viola formed a friendship when they were both serving in Washington, the one with the OAS and the other with an Argentine military mission.

Obtaining Information

What Viola is doing now with regard to certain aspects of the administrative situation in the country is precisely to ask questions. In other words, he is obtaining information, according to what can be concluded from what has been said recently in private. It is even said that he has no knowledge of some of the basic elements in the fundamental aspects of government management which will have even more serious effects after March 1981. "It would be improper to make any public statement and also, for the time being, it would be inappropriate to travel abroad."

As has been publicly announced, President Videla has ordered all the information his successor may require to be provided to him. But at this point it does not appear possible that Viola will make any statement before some weeks have passed.

This explains the avid interest on the part of business circles, for example, in seeking out the opinions on certain current subjects held by some of the men presumably closest to the president-elect. Thus it was that the last regular luncheon of the financial managers of the businesses affiliated with the IDEA [Institute for the Development of Executives in Argentina], which was held at the German Club last Thursday, was such a success that a number of people were turned away for lack of space. The speaker invited to address that luncheon was Dr Lorenzo Sigaut.

The confidence Lieutenant General Viola places in this outstanding economist is very well known.

Needless to say, Sigaut spoke at that luncheon with notable caution.

COLUMNIST SPECULATES ON ISSUES DISCUSSED BY VIOLA, JUNTA

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 4 Nov 80 pp 1, 8

[Article by J. Iglesias Rouco: "Viola With the Military Junta"]

[Text] General Viola will attend the meeting the military junta will hold today for the purpose of examining the more delicate problems in the present political and economic situation of the country. Various circles expressed the view yesterday that the president-elect will be informed in detail about certain secret studies some government sectors--not all of them under the Ministry of Economy--are making of the financial and banking situation, a subject on which it would seem General Viola would also have something to say, because according to our sources, two economists close to the future president have already drafted an extensive report--also secret--concerning the most controversial aspects of this situation, said to include the sometimes-contradictory opinions expressed within the Central Bank with regard to plans for dealing with the situation.

General Videla's successor will also be informed about the most recent alternatives in the negotiations on the Beagle affair, and he will examine with his peers the next budget to be drafted, concerning which there are no definitive agreements yet. The junta is also expected to discuss the matter of the promotions and retirements of major generals, and the first decisions in connection with the ministerial reorganization said to have been already approved by the body.

Viola and President Videla, for their parts, will following the junta meeting take up a series of measures with which the general guidelines established by the junta for these matters, and also for Viola's activities, can be implemented in the course of the next 30 days. The president-elect already has a more or less coordinated group of colleagues--mainly military officers--to which there will certainly be added now a local officer, not too far removed from the government administration or the general staff. However, General Viola we are told wants his aides to work independent of the armed forces and the executive branch, at least during this first stage in his progress toward the Casa Rosada.

But it is certain that everything appears to be enveloped in deliberate secrecy, due on the one hand to Viola's extreme caution in the realm of political undertakings--or to be more exact, political undertakings which might be attributed to him--and on the other hand to Videla's desire, which is shared by Viola, to avoid the image of "joint government" at all costs. The only thing which seems to be known with a certain justification is that Viola will make further statements this month or at the beginning of next month, and that these will be a little more explicit than those he made last week at the airport in Buenos Aires as he departed for Concordia. In any case, it is hardly likely that Viola will make any statement for 1981 on who will be his ministers, for example, a subject about which there is today so much conjecture and such interest. Not even the president of Chase Manhattan Bank himself, Mr Rockefeller, could know the names of the future appointees in the economic sector, nor those of the advisers through whom Viola will try to deal directly with the sector, which will be divided into two or three ministries or secretariats of state. As we have already reported, Viola will talk with Rockefeller on about the 10th of the month, but the talk will be purely a formality, similar perhaps to those Rockefeller and his U.S. colleagues will have with Sigaut, Jorge Aguado and other politicians and technicians close to Viola, whom Mr Martinez de Hoz has invited to a luncheon to be given in honor of the president of Chase Manhattan.

The reports circulating concerning the positions of the military leaders and Viola with regard to the problems the junta will discuss today are not very enlightening either. Some financial circles have the impression that the Central Bank will, despite everything, shortly put into effect a special system of selective aid for banks and financial institutions whose portfolios of late and uncollectable debts do not exceed 10 to 15 percent of their total operations. Moreover, according to officials at the Ministry of Economy, this would be the "real maximum" percentage--in many cases they say it would be less--for the difficulties burdening "recoverable" banks or financing bodies. Technicians in other sectors say, on the contrary, that the scope of the problem is much greater, such that any intervention would have disastrously inflationary effects.

On a parallel basis, Videla and Viola are expected today to analyze the effects on the foreign sector the coming OAS conference may have, in the course of which the final report of the organization on the problem of human rights in Argentina will be presented. Whether the OAS deals with the report separately or jointly, what seems certain is that it will mean another blow for the military government, above all if the Nobel Peace Prize winner Perez Esquivel attends the session, as it is believed he will.

This concern coincides with the worry seen in national military circles concerning the expectation which has recently developed in the country about a presumed "liberalization" of the regime during Viola's term as president, which might even culminate in municipal or parliamentary elections. In the view of various experts, these expectations are exaggerated.

Concerning this point, our informants suggest that Viola and Videla have not excluded the possibility of another presidential term in fact, after 1984, headed by one military officer or another.

DISAGREEMENT AMONG TOP OFFICIALS IN ECONOMIC SECTOR AIRED

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 1 Nov 80 pp 1, 6

[Article by J. Iglesias Rouco: "Battles and Breakups"]

[Text] The reports circulating day before yesterday concerning the status of Mr Alejandro Reynal as a member of the Central Bank board of directors was in itself, according to our sources, the first visible instance of the disinformation obtained in recent days from various government sectors--especially within the economic area--about the worrisome banking picture in the country, and the generally contradictory solutions offered by this or that group as "urgent remedies."

According to the sources consulted, the bankruptcy of the SASETRU and other known groups and enterprises, affecting dozens of financial organizations, are but the tip of the iceberg which the bold economic Titanic of Mr Martinez de Hoz and some of his colleagues seems to have rammed. The more moderate experts estimate that if the present financial disaster had to be defined in figures, it would come to at least, on the national level, $6 billion.

The matter has not been dealt with officially by the board of directors of the Central Bank, but its president, Mr Diz, is said to have made a decision according to which the state will not come to the aid of financial bodies in crisis now. Or, to be more precise, that in any case it would not do so to an extent consistent with the most urgent needs. In this connection, Mr Diz is reported to be applying to the financial sector the philosophy Mr Martinez de Hoz implemented in the production economy sector, with the freeing of imports, involving allowing and even "aiding" the "incompetent" bodies to die. In the view of Mr Diz, the time has come "to pay for mistakes."

A number of members of the Central Bank board, and some officials in other departments of the Ministry of Economy, on the contrary, support the thesis that the state should intervene in the matter "rapidly and fully," although on an "exceptional" basis, to prevent what might become the collapse of the whole system. To achieve this they would demand the launching of a special rediscount system by means of which the Central Bank would assume the burden of unpaid and delinquent bank debts. In a way, this would be a new version on a large scale of the "remedy" applied to the BIR a few months back. Mr Reynal is said to be among those who propose this formula.

Curiously, despite the fact that initially two economic philosophies seemed to clash, one a "state" philosophy and the other "liberal"--both in quotation marks, obviously--the sponsors of both plans are members so to speak of the same church, because they all subscribe to, or say they subscribe to, the codes of free enterprise and the market economy, although sometimes there are differences of interpretation among them when it comes to the acceptance of risk.

According to our informants, the real basis of the debate is of a political nature. Mr Diz is said to fear that a rediscount system such as that proposed by the interventionists would make the inflationary standards sought by Mr Martinez de Hoz for this last stage of administration by the present economic team definitely impossible, and would as a result aggravate the political decline of the entire group in the long run. Moreover, no one knows to what point such a rediscount measure would be possible at a time when other "rediscounts" have been effected on foreign exchange reserve funds deposited abroad, and when in addition the greater part of the $10 billion in this reserve will have to be used for the next 12 or 15 months on debt amortization, service and interest. And none of this takes into account the problems posed by the next budget, about which Diz and Martinez de Hoz have held frequent talks with President Videla.

The champions--perhaps "despite themselves"--of intervention by the Central Bank, for their part, believe that if the private bankruptcies are not "concealed" now by the protective hand of the state, a run on the dollar, or at least the modification of the foreign exchange levels established up until March, will be inevitable. This would involve a "definitive" political conditioning affecting General Viola's government, in their view.

Both General Videla and the president-elect are watching the situation with great concern. Viola has been in Concordia for 4 days now, but prior to his departure--an occasion of which he took advantage to make his first "public statement" after his designation, coinciding with the statements made by Videla in Mendoza and in favor of a so-called "democratic" future, had followed the dispute in the economic sector very closely.

From what we know, he seems now determined to draw back somewhat from the "line of fire," since the side effects of the battle might also be intermingled with the expectations existing--and rife with self-serving versions--about the structure of his government. Viola has not yet suggested to anyone that he join his cabinet, but there is an abundance of candidates desirous of having their names considered. Parallel with this, discouragement is spreading at the Ministry of Economy and related departments. Even men like Klein suspect that the future president will completely eliminate the sector. Seemingly, there is an inclination toward the possibility of "continuity" on the subordinate technical levels, because according to reports we have received, Videla and Viola have already agreed that beginning now, 1 November, the appointments which an effort was being made to get specific for various economic departments, such as the Secretariat of Planning, will cease.

As if this were not enough, there is no personal contact between Viola and the highest Ministry of Economy officials. The president-elect is said not even to have talked in recent weeks with Mr Martinez de Hoz. Perhaps he will indeed do so with a foreign guest of the minister, the president of Chase Manhattan Bank,

David Rockefeller, but not at the dinner Martinez de Hoz has planned to honor the U.S. magnate. Viola will probably not attend this gathering, although a number of his colleagues, his closest "interlocutors," have been invited.

On the other hand General Viola did not invite any of the officials in the Martinez de Hoz faction to his birthday celebration (56) on 13 October, which was attended by Generals Videla, Galtieri and Bussi, and all of the other major generals in active service, with the exception of Harguindeguy and Vaquero, who was in China. Also present were Generals Urricariet, Pomar and Pita, Colonel Villafane, and Lieutenant Colonels Monti and Manzano. Among the other guests at the celebration held in a building on Libertador Avenue were Cristina Guzman, of the Popular Parties Federation, Alfredo Olivera and Gerardo Schamis.

In the coming days other "tips of the iceberg" in the worrisome economic landscape of the country will appear, as well as the results of the dispute in the economic leadership sector. Yesterday Mr Reynal and other Central Bank directors held a number of meetings in the offices of that body, some devoted to another rediscount operation--unrelated to that described--being planned. Everyone is seeking a solution to the crisis, obviously, despite the fact that there are now many who are fixing their gaze insistently on the building where the general staff operates, and adjacent to which General Viola will presently be installed.

SAINT JEAN OUTLINES PROPOSALS FOR STABLE DEMOCRACY

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 28 Oct 80 p 12

[Address by Gov Iberico Saint Jean of the province of Buenos Aires to the weekly meeting of the Rotary Club in Mar del Plata on 27 October 1980]

[Text] "If we want to live in democracy, we must decentralize the suffocating concentration of political power and assign priority to municipal life.

If we want to live in democracy, just as the gross conservative fraud was banished, we will banish the subtle and offensive current fraud, which allows the manipulation of oppressed men without respect or consideration for the human individual.

If we want to live in democracy, we will respect the rights of the minority so that we will not suffer from the dictatorship of the majority again. If we want to live in democracy and someone maintains that by stating the truth we will not win votes, we will answer that on the basis of deceit and lies, we can win votes, but we will never succeed in building a country."

These are some of the statements made by the governor of the province of Buenos Aires, Brig Gen (Ret) Iberico Saint Jean, in the address he gave on the subject "Democracy and Ethics" last evening at the conclusion of the dinner at the weekly meeting of the Mar del Plata Rotary Club, which the provincial governor attended as a special guest.

During his address Saint Jean took up first the philosophical foundations of his concept of democracy and power, with reference to the deviations in this regard seen in recent Argentine history and setting forth the ideas and institutional methodology which in his view would lead to a stable, ethical and efficient democracy, giving priority to the utilization of citizens' experience through the municipalities.

The following are the most significant portions of his address.

The Present Democracy

In our country, not to go too far back in our analysis, which would exceed the limits of this commentary, the decade of the '40s and more clearly the appearance of Peron on the political scene speeded up a substantial change in Argentine political life.

The parties, or more accurately the leaders of the traditional parties, had full confidence in the rusty electoral machinery and believed that they could reduce to nothing an unknown colonel with no party backing.

They underestimated him, and Peron, a born politician, a charismatic leader such as few have been, with the strength provided by power and his lack of scruples, showed the political leaders that there was no electoral machine which could compare with the workers' groups when organized politically.

What happened from then on is well known, at least by mature men. The successful attempt to restore the regime endorsed by the people in 1946 was what was needed for the younger generation, lacking faith in the experience of others, to make it their own.

It should be said that today, all of us in Argentina who have lived through the 1973-76 period have political experience which, analyzed objectively, can lead us to launch a new historic era, but if we continue to fail to take the opportunity it will lead us again, I do not say to new frustration, but toward self-destruction.

The Man of the Masses

The protagonist in the present democracy is the man of the masses and the original democracy has come to be a mass democracy.

The phenomenon of the upsurge of the masses is known to all. Their weight in the political sector is evidenced by the emergence of the mass parties.

In these the human individual disappears. They are all identical men, with standardized tastes and appetites, each of whom deposits as a tribute to mass unity his faith, belief and hopes in the party, and to achieve these aspirations, the mass is enslaved, with one thing above all being required of it: discipline. Sectorial discipline, trade union discipline, party discipline.

This man, the man of the masses, in the cruel but true expression of Sabato, is "a foreign being, still with a human appearance, with eyes and tears, but now fallen in the universe of things."

The mass party is naturally authoritarian, classifying everything outside it as error, betrayal or lack of patriotism.

This needs no explanation at all to the citizens of Argentina, for who does not recall the trade union leaders ensconced in power, overriding everyone with their vehicles equipped with sirens and escorted by all-powerful guards?

The Power and the State

As more powers are concentrated in state hands, each and every one of us are candidates for suffering from dictatorship.

For this reason, Clemenceau said that if the majority hold the power of the former kings, we have done nothing more than to change the tyrants.

In order for the system to function properly, the majorities must respect the minorities, something which has not happened among us, and this was the reason for the failure of the entire system of constitutional counterweights and remedies we sought to put into use in 1975 and 1976 to prevent the intervention of the armed forces and achieve the channeling and regulation of the government within the law.

Let us proceed in the realm of fact in order to avoid theorizing. If we already knew, because history shows this, that mass parties are destined to be authoritarian, why did we fail to ask of those who could have given us protection for our rights in the past period--the legislators, the trade unionists, the Peronist youth?

Then, when I ask for a moment that we give a little more emphasis to the appeal to reason, I do so because I see almost with despair with what superficiality we are appealing for a return to the state of law, to the constitution.

What has happened that although just a few years ago the constitution and the state of law were not sufficient protection, yet now we believe that they are our passport to salvation?

This suffocating concentration of power which has been functioning on all levels in our political and administrative life is one of the deepest evils and one of the hardest to eradicate, while this eradication is in turn one of the basic prerequisites for our normalization.

The Populist Falacy

There is in society a mysterious balance, Rople says, which keeps the social body healthy while it is maintained, but when the advance of the state is so extreme as to cancel out private initiative, the latter atrophies, the balance is destroyed and the social body sickens.

The industrial proletarian worker is in general the most neglected sector in the countries which have not achieved an adequate level of development. Let us then ask the question: Does a populist party have any interest in the disappearance of the proletarian, who is its client and its support?

Populist governments are not idiots.

Therefore their action will tend to improve living conditions for their customers but with care not to cure the root of the evil. They will attack the effects with their concern for the social aspect, but they will leave the causes intact.

They will develop workers' quarters to keep the people manageable and to promote class spirit, but they will not allocate credit so that the people can build their own homes, cheaper, cozier and with the colors they prefer.

They will create a health bureaucracy and the current top official will grant permits for hospitalization and encourage a regrettable dependent relation in the most vulnerable state of the human individual, sickness.

They will build large and luxurious hotels where those of their class can take their leisure, with the permission of the official currently in charge.

They will seek massive wage increases in collective and leveling contracts in which the mass standardization goes to the insane extreme of seeking to equalize duties, the fulfillment of which arises from the most personal and profound convictions of the individual.

Community and Liberty

This subject of the municipality merits a separate paragraph because of its overwhelming importance from the political point of view.

Nothing could be better than to cast a glance backward to Tocqueville, who when analyzing the emerging democracy in the United States was horrified by the octopus of centralization which he regarded as one of the great dangers the new system could create, although he believed that the Americans had found adequate remedies.

The community is the redoubt in which the interests of all converge. It is in the cities that man takes on human dimensions, becomes "someone." It is in the community that elections can be carried out with the fullest knowledge of the candidates. It is there that propaganda can be offset by the weight of deeds and an intelligent and serious political undertaking.

It is in the municipality that free institutions can function as such and in which the participation of men in public affairs for the good of their community has real significance.

It was for this reason that it was said "Take away the strength and independence of the community and you will only have administered persons there, and not citizens!"

It has been said quite accurately that "without communal institutions a nation can have a free government, but it will not have the spirit of freedom."

It is here that the citizen with his active contribution to the good of the community takes on that stature of the citizen who was the protagonist in the original democracy, that holy layman who perfected and structured his interior life while working for the community.

The Meaning of the Vote

The men who conceived the democratic system thought that an electoral campaign would be something like a comparison of ideas, of government programs, the explanation of solutions, so that the voter could judge with equanimity and interest each of the proposals, supporting that which in his view offered the greatest possibilities.

I want to recall the words spoken by Peron in Guayaquil: "I picked Campora and if I pick a doll they will vote for him too."

Again on 23 September 1973 the country endorsed Peron and his consort with more than 7,300,000 votes!

The electoral machine had shown its efficiency once again, crushing all his opponents.

The institutions of the nation ceased to exist. The congress was a sad parody, the state was a party, but the dictatorship of the uncontrolled and all-powerful majority prevented any institutional solution from prospering, and we moved speedily toward chaos and disintegration.

Therefore it hurts and outrages me when you demand the urgent return of the constitution almost angrily.

Wasn't the constitution in effect in the period between 1973 and 1976? Why was there no recourse to it to save the country?

Note carefully that I do not criticize either the constitution or the vote!

But, good God! Let us not reduce democracy to the point of confusing it with what seems to be the most sacred of all rights--the right to vote.

Perhaps my profound desire that the armed forces should not assume power again leads me to urge, not with passion but with objectivity, that we remember that in the last 35 years our country has chosen totalitarianism 4 times: on 24 February 1946, 11 November 1951, 11 March 1973 and 23 September 1973.

When I hear the hasty demands for a return to the constitution, I cannot fail to recall that Hitler, one of the most dismal dictators of any era, was installed when one of the most modern and progressive constitutions in the world was in full effect.

Constitutions and laws, the most perfect and modern of juridical-political systems, are reduced to a dead letter if they are not sustained by a profound ethical content in our political life.

Political neglect, apathy, disinterest in public affairs--these are some of the serious evils from which we suffer, basically because of alienation from the ethical principles in the development of our impassioned political life.

REGIONAL BREAKDOWN OF CENSUS STATISTICS PUBLISHED

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 31 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] The population of Argentina totals 27,862,771, showing an increase of 4,498,371 persons since the preceding census (1970). These figures represent an increase of 19.3 percent in this time period and 39.2 percent in the last 20 years. Of the population total, 51.8 percent are women and 49.8 percent men.

These figures were released yesterday by the president of the National 1980 Census Executive Committee, Dr Guillermo C. Bravo, during a press conference.

He also said that the population growth has exceeded the projected index based on the preceding decade, since the figure as of the 1970 census was 15.4 percent, with the increase now seen to 19.3 percent. Although the reasons for this increase have not yet been determined, Dr Bravo noted as possible determining factors an increase in immigration and the reversal of the process of decline in the birth rate, since in the first estimates natural growth increased from 15.4 per thousand (1970) to 17.56 per thousand (1980).

The northern and southern extremes of the country showed the greatest increases: the Patagonian provinces, those of Comahue and Tierra del Fuego on the one hand (Tierra del Fuego, 88.1 percent; Neuquen, 56.5 percent; Rio Negro, 46.2 percent; Chubut, 38.1 percent; Santa Cruz, 35.6 percent) and Jujuy, on the other, with an increase of 35.1 percent.

The provinces with the lowest rates of increase were Entre Rios, Santa Fe, San Luis, Corrientes and Cordoba. The Federal District was the only zone in the country where the population declined slightly.

Mar del Plata Figures

Working with unofficial census figures, the Economic and Social Studies Department of the local Trade, Industry and Production Union worked out certain conclusions, determining that the difference between the 423,989 inhabitants in the recent census count and the 317,462 a decade earlier represents an increase of 106,527, representing a population increase in the period between the 2 census counts of 33.6 percent.

Where the number of housing units was concerned, it concluded that based on the premise that the census showed 423,989 inhabitants in the city and 210,648 housing units, and establishing housing averages on the basis of these figures exclusive of other considerations, each housing unit housed an average of 2.01 inhabitants. The department added that since Mar del Plata has special characteristics due to the high percentage of seasonal homes, a working hypothesis was established to calculate the number of housing units tourism may have affected and the number occupied throughout the year. This hypothesis was based on an analysis of the housing averages of two cities which in stratification and characteristics show considerable similarity with the stable population of this city, i.e. Bahia Blanca, with 233,126 inhabitants and 17,703 housing units, and La Plata, with 472,889 inhabitants and 52,343 housing units, with occupation indices of 3.16 and 3.09 respectively. The average number of inhabitants per housing unit for these two cities averages 3.11, which would indicate that 136,331 housing units of the 210,648 counted in the census in Mar del Plata are fully occupied, leaving 74,317 affected by the tourist trade.

PAPER SEES FORCE AS NOT VIABLE FOR SUPERPOWERS

PY030258 Rio de Janeiro JOURNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 1 Dec 80 p 10

[Editorial: "The Failure of Force"]

[Text] The U.S. rhetoric in the arena of international affairs has already changed preceding the inauguration of the president-elect. Recalling Nixon, who pointed his finger [at] Khrushchev while he was still U.S. vice president in the 1960's, Senator Charles Percy went to Moscow as a semiofficial envoy of Mr Ronald Reagan and straightforwardly announced that the United States will resort to military action if its national interests are threatened. To top off his performance, Senator Percy challenged Soviet Defense Minister Ustinov to justify the Soviet military escalation.

As a conversation opening, none of that is really shocking and Senator Percy boosted the pride of a nation aware of its strength and disgusted with its weak president. The United States is emerging from the moral depression in which it had abandoned itself, and it is well known that the Soviets understand direct language.

With their pride restored, the United States and its new president will, however, have to proceed in a painful effort to adjust themselves to the new international reality. Jimmy Carter began that adjustment effort but without much success.

Certainly Reagan in the exercise of the presidency will be more subtle than one could expect from some of his campaign rallies, because otherwise he will be courting disaster. But ending the campaign language will not be enough. The United States continues to be a superpower, but in the midst of a world that has greatly changed.

The question does not lie only in the fact that Soviet might has matched and in some areas overtaken the United States in the military sphere. The two superpowers are no longer standing alone on a stage and shouting insults at each other. New factors such as the economic strength of Japan and Western Europe plus dependency on Middle East oil have come to the fore. Countries such as the PRC can simultaneously pressure Moscow and Washington--a fact that eliminates one of the ideas put forth by Reagan, in a seizure of simplemindedness, that anything that happens in the world is part of a Soviet plot against the United States.

But not only the large- and medium-sized powers interfere now in the old U.S.-Soviet act. What is happening in Poland clearly shows that the old schemes of influence are suffering fatigue. The Soviet Union may or may not intervene in Poland, but for a long time now such intervention has ceased to be a satisfactory solution--so much so that the intervention has not yet materialized, even though the Polish workers have already gone well beyond the tranquil "socialism with a human face" of Alexander Dubcek.

In the same way, and changing the stage, the Republican administration would be pitifully deluded by thinking that problems in Central America can be solved drastically on short order. The trouble in El Salvador in the wake of what happened in Nicaragua is to some extent a condemnation of the traditional U.S. policy in that region.

The world has become quite big even for the two superpowers. And the time for thinking that things can be simply separated into good and evil fortunately seems to be receding into the past.

Levi indicated that despite the cooperation of the Brazilian Government with the Jewish communities, the democratic opening has also allowed the emergence of new antisemitic manifestations. POSSIBLE GULF OF VENEZUELA ACCORD DISCUSSED

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 5 Oct 80 Sec A pp 1, 13

[Article by Gabriel Gutierrez: "Accord With Venezuela Ready"]

[Text] Colombia and Venezuela are (now, indeed) finally on the threshold of an all-important accord on marine and submarine boundaries; and, on 15 October, in Caraballeda, the negotiators from both countries are to put their initials on the text of the treaty, as EL TIEMPO has ascertained.

According to the account obtained by this newspaper, the essential part of the accord covers the joint exploitation of the Gulf of Venezuela (which will become an inland sea), where there are estimated reserves amounting to 10 billion barrels of oil.

The agreement holds the most extensive prospects for the development of both countries which, concurrently with the exploitation of the large oil reserves, will undoubtedly come to wield a strong political influence over the Caribbean area, also as a result of their status as democratic nations.

Unofficial reports indicate that the final process for the attainment of the accord, as agreed upon by both parties to date, is as follows:

1. On 13 October, in the port of Caraballeda, 40 kilometers from Caracas, there will begin what is claimed to be the final meeting of the negotiating committees.

2. On 15 October, the delegates from Colombia and Venezuela will affix their initials to the draft of the treaty, which is actually the final accord.

3. Ten or 15 days later, the governments of Colombia and Venezuela will submit the text of the accord to the public for consideration, so that the scope of the regulations may be gaged.

4. Once the accord has been studied in both countries, it will be signed, in a location that has not yet been determined. It is estimated that the important event will take place in mid-November, that is, a month before the presidential "summit" on 17 December in Santa Marta.

5. After the signing, the accord will be submitted for the consideration of the Congresses of Colombia and Venezuela, which must ratify it. The Venezuelan Congress will study it in its sessions of March 1981, and the Colombian Congress will do so in the regular legislative sessions of 1981.

6. The treaty will bear the signatures of the presidents of Colombia and Venezuela, and it will be known as the "Turbay Ayala-Herrera Campins Treaty," like the treaty that was signed, in its time, also on boundaries, by Presidents Eduardo Santos and Lopez Contreras.

Secret Mission

EL TIEMPO was given timely notification of the arrival in Bogota, last Thursday, in secret, of Venezuelan delegates who have held discussions during the past few days with the Colombian authorities on the final details of the long process.

In fact, one of the negotiators, Luis Herrera Mercano, has carried out very important transactions here in Bogota, almost on the eve of the Caraballeda meeting.

It has been learned that the Venezuelan authorities have approved of the draft treaty, which was analyzed carefully 2 weeks ago in Ecuador by Presidents Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala and Luis Herrera Campins.

President Turbay Ayala has held frequent talks with Colombian committee members, to analyze in detail the document that is about to be signed.

At the beginning of the week, the chairman of the Venezuelan delegation, Gustavo Planchart, stated in Caracas that it was impossible to predict when the accord would be concluded, but he immediately declared: "The agreement is imminent."

Planchart also commented, with regard to the procedure to be followed: "The preliminary accord will be released to the public when it is concluded, but it is not binding on either of the two countries until it has been debated in their respective Congresses."

Long Process

The negotiations between Colombia and Venezuela have taken virtually 12 years, since Presidents Carlos Lleras Restrepo and Rafael Caldera started them with the "Sochagota Accord." On that occasion, Caldera was in Colombia and agreed to start the talks with Lleras.

Then the negotiations continued during the administrations of Presidents Pastrana, Lopez Michelsen and Carlos Andres Perez, but the parties did not reach the necessary agreements. Delegations from the countries held series of talks on several occasions in Rome, and we may recall that the Colombian committee was chaired by the present minister of government, German Zea.

The last phase of the long process began in March of last year, in Caracas, when President Turbay attended the inauguration of President Luis Herrera Campins. On that occasion, Turbay declared that a new process was starting, and that the talks would be perpetual, as seems to be the case.

Since then, five rounds of talks have been completed, among special committees: in addition, Turbay Ayala and Herrera Campins have met on several occasions to assess the progress of the dialog.

Last Monday, 29 September, President Turbay held a meeting in the palace with the Foreign Relations Advisory Committee and the Colombian negotiators, and on that occasion complete backing was obtained for the draft treaty.

Earlier, former Presidents Carlos Lleras Restrepo, Alberto Lleras and Misael Pastrana had been fully informed, and they also expressed agreement with the solutions arrived at for the boundary dispute. Former President Lopez Michelsen was also consulted, before traveling abroad.

It was also learned that, in addition to the all-important accord on marine and submarine boundaries, Colombia and Venezuela will commit themselves to other enterprises, including one associated with the iron and steel area.

In one of these collateral agreements, the possibility is cited of Venezuela's granting loans to Colombia to reforest the hydrographic basins of the boundary areas. It was noted that a plan of this scope would require investments of about $800 million.

As for the reserves in the Gulf, which will be more internal and will be exploited jointly by the two countries, it is estimated that they amount to 10 billion barrels of oil. This estimate was made by Colombian and Venezuelan technicians who were consulted in the negotiating process.

Uribe Vargas Comments

Cali, 4 Oct--The minister of foreign affairs, Diego Uribe Vargas, stated here today that neither Colombia nor Venezuela has approved an accord on the demarcation of marine areas, and declared that the decision is in the hands of the negotiators first, and then the presidents of the two countries.

When questioned by reporters on the subject, the foreign minister explained that, on 13 October, there will be another meeting of the envoys from both countries in the Venezuelan town of Caraballeda, and that the results of the negotiations will not be known until that date. He added: "It would be premature to announce an accord."

Press reports claimed that Venezuela and Colombia had accepted the terms of a draft which had been prepared by the committees, and that the final document would be signed shortly by Presidents Luis Herrera Campins and Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala.

In response to a query about the status of the discussions, Uribe Vargas said that they are "in the realm of possibility, that is all." Colombia and Venezuela have held long, arduous series of dialogs to find formulas that will allow for the reconciliation of the conflicting interests.

In Cali, at the conclusion of a meeting of the commission members held a few months ago, a document was signed wherein "significant agreements" were arrived at, but no details were specified.

According to a local newspaper, 2 weeks after the signing of the accord it will be released to the public of both nations, and a week later the presidents will sign it.

It was also stated, through the Venezuelan negotiator, Luis Herrera Marcano (still according to a press report),that the commanders of 120 Venezuelan military garrisons and Herrera Campins' cabinet backed the "signature draft" which was allegedly agreed upon in Cartagena.

Moreover, the minister denied that officials of the Colombian Government have fostered an armed uprising in a Nicaraguan town. He stated: "That is another episode in the series of insults that we are receiving every day from the Sandinist government in Nicaragua which, since they are simply unfounded charges, we repudiate."

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 3 Oct 80 Sec A p 17

[Text] Senator Augusto Espinosa Valderrama's presidential precandidacy, which will be announced today in Santa Marta, has received the backing of the Magdalena Departmental Assembly, which supported his nomination through a proposition.

The Magdalena Assembly acclaimed Espinosa during the convening of the new term of sessions, and on the eve of the launching of his precandidacy during a banquet to be held tonight in the reception rooms of the Tamaca Hotel.

The proposition was submitted by the Liberal representatives, and received the backing of 10 out of the 11 Liberal deputies. Its text reads as follows:

"The undersigned Liberal deputies to the assembly of the Department of Magdalena, in view of the understanding of the nation's problems possessed by Dr Augusto Espinosa Valderrama, who has distinguished himself in public and private life as a true statesman, propose the proclamation of his presidential candidacy for the 1982-86 term, and invite Colombian Liberals to lend him their support, if we want the Liberal Party to continue guiding the nation's destinies. The chairmanship of the Liberal deputies' commission will arrange to have a copy of this motion made available to Dr Espinosa Valderrama in a standard memorandum. To be published on billboards and in the country's spoken and written press."

The commission was comprised of the same deputies who approved the proposition proclaiming Espinosa's precandidacy, which will be presented to him today during the functions to be held in his honor.

Today, Espinosa will travel to that capital, accompanied by his wife, Miryam Silva de Espinosa.

The visit and the proclamation of the former Liberal minister in Santa Marta are being awaited with enthusiasm by the Liberals of the coast, who have voiced their approval of his nomination.

The proclamation ceremony has been scheduled for 2000 hours this Friday, in the Tamaca Hotel reception rooms, on which occasion the chairman of the organizing committee, Carlos Gomez Sanchez, and Augusto Espinosa, will speak.

At 0900 hours on Saturday he will hold a press conference; at 1030 hours he will chair a round table discussion with spokesmen from the economic and tourist associations; in the afternoon he will converse with the Guajira colony residing in Santa Marta; and in the evening he will attend a "cordial dinner with friends."

On Sunday, a tribute in his honor is planned at the beach.

LIBERALS CONTROL MOST DEPARTMENTAL ASSEMBLIES

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 2 Oct 80 Sec B p 1

[Text] The Liberal Party assumed control of the boards of the majority of the departmental assemblies, whose first legislative period began yesterday in a completely normal fashion.

Simultaneously, the superintendents' and commissioners' councils were also initiated. The period for the assemblies, and the superintendents' and commissioners' councils is 2 months, during which the budgets of these territorial sections will be approved and there will be elections of departmental controllers.

Valle

Cali, 1 October--Today, the Civic Movement made a timid debut in the Valle assembly with a petition that the department's controller be appointed as soon as possible.

This political entity, vehement in the town council, arrived at the departmental organization for the first time. It was noted that the Liberals expect to cooperate with Governor Luis Fernando Londono in an alliance with the Conservative Party and other groups which are to be added.

Next week, the income and expense budget will be submitted, followed by the public investment plan. This afternoon, the Liberal physician, Rodrigo Vallecilla, is considered certain for the presidency, and the Conservative leader, Pablo Ruben Vernaza, for the vice presidency.

Santander

Bucaramanga, 2 October--A coalition of nine Liberals and five Conservatives made possible the election of the board of directors of the Santander assembly, initiated by Governor Alfonso Gomez Gomez, at 1600 hours.

The parliamentary board of directors, comprised of 11 Liberals and nine Conservatives, was formed as follows: president, Omar Herrera Ariza, Liberal; first vice president, Rafael Serrano Prada, Conservative; second vice president, Miguel Arenas, Liberal.

The agreements reached also call for the election of the present mayor of Bucaramanga, Roberto Cadenas Arenas, for the departmental controllership, and of the Conservative, Ignacio Toro, for the assistant controllership.

Left out of the majority coalition were the deputies from the Santander Liberal Confederation, and the Conservative friends of Representatives Jorge Sedano and Oscar Martinez Salazar.

Cordoba

Monteria, 1 October—The deliberations of the Cordoba assembly began with complete support from the majority coalition for Governor Camilo Jimenez Villalba.

Six Liberal and three Conservative deputies comprise the majority which, upon starting its work, submitted a statement announcing that they would make proposals the purpose of which was to meet the needs of the people of Cordoba in the areas of education, health and public works, primarily.

The coalition consists of five deputies from the group headed by the brothers Edmundo and Libardo Lopez Gomez, one deputy from the "Piragua" Liberal group and three from the Conservative sector, which follows the guidance of Representative Amaury Garcia Burgos.

Three deputies from the sector of former Minister German Bula Hoyos, three Alvarist friends of Senator Miguel Escobar Mendez and one from the "Liberal Cordoba" independent movement headed by Salomon Nader, were left out of the coalition, and may possibly be those who will put up opposition to the departmental government.

Atlantico

Barranquilla, 1 October—In his address at the opening of the Departmental Assembly, the governor of Atlantico, Pedro Martin Leyes, stressed the fact that President Turbay Ayala's government has had the backing of all Colombians, with a positive assessment of its government management during the past 2 years.

He underscored the political maturity of the various groups in this department, backing him in an effort to restore ethical conduct and integrity to the sectional public administration.

Next, the departmental organization proceeded to elect officers: president, Jacobo Llinas, dentist, Liberal, aged 46, from the group directed by Congressman Jose Name Teran; first vice president, engineer Jesus Bolivar Barros, from Soledad, 50 years old, of the Ospino-Pastrantist group directed in Altantico by Abel Francisco Carbonell; second vice president, Orlando Rodriguez, Liberal, from Emilio Lebolo's group.

The 18 Atlantico deputies voted unanimously in all these elections, including that of the secretary general, German Donado de la Hoz, who was confirmed in that post for a second term. The assistant secretary is the Liberal "Namist," Ramon Maldonado Alarcon. In its first session, the departmental parliament approved four propositions, as follows: one repudiating the position of the national planning entity, and protesting to the central government at "the unfair and exclusive treatment which the latter has been giving our region."

The second dealt with the support and backing for the endeavor of the government of Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala. This proposition evoked a discussion, inasmuch as Rodriguez Saavedra noted that it was a contradiction to what he had submitted and had been approved. After several speeches the proposition for support and salutation to the president and acknowledgment for his brilliant endeavor in the government, was approved. The remaining two propositions that were approved were for salutation and support for the governor, and for the church and military authorities.

Caldas

Manizales, 1 October --The Ospino-Pastranist deputy, Mrio Arias Gomez, was elected president of the Caldas assembly.

The governor, Dilia Estrada de Gomez, submitted an account of her 7 months in the opening session, at which the board of directors was elected.

Appointed to the other positions were: Aurelio Gomez, first vice president; Bernardo Hernandez Molina, Conservative, second vice president; Blanca Herrera, Liberal, secretary; and Bernardo Marulanda Lopez, undersecretary.

A coalition of Liberals and Conservatives will allow for the election of the Liberal, Gonzalo Lopez, as controller. The latter replaced the office holder, Alberto Marin Correa, 3 months ago, when the latter resigned to accept the position of second notary in this city.

Bolivar

Cartagena, 1 October--The Bolivar assembly began its work in a peaceful atmosphere, under the chairmanship of the Liberal, Nicolas Curi Vergara, who is head of the Cartagena town council.

The deliberations of the organization began before 1800 hours, with a lengthy address by Governor Marun Gossain Jattin.

The board of the assembly was comprised of Curi Vergara, president; Andres Perez Batista, Liberal, first vice president; Jesus Puello Chamie, Conservative Alvarist, second vice president; and Adolfo Pacheco Anillo, Conservative Ospino-Pastranist, secretary.

Boyaca

Tunja, 1 October--This evening, the Ospino-Pastranist, Carlos Pineda Chillan, was elected president of the Boyaca assembly. The post of first vice president was given to the Liberal, Aura Mejia de Kaemer; that of second vice president, to the Alvarist, Ciro Ramirez Pinzon; and that of secretary to the Liberal, Alvaro Remolina. The session, which took place in complete calmness, was opened by the governor, Jorge Perico Cardenas, who gave an extensive account of his activities at the end of 2 years of administration.

During the deliberations, 16 out of the 20 deputies approved a proposition calling for support for the chief executive.

Cesar

Valledupar, 1 October--This evening, a coalition of five Liberal and six Conservative deputies assumed control of the Cesar assembly and elected the former minister of agriculture, Alvaro Araujo Noguera, as president.

Ramon Padron, a Conservative, was elected to the first vice presidency; Eduardo Solano Ferero, a Liberal, to the second; and the Conservative, Elfido Lobo Neira, to the position of secretary general.

Governor Jose Guillermo Castro opened the entity's sessions, and gave an account of his administrative activity.

Huila

Neiva, 1 October--A coalition of deputies from the Liberal Placist sector and the Ospino-Pastranist wing, imposed its majority and elected the Liberal attorney, Dagoberto Charry Rivas, as president.

The Conservative, Jaime Lozada Perdomo, was named first vice president; the Liberal, Secundino Garcia Perdomo, was named second vice president; the Conservative Ospinist, Jorge Perez Puentes, was elected secretary general; and the Liberal Placist, Alberto Lopez, was named permanent secretary.

Quindio

Armenia, 1 October--Yesterday, former Liberal Governor Lucelly Garcia de Montoya was elected president of the Quindio assembly, the period of sessions of which was initiated by Governor Silvio Ceballos.

The Conservative Ospino-Pastranist, Alberto Aristizabal Pelaez, was appointed first vice president; the Liberal, Alfonso Garcia Munoz, was named second vice president; and the Liberal, Tulio Castrillon, was named secretary.

The majority coalition of the assembly consists of seven Liberals, three Conservative Ospinists, and a Conservative Alvarist-Belisarist.

Magdalena

Santa Marta, 1 October--Last night, Governor Edgardo Vives Campo opened a new period of sessions of the Magdalena assembly, and submitted the draft budget for the next term.

After the governor's speech, a coalition of eight Liberals and six Conservatives imposed their majority and elected the Liberal, Adolfo Diaz-Granados Noriega, as president of the entity.

Alvaro Camargo, a Conservative Alvarist, was named first vice president; the Liberal, Hernando Pinedo Vidal, was appointed second vice president; and the Conservative Ospinist, Laureano Gomez Barros, was named secretary general.

In San Andres

San Andres, 1 October--The Conservative, Carlos Archbold, was elected president of the superintendency council, while the Liberal, Heraldo Williams, from the MIL [Independent Liberal Movement] sector, was named vice president.

The sessions of the superintendency council were initiated by Governor Ana de Pechthalt, who announced that she hopes to continue governing with all the political groups, including her adversaries.

Mrs Pechthalt also announced that all the secretaries resigned in order to allow her freedom in reorganizing the cabinet.

SANTA MARTA FREE ZONE TO BE EXPANDED

Bogota EL ESPECTADOR in Spanish 7 Oct 80 Sec A p 5

[Article by German Hernandez: "They Will Expand the Free Zone"]

[Text] The old seaman Johnny Foust arrived in the bay almost without blinking, and in his surprised observation, he could not understand why the Santa Marta maritime terminal lacked the usual pollution of his port of New York.

He did not know that, owing to some strange magic of nature, the winds in the bay of Santa Marta blow in a land-sea direction, thus freeing the shores from pollution and ridding the city of the salinity which corrodes even the most concealed metals.

Johnny Foust, who came to the port to soothe the natural upheaval accumulated from sailing the seas alone, landed on his "Brave Exporter" after having left ashore 5,000 tons of steel billets which the Santa Marta winds will protect from the yellowish attacks of oxide.

The Free Zone

The Santa Marta maritime terminal enjoys the affection of the trade winds. This natural advantage, which the other Caribbean ports lack, was utilized by the industrial and commercial free zone, over 2 years ago, to offer its services for imports and exports.

Orlando Zabarain Riascos became general manager of the enterprise when it was founded. Since that summer of May 1978, over 11 billion pesos worth of goods have been moved through the free zone, and to date not a single peso, nor a single steel billet nor a single screw has been lost.

Perhaps it was for this reason that, on 11 September of this year, Zabarain Riascos received a telegram from Jaime Garcia Parra, in which the Ministry of Finance notified him of the allocation of an additional sum of 55 million pesos to start construction this month on the first phase of the industrial complex of the free zone. However, this sum is very small when compared with the 1.5 billion to be invested in the entire expansion.

The Salvation of the Region

The Santa Marta free zone is divided into two parts: the industrial complex and the commercial zone. The industrial complex is a plot of land measuring 34 hectares, located 5 minutes from the downtown area of the city, bordered by the national railroad line and the Pan-American Highway.

The engineers and architects have already completed the urban studies for the industrial complex and, within the next few days, there will appear in the newspapers notices on bidding for the first phase, which will include the adaptation, access routes, switch houses, parking facilities, administration building exhibition center and five industrial buildings, which will cost the free zone over 150 million pesos.

And it will be such an attractive project that the zone's mailboxes have already received several requests from native and foreign investors affiliated with firms of a manufacturing type, with such products as processed reinforced fiberglass, and engine assemblies, as well as metal working and agroindustrial equipment.

For this reason, Orlando Zabarain calls this zone "the salvation of the region," because the establishment of these industries will generate employment and produce hard currency for the town of Bastidas, whose economic health is now so damaged, thanks to the contagious disease of a bad press.

All Services

The commercial zone, located behind the maritime terminal, covers 80,000 square meters, which will be used for the storage of goods and products of international trade itself. There, importers may build at their own expense whatever covered areas they require, with the advantage that they will have the benefit of water and monophasic and triphasic energy, sanitary and storm-water sewers and rail systems as far as the maritime terminal itself, and connecting with the rest of the country.

The investors will have 15,000 square meters at their disposal for covered storage, and 45,000 for open yards. The administration building, which will cost 25 million pesos, will occupy an area of 1,800 square meters, and either it or the warehouses can be reached through the 15,000 square meters of access routes that will be available.

The Advantages

In addition to enjoying encouraging tax exemptions, with the opportunity for free access to the hard currency originating from the sale of foreign goods processed in the free zone and reexported, as well as the incentives offered by the free zone to industries which employ a large number of workers, the port of Santa Marta also offers other advantages.

For example, the maritime terminal is the deepest in Colombia, making the use of dredges unnecessary in the event of canalization. Also, the connection with the national road system and the international highway system, and the large supply of available labor, have caused importers to direct their eyes toward this port.

It is a port lacking salinity and purified by the refreshing breezes that are wafted in from the mountains, which ruffled Johnny Foust's thin hair on more than one occasion, while he grumbled at having to return to the cold, gray port of New York.

4. Gas pipeline
5. Railroad
6. Industrial free zone

BACKGROUND ON FIRST AMBASSADOR TO CHINA

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 2 Oct 80 Sec A pp 1, 6

[Article by Lucy Nieto de Samper: "Who the First Ambassador to China Is and How He Thinks"]

[Text] From Bavaria's terrace, beside Drs Julio Mario Santodomingo and Carlos Cure, I observe the variety of gray, black and red roofs covering the 76,000 square meters of that company in downtown Bogota. And I listen to the arguments with which the two top-ranking personages from Bavaria advocate a plan which has kept them occupied, consisting of the conversion of that plot of land into a beautiful green park.

With the time of takeoff for the flight to Peking, where he will initiate relations between the governments of Colombia and China, approaching, Ambassador Santodomingo would not want to leave without being sure that the plan will be implemented. "I don't want my children to complain to me in the future that I was unable to do anything to prevent this from becoming a cement jungle."

Since Bavaria is involved in the ecology wave (a year ago, the company created the environmental award), it also wants to become deserving of that prize. Dr Santodomingo says: "We give a million pesos each year to the best plans for protecting the environment, and now we want to win the prize by building a park on this site. If the park is created, Bavaria deserves the prize. And we shall award it to ourselves, without circumlocution."

From the topic of ecology we jump, without losing continuity, to that of fashion, noting that the new president of China has a reputation for being stylish and refined. However, the president of Bavaria tells him: "That suit is too tight for you." "No, man, what do you mean?" protested the ambassador, buttoning his jacket. He unbuttons it again (the suit is dark blue with white pinstripes, the most traditional of the traditional), and shows the label sewn on the edge of the inner pocket: it is that of a tailor on Saville Row, the famous London street where the rich and fashionable have their suits made to order. The date on that label leaves me perplexed: 1964. Then this means that the rich and fashionable Julio Mario Santodomingo is wearing a suit that he bought 16 years ago.

Dr Cure remarks with a smile: "He delights in keeping his old suits, and showing them, so that you will know that he has kept the same figure for 20 years." And when I ask the ambassador whether the white handkerchief with fuchsia swirls in the upper pocket of the jacket is made of China silk or Hindustani silk, Dr Cure intervenes again: "No, that handkerchief is made of paper; it is disposable...."

The guffaws emitted by the pair are theatrical.

A Very Unknown Personage

Julio Mario Santodomingo is a name mentioned often and repeated often, but the personage who owns it is as distant and unknown as the country where he will represent us. And he is unknown because he has spent most of his life traveling, and because when he is in the country he does not want to have anything to do with newsmen, much less interviews.

To obtain one was a long task lasting many weeks. There was a patient, tiresome succession of phone calls. There was almost a siege, which finally ended in a small office at Bavaria where, reclining on a soft upholstered leather sofa, he subjected himself, like a penitent, to relating his past.

I thought that, like a good coastal resident, he was a conversationalist, and lord and master of words; but I found a circumspect speaker who admitted to me that he was irremediably shy. "People frighten me. I cannot speak before more than 10 persons, because I get tongue-tied. That is why, at those meetings at Bavaria, when many people came, it was a martyrdom for me. Sometimes I felt incapable of answering the questions that they asked me."

I thought that he was a harsh person, as he is described in certain economic circles, but I found him to be a very unassuming person, and a "highly honorable" romantic, who cannot conceive of true friendship without a romantic quality. He is someone who, in addition to history books, reads romantic novels; and among those novels the one he prefers above all others is "Anna Karenina."

I thought that he might be a very severe father, but I found him to be rather a "loving" father who gives in too much to his children; both to Julio Mario (22), the son of his first marriage to a Brazilian lady, and to Alejandro (3) and Andres (2), his children by Beatriz Davila, his second wife.

And when I told him that people described him as a cold man, who does not mind sacrificing friends in business matters, he was surprised: "Do they say that? Do they say that I am heartless? No, that is no true. I put friendship above all other considerations. Those who have worked with me can confirm to you what I am telling you."

Ambassador Santodomingo is a personage who is envied by many, with malicious envy, because he is a fortunate man in every sense of the word. He is happy in private life, successful in business and rich; and as we in Bogota say, he is "well set up." In other words, he has everything. So how could he fail to be envied?

"Has luck rained on you, as if falling from heaven, or have you done a little of your share?"

"Thanks be to God, I have had luck, and I think that ~~if one~~ has it it is ~~because~~ providence has given him the means of helping himself. I consider myself very well served by providence, and I live in gratitude for that."

He is an optimistic, happy man, who is considered to have a good disposition, and works hard; but he gives me the impression that his work does not exhaust him. Socially, he travels in the most exclusive circles, both national and international, but nevertheless, he is not at all petulant, nor does he make a display of his wealth or his power.

He was a far more rebellious than studious student, who attended a school run by monks in Madrid, which left him with respect for a religion that he does not practice. After being a boarding student at the Modern High School, "at the time of Agustin, Prof Bein and Saul," he did not leave with the Effort Cup nor the Good Character Cup. But he did receive degrees later from various North American universities.

Concerning his reputation as a "crazy" young man (which he was), accompanying Soraya when the dethroned queen was spending her lonely, sad existence in the salons and on the beaches of Europe, Ambassador Santofimio [sic] says that this is all an exaggeration. "People are fascinated by inventing things; the reality is half of a half; the rest is gossip, and that gossip is the same here and everywhere else."

He interested me when he told me that he was a cook; that is his hobby, and he practices it with pleasure and often. At the university, he had to cook out of necessity and economics. "I began making poached eggs, and gradually I discovered the mystery of the kitchen, which is not so complicated. What one needs is to be organized, to have good ingredients and a liking for it, and to do it with affection."

"Do you consider yourself a gourmet?"

"It would be presumptuous on my part to say that I was a gourmet. I should not say that; others should. But if one considers a gourmet to be a person with a very refined palate, who likes only very delicate dishes, then I am definitely not a gourmet; because I like to eat well, but I enjoy a shad stew as much as a complicated pheasant dish."

Economy, Marihuana and Coffee

I have to ask someone with so much power in the world of our economy his view of the Colombian economic situation.

"I think that it is good, compared with the rest of the Latin American countries, including Venezuela. In the difficult international situation due to the oil problem, we are in better condition than our neighbors."

"Then if you were the finance minister, you would not amend the present minister's plan?"

"Every cook has his recipe for preparing his dishes, but it seems to me that Jaime Garcia's efforts have been successful. And if I were to grade his administration as finance minister by percentages (as Minister Deng graded Mao's policy in the interview that he granted to Oriana Fallaci), the percentage of success is definitely much greater than the possible mistakes that a minister in any country could humanly make.

"I think that the economy has been handled well, in a serious manner, with plans that are not for the short or immediate term, but rather considering the nation's economic welfare over the long term."

"How do you view the coffee situation and the differences that have arisen between Colombia and Brazil?"

"I think that the situation is difficult, because the prospects are dim. And if the situation in the Persian Gulf worsens, the price of oil will continue to rise. Brazil will have to buy oil from countries other than Iraq. And, in view of the potential pressure from prices, it will reduce those for coffee berries so as to be able to take on those larger costs of the fuel that it needs. Therefore, I consider the status of coffee to be very critical. But Colombia's coffee policy has been very well handled. Arturo Gomez Jaramillo is an unsurpassable administrator of that policy."

"What is your opinion of the underground economy?"

"Gracious, I think what everyone thinks: it is a very critical matter, and very difficult to handle; because the profits are so big that the governments lack the means that would enable them to control the scandalous figures on that clandestine trade which has produced so much corruption.

"If the United States, which has all the means within its reach: money, technology and personnel, has been unable to control that contraband, how can we be expected to be able to control it? Because the fact is that the drugs leave here, but reach the United States. They are the purchasers. And if there were no purchasers, there would be no sellers."

"Couldn't there be the beginning of a solution if the marihuana trade were legalized, as Ernesto Samper in ANIF [National Association of Financial Institutions] has proposed?"

"I am not in favor of the legalization of marihuana, because that would not solve the problem. It would, on the contrary, be a great disgrace for the country to be the first to legalize it. Let the United States legalize it."

"I believe that it is already virtually legalized in some countries."

"But why should Colombia have the international stigma of having been the first country to legalize a drug? Remember that China never legalized opium. Furthermore, one cannot make a comparison between what happened in the United States when there was a ban on alcohol consumption and the prohibition of marihuana. They are two completely different things, because alcohol does not have the danger of marihuana, which is a hallucinogenic substance whose harmful effects on the human body have not been completely gaged."

"Another argument in favor of the legalization of marihuana is that, by doing so, we would cause the large sums of money now circulating underground to enter the nation's economy legally."

"No, it would not happen that way. Have you seen anything more legal than the coffee trade? And what is happening? The contraband is operating; there will always be that illegality underground.

"I realize that the prohibition of alcohol in the United States caused many problems at the time. But the legalization of marihuana in Colombia would be worse; it would be a dreadful thing."

China: the Most Fascinating Country.

"Now that I know you are shy, romantic, optimistic, a good cook and lucky, could you tell me why you chose the embassy in China, when he might have chosen the embassy in Washington, or the best embassy in Europe?"

"I did not choose. It was the president who did me the honor. And I confess that I was surprised at first."

"Really? I think that the public was more surprised; because they say that you like to live very well, with great comfort, surrounded by so many good things which you will certainly not find in China. Besides, how is a man like you going to adapt to the customs of a communist country?"

"What should attract people's attention is if I had not accepted. I am sure that any businessman from any social class would consider it an honor and a great distinction to initiate the relations between Colombia and the People's Republic of China. And who would not be attracted by being able to live in the largest human conglomerate in the world, surrounded by the thousand-year old reflections of the effort of those people, with what it represents in the realm of the humanities, added to the enchantment that the Far East means to us?"

"Is it your first trip to China?"

"For some time, I wanted to become familiar with that country, and I had everything arranged with some Filipino friends to go and live in China for about 3 months. So going with the rank of ambassador was a joy for me. Besides, everything Chinese delights me: the art, history, furnishings, porcelain and food; the life style of the Chinese. When I was in Hong Kong, I purchased Chinese furniture and porcelain for my home. They fascinate me."

"Was President Turbay aware of all this when he appointed you?"

"No, I don't think that he knew about it. I had never discussed China with him. But it is as if he had known. He struck me in the pleasure zone."

"Do you think that it will be easy for you to adjust to a life so different from the kind to which you are accustomed?"

"I shall certainly be able to adjust, because it is not the material conveniences, such as household electrical appliances (which are also there), that make life pleasant. For intellectual curiosity and spiritual enjoyment, China is an inexhaustible mine. All that is worth more than a late model blender."

"Don't you fear the monotony of the life in that vast, controlled, austere country?"

"No, I do not fear the monotony of life in China, because life cannot be monotonous where there is so much to see, to understand and to learn."

"If your mission is extended, would you be willing to have your children attend school with communist children and learn communism?"

"I don't want to embark on guesses about the length of my stay, because that is a decision for the president. On the other hand, I would not have any objection to my children attending school in China. I might tell you that a nephew of mine was arranging for his admission to a university in Peking, long before he knew about my appointment."

"Since you are a businessman, people think that your activity will be mainly economic. What are we going to buy from or sell to China?"

"One of the main reasons for initiating these relations is to establish a commercial exchange. PROEXPO [Export Promotion Fund] will have its representative, who will simultaneously serve as counselor of the embassy. There we shall study the categories of items that may be of major interest to both countries."

"Would you have been more interested in being ambassador in Mao's China, or in being ambassador now that the country is initiating contacts with the West?"

"I would have been interested in both instances. But I prefer to be ambassador now that they are approaching us more closely."

"Did you follow the steps of Mao's revolution? How do you judge its results?"

"Who has not followed the steps of Mao's revolution? However, it would be pretentious on my part to judge an event of such magnitude, which only now is beginning to be analyzed by the Chinese historians and sociologists."

Within a few weeks, the Santodomingo family will embark on the long trip to the Celestial Empire, which is Marco Polo's Cathay itself, and the very People's Republic organized by Mao, and the same China which was closed within itself for so many years and which is now opening its doors to the world.

Awaiting them in Peking is Minister Ricardo Samper, an old expert on China who is therefore an invaluable adviser. And awaiting them is a house which was the former Cambodian Embassy, a house which the Chinese Government assigned for the Colombian mission.

Julio Mario Santodomingo, the first Colombian ambassador to the largest, most distant and most populated country, is going resolved to do many things, including the establishment of cultural relations. Because the People's Republic of China now does not seem to be so fearful as it did when the native political movement started, which caused so much talk and so much action, and which lived (and died) with the name of Mao.

All that remains is to wish luck to one who has always had luck. He will undoubtedly continue to have it this time as well.

PRESIDENT CARAZO CALLS FOR NEW ECONOMIC ORDER

PA271345 San Jose Radio Noticias Del Continente in Spanish 0100 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Costa Rican President Rodrigo Carazo has stressed the need for a new international economic order. Speaking at the 4th annual conference on trade, investments and development in the Caribbean, the current state of world affairs there is only one way to solve economic injustice: by establishing a new international economic order. The president said that this would allow the superpowers to truly do justice to the developing nations, which are their main source of raw materials.

If democracy is to survive on the continent and in the world, Carazo said, the terms of north-south trade must be changed. He added that OPEC is a harsh reminder of what can happen when the developing nations become aware of the power they wield. No poor country can guarantee the survival of democracy if it is denied the economic tools that are needed to maintain the system.

The energy crisis looks over the developing countries. Referring to this world problem, President Carazo said that its economic and social ills can destroy theses, theories and doctrines in a short time and reduce to ashes the efforts of governments, political parties and entire societies so thoroughly that it can destroy the veritable fortress that a democratic regime represents. As an example he cited the case of Costa Rica, where an increase in the price of oil has coincided with a severe drop in the price of coffee. The consequences, he pointed out, have been very serious for Costa Rica's economy. He said that almost all income from coffee exports will be used to pay for the fuel needed for vehicles and machinery.

On another subject, Carazo said he hopes that the Caribbean countries will be able to consolidate their independence, and that Central America is a volcano in a state of eruption. Regarding his government's contribution to the Nicaraguan struggle a little over 1 year ago, Carazo said that by supporting the revolution Costa Ricans not only fulfilled a duty of solidarity toward their enslaved brothers, but also defended the country's sovereignty from the ambitious designs of one of the most ruthless dictators that the continent has ever known. In the case of Nicaragua, he continued, history will show that we were alongside this heroic people in their great struggle for freedom.

President Carazo then asked the democratic countries of the continent to support the Nicaraguan process so that this country can follow a similar path.

NEW CAREERS IN NUCLEAR ENERGY EXPLAINED

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 30 Oct 80 p 6

[Text] The production of energy is directly related to the development of any country. Cuba does not have fossil fuels such as petroleum, gas or coal (at least no substantial reserves are known of now), nor does it have large water resources capable of meeting future energy needs. Therefore, it must plunge headlong into the development of nuclear energy.

The nuclear sciences are applied not only in the construction of nuclear plants for the generation of energy, but also in other fields such as the production of radioisotopes, which are used widely in medicine, agriculture and industry, as well as many other uses that have been discovered by the so-called nuclear technologies in many productive processes.

In our country the necessary steps are being taken to create a center for nuclear research, which will continue the work begun by the present Institute of Nuclear Research.

Long-range development of the nuclear field in Cuba requires the training of many researchers to specialize in different areas such as nuclear physics, theoretical as well as experimental; radiochemistry; nuclear plants; nuclear electronics; electronic computers and applied mathematics.

Other related or interdisciplinary specializations are also necessary, such as solid state physics, analytical chemistry and biophysics, which complement the studies and research in the nuclear field.

Requirements for Specializations

Ministerial Resolution No. 55 of 1980, passed by the Ministry of Higher Education, sets forth the requirements for students wishing to study these fields.

Among those prerequisites are: a grade point average higher than 95; grades of 95 or higher in physics, chemistry and math classes during pre-university studies; satisfactory results on the psychometric personality and apptitude tests that are given; good results in Preparatory School; and a good attitude toward studies and other tasks involved in political and mass organizations.

This article contains some general information about the nature of some of the nuclear curricula that pre-university students may choose. However, those interested in obtaining more information can write to the Executive Secretariat for Nuclear Affairs of the Cuban Atomic Energy Commission, Apartado Postal 6689, Havana.

Nuclear Physics Major

Nuclear physics is one of the youngest sciences. It dates back to when Rutherford came up with a new model for the atom at the beginning of this century.

In recent years, the study of nuclear physics has taken on great importance. One of the principal problems of today that physicists must face is that of a regulated thermonuclear reaction; that is, the ability to control at will the energy that is released during a thermonuclear reaction.

With the study of the synthetic reaction of the light nuclei such as those of hydrogen, deuterium and tritium, concrete results have already been obtained. In the synthesis process, an enormous quantity of energy (thermonuclear energy) is given off, but there still remains the problem of regulating this synthetic reaction.

Nuclear physics studies the structure and properties of the atomic nucleus and all the processes that participate in it: radioactive disintegration, nuclear reactions, nuclear fission, etc.

Nuclear physics, like any other branch of physics, is divided into two fundamental parts: experimental nuclear physics and theoretical nuclear physics.

Experimental nuclear physics is concerned with experimental research into nuclear phenomena. It uses equipment such as particle accelerators, nuclear reactors, computers. This branch is also concerned with the study of elemental particles, cosmic rays, high energy physics, and the nuclear spectroscope. It in turn is closely related to other branches of physics, such as solid state physics; through the interaction of neutrons with solid bodies, it is possible to study their properties, crystalline structure, composition, etc.

Theoretical nuclear physics explains the phenomena detected experimentally, and designs models of the atomic nucleus. It uses mathematic calculations with the aid of powerful calculators in order to propose new experiments.

Theoretical nuclear physics includes the study of the atomic nucleus' structure by means of the creation of models, the study of nuclear reactions, quantum theory, quantum statistics, group theory, etc.

Curriculum

The curriculum in this major includes the following classes:

General physics (mechanics, molecular physics, optics, electromagnetism); physics of the atomic nucleus; mathematical analysis; physics of nuclear reactions; theory of the functions of complex variables; neutron physics; differential and integral equations; theoretical physics (electrodynamics, thermodynamics, analytical mechanics); methods of mathematical physics; and experimental methods and techniques of nuclear physics.

Nuclear Electronics Major

Nuclear electronics is a new field that has emerged from the union of electronics and experimental nuclear physics. Its purpose is to design and construct the instrumentation necessary to carry out experiments.

This field of study is important in the development of radiochemistry, nuclear medicine and the so-called applied nuclear technologies.

Nuclear electronics includes the following specializations, among others:

Analog nuclear electronics: deals with the design of equipment to be used in the formulation of analog signals or pulses coming from detectors. (Analog signals are those which are continuous over time, as opposed to digital signals, which are short pulses.)

Digital nuclear electronics: deals with the formulation and compilation of the information obtained in the experiments through the recorders which preserve information until it is needed again.

Curriculum

The following classes are taken in this major:

Mathematical analysis, methods of mathematical physics, nuclear physics, neutron physics, interaction of radiations with substances, spectroscope, radioelectronics, analog electronics, nuclear electronics and nuclear instrumentation.

Nuclear Plants and Facilities Major

During the eighties the first nuclear plant will be built in Cuba. Thus, nuclear energy is expected to be developed on the basis of the installation of pressurized-water reactors, which are now being used in the countries of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CEMA).

This field of study trains the graduate to install and use nuclear reactors and the auxiliary equipment and systems.

Curriculum

Engineers specializing in nuclear plants and facilities take the following courses, among others:

Nuclear and neutronic physics (in which the basic aspects of quantum mechanics, the principles of radioactivity and different types of reactions are learned); process of thermal exchange in nuclear reactors (the basic concepts of conduction in the presence of internal heat sources are learned, as well as those of thermal and hydrodynamic exchange in the cooling of reactors); electronuclear plants (the concepts of the various systems that make up an electronuclear power plant are explained); organization of production and economics of nuclear energy, and technology of nuclear reactors.

Applied Mathematical Electronic Computation Major

This field prepares specialists to work in mathematical modeling for the simulation of critical real conditions and models of research reactors and electromuclear plants, and to make numerical calculations for the efficient solution of complex mathematical equations and algorithms. It also deals with the statistics required for the planning and methodical analysis of research.

Mathematical cybernetics makes possible the direct utilization of applied mathematics in electronic computers; the design, implementation and use of innovative systems of programming for the control of plant operations, and for research projects, are also taught.

Excellent Opportunity

These new fields of study open new doors for Cuban youths. They can combine an investigative spirit with the possibility of applying their capabilities to a pioneer technique, and the desire to devote oneself to studies in order to face the challenge that the need to develop nucleoelectronic energy poses to the economic development of our country. There are also other important applications of this technology in the medical and productive fields.

These majors can be studied in our country and abroad. In order to choose these fields, students may write to the commission that grants scholarships to pre-university students and fill out a form for that purpose. If they want more information, they may write to the Executive Secretariat for Nuclear Affairs, whose address appears in another part of this article.

Young student, the nuclear field awaits you!

EMULATION WORK REVIEW MEETING--Roberto Veiga, secretary general of the Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions (CTC), today announced in his closing remarks at the national plenum on the second party congress emulation that next year's [emulation work] will be dedicated to the 10th WFTU Congress scheduled to be held in Havana in February 1982. He explained that the results of emulation work over the past 9 months show encouraging progress in previously unsatisfactory fulfillment of production goals. He emphasized that more than 1,400 work places have fulfilled this year's production goals. He further called for days of volunteer work in support of the tobacco and sugar harvests, construction and other activities. The main report to the second party congress emulation plenum was rendered by CTC secretariat member Lazaro Dominguez who emphasized that four trade unions and one province fulfilled the established production goals. These were the Public Administration, Communications, Transportation and Education and Science Trade Unions and Ciego de Avila Province. FEU MEETING--Armando Hart, member of the party Politburo and minister of culture, has urged university students to undertake a broad cultural movement at higher education centers which would be a source of pride for Cuba and socialism. He made the call at the first national meeting of the Federation of University Students which was held at Central University in Villa Clara. Hart suggested that cultural work be intensified and expanded at the country's universities because these have the suitable potential to undertake such a momentous task. ROLE OF ARMED FORCES IN POLITICS DISCUSSED

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 2 Nov 80 p 8

[Editorial: "Our Armed Forces"]

[Text] Among the components which make up the Dominican state, the military institutions should be the ones which merit our most respectful, serious and careful attention.

Day by day, the Armed Forces, faced with the internal splitting of the parties which are unwittingly and gradually losing representative status, therefore making their recovery imperative, the Armed Forces, we say, are forming the only entity subordinate to the executive branch, in the service of the nation, which has remained organized and which displays cohesion as a result of the Spartan martial discipline that prevails among its members.

It is necessary, at all costs, to keep our uniformed personnel out of the political whirlwind, at a time such as the present, when, as we observe in Central America, there are outbreaks everywhere of gory violence and, here and here, like bait, the lures of totalitarian Messianism appearing.

At the present time in this country, the military leaders do not aspire to assume power in order to attain their own goals. The members of the native armies, taken from among the plains people, who at another time were the terror of the community, are not even making a merely paternalistic convocation.

It may be said, without any intention of flattery that would be inappropriate to give to men with hair on their chest, that in recent times, our soldiers, obedient to the economic strategy of the civilian authorities, have been adhering, without resistance or reservations, to the problems for economic and political development which are the indispensable basis for social justice, independence and sovereignty.

We believe that our "guards" are convinced (spurred on by the painful learning experience of disillusionment) that they are unable to create, for themselves or for others, the consensus that is required to consolidate political stability, for the purpose of keeping an enduring functional democracy in effect.

The example of Brazil and the last elections in our country has proven that the militia becomes exhausted in the vicious circle of repression, without succeeding in laying the foundations on which the legal institutions in an authentic state of law rest permanently.

From these premises, which obviously are of a doctrinal and historical, pragmatic nature, one reaches the unanimous conviction that the political groups should cease denigrating the Armed Forces, believing them to be bribable or, what is perhaps worse, courting and wooing them, so that they may become the armed branches of the military groups.

Let us not take the soldiers out of their stations or their barracks: On the contrary, let us require that, in order that they may perform their historic mission, they religiously adhere to the tasks which the nation's constitution has assigned to them.

According to the organic statute of the nation, they must be obedient to the civilian authorities, whoever the office holder that the polls have invested with that power may be; they must be unbelligerent, and tractable to the orders emanating from the Capitol; and they must remain aloof from petty politicking, remaining faithful to their calling as guardians of internal peace and of the borders which demarcate the national territory.

In the latter connection, we do have an urgent, serious suggestion to make: That the Armed Forces be properly equipped so as to put them in a position to effectively check the contraband in the marine areas, and to turn back, with humane methods, but without tolerating violations of the law, to turn back westward, from where they have come, those who are attempting to violate our borders with the neighboring country.

REFORMIST PARTY LOSING MEMBERS TO NIVAR SEIJAS' PARTY

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 31 Oct 80 Sec D p 4

[Text] The recruitment of its members being carried out by the National Action Party (PAN) is the cause of a certain amount of concern among the high command of the Reformist Party (PR), which prompted a communique this week noting that the Reformist Party does not have any pact nor relationship with any other political organization.

It was commented that the PAN, headed by retired Gen Neit Rafael Nivar Seijas, has won over leaders and members of the Reformist Party, although there has been no publicity about this.

At the last meeting of the central executive board of directors of the PR, it was remarked that activists from the PAN have used the argument (to attract the unwary Reformist members) that both organizations are the same, and that they would unite before the elections. A source associated with the PAN claimed that this was untrue.

It was to refute that argument that the Reformist board of directors noted in its communique that it has "no pact nor relationship with any other entity, whether recognized by the Central Electoral Board or not," although it cited other political organizations.

It was learned that the top-ranking Reformist leaders are also concerned about the dual membership that many individuals traditionally in the ranks of the Reformist Party are attempting to maintain. It has been discovered that such persons are avowed Reformist members who, nevertheless, secretly participate in PAN meetings and activities.

It was for the purpose of checking this that the PR's central executive board of directors warned, in their communique, that "no Reformist member should attend meetings other than those called by our party's legitimate entities which relate exclusively to its political interests."

Inquiries made during the past few days have made it possible to ascertain that the PAN, which began to be formed 6 months ago, has managed to bring into its membership many Reformist leaders and members.

Although the defection has by no means weakened the PR, it is known that high-ranking Reformist leaders are worried, and this is why it was included as the first point on the agenda for Monday's meeting.

It was disclosed that the situation was explained to Dr Joaquin Balaguer in Boston by the Reformist secretary general, Joaquin Ricardo, who visited the American city last week.

Mentioned among the Reformist leaders who have defected to join the PAN are the former attorneys general of the republic, Drs Anaiboni Guerrero Baez and Miguel Angel Luna Morales; as well as Federico Mateo (Chichi), Victor Feliz Peguero and Dr Maximo Henriquez Saladin, former prosecutor for the National District.

Other leaders who have left the PR to join Nivar Siejas' party are said to be Titi Santos, in Jarabacoa; Vicente Sencion and Antonio Andujar, in Azua; and Papi Bisono, Dr Felix Pereyra, Felix Rojas, Gumersindo Toribio and Andres Mendoza Pepin, in Santiago. Also, Dr Angel Hernandez Acosta, in Neiba; Dr Jose Benjamin Uribe Macias, Dr Rafael Uribe, Wilfredo Arias and Homero Ramirez, in San Cristobal; Dr Juan Rafael Capell, Jose A. Perez and Miguel Briso, in Puerto Plata; Carmen del Valle and Liberato Marranzini, in San Juan de la Maguana; and Dr Jaime Shanlatte, former prosecutor of the court of appeals in both San Cristobal and Santo Domingo. A PAN leader declared: "There are many Reformist leaders who sympathize with us, but they are waiting for the right time to join our ranks officially."

On the other hand, Reformist leaders have detracted importance from the defections, "both qualitative and quantitative."

It was learned that, before the end of the year, the PAN will submit to the Central Electoral Board its request for recognition, and will hold a national convention to select its central committee.

It has been disclosed that, thus far, the PAN has formed committees in all the municipalities and nearly all the provinces.

However, the entity has kept its activities rather confidential, and its leader, in particular, has refused to answer questions from the press.

Nevertheless, the recruitment of a large number of Reformist members does not appear to have obtained sufficient strength for the PAN to warrant its being considered to have good prospects for the next elections.

However, its leaders, headed by Nivar Siejas, are traveling all over the country organizing committees.

RADIO COMMENTARY SAYS PEOPLE REJECT LEFTISTS

PA281800 San Salvador Domestic Service in Spanish 1230 GMT 28 Nov 80

[Text] In the face of the most recent events, the Revolutionary Government Junta is holding to its democratic ideal of preserving public order for the benefit of the Salvadoran people and is trying, through all legal means, to preserve social order through dialogue as a formula for peaceful coexistence.

In individual statements, the members of the Revolutionary Government Junta have exhorted those who unsuccessfully attempt to create abnormal situations, detrimental to the Salvadoran people, to abandon their attitudes which are contrary to national reality.

It is not through the destruction of jobs, death threats or attacks against private or public property that they will achieve their political goals.

In the face of the acts of terrorism committed by the extremist minorities, the revolutionary government has taken a position of political balance, which does not permit belligerance by those desiring to create chaos among the people.

Marxist leaders abroad know that the extreme left minorities in El Salvador are bleeding to death. This, however, is convenient for their international campaign to disparage the nation. They also know that conditions are not ripe for insurrection, nor are they going to be because the extreme right also does not have popular support and because the democratic revolution has begun a social transformation and opened the path toward the Salvadoran people's social vindication.

If the extreme minorities had the support of the people, they would not have to resort to acts of sabotage and terrorism against them. The people have shown with their exemplary attitude that they only want to work in peace. This patriotic decision by the people has caused a lack of restraint on the part of the enemies of the nation in their vandalistic activities against this nation. These enemies are part of this nation and it is they who suffer the consequences of their acts in the long run.

Lest the people forget, we again repeat that the extremists have lost the historical alternative which was presented by El Salvador's ideological pluralism because they preferred violence to political debate. The people of El Salvador have seen the light. They have matured politically and they know that those who destroy their jobs and attack public facilities are their enemies.

STUDENT LEADER COMMENTS ON FDR KILLINGS

PA290500 Havana International Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 29 Nov 80

[Statement by Oscar Bonilla, president of the El Salvador University Students General Association to Havana International Service; time and place not given--recorded]

[Text] In desperation U.S. imperialism and its domestic allies have tried to halt and destroy our revolutionary movement.

They are promoting massacres of the civilian population and the murder of our country's leaders. The most recent case is the massive murder of the Revolutionary Democratic Front [FDR] Executive Council which included leaders such as Juan Chacon, Enrique Alvarez Cordoba, Enrique Barrera, Manual Franco, Doroteo Hernandez, and Humberto Mendoza. However, these murders are just an expression of the desperation which imperialism has resorted to in its efforts to destroy the high revolutionary morale of a people which has risen up in arms to win its final liberation.

We believe that this has been a hard blow for our people. These were leaders who were close to the masses and at the heart of the peoples masses, in spite of the climate of repression present there and even though they well knew they could be murdered at any time. They knew, however, that such a murder was not going to halt the process in El Salvador and that on the contrary, thousands of Salvadorans are more aggressively becoming involved now that their leaders have fallen. The leaders are not being mourned, but imitated in the struggle against imperialism and the domestic dominating classes.

Mr Robert White is completely mistaken and he can continue murdering and trying to destroy our movement. He can continue to look for the main leaders and the members of the FDR, of the Farabundo Marti National Revolutionary Front [FMLN] but he will not find them. The basic mistake has been to try to destroy the principal leaders without realizing that the leaders of our process are all the people. They are the artisans and actors in this revolutionary process.

The only way imperialism can halt the revolutionary process is to destroy El Salvador completely. However, the reply, popular justice, will not be long in coming. The FMLN has increased its attacks. The region controlled by the guerrilla forces, militias and the revolutionary army grows daily. The harassing of army convoys and attacks on army posts are increasing daily.

This is a sample of the power and the political-military force of our people to install a democratic revolutionary government as the only real and possible alternative to solve the crisis of dependent capitalism in El Salvador.

We believe that soon there will be an increase of attacks by the revolutionary force and we are sure that soon El Salvador will triumph.

If imperialism decides to make a massive military intervention in El Salvador, as revolutionary leader Salvador [name indistinct] said, if the marines land in El Salvador, they will find their graves there. We, the students, are appealing to the people to increase their fighting capability and to remain confident that we shall triumph.

Imperialism's purpose with these murders is to demoralize our people, but this is not the first time, nor are these the first leaders to fall under counterrevolutionary bullets. Other fighters have fallen, but fighters and leaders are not mourned. They are imitated in battle and the companeros who fell shall rest assured that they will be imitated and we shall soon defeat imperialism as we did in Vietnam, Cuba and Nicaragua. When a people rises in arms, there is no imperialism, junta or tyranny that can stop it. El Salvador will triumph.

DRU RESPONDS TO CEDES MEDIATION PROPOSAL

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 8 Nov 80 p 14

[Text] Yesterday afternoon, we received the response from the Political-Military Unified Revolutionary Directorate (DRU) of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (FMLN) to the mediation proposal from the El Salvador Bishops Conference (CEDES) to resolve the serious situation of violence and death that is lacerating the country. In brief, the DRU states:

1. The people want peace, but a true and lasting peace based on justice and the fulfillment of their fundamental interests; 2. The people have sought justice in the elections, and have always been thwarted; the attempts at dialog "have been a mere farce" and, as the FDR [Revolutionary Democratic Front] says, the people "have been forced into war." "They want the bishops to reflect on recent history, and honestly ask themselves what solution is left to the people if not the popular, armed struggle." 3. When the letter from the CEDES is analyzed, it "is radically dissociated from the just interests and aspirations of the vast Christian working majorities." 4. There is disregard for the "heroic, massive effort for liberation expended by the great Christian masses of the urban and rural areas." 5. CEDES "goes along with the present government's hypocritical, spurious campaign of deception, confusion and misinformation."

Elsewhere, the DRU acknowledges the Church of El Salvador as an extremely important institution for the country, and the fact that the majority of Salvadorans are religious and Christian. However, it states: "We cannot be silent at the well-known antipopular and anti-Christian record of the majority of the bishops who were signatories." Subsequently, the DRU declares that it cannot hold dialog with the Christian Democratic Junta, but that it does "want to hold dialog and join with all the progressive social forces in the country interested in finding a solution that will be favorable for the people." The response was signed by Salvador Cayetano Carpio, Joaquin Villalobos and Shafik Jorge Handal.

JUNTA RESTRICTS IMPORTS OF LUXURY ITEMS OUTSIDE CACM

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 11 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] The Government Junta has banned imports of luxury items from countries which are not members of the Central American Common Market [CACM], as an emergency measure to "rationalize the use of the meager hard currency supplies."

The respective resolution, No 927, was dated yesterday and released publicly today by the Ministry of Economy. The ban will last for 90 days, starting on the date when the resolution goes into effect.

The measure includes imports of alcoholic beverages, tobacco manufactures, untanned fine hides, perfumes, lotions, cosmetics, powders prepared for toiletries, rouge, shaving cream, depilatories, saddles, plates, cups and other items made of cardboard, bedclothing, curtains, glass items, statutes, beads, artificial flowers, china or porcelain household items, pearls and precious stones, firearms, radio sets with record players or tape recorders, television sets, cooking utensils, automotive vehicles, yachts, hanging lamps, handbags, wristwatches, etc.

The resolution was issued through the Economic Branch, and contains the following whereas clauses:

I. Exchange measures have been adopted in order to strengthen our balance of payments, hence it is necessary to adopt direct measures related to imports, for the purpose cited. II. Imports of luxury goods have reached sizable levels in the past, hence it is advisable to place temporary restrictions on imports thereof. III. There is a heavy demand for hard currency to meet the needs of the National Emergency Program and, to meet that demand, the use of the meager hard currency supplies must be rationalized. IV. Consistent with our country's integrationist policy, the restrictive measures are not to be applied to exports from the other Central American countries and Panama.

According to the resolution, the Ministry of Finance will inform the Ministry of Economy on the prices and volumes of the needed items imported this year, and is authorized to order the necessary measures.

FINANCE MINISTER SPEAKS IN FAVOR OF FOREIGN INVESTMENT

San Salvador LA PRENSA GRAFICA in Spanish 17 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] The minister of finance, Dr Jorge Eduardo Tenorio, declared that foreign investment in a country such as ours increases wealth, fosters the infrastructure and allows for the creation of new job sources.

The official stated that investment is one of the leading facilities that a country has for promoting its wealth.

During a press conference, Dr Tenorio discussed the inflationary situation that the country is experiencing, making a comparison with the balance of payments of other South American nations and, at the same time, observing that, in El Salvador, this situation is calm from an economic standpoint.

"In the Salvadoran nation, the colon is still strong; and one can observe Chile, Argentina and, in the Central American region, Costa Rica, having problems with the purchase of basic products, wherein the purchasing power of the currency is not favorable to the economy of family households."

Moreover, he remarked, one of the ways of fostering investment is to protect the industry in every country. If industry in Central America is given protection, great benefits will be accrued. The official noted: "We shall strive to strengthen the Central American market," focusing on the need for foreign investment in countries such as ours.

Dr Jorge E. Tenorio reiterated the fact that the Revolutionary Government Junta is adopting a series of measures which will have a direct effect on the easing of the inflationary situation among family households. There are no fewer than 10 measures that will make it possible to ease this situation in many homes.

Ceiling on Tuition

Consideration is being given to putting a ceiling on the tuition in the country's educational centers. But this is not intended to alarm the heads of the educational institutions, he commented, but rather to benefit the parents whose children are attending school; because they belong to the middle class, and the latter is a driving force in the productivity of the entire nation.

Another measure is one that would maintain the same salaries in 1981, but at the same time the present government would strive to cut the high costs of products and other expenses of family households. He said: "We are bent upon achieving this, and also upon preventing the creation of unnecessary jobs in the country." With regard to the nation's productivity, he remarked: "You can be sure that we Salvadorans are not going to give in to anything."

There will also be an attempt to reduce the proliferation of autonomous entities. He explained: "We are battling in that direction."

ARCHBISHOPRIC INSTALLATIONS RAIDED--San Salvador, 23 Nov (ACAN-EFE)--The Salvadoran archbishop today charged that a priest in charge of the Salvadoran archdiocese communications had been accused of being a "communist." In the archbishopric's Sunday homily, which was delivered by Father Roberto Torruellas, it was stated that "someone is accusing Father Fabian Amaya of being a communist and right away the army raids the Criterio Printing Shop and the installations of Radio YSAX [Vox Panamericana]. Torruellas reported that the archbishopric and these two installations was raided by army troops in Mufti earlier this week. The raid was conducted "unprofessionally, without ethics and without political vision" by the authorities, said Torruellas, adding that the government troops had trampled on the rights of the employees of the metropolitan clergy and peasant refugees in the archbishopric. "This occurs with persons trained to kill. They are taught to hate," he added. He also said: "Just as communists are taught hatred of classes, the members of the army are taught to hate communists." For the army, "the archbishopric and its installations are communist hideouts," said Torruellas. The priest released a communique from Msgr Arturo Rivera Y Damas, apostolic administrator of San Salvador, in which he assures that Father Amaya "is his alter ego." Torruellas condemned the killing of an army colonel, his wife and two of his children by presumed leftists, stating that the crime "shows that our society is fatally ill, since respect for life has been lost." Torruellas mentioned that "millions of colones" are being spent on propaganda against the church in the media, "insulting it and slandering it" as communist. CAUTION TO REAGAN--The Republican Party and its winning candidate, Mr Ronald Reagan, have announced a policy to improve relations and to give more aid to friendly countries. This is natural, but Reagan should be careful when reaching a decision because countries with dictatorial regimes do not represent the people. When one goes deeper, there are differences regarding friendship among nations. The people can have great admiration and respect for the United States, but can disapprove U.S. Government support to dictatorial regimes. When this is the case, there cannot be a sincere friendship, instead there will be resentment that in the long run will create negative results. The United States can [be] rest assured of the sincere friendship of countries run by democratic regimes and must not trust countries ruled by dictatorial regimes. [Roberto Celis] [Excerpts] [PA260249 San Salvador EL DIARIO DE HOY in Spanish 25 Nov 80 pp 9, 39]

REAGAN HUMAN RIGHTS OBLIGATION--Human rights, which were the main pillar of President Carter's administration, will not end with president-elect Reagan's arrival at the White House. Even if Carter's replacement wanted to do so, he would not be able to unceremoniously abandon the practical application of human rights. The fact is, in addition to being included in international conventions that are legally binding, the human rights statute is an intrinsic part of human nature. In other words, it is not a group of rights that the new president will be able to toss into the garbage can, especially since Jimmy Carter has demonstrated their effectiveness. President Carter, then, was right when he pointed out to the OAS delegates the need for the new Republican administration to continue to hammer away on the subject of human rights. In this regard, this policy cannot be limited to the Carter administration, because it is something historical and was only placed in motion by the current U.S. President. Jimmy Carter's human rights policy was and is of great importance and is a very positive action. Naturally, where it was and is most effective is in the Hispanic American, African and other so-called Third World countries. As is generally known, insistence on the application of human rights forced leftist and rightist totalitarian governments to curb somewhat their persecution of their opponents, caused a decline in political deaths, brought about a reduction in the use of torture as a judicial measure and generated greater public awareness of how necessary it is for governments to be legitimately elected. Reagan would be wrong, therefore, to reach agreements with Latin American governments of the Pinochet, Videla or Garcia Meza type, and those who expect such an absurdity are mistaken. REAGAN EXPECTED TO HAVE MORE 'VISION' THAN CARTER

["From the Mountain" column by Antonio Majera Saravia: "Are They Going To Have Guts?"--passages within slantlines denote boldface as published]

[Text] The day Carter writes his memoirs, we will probably find out what type of person he is. Supposing, however, that he acted in good faith (giving him "the benefit of the doubt," or in other words, without doubting his good faith), there is no question about his inability. The damage he did to his party is considerable, but it was high time that the U.S. leftists were stopped. They almost imperceptibly went from criticizing "the system" to deciding to finish it without at any time accepting that it was much better than the other system, which unmercifully eliminates millions of innocent people because it is not concerned with the individual, but with the group... it is the system of those who have everything going for them, of course....

They never realized that their views benefited the enemy, a declared and "sworn" enemy that insists on destroying the U.S. bastion and on the colonization of the world under Soviet imperialism. At this point one can no longer discuss Russian nationalism. There is no "international struggle on behalf of the proletariat." It is simply /a Russia that wants its "imperialist" turn in world history./ Communism is merely the doctrine that justifies this, a hoax that many who are naive or ignorant, still take seriously.

Well, those procommunist leftists (the self-styled "liberals" or "new left" liberals) were interested in promoting the policy that favors "change" toward communism under any excuse. According to one of the most incredible of their theories, setting up communist "models" in a large number of nations with a democratic inclination would "take away the banners" of the communists and, in any event, after the intentions of those foreigners (Salvadorans, for instance) were smashed, it would be "easy" to bring these countries back to a democratic way of life. Now that Mr Carter has received his just desserts, the mistake in such a way of looking at things stands out even more.

These gratuitous collaborators of Russian imperialism were looking for a way to show how sound all their reasonings (or "rationalizations," as they say in English) were and they finally found weak peoples in our Central America. First, they found Nicaragua for the fundamental reason that it was ruled by a dictator who no one tolerated any longer. The traitorous thing was not helping to oust him, /but guaranteeing (permitting, which in this case is the same thing) the establishment of a socioimperialist dictatorship in its place./ This was done in spite of statements by the communist Sandinists themselves, who always denied it. In spite of U.S. congressional opposition, Carter gave them more than 150 millions [as published].

Next it was El Salvador's turn, where a weak president did not act forcefully enough. The "Liberals" staged a coup, arguing that the president was inefficient and disrespected "human rights" (another of the themes by this group). The junta that replaced him has killed many more people than the deposed president did and, /advised by an army of gringo "technicians," it has imposed on El Salvador a number of revolutionary measures of communist persuasion,/ beginning with the "agrarian reform," which has destroyed Salvadoran agriculture, and going on to the "nationalization" of both the banks and the coffee trade. It was not important that our Salvadoran brothers were obviously making progress, one had to help the communists succeed or "do something," which would amount to the same thing...!

There is no longer any doubt about Nicaragua. The U.S. voters, fortunately and intuitively guessed the truth in spite of the massive propaganda in a good deal of the media, most of which are "liberal" or leftist in orientation. A UPI report by Adolfo G. Merino datelined Washington (PRENSA LIBRE on the 12th, page 37) confirms what is being said here and what has been tenaciously contradicted by those in the State Department who favor socioimperialism. The Russians themselves have said that "Nicaragua is an interesting experiment because it might be (it already is!) /the first socialist revolution aided by the national (Nicaraguan) private sector and financed by the United States."/

According to Merino, Castro is worried because Nicaraguans are going too fast. With the cynicism typical of exploitative communists "they do not want /the thin veil covering the political intentions in Nicaragua to drop at the wrong time" and they want "Nicaraguan socialism (communism) to be financed by the capitalists."/ This is something they would have achieved had Carter been reelected. Let it be clearly understood that we were never "fooled." Much has been written about the intentions of the Russians, but President Jimmy never grasped what was at stake, for up to the end he defended the Nicaraguan revolution as a sure step toward "democracy..." (terrible!)

Reagan is expected to act with a little more vision. He is also expected to hold the fort while the free world raises new defenses. At present, the Russians practically have parity in the matter of weaponry and they have already announced that they will never allow themselves to drop to second place. Should they move into first place, /it is certain that they would impose a system of absolute dictatorship, torture and unmerciful assassination, on all the inhabitants of this planet./ In the meantime, partial battles will be waged in those places where circumstances present opportunities.

Guatemala is one of these places. For years a formula has been sought to first weaken us in order to subject us later. We have been strong, although not as strong as we could (or should) have been. The fact is that armed bands swarm our republic and our position is not yet firm. /That is why we should give them as few pretexts as possible to attack us./ The war declared on us will have to be fought by us on our own terrain, even if Ronald Reagan is president.

This is why blunders such as the new taxes and the construction of five unnecessary "towers" in the former central station are viewed with alarm. Instead of continuing to waste the taxpayers' money, /it is necessary to implement true austerity and much honesty./ The current administration has not "held back" ["tentado el alma"] in its efforts to destroy communism. /It still remains to be seen whether it has the guts to limit its own greed, to work honestly and to get rid of useless individuals before we grow even weaker and run unnecessary risks./

ORIGIN OF UN RESOLUTION TO CONDEMN COUNTRY VIEWED

PA272149 Guatemala City DIARIO DE CENTRO AMERICA in Spanish 20 Nov 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Origin and Intention of the Maneuver To Condemn Guatemala at the United Nations Under the Pretext of Human Rights Violations"]

[Text] According to reports from the United Nations, Cuba was one of the countries that promoted a draft resolution against Guatemala at the UN third committee. This resolution alleges human rights violations in Guatemala and demands that a UN human rights commission investigate the Guatemalan case and report on it at the next session.

Cuba is the country with the fewest attributes to judge human rights matters. What is happening is that Cuba is serving Soviet interests and it is taking advantage of its position as leader of the nonaligned nations in order to do this.

Guatemala is one of the key targets in the continent now that Soviet expansionism has its sights set on it and now that Guatemala has become a very important part of a new step by the USSR in Latin America.

There are two movements in this direction. One: to obtain the independence of the small territory of Belize in order to introduce foreign troops or impose satellite governments through subversion or by applying the Brezhnev doctrine--coming to the defense of people besieged by imperialism.

The other is to destabilize democracy in Guatemala in order to weaken its position in the defense of democracy as well as in the defense of its Belizean territory.

This strategy includes the establishment of an extreme leftist government in Guatemala to facilitate Soviet penetration.

Regarding the means to discredit the Guatemalan Government abroad and obtain resolutions condemning it in international organizations, including the United Nations, Cuba is the country least able to cast these stones.

The world has witnessed the mass flight of Cubans escaping from Castro's regime. Everybody knows of the Cubans' lack of opportunities for self-determination and to elect their own government through free voting.

Everybody knows that the Cuban youths in that country's army are the tentacle that the Soviet Union uses in the wars it is interested in. Therefore, Cuban soldiers end up fighting in continents remote and foreign to the true aspirations of the Latin American people, which are that of the Cuban people.

The origin of the maneuver behind a UN resolution to condemn Guatemala using the pretext of human rights violations is quite evident.

MINISTER SAYS DEMOCRACY DANGEROUS FOR DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

PA271757 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1116 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Text] Mexico City, 27 Nov (EFE)--The newspaper EL UNIVERSAL reports that Honduran natural resources minister Rodrigo Castillo Aguilar said here that democracy "is dangerous" in underdeveloped countries.

According to him, democracy is dangerous for developing countries because it facilitates interference by doctrines alien to the realities of those countries, as such countries lack plans for the future.

According to the Mexican newspaper, Castillo Aguilar said that he hopes peace and tranquillity will return to Central America.

Further on, he categorically denied that his government supplies weapons and money to the Somozist groups that are trying to return to power in Nicaragua. "None of the Honduran political parties is willing to give the aid you mention," he told the paper.

Castillo Aguilar added that his country favors a new international economic order, but dismissed the possibility that Honduras might help to develop that objective because, he said, "we are too poor and underdeveloped."

As for the Mexican-Venezuelan agreement, under which those two countries supply hydrocarbons to Central American and Caribbean nations, the official said that Honduras receives between 12,000 and 15,000 barrels of crude oil a day.

He said that his country would like Mexican crude oil imports to be increased, but he noted that "Mexico has the last say about a possible increase in supply." He did not say in which area Honduras wants the export quota increased.

The minister termed the oil agreement important, affirming that it benefits all of Latin America, in addition to promoting Mexico's leadership in the Third World.

Rodrigo Castillo Aguilar is in Mexico to attend a meeting of vegetable sanitation specialists organized by the Mexican Agriculture and Hydraulic Resources Secretariat.

SEAGA DISCUSSES ECONOMIC CRISIS IN SPEECH TO PARLIAMENT

FL241625 Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 20 Nov 80 pp 1, 18

[Text] The budget left by the PNP Government for fiscal year 1980-81 which ends on March 31, 1981, has been so constructed that the recourse this financial year to Bank of Jamaica financing is inevitable as has been the pattern in previous years.

This was stated by the prime minister and minister of finance, Mr. Seaga to Parliament on Tuesday, as he warned of the grave economic crisis facing the country.

Mr. Seaga said that the 1980-81 budget started with a gap of $305 million. As there were no new revenues, and loans could be ruled out for this financial year, the only source left was to Bank of Jamaica credits, i.e., "printing money at the Bank of Jamaica." This, Mr. Seaga said, was the bind in which the country had been left, and which his government had inherited.

Talks With IMF

He said that it was essential that his government kept expenditure tight for the rest of the year, and that the 1980-81 budget would begin to have the stamp of the new JLP Government in which external financing would play a very important role.

Mr. Seaga in announcing exploratory talks with the IMF, and his impending visit to Washington to hold discussions with the World Bank and with the Inter-American Development Bank, said that there was a $250 million foreign exchange gap in the projected foreign exchange budget for next year which he had inherited, and that this was after taking into account all known sources of borrowings and earnings.

The following is an extract from a taped transcript of Mr. Seaga's statement: "Notwithstanding the elements of recovery that have started to move into place, I must warn the nation that Jamaica still faces the greatest financial difficulties next year.

"We have at this time inherited a foreign exchange projected budget for next year which shows a gap of $250 m, and I want it to be clearly understood that this $250m gap is after all known sources of earnings and borrowings have been taken into account. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is after a projection has been made including a contribution from the I.M.F.

"And it is at this point that I would like to advise the country that we are now in the process of an exploratory discussion with the I.M.F. in Washington. Jamaica is eligible over a three-year period for some US$600m in I.M.F. loans at attractive and concessionary rates of interest.

"We are exploring by way of discussion, the present thinking of the International Monetary Fund; and they are too exploring the thinking of the new government, so that we will determine whether there is mutual ground on which we may come to an agreement which is not grounds which the people of Jamaica would object to, but grounds which are in the interest of the country in terms of alleviating its foreign exchange position.

"The country will be kept informed of the progress of these talks from time to time. "The fiscal budget started with a gap of $305 million at the beginning of the financial year. That gap is now between $350 million and $370 million on the basis of additional net expenditure since the beginning of the financial year.

Inflationary Pressures

"There is no source of new revenues to finance this; and indeed loans for this purpose can very well at this stage be ruled out for this financial year. The only source from which this financing can proceed is by printing money at the Bank of Jamaica which is the bind in which we have been left, and which is the condition which we have inherited.

"This carries with it certain inflationary pressures that we will discover in the course of the succeeding years; and next year when these inflationary pressures are being experienced in terms of price increases, it is just as well that the country should know from now--as indeed I have warned in another capacity at an earlier time--that the causative factors of many of such price increases arise out of the inflationary financing which the government of the past proceeded on in terms of financing the 1980-81 budget.

"For our part it is absolutely critical that we maintain the present level of expenditure at no greater figure than the figures which are mentioned save and except any acts of God.

"And it will be our responsibility to hold expenditure absolutely tight for the balance of this financial year so as not to aggravate the situation any further.

The New Budget

"The new budget is being prepared to be presented next year as the first budget of this new government. We begin discussions in due course, and in the interim exploratory talks are being initiated with such institutions as the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank to determine the level of external financing on which they may be relied for, as this is going to be the critical factor in terms of bringing new projects on stream.

"The point I am making here requires reinforcement; that the expenditure levels which we have inherited from the PNP Government has virtually tied up the great bulk of the finances of the country in inescapable expenditure from one year to another, leaving us pitifully little room to maneuver, leaving us pitifully little finances over which we have any discretion to reflect the policies and programs of the new government.

"External finances therefore, will play a very important role; and I propose at an early date to visit with the World Bank and with the Inter-American Development Bank in order to begin from now to line up the levels of support and the areas of support which we may expect from them; so as to enable us to know where else to look for the other projects which are set out in the manifesto of the Jamaica Labor Party..."

REAGAN URGED NOT TO HEED 'EXTREMIST SECTORS'

PA301720 Panama City LA ESTRELLA DE PANAMA in Spanish 29 Nov 80 p 4

[Editorial: "A Danger for Reagan"]

[Text] President Carter's defeat is no doubt the result of the feeling of frustration that many Americans had been experiencing in the face of what they regarded as a decline in their country's position both at home and abroad. Inflation, unemployment, the increasing crime rate and consumption of drugs, the low value of the dollar in the international monetary market, the hostages in Iran, the Kremlin's bold expansionism as shown by its invasion of Afghanistan, and Soviet penetration in several parts of Latin America had all managed to irritate many voters who attributed this situation more to the inability, weakness and hesitant attitudes of the occupant of the White House and his team of advisers and collaborators than to circumstances. They elected Reagan as an alternative, just as they would have elected any other candidate that the Republican Party put forward; any other candidate who would offer a government program based on substantial rectifications. What Americans do not want--and important sectors of the press have repeatedly stated this--is for millions and even billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money to be given to countries where very often minority groups manipulated and controlled by Moscow through its satellites, attack and stone the U.S. embassies and burn their flags shouting "anti-imperialist" slogans, while Marshal Ustinov's armored divisions crush the Afghan people's resistance through bloodshed and bullets.

It is possible and even probable that certain elements, which a number of "Republicans" consider to be extremist and is trying to discover and replace, may have infiltrated into the Carter camp because of the tolerance of candor which was the primary feature of Carter's administration. However, Mr Reagan must proceed cautiously and firmly in order not to let himself be overwhelmed by his own extremist sectors trying to revive the obscure and negative days of "McCarthyism," which has such disastrous results for the United States. Quite a few artists, writers, scientists and intellectuals suffered the consequences of the usually groundless persecutions unleashed against them by the sadly famous committee of un-American activities, which adopted measures that were later regretted.

It is not yet possible to know what some of the president-elect's followers expect from him. But he should already begin restraining those who, from radical and absurd positions, want to unleash a witch-hunt, to bug phones, to open correspondence, to create oppressive environments of suspicion for those who do not share their views and, in short, to imitate the hateful methods employed by the Soviet KGB, thus eroding the most fundamental pillars of U.S. life. These pillars have made the United States what it is today--a country that will never be dominated by fear.

We hereby announce to the Panamanian people and other sister nations of the world the creation of the new executive council of the FDR, which will give a news conference today in El Salvador.

The Panamanian Committee of Solidarity With the Salvadoran People supports this new entity, which, together with its vanguard, shall lead the Salvadoran people to their ultimate liberation.

At the same time, we demand the respect for the physical integrity and the immediate release of the 30 members of the legal assistance office of the archbishopric, captured together with the members of the Executive Council of the FDR.

In addition, the communique is endorsed by over 80 organizations and members of the committee.

In another document, the Association of Salvadoran Students exhort all democratic, revolutionary and progressive sectors of Panama to express their solidarity with the Salvadoran people's struggle and to send written protests to the media and embassies and to the military junta ruling in El Salvador.

COMMENT ON CARTER SPEECH--President Jimmy Carter's farewell speech at the OAS is a promise to the people of Latin America that once his administration ends on 20 January, he will not put an end to his human rights campaign aimed basically against the abuses and violations these people are suffering at the hands of the ruling totalitarian regimes on the continent. Besides being a message full of hope and promise to those of us in this part of the world who are being persecuted and harassed by despots, the U.S. President's statement shows his marked interest in the fate of the peoples living south of the Rio Grande. His interest is not limited to his presidential functions. It is that of a prominent world leader. One of the most common reactions to Jimmy Carter's defeat in the U.S. elections, was apprehension over the ominous perspectives that Carter's defeat poses to Latin America, because regressive forces, whether in power or not, are intent on terrorizing and destroying those who seek the social, political and economic changes which our hemisphere has always needed. Ill winds are blowing on the American Continent. It might be that the most reactionary conservative sectors in the area will capitalize on the Republican victory to unleash a campaign against everything that means progress and democracy, in view of the psychological climate created by the result of the U.S. presidential elections in Spanish-speaking nations. Within this negative context, President Carter's statement attains added significance, because--although it is up to persecuted and harassed Latin American countries to wage their own struggles to overthrow the tyrannies choking them--the support of personalities like the U.S. President can contribute to lessening the burden of misery and misfortunes born by many of our countries. ENERGY SECRETARY STRESSES CONSERVATION, SHORTAGES

[Text] Energy Secretary Daniel Brunella has asserted that under a suitable energy conservation program, Argentina could eventually save some $3 billion in fuel in the year 2000.

Speaking at the opening of the "Seminar on Electrical Energy Conservation," Brunella maintained, nevertheless, that such a program could not be made mandatory.

Taking part in the opening ceremony, among others, were Economy Minister Jose Alfredo Martinez de Hoz, who presided over it; the secretary of public information, Gen Antonio Llamas; the secretary of planning of the presidency, Brig Jose Miret; several economic secretaries and other ranking officials.

In his address the energy secretary recalled that his agency "is pursuing sector policies, formulating programs and taking the necessary measures to guarantee a maximum utilization of our country's energy resources" and that to this end it operates "basically through clear-cut appeals for cooperation from private companies and capital."

Within this framework, last year saw the startup of the "program for the rational use of energy," of which this seminar is a preponderant part. Outlining their experiences and views during it will be officials from the U.S. Department of Energy, the General Directorate of Electricity of France and the International Energy Agency, in addition to many representatives of various spheres in Argentina.

By moving forward along this path, Brunella said, "by the year 2000 the country will achieve energy consumption savings of around 10 percent, which according to estimates would mean savings of around $3 billion that year alone."

He clarified, nevertheless, that the purpose of the current seminar is not "to lay the groundwork for laws or stringent decrees, mandatory measures, electricity rationing or similar precautions."

It is, instead, a means of reaching conclusions "that could be applied in enterprises in which electrical energy is a major input" or of eventually "rousing and attracting the attention of the community with regard to our urgent need to reassess some of our everyday habits, for the sake of the generations that will follow us."

Brunella said that "we do not want the work of the seminar to be considered as over with the publication of the studies presented and the speeches delivered by the lecturers; instead, they should only be the starting point, an invaluable one, of course, for follow-up efforts by the task forces that we set up afterwards.

"Only in this way will we be able to arrive at conclusions that can be applied in practice, because nothing could be further from the intention of me and my fellow workers than to produce merely academic documents devoid of utilitarian content," he added.

"We must be capable of grasping the exact dimensions of the problem facing mankind in this era of energy shortages," Brunella concluded," cautioning that although Argentina is one of the least affected countries, "no country in the world is that rich in energy resources that it can afford to squander them."

The "Seminar on Electrical Energy Conservation" will run until next Friday at the Buenos Aires Chamber of Commerce. Among the many other issues to be taken up at it are cultural influences on energy conservation; new energy sources such as wind, geothermal and solar power; education drives; electric vehicles; the energy outlook in the United States and its applicability to Argentina, and greater efficiency and smaller losses in generating and transmission systems, with specific reference to the city of Buenos Aires.

PROJECTED OIL PRODUCTION INCREASE TO PLACE DEMANDS ON TRANSPORTATION

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 15

[Text] "Interurban cargo transport could increase faster than the gross domestic product over the next few years." This assessment was voiced by the national director of transportation planning, Jorge Kogan, at the opening session of the Seminar on Motor Vehicle Cargo Transport, which is being organized by the Center for Comparative Studies.

In detailing the outlook for increased interurban cargo transport, the director said that the system would be given a boost over the next few years by production programs for several items.

We can expect higher oil production from Patagonia, he pointed out, which should bring about greater demand for pipeline transport, as well as coastal and river shipping. Furthermore, the Hipasam iron ore processing plant in northern Patagonia will be completely on line by 1981, and its output will also be reaching the country's industrial zone by sea. There will be a net rise in domestic transportation, which will trigger a drop in import volume. Starting in 1982, the trends will level off, and the increase in cargo transport will be comparable to the economy's as a whole. In the medium term, railway transport will be spurred by the development of the Bajo de la Lumbrera (Catamarca) mining deposit and the installation of a plant for smelting and refining those minerals nearby in Andalgala, as well as the Famatina (La Rioja) mining development project. Rail transport will also be sparked by the anticipated increases in the shipping of several items, basically cement and grains.

"This process," Kogan said, "will be backed by a more aggressive commercial policy on the part of Argentine Railways, which will focus on transporting items for which rail transport provides technical advantages because of their weight and the distance to be traversed."

Kogan noted that 1979 was marked in particular by increases in rail, water and pipeline transportation.

PLANICIE BANDERITA HYDROELECTRIC PLANT IN OPERATION

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 1 Nov 80 p 21

[Text] Neuquen--The Planicie Banderita Hydroelectric Powerplant and its equalizing dam have been officially inaugurated in the presence of Energy Secretary Daniel Brunella.

Specifications

The project, located 90 kilometers northwest of the province capital, is a major contribution to the nation's energy output pool, since it is equipped with two groups of turbogenerators of 225,000 kilowatts each.

Attending the ceremony along with the governor, Gen Domingo Manuel Trimarco, were the chief executive of Rio Negro, Rear Adm Julio Acuna; the president of HIDRONOR [North Patagonia Hydroelectric Company], Mario Pineyro; the commander of the Sixth Mountain Infantry Brigade, Gen Mario Benjamin Menendez, and other ranking authorities.

Work on the equalizing dam began in March 1977 and was completed in August of this year; it is located downstream from the Planicie Banderita plant.

The earth-fill dam is 6,300 meters long, 2,900 of which is the section fronting the river, while 3,400 meters are an extension on the left bank.

The spillway is 100 meters long, and an irrigation intake was built as a complementary project for the nearby fruit-growing region.

In his address Brunella maintained that: "Inaugurating projects like Planicie Banderita is not a normal, everyday development, because we are placing in operation facilities that will provide multiple services to many generations in this country."

Referring to the delays in getting the project ready, he stated: "The official inauguration of this project had to be postponed for several reasons and is being staged at the same time that work is ending on the equalizing dam, which has the advantage of operating in tandem with the powerplant by regulating the waters."

The secretary then underscored the efforts of the deceased former director of HIDRONOR, Raul Sureda, of whom he said: "He worked without rest on this and other projects."

He then indicated that the powerplant "has the largest hydroelectric turbine installed so far in our country," adding that "since the country has energy programs that have been developed with the most appropriate techniques and that are in keeping with reasonable growth expectations, it remains only for us to work in an orderly fashion."

In this regard, he stressed the need to to "make intelligent use of our financial, technical and human resources and set aside sector and local interests when they do not coincide with the interests of the nation."

Oil Royalties

Upon arriving in the province, the energy secretary was asked whether his recent announcements spelled the end of claims by hydrocarbons producing provinces.

The question referred to the royalties that the provinces have been trying to get increased. After answering "obviously, yes," the secretary explained: "We are going to move gradually towards international prices in our country. All of this is to the benefit of the provinces and to the detriment of those who buy oil products. In other words, the provinces cannot complain because we will gradually get to the point in 1987 that the prices of oil and gas at the wellhead are at world levels."

FORMER PLANNING MINISTER DISCUSSES PLN, ECONOMIC CRISIS

San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 11

[Interview with Dr Marco Antonio Lopez Aguero, former minister of planning, by Wilmer Murillo in the column "Political Wednesdays in the Republic"; date and place not given]

[Text] The serious economic crisis the country is experiencing seems to be reaching a decisive stage. It is predicted that we are faced with terrible years of continuing price rises, unmanageable governmental debts and shrinking credit for private business.

The state has become the greatest purchaser and spender in the country. Its expenditures are increasing and it has announced it will raise taxes. Or rather it is raising them. Along with this unemployment and neglect are growing. This is a process which threatens to break the back of the system of social peace in Costa Rica. Unless wise steps are taken, it will be necessary to pay a very high social price.

All presidents enjoy a honeymoon period to begin with. The oppositions and dissatisfied trade unions refrain from exercising their prerogatives. But the current government has already for some time, almost since its inception, been facing difficult situations. The economic aspect is probably one of the most problematical. In all likelihood any government will have to devote its best efforts from 1982 on to combating the economic crisis. An economist active in politics, Dr Marco Antonio Lopez Aguero, former minister of planning during the Figueres administration (1970-1974), agrees that the country is facing an inflation problem which threatens to reach a culmination posing a danger to social peace. The following are the views he expressed.

[Question] To begin with, what types of changes are occurring in the National Liberation Party (PLN)? Do you feel any kind of concern about the way in which things are being done?

[Answer] The PLN, although it is a very old party, is in a process of constant renewal. We have seen this in particular since the last political campaign, when the bylaws have been modified, and to a certain extent the leadership renewed. As we know, there have recently been district and canton elections. The definitive guidelines for the next campaign are being developed. This is in the purely political or proselytizing sector. However, [illegible] the field of study of national problems as more important. Work has been done through the Secretariat of Plans and Programs for more than a year in some 50 study commissions in various fields--economic, social, cultural and political--and they have recently submitted their preliminary reports, which will be submitted to the ideological congress which will be held in the early days of December for analysis. As to whether I regard the existing organization of the PLN as satisfactory or not, I would say both yes and no. Yes in the sense that work is being done with enthusiasm and contemplation and well enough in advance to be properly prepared for the campaign which is approaching, and no, because this process has not yet ended and we cannot be satisfied with what we have currently. This is a concern I believe is positive, since it would be very dangerous if there were a sense of satisfaction with the human and structural capacity of the party at this time for carrying forward all the tasks a political campaign imposes.

[Question] Do you believe that an atmosphere of fear, aggravated by the development of a new leadership apparatus for the party, prevails in the PLN?

[Answer] I believe that in any human organization there is always this atmosphere of competition for leadership, which I believe is healthy and is manifested more forcefully insofar as groups are larger and enthusiasm for doing things is greater. Sometimes disputes, if we can call them that, develop because there are many who want to work and in particular to lead.

[Question] In the development of this new PLN leadership apparatus, what role does Marco Antonio Lopez play?

[Answer] Well, I have some tasks of a professional nature, but not precisely in the political proselytizing field. Some of my main functions are advisory to the candidate, the parliamentary bench, and on some occasions the political leadership itself, in the economic sector. Naturally I carry out these tasks in a team, in which other distinguished and experienced professional workers in the economic sciences participate.

[Question] Will you be a part of the economic team of the liberation party in any possible future Monge Alvarez government?

[Answer] In reality, it is not for me to answer this question since this would be a decision for the candidate and future president, Don Luis Alberto Monge. My personal opinion is that there is a very qualified group of professionals in the economic sciences in the party, in which Don Luis Alberto Monge will have a great fund of technical resources to fill the needs of his government. I believe that there are many young professionals who have not had an opportunity to hold high public posts and when the time comes, could be of great help to the future government. I have expressed this position on various occasions to the candidate, and I have personally concerned myself with attracting valuable young people to the party in order that they could become known.

[Question] Which are you, a politician or an economist?

[Answer] I have not the slightest doubt in answering that I am more a professional in the economic sciences than a politician. My role in public affairs has been solely and exclusively the result of my profession.

[Question] Do you believe that because of the economic nature of the problems the country faces, particularly in the economic sector, a PLN government would have to devote all its efforts to the solution of these problems?

[Answer] Definitely. I believe that currently the economic sector would be that with highest priority for any government. Naturally, there are social, political, international and moral aspects which have priority too. But until we resolve the economic problems, we can do little to resolve the others.

[Question] Do you believe that a substantial reduction in public expenditures is the solution to the economic crisis?

[Answer] I believe that there is no magic formula for resolving the country's economic crisis. However, I believe that any plan would necessarily have to include a reduction in public expenditures as an ingredient.

[Question] Traditionally, the PLN has urged a policy of wage increases. Do you believe that your party has, with this policy, brought about an increase in productivity?

[Answer] I believe that at least it has tried to. There is no doubt that some aspects of the production policies of the past, for example the excessive volume of equipment and machinery which has been imported, are now being criticized. As we know, these elements represent the most direct form of importing high technology and consequently increasing productivity. We must also recognize the efforts the country has made recently to provide better training for its human resources. Examples of this are seen in the establishment of the INA [National Apprenticeship Institute], agricultural and vocational schools and, on a higher level, the establishment of the Technological Institute and the UNA [National Agrarian University]. In addition, in recent years work has been done in the field of research, wherein one of the most important steps was the establishment of the CONICIT [National Council for Scientific and Technological Research].

[Question] Currently, the national budget is being debated. What do you regard as its most worrisome aspects?

[Answer] I am concerned that the total amount of expenditures has reached a figure out of proportion to the size of the economy of the country. However, the total expenditure figure would not be the most worrisome aspect if it were not to the fact that it leads to a deficit which is entirely unmanageable by non-inflationary methods. It is a fact that the government of Costa Rica has had budget deficits for at least the past 25 years. However they have never threatened the economic stability of the country because the financing mechanisms used were not inflationary. It is very important to clarify this concept. When a fiscal deficit is financed by the sale of bonds to the public or an increase in the tax burden, a simple transfer of resources from the private sector to the public sector occurs. Thus the private sector does not engage in the expenditures which the government effects. In recent years the financing of the deficit has been done through the national banking system with recourse to currency issues. Thus the public expenditure increases without being compensated by a decrease in the expenditures of the private sector. This is what causes total demand to increase and produces the inflationary effects to which I referred. To avoid this threat, I only see three paths, which are not mutually exclusive, but which I believe instead we should use in combination. They are decreasing expenditure, increasing taxes and increasing the public debt.

[Question] It is said that it is necessary to change the public finance structure and the method of doing things. How do you see a model which would lead to a more flexible economy which could introduce the necessary reforms without social trauma?

[Answer] I believe that the changes the country needs are not so violent, and that they should be effected in gradual form, without causing disturbances in the normal development of the country. It seems to me that the program Luis Alberto Monge has been offering to the country since the recent campaign under the slogan "Let us return to the land" is a serious and realistic approach of the sort the country needs now. We must realize clearly that within this concept of returning to the land it is not only agriculture that is meant, or within that, traditional agriculture. There are a series of resources related to the land which, if properly exploited, would be a great source of wealth for the country. For example the intensification of sugarcane production for fuel purposes, the rationalization of forest exploitation, better utilization of our fishing resources, exploitation and utilization of our mineral resources, such as bauxite and copper. All of this, naturally, requires a whole well-planned system taking into account the human, technical, financial and institutional resources necessary to develop the programs drafted in each sector. I believe the private sector should play a basic role in this whole scheme, but inevitably it will require the active participation of the public sector. This should be a joint effort, since the task is such a vast one.

CORRUPTION ATTACKEL AS THREAT TO NATIONAL INTEGRITY

San Jose LA NACION in Spanish 5 Nov 80 p 2B

[Article by Manuel Rojo del Rio in the column "LA NACION Forum": "The Fifth Column in Costa Rica"]

[Text] When the national army was advancing on Madrid during the first few months of the Spanish Civil War, General Mola was asked by foreign newsmen whether he thought that those four columns would be able to break Madrid's resistance, to which he replied: "There are not just four of them; inside we have the fifth column." He was referring to the enemies of the republic who were secretly working for the nationals in the Spanish capital. That fifth column met with success in its day, and the term has been used ever since to describe those who work underhandedly to destroy their own country.

Though it might break our hearts to say so, there is a "fifth column" in Costa Rica. It operates under the protection of our democracy, acts with perfect liberty, risks nothing and gains everything. It acts as "its" circumstances warrant, and citizens whom you would never suspect are part of it, going about their business self-assuredly as if they were patriots.

The Costa Rican "fifth column" sponsors strikes, violence, confusion, anarchy and arms trafficking to promote guerrillas in Central America and infiltrates everything...In the distribution of important posts, they work for a concentration of power in the hands of their colleagues, to facilitate one-sided deals for themselves. They wager at times on bosses to poison the feelings of towns, distort people's concept of our lifestyle and turn a personality cult into something so vulgar that it forces the rest to step down.

Our "fifth columnists" engage with impunity in swelling the "democratic" belly of the bureaucracy so that they can later set it against the state itself. They are the perpetrators of the corruption that stains the branches of our republic's government. They take steps to spur inflation, thus making some people poorer and others richer; they relegate the poor to hunger and place us in the midst of anarchy. They get involved in all social activities and are willing to engage in anything, from espionage to subservience.

They boast of being idealists, patriots and slander and try to discredit those who point their fingers at them. They cry out in protest that they are innocent victims, when they are the victimizers. These are the same people who in the darkness of night prostitute our young people, who take the gullible to gambling houses and young girls to brothels and who grease palms as if it were the ne plus ultra of professional ethics. They are the ones who delude our poor working people with false hopes and who see to it that they can never come true, so that they themselves can continue to live comfortably.

Some of them are even large estate owners who deny the people their right to a better life by possessing a little plot of land, while they enjoy trips overseas, the taste of caviar and the aroma of a high-priced cigar. These are the individuals who turn their backs on the people living under bridges or in wretched hovels, because they are not even just plain hovels...All of these people I have pointed to are Costa Rica's "fifth column."

CONSTRUCTION INTERNATIONALISTS' ACTIVITIES IN ANGOLA REPORTED

Construction Rates

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 21 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by Ramon Martinez of PRENSA LATINA]

[Text] Luanda--With the commitment to complete the pointing up of the exterior of three type E-15 buildings weekly, 84 Cuban construction workers from Group No 2 of this capital were declared here to be "high productivity brigades."

Jose A. Ramos, director of the Cuban enterprise performing the architectural work in Angola, described the accomplishment as construction prowess, since it raises the daily norm per man from 22 m^2 to over 36 m^2 in this activity.

During an impromptu meeting with officials of the enterprise, union leaders and officials of the Cuban Communist Party, the workers collective unanimously approved the agreement which will decisively contribute to an anticipated plan fulfillment, midst the sound of bravos and applause.

Construction Group No 2 is erecting 37 buildings by the Luanda 1 system and 10 by the E-15 system in an area near the 4 February Airport. This means 940 new dwelling units which will be turned over to the Angolans in December.

Up to now, no similar collective has succeeded in completing the exterior covering or plastering of three buildings in 1 week; the best results achieved here is two and the norm under identical conditions is one.

Architect Migue Hidalgo and midlevel technician Elpidio Barcelo, a graduate of the Minsk Construction and Architecture Institute, in the Soviet Union, advisers on these construction projects, attribute this high productivity fundamentally to continued human effort.

They also agreed in citing the dynamic application of the most modern construction techniques and cumulative experience in this kind of project as factors of capital importance. The phases of cementing and frameworking of the 47 buildings are already completed. The flooring and roofing will be ready in a few days and the completed job is being speeded up by this and other vanguard collectives.

The team responsible for rough and finish plastering inside the buildings was also declared to be a "high productivity brigade," with the daily average in these specialties of 51 m^2 and 49 m^2, almost 50 percent higher than the norm.

The efforts of these men, according to Jose A. Ramos, considerably decreases production costs of the housing units and is a contribution to both the Cuban and Angolan economies.

"Results of this kind," he added, "are only obtained with a high spirit of proletarian internationalism and great worker, builder and Cuban awareness."

Ramos, who has long experience as a builder in Cuba, Tanzania and Angola, feels that every project here is a big school in which men are trained to be more highly skilled.

Activities in Luanda

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 31 Oct 80 p 5

[Article by Jose Gabriel Guma]

[Text] They come from all over Cuba. On flights contracted by the Union of Caribbean Construction Enterprises (UNECA), they cross the Atlantic in 8 hours, arriving at strategic Salt Island, a tiny outpost in the middle of the ocean off the African continent. After a brief stopover--less than 60 minutes--at a former U.S. base, where the flag of Cape Verde now flies, they continue aboard the same IL-62-Ms toward the southeast. At the end of an additional 6 hours of flight and after advancing the hands of their watches 6 hours--at 0600 hours in Havana, it is 1200 hours in Luanda--they deplane in the beautiful capital of Angola. For some, the Havana-Luanda route is nothing new. They became acquainted with it when they also traveled from the northern to the southern hemisphere on the occasion of the Angolan second war of liberation. They are the builders of housing units, bridges, aqueducts, water distribution centers, cold storage plants and a broad panoramut of social and other kinds of projects required for the reconstruction and rapid development of the sister country.

Many of the more than 2,000 men and women who make up this legion of internationalist workers have the responsibility of building 100 housing units in the Angolan capital. The "predios"--a Portuguese word which is the equivalent of building--are of the E-15 and Luanda-1 types and are to be spotted in several areas: the outskirts of the airport, Viana, Hospital, Brasil-1 and Brasil-2. Dozens of these buildings, all with five stories, have already been completed and turned over to the Secretariat of State for Housing.

The traveler stumbles onto the greatest concentration of these predios as soon as he leaves the modern airport. Of the 47 buildings being erected in a strip near the air terminal, 12 are completely built, a similar number will be finished at the end of this month and the remaining 25 are in various stages of construction.

Five hundred of those working on "the airport buildings" were organized into three integral brigades: Asalto al Cuartel Moncada, Heroes de Bolivia, and Desembarco del Granma. At a recent meeting chaired by Levi Farah, minister of the Cuban government in charge of construction work abroad, this experienced collective ratified the commitment to deliver the last buildings next December.

Decisive Factor: Tie-in

A decisive factor in the excellent execution rate in recent months has been the application of the working against time tie-in system which provides, among other things, for return to Cuba as soon as assigned tasks are completed with the required quality. Recently, members of the Asalto al Cuartel Moncada returned to the fatherland after completing their mission. The same thing happened to part of the Heroes de Bolivia Brigade which had responsibility for masonry work, plumbing and electricity for another group of buildings.

This tie-in system, according to Jose Mario Garcia, head of Group No 2--to which the above-mentioned three brigades belong--has produced a significant increase in productivity. From 845 pesos per capita as an average in the first 5 months of this year, productivity began to rise progressively with the adoption of the new system in June 1980. In that month, the per capita rate was 1,091 pesos, while in July it totaled 1,643 pesos, in August 1,630 and in September 1,759. It is expected that the October rate will exceed the September figure.

In the first 3 1/2 months of the tie-in system, the workers produced values in the building construction sector in the airport area of 4.2 million pesos, which raised the cumulative year's total as of 30 September to 6.5 million pesos. Now all that remains to be executed is construction work worth 2.9 million pesos for the rest of 1980.

Other Positive Results.

Another positive result has been the increase in the meeting of norms. Before the tie-in system was introduced, only a few were over 100 percent of their quota, while at present there are reports of over 200 percent of quota. And, at the same time, work absenteeism has decreased by over 50 percent.

When the tie-in system was first applied in June, it was calculated that an additional 600 construction workers would be needed to finish construction on the contracted buildings by next December; however, the extra effort exerted by this internationalist group is permitting the meeting of the tight deadline without an increase in the labor force!

The housing unit construction workers in Luanda who are returning to the fatherland with the satisfaction which is produced by the fulfillment of the internationalist mission entrusted to them have had the privilege of being the pioneers of the new working against time tie-in system and have blazed an important trail which unquestionably leads to an increase in productivity, a trail which will be traveled by new contingents of construction workers who will continue to positively modify the face of Angola. Men in white helmets will advance along this same trail, in accordance with a recent protocol, and will erect 3,700 housing units in Luanda and other capitals of Angolan provinces.

CABRE ENTERPRISE INNOVATIVE ACTIVITIES, SOVIET AID NOTED

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 14 Oct 80 p 4

[Article by Esmildo Alberto y De La Torre]

[Text] In the Enrique Cabre Santurio Central Enterprise of Agriculture-Livestock Workshops a number of innovations have been introduced recently as part of scientific-technical cooperation which the Soviet Union is offering our country.

During the period in which our future cosmonauts were being trained in the USSR to travel into space, a Soviet adviser, Petr Shalay, was working with Cuban technicians of the Cabre enterprise in building of an engine cleaner with a capacity for 40 to 50 units with hydraulic transportation, which replaced mechanical transportation.

This new system is being used for the first time in Cuba on this kind of machinery and will promote greater safety, economy and productivity on the disassembly line.

The new cleaner, which has four electric motors and four 3- and 4-inch pumps, is equipped with hydraulic cylinders and is fed by the same system as that line.

The innovation, which is being implemented jointly by the Soviet adviser and members of the CIR [Innovators and Efficiency Experts Committee] of the center, was introduced at a time when the plant was shut down for 1 month, with the consent of the workers, to give them an opportunity to enjoy some time off (27 July-28 August).

The innovation was implemented by technicians Renier Baez, Antonio Medina, Balbino Torriente, Andres Dreke, Pedro L. Pelaez, Alfredo Lorenzo, Jose E. Garcia Asencio, Jose A. Bringas, Jose Cabrera, Herenio Jorrin, Raul Zamora and Guillermo Jimenez (all members of the CIR) and other workers. Their efforts produced another success for the collective.

Petr Shalay demonstrated his admiration for and gratitude to the Cuban workers when he referred to them in these terms: "That job should have taken 2 months; however, the Cubans are very fast and active and built it in 1 month. Those workers have a dual status as workers and supervisors, because not only do they give orders but also work with interest and enthusiasm. The enterprise has excellent prospects; and with such good workers, there is much yet to be done."

Another cleaner is now being built with more advanced specifications which will eliminate physical effort for the workers and, according to the technicians, will produce better and more efficient results in the specific work it is intended to perform.

Those cleaners will benefit the economy of the country, according to engineer Jose Perez, acting director of the enterprise, as the value of the one already constructed is in the neighborhood of 8,000 pesos, while abroad the value would be from 16,000 to 25,000 pesos.

The director maintained that the benefits of the cleaner are immediate, as it increases the disassembly capacity for motors being repaired, increases the workshop's capacity and improves the quality of work through greater cleanliness.

Another benefit obtained consists in improving the level of hygiene, as a motor can be taken apart relatively grease-free, all of which decreases the possibilities of an accident. Also these are savings of several raw materials which at present must be used in greater quantities.

Finally, Petr said that for 20 years Soviet-Cuban cooperative relations have been excellent in the field of science and technology "and have permitted the solid development of those relations which range from this small plant to the Soviet-Cuban space flight of Romanenko and Tamayo."

REPORTAGE ON FAR SOCIALIST EMULATION, VANGUARDS

Navy Military Unit 2889

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 26 Oct 80

[Article by Carlos Gorina]

[Text] Military Unit 2889 was proclaimed Vanguard of Socialist Emulation in the Revolutionary Navy [MGR] for the current training year.

During a solemn ceremony, senior, junior and warrant officers, seamen and civilian workers of that command expressed their commitment-response to the Border Brigade of the Eastern Army, a Vanguard Unit of Socialist Emulation, FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces].

Presiding at the ceremony were Frig Capt Julio Hernandez Fernandez, the alternate of the Revolutionary Navy's General Staff, and Frig Capt Miguel Valle Miranda, second in command of the political section of this branch of the service.

Corv Capt Orlando Yneraite Saburta read the emulative commitment-challenge of that command to the other MGR units, which was received with enthusiasm. This document expresses readiness to step up ideological work and performance demands at all levels, and to obtain a rating of no less than four points in Marxist-Leninist and political training. There is also a proposal to increase combat readiness and training, to meet the requirements of technology and to work to improve the material and living conditions of personnel.

The final remarks at the ceremony were delivered by Capt Valle Miranda who said, "This practice of proclaiming a Vanguard Unit of Socialist Emulation in the MGR is taking place a few hours after our country's reception of cosmonauts Lt Col Arnaldo Tamayo Mendez and Col Yuri Romanenko."

He emphasized that this commitment-challenge and the response of Navy units is a prime example of the achievements of MGR forces in increasing combat readiness, assimilating new combat technology and continuing improvement in political and ideological training of all its combatants.

Finally, he said, "The commitments of honor expressed sum up the feelings of a 'Fatherland or Death' Navy and demonstrate the powerful driving force of socialist emulation in the FAR."

DAAFAR Emulation Opening

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 2 Nov 80 p 13

[Article by R. Pujol]

[Text] For years, it has become traditional to proclaim FAR vanguard units of socialist emulation. This practice has aroused the emulative enthusiasm of the combatants who every training year engage in a fraternal duel to best carry out with the greatest quality the tasks of combat and political training, thus keeping themselves in a high state of technical and weapons readiness.

In response to the challenge by the Border Brigade, a vanguard unit at the armed forces level, a ceremony was held to proclaim the Eastern Radio Technology Unit the vanguard of Socialist Emulation in the DAAFAR [Antiaircraft Defense and Revolutionary Air Force].

During the ceremony, which was presided over by the alternate member of the party Central Committee and deputy minister of the FAR, commander of DAAFAR forces, Div Gen Francisco Cabrera Gonzalez, who also awarded the banner which honors the Western Missile Unit as the vanguard task performance winner for 1979-1980.

The document which sums up the 1980-1981 commitments of the eastern radio technician group sets forth the increasing and strengthening of the combatants' ideological work and Marxist-Leninist training as one of its most important goals. Further along, the document states that the unit will continue to improve troop combat readiness, maintain high efficiency in the detection of airborne objects and rapidly and accurately transmit information about such objects. It is also proposed to obtain ratings of "excellent" in the radiolocation service, high efficiency marks in technology, transportation and weaponry.

The radiotechnicians also propose to present a minimum of 20 rationalization and invention projects and to obtain ratings of no less than "excellent" in controls and inspections conducted by the higher command.

Finally, they propose to maintain their 100-percent fulfillment of the combat and political training program and to ensure that in the established proficiency checks no less than 90 percent of the personnel will receive outstanding scores.

Being number one always costs blood and sweat, particularly if to maintain that position we have to face up to emulation with thousands of comrades who in all sectors of military endeavor are daily distinguishing themselves for their quality, proletarian spirit and communist ideals.

However, the combatants of this unit are aware of this and know the joy awaiting them if they meet their commitment of honor in this year of the party second congress.

Vanguard Communications Unit

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 2 Nov 80 p 13

[Article by Jorge Luis Blanco]

[Text] The Bronze Titan Banner was awarded by the MINFAR [Ministry of the Revolutionary Armed Forces] to a communications battalion of the High Command because it was Vanguard of the Revolutionary Armed Forces for 3 consecutive years. Previously this military unit had twice received the Yara Proclamation Flag.

The ceremony which took place on the parade ground of this same unit was presided over by Div Gen Sixto Batista Santana, head of the Central Political Directorate, and Div Gen Arnaldo Ochoa Sanchez, vice minister of the FAR, both members of the party Central Committee; Col Mario Cruz Samada, deputy to the chief of the EMG [General Staff] for communications and chief of the directorate of troops of that speciality and other FAR senior and junior officers.

The banner won by this small unit is an award for the work it did in 1978, 1979 and 1980. It performed in an outstanding manner the various tasks and missions entrusted to it in preparation for the defense of the Socialist Revolution.

As the result of the work and persistent effort exerted by its senior, junior and warrant officers, sergeants and soldiers, ratings of "excellent" and "outstanding" were achieved in the last few years in all sectors of combat and political training and in the exercises, training programs and maneuvers in which the unit participated.

The resolution which awarded the "Titan of Bronze" Banner was read by Col Manuel del Peso Ceballo. It stated, among other things, that the senior and junior officers, together with party organizations and the UJC [Union of Young Communists] had done meritorious and steady work in the political and ideological education of the young combatants on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism in their mobilization efforts to carry out the agreements and resolutions of the first party congress.

It was also brought out that this unit, through the noteworthy efforts of its command cadres and political organizations, has succeeded in systematically raising the political-morale state of their personnel and that the unit's combatants have a high level of combat morale.

The high and deserved award was given by Div Gen Sixto Batista Santana to the battalion commander who was accompanied by members of his Staff.

The concluding remarks were made by Col Mario Cruz Samada who said, "We know that such a high distinction is not easily attained and that such a distinction is achieved only when there is a sustained and high level of effort by the unit and a full dedication to creative work."

The speaker mentioned the many tasks which the unit had to perform in the last 3 years, which were always carried out with the greatest effort and dedication, with outstanding results obtained in combat and political training, which are manifest in the high level of transport technology and fundamentally in matters related to communications, in addition to the early meeting of deadlines set by the combat readiness plan.

The speaker also praised the excellent political-morale and disciplinary state of battalion personnel.

"To achieve such meritorious results," he emphasized, "it was necessary to have systematic and meaningful work in which every member of the unit struggled to carry out his part of the commitment and at the same time to feel integrated with the effort of the unit as a whole, to experience a profound pride at belonging to this unit which for 3 consecutive years has been selected vanguard of the FAR."

"We want to express to you," the deputy chief of the EMG for communications said later, "our profound satisfaction at the successes attained, as this demonstrates the high spirit of struggle and sacrifice that characterizes our combatants and also because they have effectively contributed to the entrenching of socialist emulation in the unit to which they belong so that it will become a factor of constant incentive for the accomplishment of assigned missions and, fundamentally, the strengthening of combat readiness."

After mentioning the future tasks which the unit will have to perform, Colonel Cruz Samada transmitted congratulations from the Ministry of the FAR and EMG for the brilliant results attained.

Recruit Interviewed

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 2 Nov 80 pp 36-37

[Interview with Pvt Ricardo Hernandez Perez, DAAFAR, by Lesmes La Rosa, date and place not given]

[Text] One year ago, Ricardo Hernandez Perez could be found in a construction and assembly unit in the Ministry of Sugar. Shortly before that he had completed his preuniversity studies. As he was being initiated as a worker, he continued to become more knowledgeable of various topics but did not give up the systematic playing of volleyball nor his love for movies and dancing. Nor did he forgo field trips and camping, like many young people.

Ricardo's daily schedule of work activities underwent some changes, as the Revolution assigned him the task which is the greatest honor and supreme duty of every citizen: defense of the Fatherland. Thus he was incorporated into the Revolutionary Armed Forces as a soldier, pursuant to the new General Military Service recruitment policy.

Since then, he has been wearing the glorious olive green uniform. In spite of the short time he has been in service, he has been acquiring experience.

An Interview Is Born

When we met him in his unit, he was a member of the Antiaircraft Defense and Revolutionary Air Force branch of service. We had no intention of engaging in any journalistic endeavor whatever. Another assignment had taken us to that unit. However, words led to words and, without realizing it, an apparently informal conversation became an interview.

The traditional question of: "How are things going for you in the service?" was not long in being asked. Nor was the general answer: "Good!" However, we were interested in learning about other aspects of the young combatant's experiences.

[Question] What did you think of military service before entering it? (The question continued the dialog. We began to take down notes in our notebook. The conversation took place in the Lenin-Marti Room. The soldier talked freely in response to the question.)

[Answer] I should like to reply with two contrasting thoughts I had about military service. Some years ago, when I was in basic secondary school, my father demanded that his son spend more time on his studies, otherwise "military service was going to grab him..."

That same day, as I returned home from school, my father had already arrived from the print shop in which he works as a linotyper. After looking over my notebooks, he said to me: "We have to talk."

I did not know what was to be involved; however, when he began the conversation, I was practically getting a lesson in history. He told me about the establishment of the Revolutionary National Militias, training, the fight on Giron and the cleanup of Escambray.

After telling me some of his experiences as a member of the militia, he ended by saying that in a short period of time I would be of military service age and that I would have to perform my military duty in an exemplary manner, as this was a shaping ambience for young men. He emphasized the need for my studying a great deal because a soldier who is not a good student is inconceivable. He expressed the hope that he would never hear a complaint about me.

[Question] What did you think then?

[Answer] I got the picture. I understood that in the first case I cited that a son would not be helped much by a threat of military service when performing it is an honor. Modesty aside, but my experiences have shown that the old man was right...

When One Does His Duty, There Are No Problems

[Question] Up to now, how have things been going for you in the military? (On this occasion the laconic reply: "Good" was followed by an elaboration by Ricardo.)

[Answer] If one has the habit of carrying out his duties in any daily activity, let us say in studies or work, surely he will have no difficulty during his active military service. The key is to conscientiously obey all the regulations in force in the FAR.

However, adaptation to military life requires phasing. This is not achieved from one day to the next; however, one always adapts. The carrying out of the immense tasks of the FAR demands collective and coherent action. To this end, discipline is the same for everyone. From the day we got here, the officers and political instructors stressed this with us; and I believe that we have been able to respond to them. In our small unit, there have been no disciplinary problems.

(The soldier replaces on a shelf the book he was reading when we approached him. After a few minutes, submachine gun in hand, with the rest of his small unit, he marches to the guard training area. He begins a combination of activities scheduled for the practice session. He studies the characteristics of radio sets, their limitations and special features and engages in brief training exercises such as the loading and unloading of weapons and the use of firefighting equipment. There is also instruction in the use of signaling and communications equipment and familiarization with other subjects which make up efficient training for the execution of this important service.

(The class ends. We are once again with soldier Hernendez Perez.)

[Question] It seems you are going to war. (He smiles.)

[Answer] Well, we are preparing ourselves so that we will always be ready for combat. In a short time, we have learned how to handle infantry weapons. In fact, within a short time, guard service begins. That is considered to be the performance of a combat mission and requires all our commitment, high vigilance and initiative.

Encounter with a New World

(The interivew with the soldier continues in the barracks.)

[Question] For which science or art do you have an inclination?

[Answer] For electronics. It fascinates me. Before entering the FAR, I studied it a bit.

[Question] Have you had any contact with electronics here in the unit?

[Answer] Yes! The technology with which I am involved is related to it. I am specializing in that field. I have had the opportunity of participating in rationalization work, and one of the greatest joys I have experienced was when we were told the results of our work raised our combat readiness. For me it was an encounter with a new world.

[Question] Why an encounter with a new world?

[Answer] Because electronics is not only applicable to sectors of the economy but also to military technology. We have come to appreciate the fact that at present, in the development of the military might of any country, the application of electronics is of great importance; automation is based on it. The use of this science is widely known in radio communications, radiolocation, television, etc. As is logical, command of a technology with these characteristics requires a good cultural base...

[Question] You entered the FAR with a preuniversity level of education. In your opinion, is that enough? What has been your experience?

[Answer] I am fully aware of the FAR's need to integrate young men with educational levels sufficient for the handling of complex military technology. I can say that as regards the technolgoy I have been assigned, being a preuniversity graduate was only the base, the beginning. After that came a profound process, with classes, practical work, exercises, etc.

If you want me to talk about experience, I would say that was principally transmitted to me by professors and senior and junior officers. Without a doubt, their highlevel of preparation was influential in our training. Their concern was wide-ranging, both in combat training and in our personal problems and the state of our morale. In a parallel manner, they have also made demands upon us.

One Year Later

(New tasks await Ricardo during the rest of the day. It is not right to distract him for part of his scheduled time; however, we had to ask him one last question.)

[Question] You have been in the FAR for a year. If you were to sum it up briefly, what would you say?

[Answer] I have received the honor of being on the first line of defense of the Fatherland and preparing myself to efficiently carry out that mission. All of this has served in my revolutionary training, with high political, ideological, morale and combative qualities. My family has increased because collective life has allowed me to look upon every comrade as a brother.

As is natural, the performance of military service has its demands; however, this has not placed great limitations on my preferred activities as a young man, such as dancing, music, sports.... One of my greatest incentives is to have my parents feel proud of me. I have not failed the old man....

COLUMNIST DISCUSSES REAGAN VICTORY

Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 8 Nov 80 pp 10, 20

[Article by Alvaro Contreras Velez in the column "Cactus": "Ronald Reagan and the Role of Emperor of the United States"]

[Text] It is worth repeating: the most prophetic of the prophecies made over the last 4 months of the election campaign in the United States was, categorically and inexorably, the conclusion drawn by political analysts and pollsters to the effect that "if the elections were held today, Ronald Reagan would win the presidency." The prophecy was borne out because the elections were held "today, 4 November 1980," and Reagan won.

Thus, a former Hollywood actor who on the screen did not get to be a James Stewart, a Gary Cooper, a Lawrence Olivier or a Charles Laughton, will in real life very soon be playing the most difficult and important role of all, as Ronald I, emperor of the United States and its possessions beyond the seas.

This is quite a title for the star of an old and not always highly acclaimed film that from 1789 to 1976 had featured a total of 39 actors, each of whom was able to give comic or tragic twists to the role, depending on the times and the circumstances.

Now, number 40 will be played by an artist who performing as a tenacious, aggressive and charismatic politician rewarded by the honorable public, became sort of the John Wayne of the candidates in winning the most exciting, spectacular and hard-fought battle for the presidency so far this century from his unpopular and humiliated rival, Jimmy Carter.

Here is an odd fact, one of so many others in the annals of history: of the presidents who preceded Reagan, George Washington, number 1, grew tobacco on his lands in Mount Vernon before coming to power, and the most recent, Jimmy Carter, number 39, used to grow peanuts in Plains, Georgia.

Before moving on, the Law of Voicing Thoughts obliges me to make a clarification regarding the above paragraph, with all due respect for professional ethics: I am not drawing comparisons. May God help me if I blaspheme and commit the irreverence of offending Washington's memory, even if only in thought.

The Reagan victory? Marvelous, but let's not hear any talk of a new messiah. I am reaffirming today my unbending position regarding those who think that Reagan's victory must necessarily influence Guatemala's future, as if we were incapable of deciding our own destiny and of defending the dignity and sovereignty of our nation.

If, as I said yesterday, Reagan's landslide victory over Carter was no surprise, neither do I think that there will be changes in what we can expect, as if we were cripples or beggars, from Mr Reagan's administration. If there are changes that will benefit the world, we should welcome our share in them, but as our own masters, not as prostitutes or slaves.

Since there is nothing new to discuss, let me refer back to what I wrote more than 2 months ago, to refresh the memories of those who with their servile leanings, still believe that Reagan will bring us manna from heaven, instead of working to get it.

I quote: "For reasons of an age-old and irreversible economic and political dependency of these countries on the United States, Latin American 'Reagan men' hope that their boy's victory will being a significant improvement in the strained relations between the White House and the State Department and their friends on the other side of the Rio Grande.

"These strained relations have an explosive effect on the alined nations that are among the ugly ducklings that are the targets of assaults and meddling by the human rights 'muppets' whose strings are pulled from Washington.

"This means that, as I said in the Teleprensa interview with me this Monday, there are Latin American politicians and businessmen (including a nasty number of Central Americans) who hope that Reagan will become the guardian of those who are now the victims of the messianic moves of the Carter policy.

"In my opinion, such a change would necessarily be limited to the long yearned for desire that good relations between the United States and Latin America take the form of improved trade, through the simple expedient whereby the Americans would buy our products at favorable prices while selling us theirs at inflated prices.

"I reject the servile-minded idea that if Reagan gets to the White House he could save those who are now the targets of attacks launched by the 'tovarischi' playing the role of proconsuls of human rights.

"To accept such an interventionist policy would merely mean taking off the Washington Messiah's red Democratic jacket and putting on the navy blue jacket of the Republicans, who have their history too." ("Cactus," Saturday, 23 August 1980).

One final note: Our friendship with the gringos can endure honorably and with dignity only if we do not humble ourselves or wag our tails in front of them like lap dogs. If we continue to act as many have done so far, and I have said this before too, we will have to supplement the aid we now get like cripples and beggars with alms from Mother Teresa of Calcutta to survive economically.

BUSINESS CONVENTION DEBATES POLITICAL, REGIONAL ISSUES

Parties Discuss Political Development

Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 9 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] The stands of the Guatemalan Christian Democracy (DCG) and National Renewal (PNR) parties were put on trial by the businessmen attending the political debate that closed this year's business convention last Friday.

In their speeches prior to the question and answer session, Vinicio Cerezo from the DCG and Alejandro Maldonada Aguirre from the PNR voiced the need for frankness in discussing the country's problems.

The audience took their suggestion and posed a great many questions to them, delving into their conduct as political leaders and the conduct of the political organizations they represent.

Vinicio Cerezo, from the DCG, was asked why he went overseas to denounce the situation in the country and why his party obviously has an international affiliation.

In response, the Christian Democrat leader argued that Guatemala's internal situation has been the subject of talks overseas by several sectors, not just him and his party.

Cerezo reported that on his trips to the United States, for example, he has come across government officials and even private sector representatives from Guatemala who are constantly going to the U.S. State Department for talks.

He added that interdependence is a modern-day phenomenon that Guatemala cannot escape, and this explains the international interest in our country's problems. Christian Democracy recognizes this international interdependence and regards it as constructive.

Acknowledging his party's membership in an international political movement, Cerezo voiced the qualification that this does not dictate the conduct of Christian Democrat leaders in dealing with the country's problems. International instructions cannot be given in dealing with each country's domestic problems, because each country's situation is different, he also argued.

He summarized by stating that international factors could have some importance in how serious a country's problems are or in resolving them, but that internal factors were the decisive ones, not the other way around.

Trust and the Quelling of Violence

The leader of the PNR, who said in his speech that the country's pressing problems had to be debated frankly, was asked what the basis for this debate was and whether his party would be willing to form a coalition and support a military candidate in the 1982 presidential election.

Maldonado Aguirre replied that the basis for this frank debate or dialog on the country's problems was the need to reestablish citizens' trust in political parties. According to him, citizen trust in political parties and the quelling of violence are essential for the next election to be effective.

He went on to say that once these two objectives were achieved, which the PNR considers the most important move at present, it could then begin considering coalitions, which in any case should help to consolidate the aforementioned goals.

As to whether he would abandon his quest for the presidency to support a military candidate, Maldonado Aguirre answered only that in politics you can talk about you are willing to do, not about what you would be willing to do.

PID [Democratic Institutional Party] Coalition With All Parties

The leader of the PID, Jose Trinidad Ucles, who advocated the modernization of political parties, was asked whether his party would in the future be willing to continue its electoral alliance with other groups, even with Christian Democracy.

He argued as follows in his reply: before making a decision like this, we gather together the facts, form judgments and then take action to gain a greater familiarity with national realities; only then do we decide.

If it is good for the country, he asserted, we will form coalitions, not only with Christian Democracy but with all of the parties that are represented today at this table.

Garcia Granados

Jorge Garcia Granados, from the Revolutionary Party, said in his address that Guatemala is moving towards democracy. In light of this remark, people asked him during the question and answer period to clarify whether he was suggesting that the country is presently not a democracy.

He was quick to respond that what he meant was that as a developing country Guatemala has an imperfect democracy and that all citizen demands were certainly not being satisfied.

Commenting on this too were Leonel Sisniega Otero from the MLN [National Liberation Movement] and the DCG's Vinicio Cerezo.

Sisniega Otero felt that we had to clarify what we meant by democracy and then see whether we have one or not. "As far as I am concerned," he said, "according to political science, democracy means the government that the people want."

Vinicio Cerezo took up the issue himself and called on the audience to reflect whether based on what the other panelists had said and on national realities, we could assert that Guetamala is a democracy, bearing in mind that it means the government of the people, not the people and the government, as some would have us believe.

The questions were sharply worded, and some of the answers skillful and tinged with humor.

For example, when the MLN's Sisniega Otero was asked what he would recommend for combating political and administrative corruption, he replied: "Vote for the MLN at the next election."

Luis Alfonso Lopez, from the CAN, was asked whether in stating that there was poverty in Guatemala he was not, in fact, referring to a poor administration of resources inasmuch as our monetary institutions assert that the country is in solid financial shape and has a great deal of foreign exchange; his answer was that there is unquestionably a great deal of administrative impoverishment, as well as sizable funds in the Bank of Guatemala.

All of the participants thanked the Association of Guatemalan Business Executives for having sponsored this kind of public discussion of various issues of national interest.

The round table on Guatemala's political development captured a great deal of attention, which was highlighted by the heavy attendance, including individuals from all walks of life.

Salvadoran, Nicaraguan Businessmen Speak

Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 8 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] Salvadoran and Nicaraguan businessmen are facing the difficult task of having to survive amid a climate of political violence and hostility, an experience that should not go unnoticed by the rest of the private sector in Central America.

That was how the regional problems of Central American businessmen were described by the institutional leaders who took part in the round table that broached the issue during the second working day of the annual convention of the Association of Guatemalan Business Executives.

Carlos Murillo, the general manager of the Salvadoran Chamber of Commerce, described the situation of Salvadoran businessmen in dramatic terms.

According to his statements, the establishment of a de facto government in his country triggered an institutional collapse at all levels.

Far from leading to a lessening of social and political tensions and the resulting violence, this development aggravated his country's situation.

The decrees aimed at radical changes in the country's economic and social structure, which were issued without any citizen consensus, have not succeeded in saving the day, nor does it seem that they will, inasmuch as neither the agrarian reform nor state takeovers have satisfied an extremist left wing that persists in its armed struggle and in its commitment to the use of violence.

Murillo criticized extremist leftwing and rightwing groups alike, whose ambitions for power, he said, are the reason for the long drawn-out crisis.

Murillo said that internal developments are being compounded by outside factors that continue to complicate the grave crisis in El Salvador.

His country, he said, is the victim of plans by international political movements and countries whose governments are committed to such movements, among which he cited the Socialist International.

Hope

In spite of everything, it is still too early to regard El Salvador as a country doomed to perish as a victim of the violent forces that have put the nation to a harsh test.

The Salvadoran business representative explained that the large majority of citizens in his country, from all walks of life, want a return to peace and could constitute a large focal point of political opinion and action.

He asserted that this large sector does not want a peace under a dictatorship or any sort of political despotism. They are citizens who want a political and economic democracy to be established.

The Salvadoran businessmen who remain willing to wage their battle in the country, Murillo announced, will channel their political efforts towards organizing and utilizing this broad center of citizen action and opinion and towards revitalizing the economy.

The Nicaraguan Case

The private sector in Nicaragua has been confronting a climate of political and social hostility and is trying to have the conditions created for business development, explained Jaime Montealegre and Raul Bengoches, on behalf of Nicaraguan private enterprise.

The problem is the uncertainty that prevails in the country because the characteristics have not yet been clearly delineated for the mixed economy that has supposedly been set up in the country according to the guidelines of the government program.

Major points in the political sphere of the program are not clear either, because the country's rulers have avoided committing themselves with regard to the preparation and holding of elections that would give Nicaraguans the chance to decide their country's future.

According to the Nicaraguan representatives, the strength of the private sector lies in its ability to create wealth, and its problem is how to develop this ability in a political context of revolutionary characteristics, dictated by a governing junta that has assumed practically absolute powers.

Amid these difficulties, they reported, Nicaraguan businessmen are continuing their struggle to establish a real representative and participatory democracy in their country, to prevent a return of state administrative corruption and to bring about full-fledged citizen freedoms.

The other participants, Edmond Bogran of Honduras and Erick Brenner Silva of Costa Rica, acknowledged that the situation in one country in the area cannot be considered in isolation from the regional whole.

They agreed on the importance of strengthening private institutional integration in Central America and on the fact that the current situation in Central America should be regarded as an experience that could lead to approaches that would help resolve the present crisis and forge a better future.

ERNESTO CARDENAL SPEAKS ON SIGNIFICANCE OF FRG PRIZE

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 7 Nov 80 pp 1, 12

[Text] Amid a heavy rain and the echo of rallying cries, Comrade Ernesto Cardenal handed over the Peace Prize that was awarded him in the FRG to Commander of the Revolution Tomas Borge Martinez, who accepted it on behalf of the Sandinist National Liberation Front, the true representative of the working people.

In an unprecedented ceremony, not because of the number of participants but because of the revolutionary harmony, Cardenal told his people how important this prize was to us, particularly because such a short time has passed since the people and their vanguard were waging a war of national liberation.

Cardenal told of the admiration that young Germans have for our people, noting that on one occasion, during a mass rally, thousands of young people chanted in unison to him: "Let there be many Nicaraguas."

The poet said that there would be many Nicaraguas in the Americas. "The people of El Salvador are already following the example of Nicaragua and Christ. The Salvadoran people are being crucified for seeking justice, but they will rise again with their revolution, just as Nicaragua rose again," Cardenal said, while the people responded with: "If Nicaragua overcame, El Salvador will overcome!"

Cardenal recalled that the peace prize was won by our people behind the barricades with their blood and in battle with their generosity. He cited the words of Commander in Chief Carlos Fonseca, which became reality during the fateful days of combat: "Implacable in combat, generous in victory."

Why Cardenal Won the Prize

Cardenal received the prize because he is "a good Christian, a good revolutionary and an honorable man," said Government Junta member Dr Moises Hassan Morales, who noted that "you cannot be a good Christian if you are not a revolutionary and if you are not a man of peace."

Hassan, who was accompanied by comrades Commander of the Revolution Daniel Ortega, Sergio Ramirez Mercado and Rafael Cordova Rivas, pointed out that many people have unsuccessfully tried to divorce Christianity from Sandinism.

We Must Defend Peace With Our Blood

Logically, there are those who are not resigned to having peace, which we won through a war, in Nicaragua; this was explained by Commander of the Revolution Tomas Borge Martinez, who called for a strengthening of the Sandinist People's Militias and the Sandinist Defense Committees so that they could really be the eyes and ears of the revolution, even if our enemies do not like it.

The commander pointed out that every Nicaraguan who loves his country ought to be a Sandinist militiaman and he reiterated the commitment of our revolution's leaders to offer their blood to defend it. "And we will not be running the war from behind our desks; we will be on the front lines," the comrade said while the people chanted: "People, army, unity, guarantee of victory."

Commander Borge talked about the sectors that are celebrating in the belief that "the reactionaries' time has come, but their smiles will fade when they see that we Sandinists are not trembling and are prepared to die to defend our revolution."

Commander Borge said that "we Sandinists have always stood tall and we will never get callouses on our knees," to which the people replied: "We sons of Sandino will neither sell ourselves out nor surrender; a free homeland or death!"

"We have not begged for peace; we have won peace," Commander Borge said, noting that the peace prize is awarded only to the brave. "A peace prize will never be given to cowards or bootlickers," he added.

He repeated that traitors should not get up their hopes on account of recent international developments because here in Nicaragua we Sandinists are prepared to defend our people, faithful to the rallying cry of "free homeland or death!"

THREAT TO UNITY OF SECTORS IN JGRN DEPLORED

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] The spirit and atmosphere that prevail among Nicaraguans today are quite different from what was present on 19 July 1979, when the victorious troops of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] and the Nicaraguan people entered Managua in triumph. At that time, there was a widespread, great sense of unity. We all felt part of a common victory: workers and peasants, professionals and bourgeoisie, Marxists and conservatives, young and old, men and women. The victory had, in fact, been a result of a notable effort for unity. It was then thought, rightfully, that unity would continue to be the key enabling the revolution to become entrenched and to successfully reap the fruits of the sacrifice. It was realized that there were differences, and that some thought in one way and others in a different way; and that there were diverse interests and ideologies. But it was believed that those differences were reconcilable because, just as when the people were fighting against the dictatorship, they would maintain a common objective transcending individual class and party features, namely, the reconstruction of the nation. There was also a government program on which virtually all the country's living forces agreed. The government of reconstruction would have as its obvious goal the implementation of that program, laying the groundwork for the establishment of a nation in which social justice and liberty would go hand in hand.

Soon, however, the hopes began to dim, and the first splits occurred. After the splits, the first serious break took place, culminating in the resignation of engineer Alfonso Rebelo. Then it appeared that the structure might be irreparably ruined; but wise, cautious and patriotic reactions from all sectors: FSLN, COSEP [Higher Council of Private Enterprise] and democratic parties, prevented the collapse, and the breaks were patched up.

Today, we are again witnessing the opening of a major split that is unquestionably larger and more serious than the previous one.

The seriousness of the present time should not be underestimated by anyone, because the final collapse of national unity would have tragic consequences for the Nicaraguan people.

All sectors, including the FSLN, seem to be clearly aware of this. Hence there must be a truly sincere and thorough effort to ask ourselves: Why has the national unity been broken, and what could restore it?

It is easy to evade these questions and answer with the well-known ideological slogans: "COSEP and the non-Sandinist political parties refuse to go along with the revolution because they are antipeople and do not want to give up their selfish interests;" or, worse still, "The national reactionaries are seeking a way of destabilizing this process, in complicity with imperialists." Remarks such as these, emanating from a narrow, pseudo-Marxist schematism and great immaturity, would not lead to anything other than an even greater intensification of the political antagonism.

The seriousness of the situation demands authentic self-criticism and an authentic exploration of reasons and possibilities on the part of everyone. Once again, it requires something that we Nicaraguans have chronically lacked: the ability to listen, the ability to be humble, knowing that we too may be mistaken.

When we listen attentively, we usually discover some valid viewpoints among our adversaries and, even when we may detect their mistakes as well, it becomes easier for us to learn why they are mistaken and the ways of reaching an agreement.

This ability to listen is, in turn, combined with the ability to be humble. When one starts with the assumption that the other person is "bad" by definition, and that we are "good" by definition, even mere conversation becomes impossible. The dialogs of those who in the long run start with that assumption become "tactical" dialogs, filled with calculation, something up the sleeve and hypocrisy.

Only if we succeed in destroying the prejudice that is now separating us from one another can there be dialog; only if there is dialog can there be unity; and only if there is unity can there be revolution.

To ignore this would open the doors again for us to experience chaos with unpredictable consequences, wherein all of us without exception would eventually be harmed.

CRUZ TELLS STUDENTS HOW YOUTH SHOULD DEFEND REVOLUTION

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 12 Nov 80 pp 1, 5

[Text]Last night, during a meeting with students from the Ramirez Goyena Institute, Commander of the Revolution Luis Carrion Cruz, vice minister of interior, declared: "A revolution which does not know how to defend itself has no right to be called a revolution. We in Nicaragua are at war with the enemies of the Sandinist process."

The Sandinist leader called upon the youth to play the role that is incumbent upon it in national defense because (he said)a destabilization campaign on the part of local reactionary groups and parties is hovering over our revolution.

Added to this are over 10 violations of our air space and at least 42 armed attacks on the national territory by counterrevolutionary gangs which, in collusion with officers of the Honduran Army, have committed murders of members of the EPS [Sandinist Popular Army] and the Sandinist Popular Militias.

Commander Carrion added that this farflung plan with international roots is compounded by the damaging campaign of discredit carried out by certain local and foreign news media.

During the meeting, the young students asked the comrade member of the National Directorate of the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN) what they could do, in conjunction with the government of national reconstruction and its vanguard, to contribute to national defense.

Commander Carrion replied that the defense of the revolution should not be confined to the enactment of laws against the attackers of national unity, but that one of the measures is membership in the Sandinist Popular Militias.

He warned that Nicaragua is still at war against the enemies. The war has not ended, and it is there that the youth are called upon to play a leading role, as they did at the barricades and in the anti-Somoza struggle. "We cannot say or think that the situation is calm."

He stated, verbatim, "A revolution which does not know how to defend itself has no right to be called a revolution."

Dwelling on the subject, because the students expressed concern over the recent incidents that have occurred both in the northern zone and the interior part of the country, Commander Luis Carrion said: "The Sandinist Youth must hold a vanguard position against the counterrevolutionary aggression backed and spurred on by North American imperialists.

"It is we who must defend with our hands and our hides the revolution that we are going to defend. We must be prepared, and forewarned."

What the Position Is

A young student asked what the Sandinist revolutionary students must do to repel the MDN [Nicaraguan Democratic Movement] campaign. In this regard, the vice minister of interior said: "The young people who fought in the war must now renew their energy to combat any manifestation of hostility against the revolutionary process.

"We need a youth that will repel the slander and lies of the MDN. The young people must take over the streets and the schools, and confront the members of the Robelist Youth in the ideological realm."

He urged them not to allow themselves to be provoked by the MDN members, which does not mean that there must not be alertness, adding: "Each individual must assume the role that is incumbent on him in the defense of the revolution."

Youth and the Defense of the Symbols of the Revolution

Commenting on the position assumed by the members of the Sandinist Youth last weekend, he remarked: "Anyone whose blood does not boil when the reactionaries insult and besmirch our heroes, and our red and black flag, symbol of the historic struggle, is not worthy of being a Sandinist." A student inquired about the MDN's intention of filing suit against the Sandinist Youth for the damage caused to that organization's premises. In this connection, Commander Carrion said: "The 19 July Sandinist Youth organization did not carry out the attacks and damage of the MDN premises, but rather the masses, impelled by the insult committed by the MDN members against their symbols and our commander in chief, Carlos Fonseca."

He said that the Sandinist Youth would not defend itself against such charges in the courts, but rather in daily ideological combat and constant political struggle, demanding a guarantee of the conquests achieved in over a year of revolution.

Sandinist Youth Has the Backing of the FSLN

The vice minister of interior said that the Sandinist Youth is not alone in this struggle, but has the backing of the National Directorate of the FSLN and the consistently revolutionary people.

This does not imply that the FSLN will take charge of the activities of that youth organization.

PEOPLE URGED TO OPPOSE LAWS RESTRICTING PRESS FREEDOM

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 2

[Commentary by Felix Pedro Espinoza: "It Is the Duty of All Nicaraguans To Seek the Repeal of Decrees 511 and 512"]

[Text] We democratic Nicaraguans have viewed with great concern the approval and issuance of Decrees 511 and 512, restricting freedom of the press, which were issued at the initiative of the government junta itself.

Subsequent to their official publication, several incidents of great significance to the country have occurred on the national scene, namely: the anti-Cuban protest at Bluefields, and the refusal of the permit for the political function that the Nicaraguan Democratic Movement (MDN) had scheduled for Sunday, 9 November. In the two aforementioned cases, those decrees were applied categorically, giving "reasons of national security," and in that way denying us Nicaraguans the sacred right to be informed about everything that is happening in our own country, and leaving us at the mercy of the officials of the present regime and the news media controlled by the Sandinist Party; which is an intolerable abuse of the rights that we won in the trenches at the cost of our own blood.

Many of those who are now members of the present group in the regime, and who participated in the preparation and approval of these negative decrees, when they were on the plains attacked and combated any law (they claimed) which restricted freedom of speech and of the press passed by Somoza from the bunker, and also preached and shouted vociferously that, once the tyrant was overthrown, freedom in every sense of the word would shine forth in this country; but now it would appear that, at the height of their power, they no longer recall their preachings and offers.

It is regrettable that, after a long struggle by an entire people to liberate themselves from all types of dictatorial measures, and for which there had to be a gory, bloody war that left over five cities destroyed, the rest semidestroyed and a toll of 50,000 Nicaraguans killed, just after the first anniversary of the victory, rather similar measures are being enacted by the regime (telephone calls to the news media and independent press, ordering them not to report on this or that). It is also regrettable that we have to make comparisons which we would never have wanted to make.

I consider it the duty of all Nicaraguans, especially those of us who never gave in during the Somoza dictatorship, to make our most forceful protest against the creation and subjective enforcement of the aforementioned decrees heard and sensed through all possible media, and to petition the Government Junta of National Reconstruction (JGRN) for the immediate repeal of those decrees, out of respect for our dead and for the people themselves; because they are in violation of the Fundamental Statute which, in one of its articles, clearly calls for the unrestricted freedom of the press.

It is not right for a regime which came to power as a result of the sacrifice, heroism and bloodshed of an entire people to deny those same people the right to be informed, in an unrestricted fashion, of what is happening in their own country.

The members of the JGRN must reflect a little, even if only for a moment, and, in a wise and patriotic manner, and as promptly as possible, order the repeal of the by now notorious decrees, for the peace of mind of the Nicaraguan people and the calmness of their consciences.

Let us recall what our national hero and martyr of public freedoms, Dr Pedro Joaquin Chamorro C., said: "Without freedom of speech, there can be no freedom of conscience."

PROPOSALS TO AMEND LAWS ON SANDINIST FLAG, TITLE SCORED

Significance of Flag Explained

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 3

[Editorial: "The Red and Black Flag and Revolutionary Power"]

[Text] When General Sandino and his army of workers and peasants raised their red and black flag to fight against imperialism and the homegrown traitors to their country, they gave this flag a dual significance. It became a symbol of the political autonomy of the exploited classes, the flag of the poor who with arms in hand--and without any bourgeois leadership--fought their oppressors in search of national sovereignty, democracy, and social justice. And secondly, the Sandinist struggle and its flag rehabilitated the entire nation which had been oppressed by the intervention of imperialism. No one more than the Sandinists--which means, the exploited classes--took on the defense of the national sovereignty in the anti-imperialist struggle. While the conservative oligarchy and the bourgeois coffee growers came to terms with imperialism and refused to play a role as a national force in the history of this nation, betraying the national flag to the interventionist forces, the exploited classes took up not only the defense of their own interests, but also the defense of the interests of the entire nation.

For that reason, the class option of Sandinism--in support of the meek and the exploited--also became a way toward the formation of a Nicaraguan nationality, which had been destroyed by imperialism.

The defeat of Sandinism in 1934 and the rise to power of the Somozist military dictatorship--the local expression of imperialism--later led to the consolidation of a dependent capitalism, with its own structure of political power and bourgeois ideological domination.

Somoza and the same pro-imperialist bourgeoisie have always tried to conceal their class interests from the people, by portraying themselves as the defenders of the "interests of everyone and of the nation." The nation ceased to be a contradictory reality in which the exploited people fought against the reactionary proimperialist authorities, and became an abstract and empty concept. The concept of "national" was always seen from the viewpoint of the exploiters.

But Sandino ceased to be just a memory, and came to pave the way to revolution. The Sandinist Front retrieved and enriched the historic legacy of Sandino, and over the many years of revolutionary struggle Sandinism became a way to gain power. The overwhelming victory of the popular masses led by the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] put things in their proper place. And victorious Sandinism expresses not only the interests of the popular bloc (the working class, the peasants, and the radicalized middle sectors), but it also involves the entire nation in the anti-imperialist victory. That is why Sandinism has historically recovered our nationhood and has given a true meaning to the fact of being Nicaraguan. And the red and black flag together with the blue and white flag both symbolize our nationhood. The second flag recovered its true meaning after the revolution. Today it is no longer the flag behind which the interests of Somozism and imperialism were concealed; it is the flag of the Sandinist, anti-imperialist, and internationalist nation. The same thing has happened with the national anthem and the anthem of the vanguard. This is not an "illegal appropriation" as the bourgeois legalists charge, but it is rather a natural process. It reflects the outcome of the struggle: the victory of the revolutionary people over imperialism.

Furthermore, the Sandinist flag is not simply the flag of just any political organization, as is charged by those who have seen their reformist plans being thwarted by the victory of Sandinism. It is the flag of a vanguard organization, and of an entire anti-imperialist people, the symbol of victory and of the people's power.

The bourgeois ideologues have always wanted to appropriate for their own use the Sandinist legacy so that they could gain legitimacy in the eyes of the masses. First came our native "social democrats," and then Robelo in an equally opportunist posture. But both of them failed. That is why they now want to "de-Sandinize" the people, the state, and the armed forces, by taking away from the people the FSLN flag. And they want to deny them the right to fly the flag of the FSLN together with the national flag. That is an underhanded way of attacking the revolutionary power.

The reaction has always brushed aside serious questions by means of lies and demagogy. So they will say that "what is national is national," as if some time in the history of this country they had seriously defended the nation from imperialist aggression. Their history is full of compromises and maneuvers, while the history of Sandinism is nothing but an ongoing struggle against imperialism. In this way, those who want to reduce the size of the Sandinist flag are in practice acting as peons serving imperialism. They want to take away from the people their history, their culture, and their true nationality.

But let there be no mistake. The revolutionary people and their vanguard will defend this flag even with their lives, as it symbolizes the victory of the revolution and the plan to construct a new society.

'Reactionary' Bills Attacked

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 3

[Article by Onofre Guevara]

[Text] The reaction, thinking that the decrees of the revolution do not respond to the historic need to legalize the conquests won by the people through their struggles and sacrifices, has planned its counterrevolutionary defensive action against the legal revolutionary order which it considers "perhaps due to the euphoria of victory."

This is the mentality underlying the three bills which the reactionary pseudoworkers parties and organizations introduced in the Council of State on Tuesday afternoon. Sure that they would not pass, the bills were something like the swan song of a maneuver openly revealed by their information media.

Although for them, of course, this would be the true crowning touch of their blackmail against the revolution. Viewed from any angle, the bills really have a provocative intent against the principles of respect and unity.

The first bill, which proposes to eliminate Article 1 of Decree 66 on the revolutionary commitment to the blue and white and red and black flags, is an attempt to provoke the revolutionaries who received the red and black flag as a legacy from Sandino and from all the patriots who have died under its colors. The flag covered by so much blood; the blue and white flag, noble because it was rescued from the hands of the traitors, was given dignity, and became a true symbol of a free nation.

The second "whereas" of the reactionary bill clearly exposes its intent: "It is contradictory and unlawful," it states, "to make any other emblem equal with the national flag, no matter how worthy of respect or how admired it may be, as it is the symbol of only a fraction of the Nicaraguan people." But the most serious provocation comes with their use of the MDN [Nicaraguan Democratic Movement] slogan which was stolen from Sandino: "Nation and Liberty." Taken out of the context of the historic anti-imperialist action of Sandino, this slogan in the hands of the reaction takes on an openly offensive nuance.

The second bill contains, in a complementary fashion, the full provocation of the first. It attempts nothing less than the delegitimization of the Sandinist nature of the revolution, by proposing the elimination of the term "Sandinist" from all revolutionary institutions and organizations, without whose existence and role in the vanguard the revolution would not be possible.

In summary, let us look at the "decree" in its Article 2. "Consequently, this use (of the term 'Sandinist'] is prohibited for any nonstate political, civic, or labor organization or association, or one of any other nature. Any organization or association of this sort now using this term, 'Sandinist,' must immediately cease doing so."

Counterrevolution by decree! With "simple" measures of this type they are trying to destroy the essence of the new revolutionary state. But as they know that this is not possible now, nor will it ever be, this confirms its purely provocative nature: it is a pretext used for breaking up our unity at the minimal political level which they represent, because the spirit of national unity goes beyond limited structures such as party organizations.

While, as we have just been seeing, the bills introduced by the reaction have a provocative and reactionary content, the third bill in just a few words states its open and insolent counterrevolutionary intent.

So that there will be no room for doubt, here is the bill: "Whereas it is the decision of this government that human rights should be respected in Nicaragua, and that the Fundamental Statute and the Statute of the Rights and Safeguards of the Nicaraguan People recognize the right to freedom of expression and to freedom of political and labor union organization, the following is hereby decreed: the repeal of Decrees 511, 512, and the Law on the Maintenance of Public Order and its reform."

We know that the first two decrees cited were drafted in response to the need to avoid the use of freedom of the press to manipulate information which may be harmful to our national security and to the public order; freedom should not be allowed to become a weapon in the hands of the reaction, who will use it to attack the freedom won by the people.

But the elimination of the Law on the Maintenance of Public Order and Security is simply a bourgeois attempt to return to Somozism, or in other words, to a counterrevolutionary situation. Let us see why. This law states, in part:

Article 1. "The following will be sentenced to prison terms of 3 to 10 years: a) persons, groups, or armed gangs of Somozists who refuse to obey the cease-fire order or who persist in their efforts to reinstate this regime (Somozism); b) those who commit acts designed to subject the nation totally or partially to foreign domination or to reduce its independence or integrity; c) anyone who reveals political or national security secrets concerning the nation's defenses or foreign relations..."

The law contains similar penalties for other crimes which are no less harmful to the interests of society and of the nation, and if reactionary groups persist in their attempts to eliminate these laws "so that human rights will be respected," we will realize the weight of hypocrisy hidden behind their intentions, because in reality, in practice, they are trying to protect conspiracies seeking a return to the past under the cover of human rights.

Undoubtedly, the withdrawal of the anti-Sandinist groups from the council of state is in itself an open violation of the regulations of the joint legislative body, but even more serious than this formal violation of law are the counterrevolutionary political aspects of their action.

They have lost all forms of sincere political action because their political activity has never had a democratic content.

PCD DEFINES STAND ON VARIOUS GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] The Francisco Lopez Fajardo-Adolfo Calero Orozco-Humberto Ortez national convention of the Democratic Conservative Party (PCD) of Nicaragua, meeting in ordinary session in Managua at 1000 hours on 26 October, with regard to the current political situation and the statements of the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction on 15 September and 2 October of this year and of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] on 7 October,

Declares:

I. That the present political and military organization of the state, identified with the FSLN party to the extent that the armed bodies of the state bear the name "Sandinist" instead of "national," lie outside the legal framework of the constitution, are destroying the pluralist nature of the government and the revolution, and are tending to consolidate a type of single-party totalitarian government, in violation of the most basic democratic principles for which our people fought against the dictatorship of Somoza, and this becomes more evident when the state communications media are seen to be exclusively in the service of the Sandinist party.

II. That the rejection of the proposed law on political parties and rights and duties of citizens is a form of refusing to fulfill Point I, Political Sector 1.1 of the Program of the Government Junta and strengthening the trend toward a single-party totalitarian government, particularly when the holding of elections has inexcusably been postponed until 1985, also without specification of their nature or who will be elected.

III. That the statement by the government junta on 2 October of this year represents a basic attack on freedom of the press and information, since it establishes real censorship and self-censorship of the news media without precise limits, and although specific cases are mentioned such as "seizures of land, farms and estates," the silence imposed in this regard will serve to conceal such seizures and thus will favor their occurrence, above all when they are carried out by elements of the organizations affiliated with the Sandinist party and in many cases with the knowledge and tolerance of the authorities responsible for preventing them.

IV. That our party is gratified by the statement of the FSLN party dated 7 October affirming its respect for the religious rights of Nicaraguans. In this regard the Democratic Conservative Party fully supports the document with which the Episcopal Conference responded to this Sandinist statement, and wants to confirm the extremely important nature of religion above all historical contingencies and the right of parents to have their children educated within their own family religious concepts, without the state's being authorized in any case to violate that right and the other rights inherent in the exercise of parental authority. The Democratic Conservative Party also asserts the right of the Nicaraguan people to elect a government inspired by the moral principles of our religious traditions and the Christian concept of life and history.

V. That our party and the entire Nicaraguan people also find reason for satisfaction in the amnesty for political and other prisoners granted in recent days, which should be supplemented by other measures which the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction has been urged to adopt by the International Commission of Jurists and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights with a view to speeding up special court trials, avoiding illegal sentences based on collective responsibility and subjecting the judgments rendered by these courts to review by the Supreme Court of Justice.

VI. That it believes that the anti-Cuban and anticommunist popular demonstrations like those which occurred in Bluefields cannot be regarded as simple maneuvers to destroy government stability, but that they have their roots in a profoundly nationalist, democratic and Christian feeling on the part of our people, who reject any effort at ideological penetration of a materialist and totalitarian nature and contrary to our most intimate religious beliefs and our basic spiritual and cultural structures.

VII. That it views with sympathy the steps taken by the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction in eliminating the requirement in all state, municipal, bank and university departments of the wrongful practice of demanding membership cards in the CDS or any other party body in order for the citizens to obtain the documents and services which public administration should provide to them, a practice harking back to the exalted practices of the Somoza era.

VIII. That the Democratic Conservative Party, aware of its historical mission in a world faced with the failure of experiments in the so often revised and always inflexible and obsolete Marxism-Leninism, is seeking to win power through democratic, free, just and honest elections, in the exercise of one of the basic human rights, so that Nicaragua can "become a republic again," as Pedro Joaquin Chamorro said, in the full sense of this word, with effective political, economic and social democracy prevailing and ensuring the prosperity and grandeur of our people, with respect for the freedom, the property and the dignity of each and every Nicaraguan citizen.

IX. We reiterate the premise that national sovereignty lies with the people and that only they, through free and secret balloting, can choose their legitimate representatives in government.

X. In order to ensure the advance of the Nicaraguan revolutionary process toward Western democratic and Christian forms, the National Convention of the Democratic Conservative Party orders the full national plenum to organize campaigns on a national level to demand of the de facto Sandinist government:

a) The prompt promulgation of a democratic and pluralist electoral law establishing the foundations for the electoral process, to be drafted after hearing the views of the political parties.

b) Issuance of citizens' cards for legal use in ordinary and political life.

c) Drafting of a permanent national electoral register.

d) Establishment of the date for the municipal elections to which the government program refers and the national constituent assembly for which the constitution provides, in order to promulgate a constitution which will define the political, social and economic organization of the country.

e) Election of national authorities in accordance with the new constitution of the republic.

These campaigns should be scheduled in sequence and in accordance with the circumstances, and the national plenary assembly is assigned the responsibility for planning and directing them.

Managua, 26 October 1980, for the Democratic Conservative Party of Nicaragua. "God, Order, Justice."

NEW RESERVISTS READY TO COMBAT COUNTERREVOLUTIONARIES

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 5 Nov 80 pp 1, 12

[Text] With hundreds of family members from Masaya and high officials in the revolutionary armed forces present, the first Silvio Macanche Gamboa reserve class, which will make up the Commander Ezequiel Brigade, graduated yesterday.

The reserve members of Battalion 8015 are outstanding militiamen from the department of Masaya who have completed 21 days of military training at the Comdr Eduardo Contreras School on the shores of Lake Apanas, preparatory to departing in the Ezequiel Brigade to various points in the country to combat counterrevolutionary gangs for a month.

Some of the families brought food to share with their sons, while others had sweaters and shirts, soft drinks, some keepsakes, etc. Both sad and happy faces were to be seen among the masses of humble people who had been arriving in bus caravans since the early-morning hours yesterday to see the members of their families.

Minister of Defense and Commander in Chief of the Sandinist People's Army Humberto Ortega, Brigade Commander and national head of the Sandinist People's Militia Eden Pastora, Guerrilla Commanders Javier Carrion, chief of the military region, Hilario Sanchez, chief of the Sixth Military Region, and Alonso Porras, political secretary of the departmental leadership committee of the Sandinist Front in Jinotega, were present at the Eduardo Contreras Military School.

Also at the speakers' table were Comrades Rafael Solis, in charge of the Political-Cultural Section of the army, Lt Pedro Agurcia, director of the Eduardo Contreras Military School, Mario Diaz, its political commissioner, Father Guillermo Fresner, and members of the family of Silvio Macanche.

140 Hours of Training

The Carlos Vasquez Reserve Battalion, the first reserve battalion in the Sandinist People's Army, Lieutenant Agurcia said yesterday during the ceremony, had 140 hours of combat training and includes land artillery, engineering and health and other companies.

"Its control panel," he said, "has no button for reverse."

Next the most outstanding members of the various companies were called forward to receive awards.

The groups receiving awards were the 2nd Engineering Squadron, the Advanced Scout Platoon and the 5th Advanced Company.

Comrades Oscar Carballo, Eduardo Vasconcelos, Ivan Guandique, Carlos Mercado, Gonzalo Acuna, Julio Gutierrez, Mario Aleman and instructor Jose Medina received individual awards.

The pledges of the reserve members were presented to Cdr Eden Pastora, who in turn passed them on to Commander Ortega.

Commander Pastora said that there are just and unjust causes and that our people have in the past been the victims of the dominant sectors.

Today we have undertaken to combat the enemy, he said, carrying forward the indefatigable spirit of German Pomares, the ideals of Sandino and Fonseca and the brotherhood of Camilo. All that remains is to await the orders of the national leadership.

He then presented a spray of flowers to the mother of Comrade Silvio Macanche.

Confidence in the Vanguard

Comdr Humberto Ortega, in his address stressed the human warmth revealed in the closing ceremony with the participation of the members of the reservists' families.

He said that this is proof of the confidence of the people in their vanguard, and that it is this confidence which carries with it the obligation to combat the enemies of the revolution and to defend this people.

The process is long, and only by understanding it can we counteract the campaign of confusion the enemy is pursuing against the people and their revolution, the commander said.

Later on in his address he stated that the Sandinist Front does not want to deceive the people, but to tell them the truth, that the battle to overcome the crisis will take years and that much work will be necessary.

On the subject of the Ezequiel Brigade, he said that it is the product of the warmth of the people, the determination of the humble to defend their revolution and the Sandinist Front, its vanguard.

In conclusion he said that this warmth of the heroes and martyrs of 4 November, those assassinated by Alesio Gutierrez, was manifest during this ceremony, as is the spirit of Carlos Fonseca in the militiamen going forth to wage the battle to have a happy and peaceful future.

INDIAN LANGUAGE LITERACY CAMPAIGN PROGRESSES SLOWLY

Problems Encountered

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 12, 14 Nov 80

[Article by William Fonseca Moya]

[12 Nov 80 pp 1, 12]

[Text] The National Literacy Crusade in Indian languages is moving forward slowly but surely, thanks to the revolutionary motivation of the brigade members (most of whom are Miskitos), who day by day are earning the right to be sons of Sandino.

Throughout the department of Zelaya, they are instructing some 16,000 illiterate speakers of Miskito, Sumo or Rama, the latter being the smallest group. Most of those learning how to read and write are in northern Zelaya, where 14,057 Miskitos are being taught.

The literacy task force has the same structure as the National Literacy Crusade, in other words, the EPA brigade members, led by the 19 July Sandinist Youth, in close cooperation with the MISURASATA [Association of Miskito, Sumo and Rama] Youth. Also involved in this tough work of teaching their brothers are the Urban Literacy Guerrillas, with one minor difference; they teach in the communities, not in the urban areas proper.

Overcoming Difficulties

Comrade Thelma Uriarte, from Northern Zelaya Departmental Coordination, says that the brigade members left with all their equipment, including instructional materials. There are transportation problems in this area, as well as a shortage of launches and outboard motors.

Our comrades have so far made use of the area's own resources, and we should point out that each of the institutions has designated a vehicle for use 1 day a week so that there is at least some transportation.

Thelma says that there were problems when the brigade members were assigned, especially around Waspan, where the Coco River overflowed. The literacy drive began on 13 October, and in some regions the students are already doing their fourth lesson.

The most distant spot that the brigade is teaching in is Raiti, a Miskito village that takes more than a day to get to along the Coco River, which has to be navigated very carefully because it has some rapids that could easily toss the most skillful boatman overboard.

The biggest problem for the brigade members so far has been health care, and there is only one brigade (Juanita Cruz) that makes major efforts to supply its members.

According to the coordinator's report, there have been no injuries among brigade members, although some who were traveling from Halover by sea saw their launch overturned and had to wait for hours in the water. Many of these brigade members have experience in this battle because they took part in the previous crusade.

There are currently 1,028 technical advisers, a very small number, and thus the squad chiefs are being trained in this capacity for the remote spots in which there are no advisers.

Bolstering Enthusiasm

In Puerto Cabezas and Waspan at least there is not the same joy as in the previous crusade, in spite of the efforts exerted by mass organizations. There are very few posters in these towns calling on people to get involved in this great undertaking.

The day that we arrived in Puerto Cabezas, some EPA activists were going around in a jeep trying to encourage the people to help the brigade. The boys managed to get some help for the crusade at City Hall. They got Radio VER to broadcast a war dispatch, but the attitude of the people in charge was hostile because they do not yet grasp the importance of the literacy drive.

Comrade Jose Pineda Solano, the head of the 19 July Sandinist Youth, pointed out that the regional staffs have already been set up; they will guarantee order and discipline, as well as the effectiveness of the crusade.

With regard to coordination with the youths in MISURASATA, Pineda says that effective communication does exist, inasmuch as these comrades have every right to get involved in the tasks of the revolution, and ways are being sought to smooth out any rough spots that might arise.

The comrade points out that the literacy drive in Indian languages is a very important part of the revolution, because it is being conducted in a zone that used to be isolated from the rest of the country and will give the people there a better understanding of our nation's struggle.

For his part, Comrade Kelleth Kushy, MISURASATA's representative to the EPA staff, notes that his organization supports the Indian language literacy drive because it represents the revolution's desire to respect the will of the people.

The Indian leader acknowledged that there are transportation problems in the area and pointed out that the crusade would enable young people to become better acquainted with the conditions in which the Miskito people live, which will lay the groundwork for the region's development.

Guerrilla Commander Notes Successes and Failures

Guerrilla Commander Manuel Calderon pointed out that the main problems in the region are those of logistic support. He said that there have been ideological problems relating to leadership struggles in the crusade.

Comrade Calderon said that the rains have caused a number of transportation problems and that a helicopter is urgently needed on a permanent basis to attend to emergencies, in addition to large numbers of launches and land vehicles.

He pointed out that no statistical monitoring is currently being done on the literacy drive because many spots cannot be reached. He also stressed that there have been no security problems.

With regard to the mood of the brigade members, the guerrilla commander said that "they are giving it their all" and that so far there are no known desertions, due to the same lack of statistics. He noted that there are some spots on which there are no reports, such as Raiti, San Carlos and Prinzapolca, and he said that there have been some instances of lack of discipline.

The comrade pointed out that they recently held a meeting with officials who arrived from Managua, at which they assessed the situation and decided to seek out better forms of communication. "We do not think that the literacy drive will come to halt," he said, "in the first place because this is a FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] project and secondly, because the FSLN, as the vanguard of this revolution, is going to carry out the tasks it has committed itself to, and even though we are going to have some really serious problems if the brigades are not supplied properly, there is no way we can conceive of the literacy drive coming to a halt."

[14 Nov 80 pp 1, 9]

[Text] Sing-Sing is a Miskito community along the highway from Puerto Cabezas to Waspan. Most of the people were moved there after the Somoza dictatorship made an "agreement" with Honduras concerning the ownership of Gracias a Dios Cape, which used to belong to the people of Nicaragua.

The Miskitos living in Sing-Sing are mostly illiterate; they speak Spanish poorly, which is why they could not be included in the previous literacy campaign. The "Nidia White" squad (named in honor of a martyr from the coast) is at work in this town.

The brigade members travel from one place to another to give their classes. They often have to cover vast tracts of land, where once there were pine trees but which were laid bare by the Americans.

"We understand our people better since we have been here. Although we are all from the coast, we did not have the chance to live together as brothers and talk about each other's problems. The literacy drive has helped us to know each other better," says one of the women in the 31-person brigade that has been in the community since 13 October.

In Sing-Sing you can breathe the calm that characterizes almost all of the communities on the Atlantic coast, as well as its poverty. Production shortfalls and the high cost of living make survival difficult for the people there. "We know that there is a lot of poverty in Nicaragua and that the factories and farms were destroyed during the war. Commander Ramirez explained that to us clearly, and we realize it; we know that everything cannot be taken care of in a day," says another woman in the brigade.

The classes are taught in Sing-Sing under a tree by the modest wood houses in which the residents of the community live. On the portable rubber blackboard we can see the name of our unforgettable commander in chief, Carlos Fonseca.

The brigade members have had the most problems with their health. The drinking water in the area is dirty and contains a great many parasites, the squad's technical director explains to us.

When we got to Sing-Sing, the brigade members were gathered together for the distribution of supplies. The fact is that they do not get very much, just like the instructors who taught reading and writing in Spanish.

The classes in Miskito are interesting. "Ra, Re, Ri, Ro, Ru," repeat the students along with the instructors. The letter C is replaced by K, and so Carlos is spelled Karlos in Miskito.

The literacy instructors also hold Saturday workshops and stage social dramas to help their students understand our political situation. The classes are similar to the ones in the previous crusade, although the lessons do vary somewhat, as well as the photographs, which are more in keeping with the way things are on the coast.

The Local Literacy Instructors

The literacy instructors were not in their houses at around 1000 hours. It was Sunday, and they had gone to church or Mass. Almost all of them are Moravians, though there are Catholics in the small town that we are visiting, which is named Santa Martha.

A group of barefoot children, accompanied by a guitar, are singing religious songs in Spanish and Miskito in a small house by the church. The man playing the guitar is a literacy instructor.

We had a few quick words with him, and he told us that after the religious ceremony was over we could talk longer. After Mass the comrade told us that he was a local literacy instructor, not a brigade member.

"I study every day with the people learning how to read and write. My mother, my father and some neighbors are my students," the comrade tells us in proper Spanish. His family speaks Miskito better. They have never left the town, except to go shopping in Puerto Cabezas.

They are currently on lesson six. We spoke with the comrade and got ready to go to his house, because he was going to hold class. They were 1 day behind and were going to make it up that Sunday, which they usually take off for religious reasons.

The comrade's parents welcomed us at their house. The mother had a slight cold; she took a bit of syrup out of a large coffee container and drank it. Then, smiling at us, she moved over to the blackboard and began writing what her son the instructor dictated to her.

Before the revolutionary triumph, people in Santa Martha never thought that illiteracy would be abolished, because like Sing-Sing, it was a small forgotten village. Learning how to read meant progress to them, since they could then understand the instructions for the plantings that the Revolutionary Government is now promoting through its institutions.

There are 21 local literacy instructors in Santa Martha; they are totally involved in the revolutionary process and understand the need to defend this revolution at all costs.

This is practically the case all along the Atlantic coast. People know that before the Sandinists were victorious, they had been unable to organize the Miskitos in complete freedom, as they are doing now. Moreover, they understand that the revolution is bringing about production gains on the coast, albeit slowly.

People's Education Collectives (CEP)

The People's Education Collectives are also actively at work as part of the campaign to keep the adult education program going.

A number of problems have arisen, because many people who learned how to read and write in Spanish have confusedly joined the Miskito literacy drive instead of the CEP's. In order to prevent work in the adult education program from falling off, the decision has been made that if a person who has learned to read and write in Spanish wants to do likewise in Miskito, he can do so, but on the condition that he not quit the collectives.

The National Literacy Crusade in Indian languages undoubtedly requires a great deal of attention from the Nicaraguan people, inasmuch as the brigade members are performing an exemplary task, in light of the adverse natural conditions they are working under.

Each passing day on the coast represents a page of light in the struggle against ignorance. Just as their brothers on the Pacific did, the brigade members are prepared to unfurl the flag of a "territory that triumphed over illiteracy."

MISURASATA Support

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 12

[Text] Bluefields--Decisively backing the tasks of reconstruction, supporting as energetically as possible the literacy drive in Indian languages and helping to spur the consolidation of our Sandinist People's Revolution are some of the basic goals voiced here by leaders of MISURASATA to commemorate the organization's first anniversary.

Yesterday, hundreds of Miskitos, Sumos and Ramas from Bluefields and neighboring rural communities marched through the main streets in this town, wearing traditional dress, carrying placards and chanting revolutionary rallying cries. The parade culminated in Reyes Park, where a political cultural ceremony was staged.

Noel Escobar, the political secretary of the Departmental Directorate Committee of the FSLN, conveyed fraternal greetings to the working people of the Atlantic coast, mainly the Indian communities. "As this Sandinist organization celebrates its first anniversary," Escobar said, "we want to clearly express our indomitable will as part of the FSLN to struggle unwaveringly to make the substance of this Sandinist Revolution a reality.

"We recognize this day," he added, "as the day of Atlantic coast Indians, and the finest gesture that MISURASATA can make as a revolutionary commitment is to celebrate it during the month of November, when our commander in chief, Carlos Fonseca, fell in combat."

The political secretary of the committee said that the FSLN and MISURASATA have a revolutionary commitment to maintain close ties in working to defend the revolution and Sandino's and Fonseca's homeland.

Comrade Daniel Dezina, from the MISURASATA youth roganization, stressed that "we are the group doing the revolution's toughest tasks, such as the literacy drive in Indian languages."

For his part, Comrade Francisco Wong, from the MISURASATA central board, said that now that they have battled shoulder to shoulder, arm to arm and heart to heart along with the Sandinist Revolution to lift Atlantic coast communities up from disenfranchisement, exploitation and discrimination, they are prepared to carry this great task forward.

"For this reason," he said, "MISURASATA is today the number one organization of the Indians, and we are prepared to fight for our grievances, which Somozism denied us in the past, but we are also prepared to defend this Sandinist People's Revolution with our blood."

In Waspan

MISURASATA also staged acts commemorating the first anniversary of its founding in Waspan, Rio Coco. The official program began at 400 hours yesterday with a reveille played on traditional regional instruments. There was also a parade of horses through the main streets, accompanied by a large demonstration.

William Frank spoke about the integration of ethnic minorities in the national reconstruction. Other speeches included in the program were: "The Order of the Indian Movement Within the Church," by Reverend Salvador Maibeth, "Indian Unity in Nicaragua," by a comrade from Subtiava, Leon, and "The Rescue of a Dying Ethnic Group," by a Ramaki comrade. The MISURASATA representative to the Council of State, Stedman Fagot, also spoke.

POLITICAL LEADERS REACT TO REAGAN'S ELECTION

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 9 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] The victory of Republican candidate Ronald Reagan has been greeted with surprise and has provoked different reactions across the national political spectrum. As in other areas of the continent, the American election on Tuesday has inspired both optimistic and sharply negative comments.

Among remarks made initially, those of Foreign Minister Javier Arias Stella appearing in the press are worth noting. Issued the day after the election, they were optimistic about the possibility that the U.S. Government will expand its relations with countries in this region.

The president of the upper chamber, Oscar Trelles, stated that "Reagan's sweeping victory will mean a complete change in U.S. foreign policy. However, I think the Reagan administration will not have a negative approach to relations with Latin America." To Senator Javier Alva Orlandini, this change "won't have much of an effect on Peru and Latin America."

As for the somewhat limited economic relations, Minister Pedro Pablo Kuczynski indicated that Reagan's election inspires hopes of increased mineral exports. According to him, the incoming Republican administration will impart vigor to economic policy, which will help "our exports by creating a greater demand for our minerals."

A favorable but emphatic view was expressed by Deputy Enrique Chirinos, who represents the APRA [American Revolutionary Popular Alliance]: "The American people have decided upon both their domestic and international policy and have asked Mr. Carter to leave the White House."

Obviously, figures on our country's left have shown complete skepticism. Carlos Malpica somberly declared, "The new president will support regimes allowing limited freedom, and thus it will negatively affect the countries of this continent." Moreover, Jorge del Prado, a senator and PC [Communist Party] helmsman, termed the Republican victory a demonstration of the immaturity of the American people.

Hence the California governor's overwhelming victory has provoked widely disparate views among us. In fact, this corresponds to the spectrum of reactions being observed throughout the world with respect to the defeat of Democrat Jimmy Carter and the forthcoming entry of Republican Reagan into the White House.

BELAUNDE: NO DIVISIONS IN POPULAR ACTION PARTY

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 11 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] Francisco Belaunde Terry, the president of the Chamber of Deputies, issued a categorical denial yesterday regarding the existence of dissention within his party, Popular Action.

He termed "totally false" speculation to that effect that has appeared in some newspapers.

"We have to bear in mind that we're still not used to democracy after 12 years of dictatorship," he said.

He noted that party members inevitably do disagree about "details and secondary matters" but not about major issues. On the contrary, Belaunde said, "Popular Action is a solidly united party."

"In a democratic situation, the parties with slogans, which are proud of their national status, are among the most divided," he noted.

Relations with the PPC

Belaunde talked to reporters before leaving the Legislative Palace around 1300 hours.

He also spoke of AP's "cordial relations" with the PPC [Popular Christian Party], whose leader and former presidential candidate, Luis Bedoya Reyes, "was at the Plaza de Acho yesterday (Sunday)," he said.

After referring to the 2-year pact with that organization, Belaunde Terry stressed the "efficient manner" in which the PPC's two ministers (justice and industry) and its legislators are performing their duties.

"They are capable people, serving the administration well," he noted, speaking of the two ministers (Felipe Osterling and Roberto Rotondo, respectively).

Among PPC deputies, he singled out Roberto Ramirez del Villar. "He is a man in a high position because of his expertise, his keenness in debate and his legislative experience," he stated.

The Left Is Not So Fearsome

Concerning Bedoya's statement that "We will not permit the dirty trick" played by the government regarding the extreme left, Belaunde said, "The left is not as fearsome as people think" because it accounts for a very small percentage of the electorate.

"The only fearsome thing," he went on, "is its habit of boring the people who attend sessions with its reiteration of outdated ideas. It sounds like a broken record."

He said it is obvious that after an authoritarian regime some disruptive actions have taken place that, compared with those occurring in Europe and other Latin-American countries, are rather childish.

Sensibility of the Peruvian People

"Fortunately, the Peruvian people are very sensible. What they want and aspire to is liberty and work. This can be had only under a democratic government," which has the advantage that the people can rise out of poverty, he noted.

He said, too, that another advantage of democracy is that it insures the integrity of investments and guarantees work for everyone, as occurs in the United States, which has achieved its greatness under a democratic system.

APRA SECRETARY GENERAL DISCOUNTS DEMANDS OF JAP FACTION

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 11 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] Fernando Leon de Vivero, secretary general of the APRA [American Revolutionary Popular Alliance] party, discounted the significance of a statement signed by leaders of a faction of the JAP [Peruvian Aprista Youth] calling for his expulsion and that of Armando Villanueva del Campo because they were "traitors to Aprismo."

"The names of those who signed that document are not recorded in the party registers, and they are employees of adversaries of our political organization," he said after noting that the information published in a Lima daily concerning the matter "reflects the ideas of a nonexistent group."

Leon de Vivero pointed out that Peruvian Aprista Youth (JAP) held its Fifth Congress recently. An official delegation from Lambayeque Department attended it and has issued several statements.

Asked whether the signers of the document or those who had inspired it would be punished, he answered, "We can't punish people who don't belong to the party." He then said that he did not know whether Andrew Townsend Ezcurra was behind the group.

Statement

The JAP faction's statement seeking the expulsion of Leon de Vivero and Villanueva del Campo bears the signatures of Juan F. Santillan, Jose Espinoza, Adalberto Flores, Jose Cornejo and Roman Criollos and consists of six points.

The opening paragraph asserts that the Fifth Congress held in Lima by the other JAP faction was antidemocratic. Moreover, it rejects statements by the secretary general and the former presidential candidate that the late guerrilla fighter Jose de la Puente Uceda "is an Aprista martyr."

Expulsion

At the Fifth Congress convened by a JAP faction, an effort was also made to expel Andres Townsend Ezcurra, Julio Cruzado Zavala and Francisco Diez Canseco.

The other JAP faction, led by Santillan, Espinoza and Santisteban, maintained that according to the bylaws, those at the so-called Fifth JAP Congress could not seek the expulsion of any member.

Asked about the effort to expel him initiated at the Fifth JAP Congress, Deputy Andras Townsend answered, "It's a tiny group....It's not in the bylaws. What is alarming is that these young people are being taken over by the communists."

REPORT ON SOCIAL SECURITY STRIKERS

Institute's Position

Lima LA PRENSA in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 7

[Text] Peruvian Social Security Institute
Office of the Executive Chairman

Communique

The Peruvian Social Security Institute is reporting to those insured with it, employers and the general public that its Board of Directors has reached the following decisions. It has done so in view of the severe administrative, financial, economic, client-service, personnel and organizational crisis existing when the board took charge of the institution and because of the illegal indefinite strike by administrative and service employees, which is hindering normal provision of health- and other services to over 2.5 million clients throughout the country, seriously endangering their health and lives.

1. To declare the Peruvian Social Security Institute in a state of emergency and to call for complete reorganization of it, empowering the general manager to authorize the hiring of personnel he considers essential to the guaranteeing of normal operation of its assistance and administrative services.

2. To ask each regional manager to submit a list of needs to the General Manager's Office as soon as possible, indicating the most critical areas in order of priority and recommending measures needed to correct the existing deficiencies.

3. To charge the General Manager's Office with submitting, within 30 days, a plan for the complete organic restructuring of the Peruvian Social Security Institute, one complementing the one provisionally approved by D.S. 026-80-PM. The general manager is also to submit the plan for application of the corrective measures essential to resolution of the crisis existing at the various offices of the institute as a result of the chaotic condition in which administration of the former Social Security of Peru was received. These remedies are also intended to enable the social security program to fully carry out the high purposes assigned it by the Peruvian Constitution.

4. To designate a committee composed of five representatives of the Peruvian Social Security Institute, to be named by the Office of the General Manager, two from the National Public Administration Institute, and two representatives of the corresponding labor groups, who will take part in matters concerning their respective areas. They will have 30 days in which to perform an analysis and reach a decision regarding the drafts of the job-classification and single wage scale manuals prepared by the committee created by Resolution No 634--GG-80, bearing in mind the studies performed by the committee created by Resolution No 120-GG-80 and the results of the national census of personnel of the Peruvian Social Security Institute. At the end of this period, the Board of Directors will study the results with a view to implementing them with funds that have been appropriated.

Lima, 11 November [1980]

Strikers' Demands

Lima LA PRENSA in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 7

[Text] The strike by employees of the Social Security Institute remained unchanged as of early yesterday afternoon, while leaders from around the country held a meeting concerning the latest counter-proposal by the Office of the Executive Chairman of the institute's Board of Directors, presented at the session which ended yesterday morning.

The critical issue, the reason for consultation with the rank and file, is that the Peruvian Social Security Institute is maintaining the need to revise the work done previously regarding reclassification, classification of jobs and wage scale, whereas the workers insist on its immediate implementation.

It was learned that additional delegations are traveling to Lima from outlying areas to provide backing for the leaders' request. Meanwhile, the secretary general of the Workers Union Center, Pedro Chambilla Melo appeared at the Ninth Trial Court to make a statement. Before seeing the judge, Chambilla stated that the government attorney had brought charges against him for an alleged attempt on the lives of the hospitalized workers.

The dialog is continuing. According to Chambilla Melo, institute officials and labor leaders have already reached agreement on a half-dozen points, such as reclassification, with retroactivity to January of this year; that the expenditure arising from reclassification and altered wage scale will be in institute funds; that they will receive an advance of 25,000 soles because of the reclassification.

DEMAND FOR ELECTRICITY, COAL IMPORTS TO RISE

Santiago LA NACION in Spanish 14 Nov 80 p 13A

[Text] Within the next few days, CHILECTRA will open international bidding to buy 400,000 tons of fine heating coal to better meet the demand for electricity, which is estimated to rise 8 percent next year.

This information was released during a press conference by the company's public relations head, Guillermo Amunategui, who added that "The steady growth of the country's various activities has resulted in a great demand for electricity for home as well as industrial and business use."

He noted that this necessary importation of coal is 50,000 tons less than that purchased abroad this year.

CHILECTRA has estimated that the demand for electricity in 1981 in the area of their concession--the Metropolitan region and Fifth region--will be about 4,358,000,000 KWh, an increase of 8 percent over this year. Amunategui noted, "Of this total, 2,425,000,000 KWh will be generated by hydroelectric plants, and 1,933,000,000 KWh by thermal plants, using 759,000 tons of coal in the thermal power plants at Renca and Ventanas."

Greater National Supplies

He added that, in accordance with the annual programs of the national coal industry, a total of 559,000 tons of fine coal has been earmarked for thermoelectric generation by the Interconnected Systems of CHILECTRA, almost 60 percent more nationally mined coal than in 1980. He also indicated that according to projections of coal exploitation in Magallanes, Pecket and Isla Riesco, the present deficit in coal will improve markedly beginning in 1984, until all coal needs are supplied by the national coal industry.

Electric Rates

When reporters asked him about the new electric rate choices now in effect, Guillermo Amunategui indicated that, with regard to the basic rate, that is similare to the rate that now applies to the great majority of residential consumers, with the following charges totaled on the client's bill:

--A set monthly charge, for administrative costs, independent of the KWh used.

--A power charge, reached by multiplying the KWh used by the unit price.

During the winter months (May, June, July, August and September) there is also a charge for additional winter power similar to the "winter rate" charged this year.

In this plan, a surcharge will be applied for a monthly use of over 250 KWh.

Finally, there is a third option, according to the public relations officer of CHILECTRA, which is a special metering system with a charge for the client's consumption during peak demand hours.

Outside of that schedule--about 18 to 23 hours--the cost of electricity will be different, benefiting those who concentrate their power usage outside that time period in winter.

Those who do not choose any of the options mentioned will begin receiving their bills based on the "basic rate option."

COAL MINING REINITIATED AT VALDIVIA PROVINCE DEPOSIT

Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 16 Nov 80 p C-7

[Text] After being closed for 15 years, the Pupunahue coal mine is being reopened. The mine is located in the central valley of Valdivia Province, between the towns of Mafil and Los Lagos.

Mining engineers Pedro Courard and Pablo Letelier gave that report to EL MERCURIO. They indicated that their company, Carbon Valparaiso, Ltd, acquired the coal concession in the sector Los Copihues in Pupunahue in public bidding. The new owner is an organization formed by Empresas Mineras BHC and Compania de Gas de Valparaiso, in order to mine and sell coal.

The reopening of the mine will involve an initial total investment of over 120 million pesos and will provide work for about 200 persons once it is in full production, which will take about another year. The recently purchased concession includes the former Pupunahue mine and the area the Development Corporation explored 20 years ago. Such prospecting located about 5 million tons, with prospects of 10 or 20 million tons.

Production

They indicated that the installations remaining on the site when mining operations ceased are useless. Except for a large concrete building that has no future, there are no traces of the former workings. The new owner will not work in the old shafts and will do all new work, including new electrical wiring, which was also gone.

The studies on an initial mine are completed, and within a few days they will begin drilling the inclined galleries or inclined planes, to find the stratum and for use as access to the future mine. The first of three being planned will be worked by the "long wall" method, similar to that used in ENACAR [National Coal Enterprise] mines, but it will be applied in reverse, that is, it will begin at the farthest point and back toward the entrance. The entire transport system will be mechanized from the heading to the surface, using five conveyers.

They added that initial annual production will be about 80,000 tons, and full production is expected within a year. The coal will be sold in the Central Zone. It is subbituminous type coal, that is, it has less heating power than that produced by ENACAR, and similar to that from Magallanes. It is ideal for producing steam.

Optimism

They seem optimistic about selling the coal, since with the methods of exploitation planned, they will be able to reach a broad sector of industrial consumers at a price that is very competitive with national or imported oil or coal.

They also said that the company will not build housing at the work site. The personnel will live in the towns near the mine, such as Mafil, Antilhue, Mulpun and Los Lagos.

Neither will Carbon Valparaiso Ltd build maintenance shops. They will use the industries in the city of Valdivia, supporting and expanding the metalworking sector.

All they are asking from the authorities is good maintenance of the public roads, on which their production will go to market. They have received support on the matter from the mayor of the municipality of Mafil, Cecilia Lopez de Lehmann, whose community will benefit the most from the reopening of the industry.

Also in Curanilahue

They also reported that a coal processing plant has been opened on the road to the city of Curanilahue, in the province of Arauco, in the Eighth region.

There coal produced by mine contractors will be purchased, washed, processed and sold. The plant is a modern installation purchased in the United States and will make it possible to absorb the production of the manoproducers of that region.

In conclusion, they stated that they are certain the contribution from Pupunahue and Curanilahue will be a great help in solving the country's energy problem, which, they noted, is becoming ever more noticeable.

ECLA HEAD DISCUSSES LATIN AMERICAN AGRICULTURE, ENERGY CHALLENGE

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 31 Oct 80 pp 66-69

[Interview with Enrique V. Iglesias, executive secretary of the UN Economic Commission for Latin America, by Pedro Rioseco, at Hotel Riviera, Havana, Cuba; date of interview not given]

[Text] The lobby of the Hotel Riviera in the capital city is busier than usual. The afternoon ends with a shower which passes over quickly, as the lights of the spacious lobby announce the arrival of a warm night relieved by the pleasant temperatures maintained by the hotel's powerful air conditioners. We have an appointment with Enrique V. Iglesias, who arrived only this morning from Europe to participate as a special guest in the roundtable discussion of nonconventional energy sources, which has been organized as part of the FAO Regional Conference on Latin America. The desk clerk courteously calls room 1916, occupied by this Uruguayan gentleman, whose presence in Cuba is not governed by the rules of protocol to which his position as head of the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA)—an international agency of the United Nations--entitles him, but by the simple and brotherly manner of one who considers himself not just a visitor in our country, but a friend.

In a few minutes, at precisely the appointed hour, we meet the outstanding Latin American economist, whose published works are required reading for anyone who desires to study the economic and social situation of Latin America and to reflect on its future development.

He speaks rapidly, so that his replies begin almost before the questions are finished. The dialog is very easy, and the interview--planned initially to last half an hour--gives the impression that we had talked for an entire afternoon.

Obviously, it is to be hoped, when the interviewee is the executive secretary of ECLA, that the first question will refer precisely to the organization itself. What are its objectives, and what does it actually do?

[Answer] Well, now, with respect to ECLA, I would say that its traditional concern is still in full force today and perhaps even more so than in times past. In a certain way, ECLA wanted to be something like the critical conscience of Latin America's development process. That has been part of its traditional mission, and this is in greater relief today because of the unyielding point to which world development--and in particular that of the region in question--has come. So there is a strong challenge to the institution, and I would say that it is primarily a challenge to economic thought about the social and economic development process which is taking place in our region. What is very clear in this regard is that we are facing times in which there are going to be great structural revisions—they are already taking place in this region--with a view to achieving the objectives of economic development in their entirety.

This is one of the first challenges facing ECLA: to understand the reality, to interpret the phenomenon as it is, and to try to see what are the great choices of economic policy available to the region in the next few years. Perhaps the second area in which ECLA has always been a pioneer has been in its ongoing exploration of the possibilities for regional cooperation. We believe that the ideal of Latin American integration continues to be even more valid today than it used to be.

At one time--at the end of the 1960's—integration was supported by ECLA as an economic instrument for expanding markets. I believe that this is valid, but today that factor is multiplied by others, by the fact that regional integration is an element of defense against the turbulence of the international economic situation. For us, regional cooperation is an imperative of defense and of autonomous economic development, in view of the great turbulence or ups and downs of the international situation.

The third great task of ECLA involves everything concerning Latin America's position with regard to the rest of the world. In this case also there have been very significant changes in the last few years—in the "centers," which have changed their nature and have diversified, as well as on the periphery. In Latin America itself, the situations are not similar in each and every one of the countries, so that to find unity of purpose within the diversity of Latin America and of the world is one of the big tasks we have ahead of us. I think that Latin America must redefine its international position, as part of the Third World which has certain objectives of economic development in progress, and try to acquire a greater presence, a greater force within the structure of international positions in the Third World. That is my personal impression.

These are the three great tasks of ECLA which have always remained the same and continue to be the same today as always.

[Question] As he warms to his subject, the prestigious Latin American economist settles back in the comfortable armchair in his room and continues to develop the previous idea in response to our request that he explain a little more fully how the agency he heads views the present international situation as it affects the development of Latin America.

[Answer] The international scene has confused us much more. While in the 1950's ECLA conceived an entire plan for the economic development of Latin America, which had more or less fixed panorama—as did the world situation—today the situation is changing rapidly. We do not have a stable scene, and uncertainties are coming to us from within and from without.

In the 1950's we were confronted by uncertainty from within; today we are aware that the entire world is also changing, and the uncertainties are, perhaps, much more intense outside Latin America than within it. So we must add those two aspects, which did not exist in the 1950's.

Another element which also complicates the study a little is that although there is homogeneity in the countries, there is also heterogeneity in Latin America. That is, the countries are becoming more diverse. The energy crisis, it is clear, has rapidly changed the structure of the countries of the region and has made them more diverse among themselves.

All that makes the task of rethinking Latin America, within and without, much more complex than in the 1950's. In view of the actual situation, therefore, we have had to proceed much more cautiously in trying to offer models, because we believe there must be a stage of necessary separation and study of the experiences in economic policy of the last few years before arriving at conclusions of great schemes which can be more or less universally valid. I believe there is a great challenge to become thoroughly familiar with conditions. In the last few years, the situation has progressed very rapidly in Latin America, perhaps more rapidly than have ideas for interpreting it. While in another era thought anticipated action, in the last few years action has been anticipating thought. Many things have happened, the picture is changing a great deal and getting into step with events requires time. We hope next year, in 1981, to have a meeting of ECLA in Montevideo, Uruguay, where we will draw some conclusions about the development process as we have seen it in this last decade. It is at that meeting that the past decade must be evaluated and the decade of the 1980's examined--where we hope to make some more concrete proposals and evaluations. That is our task at present.

[Question] Responding to a question about the joint tasks being developed by ECLA with other international institutions involved in Latin American economic activity, Enrique Iglesias said:

[Answer] We have always sought to have the institution join with international agencies. ECLA has excellent relations with the FAO, which have been developing through a joint division working at ECLA headquarters in Santiago. We have very good relations with UNIDO (United Nations Industrial Development Organization), with the Transnationals Center, with the Environmental Office, with OLADE....

We have very close ties of cooperation with OLADE (Latin American Development Organization) in several areas, but there is one area in particular in which we are cooperating, and that is in the preparations for the World Conference on Renewable and Non-Conventional Energy Sources to be held in Nairobi in 1981. We have a team working on this effort with the two secretariats--of OLADE and ECLA--to get ready for this meeting. This is a very concrete field, but we hope to make more progress, given the importance of the energy theme.

[Question] And what is the importance for our region of the nonconventional types of energy?

[Answer] It is important not to raise any exaggerated hopes in this regard. There is no possibility that humanity can dislodge itself--with a few great exceptions--from a very strong dependence on hydrocarbons, and in general, as far as world supply is concerned, the relative percentage of nonconventional sources will necessarily be limited. Nevertheless, it is no less urgent and important that the international community establish its technological studies, advance in the techniques of finance and even of education, to permit the general use of nonconventional sources.

In studies which have been made it has been predicted that by the year 2010, nonconventional sources could supply 30 percent of Latin America's total energy requirement.

The process of agricultural modernization is necessarily going to involve greater energy consumption, and agriculture, necessarily, is gradually going to become a big drain on energy resources. And if we really want to encourage accelerated agricultural development, this is going to be one of the essential requirements.

On the other hand, agriculture is also a provider of energy resources. Some of its possible sources, such as timber and coal, are already used, but others, such as waste products, ethanol and methanol, are still under discussion; but the fact is that there is in agriculture an energy potential which needs to be evaluated.

In my opinion, this subject of nonconventional resources can be summarized in these three main questions:

First, how could agriculture's dependency on liquid fuels be reduced, or how could it be restructured for the future?

All this involves the study of better ways to utilize energy in agriculture without affecting productivity and the study of technology packages and, of course, it presupposes the basic discussion of the relationship between food and energy. That is the first question.

The second is the central question: To what extent can we depend, with economic and technical efficiency, on the production of energy sources based on agriculture?

And the third question is: How do energy prices affect the agricultural equation of the producer?

The figures for the last few years indicate that the farm-price and energy-price ratio has become dangerously inverted in Latin America and certainly throughout the world.

While in the 1970-73 period farm prices gained ground as compared with energy prices--between 11 and 37 percent--the drop in farm prices in the last few years reversed this ratio, and therefore the exchange power of agricultural products lost ground, compared to energy products, by 30 percent. All this had to be reflected, undoubtedly, in the economy of the agricultural producer, in the peasant economy, certainly affecting its rate of growth and in many cases the standard of living itself.

The question is, then, how to identify policies which take into consideration in the agricultural sphere the impact of energy consumption at higher prices in all agriculture structures, especially peasant agriculture.

The subject has, without a doubt, a world connotation, insofar as energy production could be attractive for certain countries which produce foodstuffs. This could cause a great deal of competition in food supply throughout the world, with strong repercussions on both supply and prices.

[Question] The energy problem, because of its reality and its importance, is an absorbing subject, and even more so when our interviewee is an enthusiastic and learned man whose opinions on the subject are highly valued by interested specialists and readers in many countries where his works have been published. There is one aspect of the problem we want to pursue, since it is vital for all countries which, like our own, are making an effort to surmount their underdevelopment, and that is the additional burden presented by the high cost of energy and energy investment.

[Answer] All the countries, in one way or another, are going to be exposed to certain adjustments in their energy policies and eventually in their economic policies.

We are going to have a period of development at costs which are much higher than those the industrial world had. Even so, we might also say that there was not much fairness at that time, either.

Our countries are going to have to develop at costs which are 10 or 15 times higher than those of the industrial world in its development period—a serious obstacle, certainly, to our development process.

The options, doubtless, will differ greatly from country to country. No one can produce an ideal plan in the matter of energy, because this depends, in the final analysis, on the natural resources of each country; but such options must be viewed in terms of "sooner or later," because the energy crisis implies that they are basic development options. They are going to be very different from one country to another, but they are also going to depend a great deal on the progress of world and regional cooperation and on what assurances we have in the matter of technological options.

One of the big concerns one sees in the developing world today is that of having to make various choices when technology is still far from giving its final word.

That is, we are surrounded by uncertainty. There are choices—many times dramatic ones—which involve making huge investments. Once these are made, certainly, it means cutting down the amount of freedom the countries have to move around in that area for many years. That is, we are confronted with important choices which, in my opinion, emphasize two great fronts: on the one hand, national energy planning, and on the other, agricultural planning as it relates to energy planning.

Energy planning on the national level is a most complex subject on which we are ill prepared in general. Energy economy forces an economic reckoning which is much more complex and sophisticated than we are accustomed to making. I do believe that somehow we should avoid or try to supplement energy planning done exclusively under conditions which prevail in developed countries. I believe there have to be variables and variations in accordance with our economic and social reality. You know very well that the objectives of efficacy and efficiency are very varied and depend a great deal on socio-political conditions in which a development process has taken place. It is important that there be a Latin American dimension in these concepts and that our energy experts take very much into account the reality of the social and economic circumstances they must develop.

In general there is a lack of energy economists in Latin America. They are lacking throughout the world, but more so in Latin America. We have good specialists--excellent ones--who can make terrific proposals, but when the time comes to make the big decisions on energy in a national context--there we do not have so many, and in addition, the data which is forthcoming is very uncertain, because the big technological choices in today's world are already obvious.

What do we do? We are going to use atomic energy or thermal energy. Under what conditions are one and the other available? What are the conditions of cost, efficiency, international dependency...?

All those are factors of great complexity and importance for the countries, because they involve many 5-year periods of their future--that is their great importance.

[Question] If the energy system is seen as the integration of all the elements which supply energy, how could international coordination contribute to an overall solution of this problem, which is often impossible to face on a national level?

[Answer] Indeed, if that global framework could be achieved and the entire national and regional energy potential taken into consideration and, on the basis of those two potentials, energy planning carried forward, that indeed would open up another horizon on this problem.

In other words, if when you plan your energy options you take into account only the national variables, that is one thing; but if you carry out your energy program bearing in mind not only its national value, but also those things an integrated, regional system can offer you, that is another kind of choice.

This is obviously true, and it is much more dramatic for the small countries, where the problem is much more acute. National solutions are going to change drastically according to whether or not strong regional measures of cooperation enter the picture. It is a certain fact that the international community has been subjected in the last few years to significant imbalances--financial, in their balance of payments, and economic, in general.

I believe that in this sense it is important to recall a historic speech by President Lopez Portillo of Mexico in the UN General Assembly, when he suggested a concept which, in my opinion, must be taken up by part of the international community, and that is the idea of world responsibility in this matter.

There is no doubt that the international community has confronted the energy challenge, and it must be recognized that there are certain subjects which are beyond the capacity of the individual countries to solve, and therefore they need a collective effort. In the first place, technological effort is a world responsibility. The future of humanity depends, finally, on new sources of energy and on the more efficient use of conventional sources. This presupposes a technological effort of enormous magnitude which, without a doubt, must be part of the collective patrimony of all human beings. I believe the investment effort, or at least aiding the investment effort, is likewise a collective responsibility, and we are indeed aware that contributing to the energy supply helps not only the country which needs it, but the entire international community: Insofar as my country has a supply of new sources of energy, I will cease to add to world demand. This implies that there should be in the international community a certain evolution toward a new and different concept, understanding that the responsibility to assist energy investment must be shared by a substantial and vigorous international effort.

One cannot ask those countries which at the time have 40, 50 and even 60 percent of their import resources earmarked for the purchase of energy to look for an adjustment process which could only mean real social euthanasia, insofar as it would mean adjustments of such magnitude that they would be socially and politically unbearable. Therefore the concept of collective responsibility must be present in any kind of international negotiation, so that nobody thinks the subject of energy is part of a general context in which other matters are directly associated.

Certainly there is also a regional challenge, and I believe that here we are faced with a new, extraordinarily rich front. Our region has not been the most disinherited area in the matter of energy; on the contrary it is one of the regions which has had and still has abundant resources on almost all fronts. I believe that improving regional cooperation here in the matter of supply, not only of hydrocarbons, but in all ways--electrical hookups and other forms of energy cooperation in all fields--will open up significant possibilities for effective cooperation in the region.

But there is another factor which we must not fail to consider, and that is that the region could turn the energy crisis into a dynamic factor in its own productive expansion. The great energy investments are going to require mass production of capital goods. We have no reason to allow that positive and very important impact to affect only the industrialized countries. Who is thinking today about nonconventional sources of energy? The big petroleum companies.

Who is thinking today about big investments in capital goods for energy production? The industrialized countries, which have discovered that behind this energy crisis is the capacity for a great life-giving effort produced precisely by the capital goods industries.

[Question] Continuing on the subject of the struggle for development, how do you evaluate the proposal made by President Fidel Castro to the UN General Assembly, as representative of the nonalined countries, to create a fund to help the economically backward countries conquer their underdevelopment?

[Answer] I believe that President Fidel Castro's proposal is valid and urgent, without a doubt, because basically it calls attention to a sharp reality--the need for capital in the Third World countries. Up to now that need was a constant, but it has been accelerated in the present circumstances by those two great demands: the agricultural-food development required by the region to cope with its basic social problems and its export necessities, and in addition, the extraordinary investments the energy challenge is going to require.

If we formerly emphasized our ownership of resources as an important fact, today this acquires a much greater urgency for an even more dramatic reason. Insofar as these two sectors begin to compete with each other, social investment may be curtailed, and for that reason, this energy development can have a regressive effect on society. There is, then, an implied competition between social development and energy development, which could be solved much more easily if there were a political willingness at the world level and, in addition, enormous resources to solve these problems. Cdr Fidel Castro's proposal seems to me, therefore, very timely and pertinent.

[Question] In Latin America--and you have been emphasizing this--regional integration has been going on in the heat of a new international division of labor, bringing with it a presence, which is too strong, of transnational capital, tending to increase economic dependence. How do you evaluate the present and future situation of Latin America in regard to this process?

[Answer] I believe the situation is accelerating. That is, insofar as within the countries public assistance is beginning to be scarce or insufficient, these countries may be forced to report more often to transnational sources, and they may do this under much more miserable conditions. It is one thing to tap a transnational source to seek its technology, its cooperation--which can be a perfectly respectable element of policy--and quite another to do it under urgent or premature circumstances, which may cause the countries to negotiate under any conditions.

It is for this reason that we insist--referring again to Fidel Castro's idea--that the flow of public capital is basic, especially in these great choices of economic policy.

Transnationalization has been increasing, to a certain extent due to the scarcity of capital flowing through public channels, as a way of solving the problems of investment in these countries, and that problem could increase in the future under deteriorating conditions for the countries of the region.

If the countries resort to the transnationals as a formula of urgency or emergency to cope with their needs for capital, they may find themselves with only a single option, and what they must have are public, international options, which will permit them to make their own political decisions.

[Question] Mr Iglesias, at the FAO Conference there has been emphasis on a decrease in food production and in general in economic growth of a large group of Caribbean countries--except Cuba, of course--which make up the Caribbean subregion. How does ECLA evaluate the economic development future of the Caribbean and above all of its islands?

[Answer] Well now, we have been concerned with the Caribbean; we have a Committee for Caribbean Cooperation, which includes all the countries of this subregion which speak English, Spanish, French and Dutch, and in fact that committee includes those countries to promote cooperation at this time, when many of them are establishing their independence and require, for that reason, as much support as possible to strengthen their situation in the world and in the region.

We view this subregion as having great possibilities for development because of the very high level achieved by their leaders, which could even permit adequate use of the resources those countries have. I believe the so-called viability of these small economies has been exaggerated outside and even within these countries. I believe that with adequate world and regional cooperation, these countries can fully establish themselves as economic units in the region; what is needed is cooperation, and that is where the great challenge to the international community really lies. Within the region, horizontal cooperation—of which there has been so much talk-should have a special priority in this case. I believe that Latin America should look at the Caribbean subregion with a great sense of urgency with a view to its own development and with a sense of respect for the region's individualities and its own decisions. But let it be seen that the region can do much for the Caribbean, and that in that way the Caribbean can find itself again and in turn do something for the region, because the possibility for dialog, for horizontal cooperation, is there.

Lately I have noticed, in addition, that there is great interest and desire in the countries of the Caribbean to cooperate with the Latin American countries, but I believe we have done very little to date. No, we have not yet developed that concept of cooperation. There have been very laudable individual efforts and a few by some of the countries in the region, but as yet we have not taken this as a central theme, with great responsibility, for all the countries of Latin America, and I believe that that can be done in the future.

The Caribbean is the greatest concentration of ministates in the world, which is profoundly significant and should stimulate international cooperation as a distinguishing mark, given the nature of that subregion.

I believe some of the challenge lies in the fact that we have not yet thought it out sufficiently, and Latin America owes it to the Caribbean, to a certain extent, to cooperate more actively.

[Question] In view of the mastery of the problems of our region—independent of his high position in the United Nations—demonstrated by this Latin American economist, we could not resist the temptation to question him on the subject of demography, of which we know he has made several studies. We directed the dialog toward population growth in the next 2 decades. Just off the top of our heads we will try to take in all of Latin America and, notwithstanding the time, to learn about how the population will evolve, its tendency to continue to swell the cities infinitely and the heartbreaking mass of men and women who will reach working age without finding employment. But let us let Iglesias, rather, put our information in some sort of order.

[Answer] The subject of demography and unemployment has always been our little warhorse in regard to accusations about the social situation in Latin America. I have been pointing out, in recent ECLA projects, that the region is facing, on the one hand, the problem of population with a high growth index. Although there are clear indications that there will be a declining trend in the future—and this is a fact that has been anticipated in some countries in the region—in general we are going to have very high growth rates until the end of the century. On the other hand, we have accumulated some widespread critical situations of poverty, also pointed out by ECLA, and the fact that we are going to have a very large labor supply—we have placed the figure at about a 3 percent annual increase—means that Latin America is going to increase from 100 million to 250 million workers by the end of the century. Whatever the population policy or the final evolution of population trends, that is a mass of people which already exists.

This challenge, as we see it, has no precedent in the history of the human race; neither capitalist nor socialist development has had processes of accelerated economic growth with such enormous demands for labor.

It is a challenge for which there are certainly no clear answers; it is one of huge proportions, and the problem is more acute in some countries than in others, but that is going to be, without a doubt, the great challenge of the next few years.

Along with the foregoing, there is another equally important phenomenon—that of the great metropolitan areas, in which Latin America is going to see very rapid growth. We already have in the region more than 85 million people living in the big cities, and by the end of the century, Latin America will have the biggest city in the world (Mexico City).

All this means something which President Lopez Portillo said, and very correctly: that the subject of population and urbanization are historical challenges for his country, and I would say that this could be applied, by extension, to all Latin America.

[Question] One last question: How do you see the role of agriculture in the future development of Latin America?

[Answer] Agriculture is one of the most important parts of development. I believe there is a certain awakening in Latin America's political awareness with respect to the role of agriculture.

It is a phenomenon which has been accentuated in the last few years as a result of the same situation. Without ignoring the active role of industry and services, and also without comparing unfavorably the importance of those sectors in development, there is no doubt that agriculture is going to be called upon in a much more intense way than in the past to shore up the region's development process.

Foodstuffs are one of the most important exports of the region, and agricultural development is a way of sustaining industrial development itself. At the same time, we must not forget that many of Latin America's great social problems are rooted in agriculture.

So the challenge, as it is presented, is very great, and it is curious how that awareness has awakened simultaneously in many countries of the region. Everywhere one finds that the priority of agriculture is gaining ground, impelled by economic necessity and by social realities. And however small it may have been, agriculture appears now as an important, significant course of energy.

I believe that we must give this subject all the importance it requires in Latin America. It is a gigantic continent, which has been asleep in this matter, and it could really have a great contribution to make to solving the world agriculture problem and its own regional problem.

[Question] The time is up, and our distinguished visitor has important things to do, so...

[Answer] As you know, I am very pleased to be here in this country, where I have always been received as a friend, with great cordiality. In addition, it is a great opportunity for me to see at close range the process of change which is taking place here and which, judging from its characteristics, is unique in Latin America.

COLUMNIST ATTACKS HOSTILITY OF ANDEAN PACT NATIONS

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 21 Nov 80 p 2

[Article by Federico Nielsen Reyes: "Does the Andean Pact Sow Discord?"]

[Text] Because he regards them as damaging to our national dignity, the interim foreign minister of the republic, Col Luis Arce Gomez, acting in the absence of General Cerruto Calderon, who is in Washington at the General Assembly of the OAS, has issued a communique the contents of which sharply refute recent statements by the Colombian minister of foreign affairs, Mr Uribe Vargas. It would not be surprising if some opposition parliamentarian were to ask the Colombian executive branch to explain the reason for the animosity revealed by these statements with regard to Bolivia.

Foreign Minister Uribe Vargas said among other things, in connection with the meeting of presidents in Santa Marta on the occasion of the sesquicentennial anniversary of the death of the Liberator, scheduled for this coming 17 December, that it is a meeting of presidents elected by the "popular vote," i.e. a meeting for "democratic countries," for which reason only the chiefs of state of Venezuela, Peru, Ecuador, Panama, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic and the Spanish prime minister have been invited. With regard to the president of Bolivia, Uribe Vargas stated categorically that he had been excluded, which led a journalist to ask him how a community such as the Andean Pact can function if one president is "blackballed." The problem is very simple, Uribe told the journalist. "Bolivia can have whatever government it wants, but one drafts his own guest list for a gathering at his home." A rude statement as alien to a proper upbringing as if country bumpkins were speaking. To this must be added the fact, as the Foreign Ministry statement notes, that Mr Uribe Vargas, less than a week before his current statement, addressed the Bolivian minister of foreign affairs to tell him in clear and spontaneous fashion of the desire of his government not only to maintain the channels of communication and friendship, which had not been interrupted, but to broaden them, accepting the governmental appointment of the individual designated as ambassador to Bogota. The statement stresses that assertions as contradictory as they are unethical such as the Colombian foreign minister has now made are also an unprecedented evidence of the most elemental lack of courtesy, inexplicable in a citizen of Colombia, a country which has always venerated the gentlemanly and noble standards which should govern the actions of individuals entrusted with the representation of a nation."

The assertion that only those elected by a popular vote are entitled to be elected to head to Bolivian state is but an absurdity of comic invention. We have reviewed the records and bylaws of the Cartagena Agreement and nowhere is there any such limitation. And Foreign Minister Uribe contradicts himself in saying in his own statement that Bolivia can have whatever government it wants. Why then be alarmed if this Bolivian country now has a military government? The truth, which is not admitted, is that there is an indiscriminate prejudice against the military, which are but the armed branch of the people as the institution safeguarding national sovereignty. Would perhaps terrorists heading the government be preferable?

On the subject of the presidents invited to the Santa Marta meeting, Foreign Minister Arce Gomez said in his rebuttal that Bolivia rejects, as an attack on the goals of the Andean Pact, any desire to subordinate it to motives alien to the process of integration, claiming for itself the right to classify the governments in the Andean region as pure or impure, and says that the "people of Bolivia reject the arbitrary claim of others to authority to judge their sovereign rights, and they do not nor will they accept any type of harmful interference in their dignity and independence."

It should be made very clear that the meeting of presidents of nations heir to the legacy of Simon Bolivar in Santa Marta should be organized within the strict framework of the Cartagena Agreement in order not to distort its essence, as a part of that legacy, and only halfway multi-national, with the hateful exclusion of some of the most important countries in Latin America, such as Mexico, Brazil and Argentina. Where the spirit of Bolivar is concerned specifically, it behooves the government of Colombia--there is still time, as the virtual host, to see to it that this meeting of chiefs of the nations which are heirs to the spirit of Simon Bolivar is truly an expression of unity, with no members of the Pact left out. To do otherwise would mean endorsing discord precisely on the date and at the historic site of the death of the common father of our fatherlands, whose obsession in the last periods of his life was none other than the concept of unity, as he said in his proclamation to the Colombians: "If my death contributes to an end to partisanship and consolidation of the union, I will go tranquil to my grave." Those who at the present time do not contribute to unity are gravediggers.

The Foreign Ministry statement says that whether it remains in or withdraws from the Cartagena Agreement, this will be "a facultative and not a compulsory action, and it must be understood that this agreement is not a trench or a redoubt for the mutual defense of related policies, much less an association of mutual influences to support fictitious democracies without roots among the people." (Here the statement ends.)

Returning to the subject of non-recognition of an Andean nation, it should be stressed that the Pact nations are making themselves nothing less than ridiculous in showing reluctance, and the longer they delay in changing their attitude, the more notorious this obstinacy will become, in view of the fact that 30 nations, including the great powers, Russia, Japan, the FRG, Italy, Spain and other European nations and the most important ones in Latin America have stated that they are not suspending diplomatic relations with Bolivia. The United States is a different case, because President Carter, obsessed with his "ultra-democratic" criterion in the belief that he is defending human rights, has rejected the political change made in Bolivia, and this criterion has even come to be imposed within the Andean Pact, leading its respective governments to interfere in the domestic life of a brotherly country, an interference which is certainly alien to the specific reason for the existence of the Cartagena Agreement, which is cooperation and not abandonment. The United States, in one way or another, imposes the dictates it deems suitable, using different tactics. Specifically we have the recent case in which while it rejected the military government of Bolivia, just a few weeks later it willingly recognized the no less military regime in Turkey for the simple reason that the civilian government ousted in that country was pro-Moscow, and therefore displeasing to Washington. President-elect Reagan has made it clear that in dealing with Latin America, his government will accord it the consideration it merits. Seemingly the new president sees the full scope of the importance of this area which is vital to the United States. This means that we for our part should prove ourselves worthy of ourselves and work to erase the poor impression that we Latin Americans live with our hands held out toward the north in an attitude of eternal supplication.

To speak the truth, General Garcia Meza's government does not depend on Andean recognition to survive, but it might happen that it will abandon the Pact temporarily not due to lack of desire to participate or as a gesture of protest against the "swindle" into which Industrial Allocations has been transformed. It would return to active participation in the Cartagena Agreement when the procedural shortcomings in the Andean environment have been corrected.

Whether invited or not, because the homage which should be rendered to Bolivar on Colombian territory is not the exclusive duty of Colombia, we believe that President Garcia Meza, as chief of state in the land which bears the name of our hero, should make an appearance at the very site--San Pedro Alejandrino in Santa Marta--where our noble forebear died, recalling there that the legacy of Bolivar to us was a fatherland with its own outlet to the sea, and that now, geographically, we are a country mutilated by Chile in a war of conquest, and to the shame of the spirit of justice in America, we have now been landlocked for 100 years, without any action being taken in the course of that long period of time to make amends for the tremendous damage done to Bolivia.

PRESIDENT ON ECONOMIC MEASURES, OTHER ISSUES

[Text] Potosi, 10 November--"The goal of the National Reconstruction Government is to rescue Bolivia from the bankruptcy in which the politicians have left us, to seek better paths for the Bolivian people and above all for the national majorities, the president of the republic, Gen Luis Garcia Meza, said during an inspection he made of the La Palca vaporization plant, which was inaugurated in January of 1981 [sic].

He stressed with emphasis that at no time has a date been named for the approval of economic measures. "Economic steps may or may not be taken," he said, "depending on the situation in which the country finds itself."

The text of the statement made by the chief of state in Potosi reads as follows:

"The president of the republic, Gen Luis Garcia Meza, stated today that the next goal of the National Reconstruction Government is to 'rescue Bolivia from the bankruptcy in which the politicians have left it' and to seek better days for the Bolivian people.

The chief of state made these statements while discussing the profitable study his government is making of corrective measures to be applied to the national economy to rescue it from its stagnation.

However he made it clear that these steps may or may not be taken, depending on economic conditions occurring in the country, and that in any case a task of consciousness-raising has been launched with the Bolivian people, so that as a whole they can respond to the demands of the National Reconstruction Government in connection with the corrective measures planned.

In this connection he said that 'Bolivia plays a very important role within the Andean Pact. We must speak forcefully and state that the benefits must be distributed among all equally. We Bolivians cannot always be the last to receive a part of the benefits,' General Garcia Meza said.

He reiterated that there is unity in the armed forces of the nation and that the rumours about a possible coup d'etat come from abroad. 'Siles Zuazo is responsible for these rumors. However, I must tell you that should such a situation arise, the armed forces will be able to control it,' he stressed.

Concerning the resumption of work at the Bolivian University, General Garcia Meza said that it is the commissions currently studying the university situation in detailed fashion which will have the last word to say on the matter.

However, he made it clear that when the university opens, the students will have to devote themselves to their studies because in this connection, the government will take firm action against the students who are not diligent in their studies, because they would be misusing state funds.

The president of the republic, in conclusion, recommended to the staff of all state institutions, both public, self-governing and semi-self-governing, that they not hire further personnel, because otherwise it will not be possible to rationalize wages, consistent with the economy of the country, beginning next year."

GARCIA MEZA TERMS NATIONAL SENTIMENT FAVORABLE

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 9

[Article by Dante Escobar: "General Garcia Meza Will Conclude His Tour of the Country in December"]

[Text] Gen Luis Garcia Meza, the president of the republic, will complete the trip he has been making to various regions of the country in the month of December, he stated in Potosi.

At the conclusion of a trip made to Robore and Yapacani, in the department of Santa Cruz, and to Tupiza, Potosi and Sucre, General Garcia Meza, who was accompanied by naval commanders, including Rear Admiral Ramiro Terrazas, said that his "trips to the country will be completed by the end of this year."

During his recent trip, the chief of state was also accompanied by Gen Hernan Ferrel Lobo, commander of the first army corps, with headquarters in Oruro; Liberation Army Col Rolando Arzabe, commander of the Lanza regiment in Guaqui; Col Luis Lafuente, commander of the Achacachi regiment; Col Luis Kuramoto, head of the first army department; Cpt Jose Coello, chief of the military police; Col Raul Ramallo, head of the higher national studies school, and Maj Carlos Macias, in charge of studies at the Army Military College.

Evaluation

Since he assumed office as head of the nation last 17 July, General Garcia Meza has been making tours through the interior of the republic.

When the president of the republic was asked whether he could assess the results achieved during the trips he has made throughout the country, he answered that they enabled him to observe the support offered by the people, especially the most needy sectors, to the armed forces government."

The trips enabled him to understand the real situation in which the people live. "This reality is unknown in the cities and leads to the development of erroneous concepts of the needs of the people," the president said.

He noted that daily contact with the peasants, workers, professional people, craftsmen and the middle class in general in the cities, towns and rural settlements "enabled us to confirm that the proposals of the reconstruction government are oriented toward the needs of our people."

He said that the support received was massive and spontaneous. "This encourages us and it comforts us to know that we are on the correct path and that we are acting in accordance with the convictions of the Bolivian population, and not the sectarian minorities which are still seeking to promote a fratricidal conflict."

The president of the republic said that "during our tours of the rural sector, we have delivered tractors, educational materials and tools for farm work which will contribute to meeting the needs of the peasants.

"The evaluation of the trips I have made is highly favorable and positive in terms of the action of my government. I am satisfied, although I was not able to visit many rural settlements to which I was invited. I hope to do this in the future," the president of the republic said.

The chief of the military household, Col Jorge Salazar, explained for his part that General Garcia Meza had made trips throughout the interior of the country at the rate of 7 or 8 per month since 17 July.

PROSPECTS FOR MINING SECTOR DISCUSSED

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 21 Nov 80 p 3

[Article by Jorge Sanchez Pena: "The Future of Bolivian Tin"]

[Text] In the economic world, Bolivia is known as a country producing ores and in particular as a tin producer. Its "tin-bearing sector" includes some of the largest veined deposits in the Western world. Its production and potential have won it second place among producers, with approximately 30,000 tons, after Malaya, which produces more than 63,000 tons per year. Indonesia and Thailand are challenging Bolivia's position and may surpass it, mainly because of the type of deposits they exploit, which are those called alluvia (beds) and are characterized by low exploitation types.

Despite the adverse aspects of our domestic tin deposits, which are located more than 4,000 meters above sea level, the complexity of their low-content minerals, their encasement in very hard and highly silicified rock, and the inefficient and inadequate administration of the state-owned enterprises, which account for approximately 70 percent of the total domestic production, Bolivia would be in a position to increase its production substantially with the implementation of a realistic mining policy which, if indeed it could not seek to achieve the 46,338-ton level of the end of the 1929 peak, would enable it to produce more than 36,000 tons per year. Such a policy should make the profitable exploration and exploitation of large mineral-bearing masses with very low tin content, under one-half a percent, which constitute our greatest reserves today, possible.

Since the period of maximal tin production, which was in 1929, more than 50 years of intensive exploitation have passed, and naturally, like all deposits in the world, ours are being reduced. This fact is reflected in the drop in national production, which in recent years has varied between 28,000 (1973) and 33,000 (1977) tons per year. But this notable decline in comparison to 1929 cannot be taken as a real indication of our productive potential. The reduction in our production has been mainly the result of the lack of capital for exploration, development and exploitation of poor ores with a low tin content (0.1 percent to 0.5 percent Sn) requiring new systems and a change of machinery for tin recovery.

Once the problems the exploitation and recovery of low-metal-content ores with a profit margin have been overcome, it is reasonable to presume that the launching of serious exploration work in the tin-yielding belt which stretches approximately 800 kilometers from north to south and the increase in reserves would enable Bolivia to become the most important tin producer in the West, bearing in mind that currently the most productive tin-bearing deposits are located in Southeast Asia.

This geopolitical fact represents a positive factor for attracting risk capital for exploration from the largest tin consumers in the world, which are precisely the U.S. industrial complexes. We believe that the launching of a truly serious exploratory program demands sizable quantities of risk capital, brought in under conditions similar to those established for the exploration and production of oil in the country.

It is common knowledge that the life of any deposit is determined by the exploratory work, development of reserves and establishment of modern and efficient systems to facilitate optimal recovery and a consequently profitable operation. Exploration expenditures are so large that normally the mining enterprises allocate a given sum of money per ton of ore extracted. Assuming that the Llallagua (Catavi) deposit can yield 4,000 tons of ore per day, at least 1.2 million U.S. dollars per year should be invested in exploration and development work, or otherwise the production level would drop as a result of the reduced reserves with the consequent limitation on the life of the deposit.

The current tin production figures, which are dropping, would seem to indicate that the mining industry does not have either sufficient exploration funds or the means or systems of tin recovery for low-content ores. The factors limiting an increase in the production in the state-owned mines also are valid for private mining, but because of the flexibility of its management, the availability of funds and speed in making decisions, this sector is in a better position to implement the measures required for greater profitable production, provided that it can obtain the proper understanding and cooperation from government bodies.

In synthesis, we believe that the solution to the national problem of retaining our position as a major tin-producing country, beyond an increase in our production, lies basically in obtaining risk capital from such highly industrialized countries as the United States, Japan or Germany. To achieve profitable production in the exploitation of our old deposits, new investments are needed making it possible to increase the tonnage extracted, to raise the low recovery indices (by flotation, superflotation and vaporization) and, basically, to increase the current capacity of the preconcentration and concentration mills.

None of these aspects is beyond the broad knowledge of our domestic technicians and they have been explained repeatedly to the governments currently in office. Unfortunately, these recommendations have probably been shelved, ignored or simply rejected by empiricists serving as advisers and unaware of the decisive weight of the mining industry within the national economy. Any decline in mining production means a lag in the economic development of the country. The value of Bolivia's ore exports in 1979 came to approximately $600 billion U.S., accounting for about 75 percent of our export total. If the figures and facts set forth do not lead to the implementation of an intensive campaign of exploration and development, the mining industry is destined to stagnate and finally to disappear.

MORTALITY RATE STATISTICS VIEWED WITH ALARM

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 21 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] The mortality rate in the country has increased alarmingly in recent years, with the result that 213 of every 1,000 persons die before reaching the age of 2. This figure is even more alarming in the rural sector, where 256 out of every 1,000 inhabitants die, according to the conclusions reached by the Fourth Project Workshop Seminar on Population Policies organized by the Ministry of Planning and Coordination.

The statistics established at this seminar are "alarming," the participants, as well as officials at the overall social policy and planning office which sponsored the reunion, said.

The seminar, which was held with a view to presenting the results of 8 surveys regarded as a tool for the diagnosis of population problems lasting 3 weeks, spokesmen for the Ministry of Planning and Coordination said.

"The studies were related to the historical-structural framework of the population and development in the country, description of the socio-demographic contexts, the mortality phenomenon, the birth-rate phenomenon, the volume of internal migration, rural migration with regard to the settlements and psycho-social aspects of the rural-urban migration," it was explained.

Mortality Rate

The results of the mortality study, like that of the birth rate, corroborated the already-known trends placing the country in the initial stage of demographic transition, according to the reports provided by the organizers.

They said that of every 1,000 inhabitants in the country, 213 die before reaching the age of 2. "This situation is more acute in the rural areas, where the probability of death for these children is 256 out of every 1,000."

Mortality rates were also established by ecological strata, revealing that in the valleys, the rate comes to 250 inhabitants out of every 1,000 included in the established age range, with a figure of 217 for every 1,000 on the high plateau and 160 out of every 1,000 on the plains.

In terms of mortality by social strata, a significantly higher rate was seen for the lower strata, according to the study: 262 out of every 1,000, while the figure for the upper middle class was 154 out of each 1,000.

Birth Rate

Where the birth rate is concerned, the different trends have had the effect of increasing the differences in the birth rate to be found within the populations located in the urban and extreme rural contexts.

The studies submitted also stressed the characteristics of migrants, showing for example that the most important age groups for people migrating falls between 15 and 34 for men and 15 and 24 for women. "On the high plateau migration by women predominates, while on the other hand the migration of men is more important in the valleys and on the plains."

COMMUNIST LEADER INTERVIEWED ON POLITICAL OPENING

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 15 Oct 80 p 4

[Interview with Brazilian Communist Party [PCB] Secretary General Giocondo Dias; date and place not given]

[Text] Sao Paulo--The political opening has not come to a halt said Giocondo Dias, secretary general of the outlawed Brazilian Communist Party, yesterday. He supports the dialog of opposition leaders with the government through the president of the PDS [Social Democratic Party], Senator Jose Sarney, because he finds it "normal and useful."

According to the PCB secretary general, "The communists are betting on the opening" and are preparing the Seventh Party Congress to be held in 1981. The agenda being prepared will be revealed this year, reported Giocondo Dias in answer to questions asked by JORNAL DO BRASIL.

Controversial Subjects

Questions on differences between the present secretary general and former Secretary General Luis Carlos Prestes were not answered, because, according to Sao Paulo communist leaders, the Central Committee is preparing a document to be revealed in the next few days on the subject.

Neither did Giocondo Dias answer questions about the Workers Party [PT], Leonel Brizola, the MR-8 clandestine group, the PC do B [Communist Party of Brazil], nor on the succession to the governorship of Sao Paulo in 1982.

[Question] How do the communists view the position of the PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement Party] and PP [Popular Party] leaders who talk with the government through Senator Sarney to pledge their support to President Figueiredo in the fight against terrorism?

[Answer] It should not seem strange that leaders of parties talk to anyone to fix responsibilities for terrorist acts. We believe that to be normal and useful. Indeed, the principal objective of the terrorists was to block the process of opening, which for good or bad is taking place in the country. On the other hand, the emergence of terrorism is a symptom of the growing difficulties of the government in reforming itself and surviving. The action of terrorism is going to create conditions for imposing a regression. And it is obvious that for that it has the support and hands-offattitude of large well-entrenched sectors in the power system.

[Question] Do the communists support the president in the fight against terrorism?

[Answer] Look, the one who has the best means for identifying and punishing the terrorists is obviously the government. We do not know up to now, however, of any specific measure which has been taken in this respect to which we could give our support or solidarity.

[Question] Senator Montoro and Governor Maluf believe that terrorists attacks may help democracy. The senator believes that they strengthen democracy as they unite society in a unanimous rejection of those actions. Do the communists agree with those positions?

[Answer] We do not know of those statements but there is no way to confuse things: The senator favors democracy and the government is against it. For our part, we are radically against the theory of "the worst, the better." We are against any type of terrorism. Terrorism is harmful for democracy and the working class. The path to the resolution of political problems is the action of the masses. That is why we even think that in order to defeat terrorism the joint action of all the forces which oppose it is necessary.

[Question] How do the communists view the two-way movement of the government, whereby, according to political analysts, in order to punish the right it will also have to punish the left?

[Answer] Two-way movement? Where? We do not observe any two-way movement in this respect. On the contrary, during these 16 years only the democratic forces were repressed.

[Question] The communists are also accused of practicing a two-way movement, a radical movement during moments of greater repression and conciliatory toward the political opening.

[Answer] Our recent political history of fighting against the military regime implanted in 1964 is not vacillating. Even in the moments of greatest repression when many of our comrades were murdered we tried not to move away from a policy of unity among all democratic forces. We never ceased trying to form a broad mass front in the fight for democracy. And this was at a time when other forces advocated methods that were supposedly shorter. We vigorously resisted the adventurist and leftist wave. We always tried to overcome the coupist temptation.

Throughout that period we never were conciliatory with the regime. We are a force which fights openly for the radical change of Brazilian society, for democracy and socialism.

[Question] Luis Inacio da Silva says that the government blames the right for the attacks to give the impression that the left is in power, that President Figueiredo and Ministers Golbery and Delfim are of the left. Do the communists agree with that position?

[Answer] We are also unaware of such statements attributed to Lula, whose position is one of combat against terrorism.

[Qeustion] Are the communists absolutely certain of direct elections in 1982?

[Answer] The postponement of municipal elections, and other antidemocratic measures, indicate that they will not be held. The regime is not unaware of the important role that elections traditionally play in the marshalling and unification of all the forces opposed to it. That is why the struggle for the 1982 elections acquires a particular significance. There is no assurance they will be held because there are powerful forces interested in postponing them indefinitely. Moreover, the government is maneuvering to prevent a victory of the opposition forces, in case those elections are held, by means of several restrictions. Only the unity and the marshalling of all the democratic forces and all those who favor the holding of direct elections in the country will be able to guarantee them.

[Question] What is most important to the communists, a constituent assembly now or the holding of direct elections in 1982?

[Answer] Look, it does not seem proper to us to pose the question in that way. We do not see a contradiction between struggles for direct elections in 1982 and the struggle for a constituent assembly. On the contrary, they are two great objectives which complement and strengthen each other. Direct elections strengthen democratic life and, therefore, contribute to putting an end to authoritarianism. In turn, the national constituent assembly should seal the fate of that authoritarianism.

[Question] Does the PCB, following the example of Senator Tancredo Neves, believe that the opening has "stalled" or has even, as Raimundo Faoro said, "come to a halt?"

[Answer] No, the government has only managed to impose the limits it established to give form to its plans of self-reform aimed at consolidating and institutionalizing the regime it would like to see prevail. That is why it is encountering more and more difficulties in that direction. Thus, just as it was obliged to give space to the democratic forces and the working class, space which is the real opening, it could have to do it again, depending on the popular mobilization and the degree of unity of the opposition forces. The communists, therefore, are betting on the opening.

[Question] Does the PCB, in view of the work it is doing in that aspect, have some idea of when it will become legal?

[Answer] The legality of the party is a sort of thermometer, a sort of index of the degree of advance or retreat of the democratization process in a country. In Brazil, where anticommunism in recent years became the official doctrine of the state, the winning of democracy is inseparable from the winning of legal status for the party, which would mean a blow to the ideological arsenal of the regime. That is why the idea of legality of the party is not only of interest to us alone.

POLL SHOWS DROP IN GOVERNMENT POPULARITY, DIRECT ELECTIONS FAVORED

Popularity Drops

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 14 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] The government's popularity index reached its lowest point in August, when 59 percent of the population disapproved of President Joao Figueiredo's performance, according to a poll conducted in 19 states released yesterday by the Gallup Institute.

The president's popularity had been increasing since his inauguration in March 1979: May, 47 percent; August, 56 percent; October, 57 percent. In January, however, only 37 percent of those interviewed approved, but in April the index increased slightly, to 39 percent, dropping in August to 33 percent.

According to the analysis accompanying the poll's statistical tables, the drop in popularity occurred in the November-December period, when the president changed his style of government after the incidents that occurred during his visit to Santa Catarina.

Among the class categories defined by the poll, the most well-off segment of the population is the one that most disapproves of the government, amounting to 70 percent of the interviewees who expressed an opinion. The lowest index of disapproval is in the lower income group, which indicated a 50 percent disapproval index.

The report also revealed that among Brazilian regions, the highest index of disapproval occurred in the southern states.

Direct Elections Preferred

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 13 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] Sao Paulo—A national poll released by the Gallup Institute yesterday revealed that 63 percent of the Brazilians favor direct elections at all levels, including for president of the republic. The same poll reveals that 74 percent of the country's population favors direct elections for state governors.

The results obtained by Gallup were collected from a sample of 2,745 persons of both sexes, all ages and all socio-economic levels by states, according to the distribution of the Brazilian population, according to the demographic size of the cities.

In response to the question: "In your opinion, should the elections for mayors of the capitals, governors of the states and president of the republic be direct or indirect?" the persons interviewed revealed the following preferences: 63 percent favored direct elections at all levels and 17 percent indirect elections at all levels, while 17 percent favored direct elections only at some levels.

Eight percent prefer direct elections only for governors and mayors, 3 percent only for mayors, 1 percent only for governors, 2 percent only for president of the republic, a similar number for governors and president, and 1 percent for mayors and the president of the republic.

In the division of social classes, 70 percent of class B favor direct elections at all levels compared to 6 percent for class C, 53 percent for class A, 62 percent for class D and 43 percent for class E. By age group, 66 percent of persons 50 years and older favored direct elections for all positions compared to 63 percent for persons in the 18 to 29-year old group, and 61 percent for the 39 to 49-year old group.

Governors

It was observed that in the capitals, 78 percent favor direct elections for governors; in cities with more than 200,000 inhabitants, the percentage rises to 89; in cities with a population of between 10,001 and 20,000, the percentage is 70; between 5,000 and 10,000 inhabitants, 68 percent; between 1,001 and 5,000, it is 60 percent; and up to 1,000 it is 66 percent.

In the Southeast regions, 78 percent of the population favors direct elections for governor, 67 percent in the Southern region, 74 percent in the Northeast region and 51 percent in the Northern and Center-West.

That division by cities and by regions was made only for the governor category.

PDS, PMDB Favored

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 14 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] Sao Paulo--Brazilian voters are identifying more and more with the Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMDB) and the Social Democratic Party (PDS) to the detriment of the Workers Party (PT) and the Brazilian Labor Party (PTB), according to the poll released yesterday by the Gallup Institute.

Since last March, when Gallup began to measure public acceptance of the parties after the party reform, preference for the PMDB increased from 10 percent to 16 percent. The PDS rose from 13 percent to 15 percent, although in one of the polls conducted in May, it reached 16 percent.

Last March the PT was preferred by 18 percent of the voters, this figure dropping to 9 percent in August. And the PTB--which was the most populer party in the first poll, being preferred by 22 percent of the voters--dropped to 12 percent in August. The Democratic Workers Party (PDT) was not included in the polls until August, was preferred by 3 percent of the voters. The Popular Party (PP) dropped from 7 percent in March to 6 percent in August.

According to the poll, the PMDB is the most popular party in the Southeast--17 percent of the voters compared to 8 percent for the PDS. On the other hand, the PDS has a higher level of acceptance in the Northeast: 24 percent of the voters compared to 14 percent for the PMDB. The Southeast region also includes the largest number of voters who prefer the PT (12 percent) and the PP (7 percent). The PTB and PTD receive their highest level of acceptance in the southern part of the country: 14 percent and 8 percent, respectively.

Recognition

The poll also revealed that the PDS, PMDB and PTB are the parties with the highest degree of public recognition by the Brazilian urban population. Forty-seven percent of those interviewed said they were familiar with the PDS and 45 percent with the PTB and the PMDB. The PT was mentioned by 28 percent and the PP by 25 percent. However, 19 percent of the total number of interviewees said the former National Renewal Alliance (ARENA) existed as a party; and 20 percent similarly mentioned the former Brazilian Democratic Movement (MDB).

Reform

The poll also measured the popularity of the party reform, indicating that 39 percent of those interviewed were in favor and 14 percent against. But 47 percent of those interviewed said they had no opinion on the party reform.

NEWSPAPER APPROVES 'REALISTIC POSITION' OF U.S. REPORT

PY090246 Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 7 Dec 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Realistic Position"]

[Text] In a little more than a month the U.S. Government will be changing hands and it is certain that its foreign policy will change both in substance and style.

It will not be just an ideological turn. All U.S. society has the sensation that the country has lost prestige and ground vis-a-vis the Soviet Union. That frustration plus the internal economic crisis were the bases for Ronald Reagan's overwhelming electoral victory. And the new president will have to pay heed to this by dint of his own will and his rapport with the electorate.

In what way will that affect us? Brazil is not and never was at the top of the U.S. Department of State's agenda, not because of a deliberate snub but because of the simple reason that its experts have always misunderstood Latin America and it is inherent to human nature to attach little importance to what is not well understood. This is an error, but a historical one.

The new tack the U.S. diplomacy will take as of 20 January cannot change this picture by itself. We are not the docile ally that Reagan is thinking of cultivating in the third world, and neither the regime nor the national character has any tendency toward the Soviets for us to worry about.

In that context, the only positive element of some importance is a report on Brazilian-U.S. relations recently made public by a high-level commission made up of personalities of business, university and diplomatic circles.

That report is not an official document. However, it represents the views of the American establishment since it is signed by personalities such as Gen Vernon Walters, Professor Alfred Stepan, Rodman Rockefeller and former state department under secretary William Rogers who is the commission's leading political figure.

The U.S. establishment is always close to power. In formulating his policy toward Brazil, whoever the occupant of the White House is, he will have to hear the signers of this report, or people who are members of the same clubs or who lunch in the same restaurant.

And this is fine, because the conclusions in that report, which was 1 year in the making, are clearsighted to a surprising degree at times.

In a few words, the conclusions are the simple recognition of a reality that, first Brazil is going through a political experience the success of which, by itself and because of the example it sets, is of interest to all those who prefer to live under democratic regimes; second, Brazil is facing economic difficulties of external origin and it is advantageous for the United States to help our country overcome them; and third, Brazil is a country that thinks with its own head.

In even fewer words: What is good for Brazil is also good for the United States.

It is hard to tell what weight this collective opinion of experts in various fields will have on the policy to be implemented by the Reagan Government. The directives made known by Reagan's assistants place emphasis on different points, although not antagonistic ones. These directives refer to a softening of the human rights policy and concern with social reforms which dominates the Carter team.

In other words, those directives have much more to do with El Salvador and Nicaragua than with Brazil.

It really does not matter much for the good relations between Brazil and the United States whether the power in Washington is in the hands of liberals or conservatives, as long as they are as realistic as the members of this high-level commission that issued the report.

TAVARES VIEWS POLITICAL-MILITARY DIALOG, REAGAN VICTORY

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 11 Nov 80 p 6

[Interview with 2d Army Commander Gen Milton Tavares; in Sao Paulo on 10 November]

[Text] General Milton Tavares, the commander of the 2d Army, reassumed his command yesterday after a 30-day vacation and granted a press interview in which he stated that the "Military Statute categorically forbids politics in the barracks. And," he added, "we cannot take politics into the barracks." In the general's opinion, dialog with the armed forces must be carried out normally, through the man who is in charge of the political area, namely, its minister."

Following is the text of the interview with Gen Milton Tavares:

[Question] How do you analyze the announced rapprochement with the military by the opposition politicians?

[Answer] That's a good question. And there is a certain confusion about the matter. The military have never been shut off from contact with anyone. It just happens that the military have two particular characteristics that can never be contravened: any armed force operates on the basis of discipline and line of command. And that principle cannot be broken except at the risk of general loss of control. The dialog with the armed forces must be conducted normally through the man who is in charge of the political area, namely, its minister. The military sector cannot dialog with the politicians as the students do. I cannot permit officers and sergeants in my army to meet to discuss the situation in Brazil with opposition or communist leaders. That would seriously jeopardize discipline and the line of command. Furthermore, the Military Statute categorically forbids politics in the barracks. And we cannot take politics into the barracks, much less, permit the armed forces to be transformed into a pressure force for democratization, as I read in an interview by a deputy. It is something that even evokes surprise because democratization is being carried out with the backing and support of the armed forces. That business about a pressure force, without thinking ill of anyone, is even difficult to understand.

[Question] Do you have any special plan as you reassume your command?

[Answer] There is no change in my command. I am a resolute defender of law and order. Within that context everything will be fine.

[Question] With regard to the rapprochement of politicians?

[Answer] A deputy said that it was necessary to transform the military into liberals, and that cannot be. To think of transforming groups of military into mass groups is even naive.

[Question] How about the expulsion of Father Vito Miracapillo?

[Answer] Father Vito's expulsion was a provincial problem that the uproar of the media transformed into a national problem. There was a request by our president for the Vatican to resolve the problem and that was easy and simple. I do not know why it was not resolved. That priest was a foreigner and he seriously offended the Brazilian nationality. He did not offend the president, the government or the armed forces. He offended all of us, and I do not believe there was any other alternative. Let the attitude of the government, fully respecting the decision of the judiciary be noted, respected and lauded. All of that is democracy.

[Question] Do you believe that expulsion may have hurt the relationship of the Brazilian Government with the Church?

[Answer] No. The Church is one thing and Father Vito Miracapillo is quite different. One is the whole, the other is the individual. And in any whole, the individual can err. The Brazilian people are deeply Catholic. There is no conflict between the government and the Church, nor can there be. This is, as in the case of Father Miracapillo, a disagreement. That is natural.

[Question] How do you view the approaching elections of the National Student Union (UNE)?

[Answer] As far as I am concerned, it does not exist. That is the way I view it. That's right, it does not exist.

[Question] Is Reagan's election going to improve anything for Latin America?

[Answer] That is a very political question and difficult to answer. So far, Reagan's election has one aspect: the enormous demonstration of democracy given by the American people. A country where an administration that displeases is replaced by another, without fights and intelligently. As for what he is going to do, it is to early to express an opinion.

At the conclusion of the interview, the 2d Army commander declared: "I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the great people of Sao Paulo, particularly the metal workers of Sao Paulo and management for the intelligent manner in which they acted on the recent wage agreement, beneficial for all concerned. I believe that that should be the correct line to follow: neither management being intransigent and paying too little, nor the worker demanding things that cannot be granted; things that we see being demanded to create a situation. But I want to tell the people of Sao Paulo that I am returning exactly the same, anticommunist as I have always been and will die being, because I do not accept their ideas by any means, and I am sorry if anybody does. I am a defender of law and order and in a position to support the authorities whenever necessary and I am a faithful executor of the orders of the president of the republic and the army minister.

EXPORTS OF MUNITIONS, ARMORED VEHICLES INCREASING

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 9 Nov 80 p 33

[Article by Milton F. da Rocha Filho: "Brazil Sells Bombs, Rockets and Grenades"]

[Text] Sao Jose dos Campos (SP)--Brazil is developing incendiary bombs and napalm and has completed the plans for its first missile, the Piranha, which has its first launching phase scheduled two years from now. Today the country exports bombs, rockets, grenades of various types and light armored vehicles and there is interest by several European countries in coparticipating in its space program. The Space Activities Institute (IEA) is developing technology in its military division and industrial production is delegated to private industry of national capital.

Until a short time ago, Brazil was known only for its exports of ENGESA (Specialized Engineers, Inc.) light armored vehicles, but today a very large variety of weapons is sold abroad. The total amount sold abroad by the end of the year should be more than $500 million. Many of those deals are bilateral and result from military agreements, not being revealed for "reasons of security."

President of ENGESA Luis Withaker, said that his presence in Iraq at the end of October was to give "moral support to our officials and to let Iraq know that we are not abandoning it."

According to him, that position will help in future negotiations. He explained that the negotiations for selling light armored vehicles to China went very well and that there is a great possibility of winning a contract from the U.S. Army for the purchase of equipment. We have an advanced technology in light armored vehicles in which, for example, we compete with the Soviet Union.

Lt Col Jose Marconi Santos of the military equipment division of the IAE emphasized that the need to equip and modernize the Brazilian Air Force [FAB] produced a number of pieces of equipment as a byproduct of the space program. After the termination of several military agreements, the equipment used by the FAB became obsolete, however, replacements have been made, in large part by items manufactured in the country.

Production of Foreign Credits

The country has developed three space rockets up to now: Sonda-1, which reaches 80 to 100 kilometers in altitude; Sonda-2, an experimental rocket; and Sonda-3, already approved, which goes from 180 to 200 kilometers in altitude. There is interest by European countries in coparticipating in scientific research with Sonda-3.

Sonda-4 is now being developed. It weighs more than eight tons. The IEA is engaged in the phase of reorganizing its offices and the launching base preparing for Sonda-4, which will be launched in 2 years and will be used for research on the construction of a satellite launching vehicle (VLS).

Rocket guidance equipment has already been developed with Sonda-3 and the launching base has complete control of its flight. The VLS will be a combination of rockets. The Sonda-4 project is in the stages of mockups and testing of propellants. The technology for its recovery has already been developed.

Rapid Development

The development of the space program and the creation of weapons technology for the FAB took place in the last 5 years. In the sector of weapons for aircraft, ammunition and guns such as cannon and machineguns were developed. All that equipment is manufactured nationally. Industrial production of aircraft automatic weapons has not yet begun because FAB orders to EMBRAER [Brazilian Aeronautics Company] are small and do not require mass production of those products.

The exporting of military aircraft has not yet begun either. It should begin in 1981 with the export of the T-27 beginning next year (construction of the second prototype of this aircraft was begun 5 weeks ago) by EMBRAER. Five of these aircraft, which are for military training purposes, will be built each month. Another export prospect in military aircraft will be the AMX in 1986 in cooperation with Italy (each country will develop that fighter aircraft independently).

However, Brazil already exports munitions and weapons in addition to aircraft firing sights.

National Rockets and Missiles

As byproducts of the space program, the country produces and exports the SBAT-37 and the SBAT-70 (SBAT means Brazilian Air-Ground System) for equipping combat aircraft. The SBAT-37 is a rocket produced industrially by AVIBRAS [Aerospace Industry, Inc.] and the Valparaiba Explosives Company for the domestic market and for export and it is used for training in the launching of rockets.

The SBAT-70 (The United States has the same rocket with the name of FFR-275) has special precision fuses produced in Brazil.

The newest item is the SBAT-127, a byproduct of Sonda-1, which has just been developed and should now begin to be used in firing tests from aircraft. The new Brazilian rocket can be used against sea or land targets (such as tanks).

Aerial bombs and their respective fuses were developed and can be used in low and high-speed aircraft. They are manufactured in Salto in the interior of Sao Paulo in the PIC factory. The fuses are produced in the DF Vasconcelos. Horas, also a national factory, is developing an inertial fuse used in the warheads of combat rockets.

"We are developing napalm and incendiary bombs of the type which can be exported," declared Lt Col Jose Marconi Santos. As for the Piranha missle, he explained that the development of its plans were concluded after 2 years of work.

The missile will weigh 90 kilograms and measure 2.6 meters in length. The plan has been advanced to the level of details, and tunnel tests have been made with small-scale mockups. The first launching should take place within 2 years. Missile guidance will be accomplished by heat sensors (infrared).

The Valparaiba Explosives Company is one of the companies which mass produces the technology developed by the IAE, manufacturing not only rockets but other types of weapons for export such as the rifle grenades (high explosive antitank type), to be used in the 762 rifle [presumably the 7.62mm rifle]. It can also be used against shelters and fortifications. It also produces an antipersonnel high explosive grenade, which can also be used against concrete and armor of up to two inches.

The Valparaiba produces the 3.5 rocket (high explosive antitank), which can be used against fortifications and possibly against "unprotected personnel," says the company's catalog, which has titles in English because of international sales. It also manufactures the M/3 handgrenade with a time delay fuze. The grenade weighs 340 grams. It can be used as a demolition charge and for the breaking and holing of steel plates.

There are also colored smoke grenades weighing 600 grams used for signalling, conventional tear gas grenades of two types, one weighing 600 grams and one weighing 115 grams, and there is the M-1 teargas canister.

GOVERNMENT ANTICIPATES REDUCTION IN 1981 FOOD IMPORTS

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 16 Nov 80 p 38

[Text] Brasilia (O GLOBO)--In 1981, the Ministry of Agriculture foresees that national production of beans, rice, corn and potatoes should be enough to meet domestic demand, eliminating the need to import, as was the case in previous years. Dependence on imports will also be reduced for garlic and fruits, but for other products, such as olive oil and spices (oregano, cumin, coriander, etc.), replacement of imports will depend on greater diversification of production in the country's more developed agricultural areas.

The most recent rice crops suffered the consequences of a discouraging government policy, with the price tables, as well as serious weather problems. Supply problems have begun to appear, necessitating imports.

Last year, when the problem was more severe, imports reached about 700,000 tons of hulled rice. This year, 250,000 tons in imports have been authorized to date, but they were dictated more by caution than necessity, according to Agriculture Ministry advisors.

The ministry believes there is enough rice in the country to meet domestic needs, but because of low prices the market has been very slow, as producers and middlemen hold back, waiting for a better price. The government imports and purchases are aimed only at insuring regulatory reserves.

The forecast for the next crop is between 7.7 million and 8.2 million tons, without taking into account the harvest in the north and northeast. If there are no critical weather problems and the forecasts are confirmed, domestic production could meet the country's needs.

Corn

Brazil was exporting corn before 1977, when domestic production presented occasional surpluses. The disincentive price policy and severe weather problems caused major declines in the last three harvests, however.

On the other hand, consumption rose rapidly because of the accelerated development of poultry and hog farming, which are now responsible for about 70 percent of the demand for corn. The harvest at the beginning of this year would have met Brazil's needs, but the almost total loss of production in the northeast forced the government to resort to imports to supply the region.

This year, to date, Brazil has imported 1.2 million tons of corn. According to Agriculture Ministry estimates, imports will not reach the 1.7 million-ton total authorized by the National Monetary Council. The prospects for next year are good, as forecasts indicate an 18-percent increase in production, which should reach over 22 million tons. With this production, it will not be necessary to import corn.

Wheat

Wheat also presents a special situation because of the subsidy granted by the government since 1972, which will amount to about 60 billion cruzeiros this year and could exceed 100 billion cruzeiros in 1981. The subsidy reduced the price of the product so much that consumption has been increasing at a rate of 8 percent per year since the subsidy was introduced.

Brazilian production has never been sufficient to handle this growth in consumption, and the discrepancy has widened in the last few years, with the continual crop losses resulting from weather problems (frosts) and disease. Although the area under cultivation has increased, production remains below 3 million tons. Today, imports cover 70 percent of domestic consumption.

Only the withdrawal of the subsidy could reverse this trend, but specialists of the ministry itself, who oppose the subsidy, admit that this must be done gradually. Withdrawal of the subsidy would divert much of the present demand for wheat to other important food products such as corn and rice. Hence, the withdrawal should be effected in accordance with production in these other crops.

The wheat subsidy affects domestic production of oats and rye, which is declining precipitously, dictating importation. Barley, the other grain similar to wheat, is not affected only because there is a special demand for it in the manufacture of beer. Great increases in rye production are occurring at this time.

Garlic and Potatoes

Brazil has always imported garlic; we are the world's second largest consumer (60,000 tons this year). Domestic production, which in recent years met only 30 percent of the demand, is reacting to the government incentives, and reductions of 20 percent per year in imports are foreseen.

Although white potatoes (except for seed potatoes) have not been imported for many years, the shortage in recent months led the government to authorize imports of 30,000 tons, a measure which has been criticized by Agriculture Ministry personnel. The decline in production of white potatoes is also a result of the lack of incentives for the producers, but the situation has already been altered for next year.

Fruit

Brazil's fruit imports are still high; of the 4.61 billion cruzeiros spent last year, apples alone were responsible for 2.59 billion cruzeiros. In addition to apples, we also import pears, grapes, fruits with stones (peaches, dates, plums and cherries) and dried fruits (of all kinds, including Christmas sweetmeats such as raisins, almonds, hazelnuts, chestnuts and walnuts).

The problem of apples has merited special attention from the Agriculture Ministry, which has already launched a special program to reduce dependency on imports of the fruit. Production of the stone fruits has also increased substantially in recent years. All fruit imports, however, are covered by exports of Brazilian fruits and fruit juices.

Rice Crop Will Equal Previous Harvest

Porto Alegre (O GLOBO)—The 1980/1981 rice crop in Rio Grande do Sul will virtually equal the previous harvest, reaching about 2.2 million tons, according to Arare Vargas Fortes, president of the Rio Grande Rice Institute (IRGA). The estimate, which is consistent with the figures of the regional office of the CFP (Production Finance Commission), provides for a seeded area of about 600,000 hectares.

The Rio Grande harvest is more significant in that it represents about 22.6 percent of total production in Brazil, estimated at 9.7 million tons this year. The crop is currently in the planting stage, and will be harvested earlier than usual, around the end of January or the beginning of February. The recent hard rains that fell throughout the state caused grave problems in certain regions, such as the border regions.

Optimistic

In that area, according to Fortes, "the producers were obliged to replant, but the damages were not great and will not affect overall production." According to IRGA statistics, Uruguaiana is now the major producer in the state, which is surprising, but the last crop presented even more surprising statistics. For instantce, they show Santo Antonio da Patrulha, on the northern coast, as the municipio with the greatest productivity.

According to the president of the IRGA, the Rio Grande harvest will not show any increase this year because "it is not very easy to increase production. Expansion is closely linked to the construction of new dams, and investments in this activity are currently suspended." He believes, however, that with "reasonable prices to the producer, production might be increased by as much as 3 percent." This is still an optimistic figure, and not even the "naturally optimistic CFP" believes it can happen.

Shortage?

Broaching the sensitive matter of the announcement of a possible rice shortage next year—and the resulting importation of the product—Fortes explained that this is because of the prices. "It happens," he said, "that rice prices have risen in percentages below the average for the other products, so the people have begun eating more rice, even substituting it for other products."

Nonetheless, he firmly believes that the government will not import rice next year. In his opinion, the government "should encourage domestic production instead, through various measures, but mainly with new irrigation projects." He noted the need for a national irrigation plan, which, he said, "the federal government has already been studying for some time."

Since the plan has not been forthcoming, Rio Grande officials decided to go ahead with a similar project, on a smaller scale and at the local level. Thus Rio Grande do Sul already has a pilot irrigation plan, which is being put in practice in Dom Pedrito, on the border, expanding the area of irrigated rice in the state by 57,000 hectares.

"This represents about 10 percent of the total area already under irrigation," Fortes said, and also noted that the Butui dam is already under construction between Sao Borja and Itaque, and will bring water to over 6,000 hectares of rice.

The national plan is not the only subject for complaint among the Rio Grande producers. There is an older and certainly larger complaint, affecting the entire country. "There is no well-defined broad policy for the sector," Fortes lamented. Although it is an old complaint, it seems to come up in all the primary sectors of activity. According to Fortas: "Until the government establishes such a policy, the country will always be on all fours when it comes to rice farming, at every stage, from seeding to marketing."

Soybeans and Wheat

Area Diminished; New Crops Occupy Space

Curitiba (O GLOBO)--The area being planted in soybeans now for the 1980/1981 Parana harvest is smaller than last year, with reduced estimates for total production, as well. The Agriculture Secretariat, which initially expected planting to equal that of last year, now estimates a 3-percent reduction in the area under cultivation, which should be about 2.35 million hectares, producing 5.25 million tons of soybeans.

"The farmers who have dropped soybeans are basically the small and medium proprietors in the east and southeast, who have opted to plant corn because of the good market prices. In the north, on the other hand, soybeans lost about 70,000 hectares to sugarcane, to supply the planned alcohol plants," explained Altair Araude, of the Agriculture Secretariat's Department of Rural Economy.

The secretariat has made no prediction as yet for next year's wheat crop, since it is a winter crop.

According to the secretariat's most recent data, about 1.35 million tons of wheat will be harvested this year, in a planted area of 1,456,000 hectares. There was a drop of 300,000 tons in the estimated production because of the September frosts.

Production estimates for next year will not be offered until the federal government divulges the guaranteed price and the Basic Cost Value and the producers' reactions can be ascertained. There is a possibility, however, of a reduction in the area planted in wheat, if the government really encourages cultivation of the winter oleaginous crops, such as rape or sunflower, to guarantee the program to substitute vegetable oils for 6 percent of the diesel oil in use.

Soybeans

For the first time since the introduction of soybean cultivation in Parana at the end of the 1960's, this year the area under cultivation will be reduced. The farmers are returning to traditional crops like corn and beans, currently favored with special incentives and good prices.

Although the international soybean market is favorable right now, because of the loss of over 14 million tons in the U.S. harvest, the minimum price offered by the federal government barely covers the average costs of soybean production in Parana, and this may have been a discouraging factor.

Rio Grande Do Sul

Porto Alegre (O GLOBO)--The rains in Rio Grande do Sul at the end of October held up soybean planting, mainly in the areas where wheat and soybeans are rotated. FIBGE [Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics Foundation] estimates indicate a planting area of 3,935,000 hectares, 224 percent [as published] smaller than the area planted for the previous Gaucho crop. According to the staff of the staff of the Rio Grande do Sul Secretariat of Agriculture, this decrease is explained by the "expansion of the area devoted to corn."

The forecast also indicates a drop of 1.2 percent in production. The 1980/1981 crop estimate is for 5,665,400 tons. Some 280,000 hectares had been planted by the end of October, or 7 percent of the area to be planted, since the excessive rainfall at the end of the month delayed the planting.

Damages

Now that the wheat harvest has begun, the real damages are beginning to appear from the frosts that devastated the state during the latter half of September. The wheat yield for Rio Grande do Sul was initially estimated at 1,055 kg/ha, according to the state's Secretariat of Agriculture figures. The yield is now estimated at 814 kg/ha, down 16.26 percent from the previous figure. In addition to the heavy rainfall in late October in the producing zones, another factor that might also affect productivity is the incidence of pests and diseases.

Current FIBGE estimates are for an area of 1,269,053 hectares, and production of 1,055,571 tons. The estimated area harvested to date is 10 percent, or 130,000 hectares, with a production of 105,000 tons.

Beans

Parana Surplus Alone Can Supply Rio State's Market

Londrina (O GLOBO)--Parana is responsible for 30 percent of the nation's bean crop. According to DERAL (Department of Rural Economics), an agency of the Secretariat of Agriculture, despite an (estimated) decline of 100,000 tons from the initial production forecasts, Parana expects to harvest about 550,000 tons of lowland beans alone. This represents an increase of almost 100,000 tons over the total production--both lowland and upland beans--in the previous harvest.

According to DERAL, in the 1980/1981 agricultural year, Parana should plant about 80,000 hectares of upland and lowland beans, as against 815 hectares planted for the previous crop [figures as published]. Some 782,000 hectares were planted in lowland beans--already being harvested in some areas--and should produce about 650,000 tons.

The September frosts caused total losses on about 60,000 hectares, however, dropping production to 550,-00 tons.

If the estimates of the cooperatives and the Agriculture Secretariat itself are confirmed, the Parana bean crop should be larger than those of the last 5 years. Parana should plant about 200,000 hectares in upland beans, with planting initiated in December. With this increase in area, the state will produce an estimated 120,000 tons of upland beans. Added to the lowland bean crop, this represents a total production of 670,000 tons. The last harvest in the state, for the combined crops, was 462,250 tons.

Regarding black beans, the specialists report that the lowland crop should produce about 250,000 tons, as against 190,000 tons harvested in both upland and lowland beans last year. Considering that the state consumes about 100,000 tons of black beans, next year Parana could guarantee the supply of black beans for the Rio market from the lowland harvest alone. Parana will have a surplus of 140,000 tons, and "Rio consumes a little over 100,000 tons of black beans per year." a DERAL technician explained.

Structure

The bean situation is different from those of other crops, because the production and supply structure is more complex. The importation of black beans (20,700 tons already delivered and 7,500 tons on order) is not significant, because it does not represent anything in Brazil's trade balance and has not been sufficient to cover the bean shortage.

On the other hand, the beans were destined solely to supply Rio de Janeiro, at a subsidized price (so the product's weight in the cost of living index was reduced), and this gave rise to lines, disturbances and even police intervention, focusing attention on the issue.

Beans were one of the major victims of the weather problems in the last 2 years, because they are highly susceptible to any change in the weather, but the lack of special incentives (necessary to a high-risk crop) was a contributing factor in the supply problems.

In addition to causing a price increase, the critical shortage of black beans in Rio de Janeiro led the government to adopt special support measures for the crop. The price of beans rose to the point that, whereas the minimum price guaranteed by the government is 1,800 cruzeiros per 60-kg sack, the first harvest of the current crop of lowland beans is selling for over 4,000 cruzeiros (for red beans) and over 7,000 cruzeiros (for black beans).

According to Agriculture Ministry estimates, the 1980/1981 lowland bean crop should produce between 1.31 million and 1.38 million tons (480,000 tons of black beans), an increase of 35 percent over the 1979/1980 harvest. Prospects are also good for upland beans, because of the good prices and the government plans. Total production (from the two crops) should reach over 2.7 million tons, making imports unnecessary.

EXPORT REVENUES ROSE 31.16 PERCENT AS OF SEPTEMBER

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 11 Nov 80 p 28

[Text] The favorable behavior of the prices of certain products such as sugar, coffee, iron ore and wood pulp for the manufacture of paper enabled Brazil to increase its export revenues by 31.16 percent (for a total of $14.4 billion) for the first 9 months of this year, compared to the same period in 1979, although the exported tonnage increased only 15.27 percent for an overall figure of 79.74 million tons.

Exports in the sugar category—demerara, crystal, refined and molasses—totaled $956,160,000 from January to September of this year, 279.1 percent higher than in the same period in 1979. If the Iranian-Iraqi war had not forced the suspension of sugar shipments, the revenues by the end of the year would have surpassed the prediction of $1.1 billion.

According to figures from the Foreign Trade Department of the Bank of Brazil (CACEX), the prices of crystal sugar increased 168.31 percent from one year to the other. Since the volume of 542,950 tons represented an increase of 490 percent, revenues increased from $18.76 million in 1979 to $296.92 million this year, a difference of 1,483 percent.

The prices of refined sugar increased 149.28 percent on the world market. In dollars, the difference amounted to 363.75 percent for a total of $259.3 million, also reflecting the 86 percent increase in tonnage shipped, 272,100 tons. The shipment of demerara sugar increased only 9.75 percent but the 120.68 percent increase in prices also permitted a 142.2 percent increase in revenues, for a total of $352.73 million.

Despite the constant variations, the average price for raw coffee bean increased 10.71 percent, going from $3,030 per ton in 1979 to $3,340 this year. Since Brazil shipped 44.6 percent more—582,220 tons—revenues, totaling $1.95 billion, increased 60.1 percent representing a 13.53 percent share of overall exports from January to September, enabling coffee to maintain its place as the principal product in the Brazilian balance of trade.

The second major item on the export schedule continued to be iron ore, with revenues of $1.13 billion, 29.41 percent higher than in 1979. The prices of iron ore increased 16.09 percent while the tonnage shipped increased 11.46 percent, reaching 58.09 million tons.

The sales of transportation equipment amounted to $1 billion during the first 9 months of this year, an increase of 34.44 percent compared to the revenues for the same period in 1979. On the other hand, exports of soy meal and cake did not exceed $989.24 million, a decrease of 1.08 percent, affected further by a 7.25 percent reduction in prices.

From January to September of this year, manufactured products provided revenues of $8.15 billion, representing 56.6 percent of the total and an increase of 33.32 percent compared to the same period in 1979. The exports of raw materials increased 28.96 percent, for a total of $6.11 billion, but the share of overall exports dropped to 42.45 percent.

Among the raw materials, the CACEX figures reveal that in addition to coffee, sugar and iron ore, the world prices of beef increased 18.62 percent; fryers, 25.22 percent; cashew nuts, 48.67 percent; tea, 6.61 percent; yerba mate, 130.87 percent; cornmeal, 11.11 percent; cotton meal and cake, 2.14 percent; wool, 10 percent; lobster, 2.71 percent; corn, 10.35 percent; manganese ore, 17.87 percent; frozen fish, 7.04 percent; and sisal, 24.19 percent.

Deficit

CACEX director Benedito Moreira revealed in Sao Paulo yesterday that the Brazilian balance of trade for October will show a deficit, though small. In October, exports should amount to more than $1.8 billion, and imports (the figures, for which are also being computed by the government) will not be much higher. Benedito Moreira said that he expects better results for the months of November and December. "Next year," he continued, "CACEX expects to achieve a trade balance equilibrium at the already announced figure of 26 billion cruzeiros."

GOVERNMENT ACKNOWLEDGES ERRORS, WILL MODIFY AGRICULTURAL POLICY

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 16 Nov 80 p 35

[Article by Roberto Hillas]

[Text] Brazil will enter 1981 with a new agricultural strategy, an acknowledgement by the government that the current one, which has been in effect for 5 years, is not leading to the anticipated results since thus far it has not been possible to normalize supply or increase production to consumption levels. It has been decided that the rules of the game will be changed.

As a first measure, the government is going to finance the utilization of 7 million hectares of flood plains, marshes and swamps in 11 states in the Center-South inasmuch as the high productivity of that type of soil has already been confirmed. The Center-West savanna will also be used in a 5-year "drive" for selfsufficiency in wheat. Rice will be given more incentives than the other food items because it has become evident that it is the tendency of the lower-income classes to use that product instead of wheat, which will lose its subsidy. The plan also includes corn, with which the government is planning to repeat the experience with soybean: converting Brazil into a large exporter.

Another modification pertains to greater incentives for agricultural investment without reduction of cost-defraying credits but with higher interest rates, close to market rates. That will not mean the end of subsidized and differentiated interests; that is, for fixed investment (warehouses, silos, irrigation), the interests will be lower than those for investments in machinery, tractors and the purchase of cattle.

The new strategy also intends to leave greater responsibility for the success of agriculture in the hands of private banks. With the interest closer to market rates, the government hopes that those banks will be more interested in the agricultural economy, also attracting domestic savings for investment in agricultural production.

Planting in the Savannas Will Be a Priority

Brasilia--The government has decided to change in 1981 the agricultural strategy that has been in effect for 5 years. It is going to finance the utilization of 7 million hectares of flood plains, marshes and swamps in 11 states in the Center-South. The priority is for the immediate utilization of the 2.5 million hectares in the area of highest population density in the country--Rio, Sao Paulo and Minas Gerais--where supply problems are more serious.

Under the still current program, the government spent huge sums of finance expenditures in traditional crop areas--260 billion cruzeiros in the 1980-81 harvest, not including coffee and sugarcane. Beginning next year, there will also be greater financing available for agricultural investment, especially in systematizing the flood plains.

Potential Exhausted

Agriculture Minister Amaury Stabile explains that cost-defraying credit will continue to receive the government's attention and the pledge to finance and to purchase everything that is harvested remains in effect. But beginning next year, there will be more money for investment credit, something that has not occurred during the past 5 years. The largest amount of agricultural investment funds will be aimed at systematizing the flood plains, which have to be prepared for irrigation and drainage before they are used for planting.

According to Amaury Stabile, the potential of the old agricultural strategy has been exhausted and needs to be reformulated and changed structurally. He admits that with the concentration of agricultural credit in defraying costs to the detriment of investment, it was not possible to eliminate the chronic problem of Brazilian agriculture--the low productivity per hectare, the always inadequate production, the most direct reflection of which in supply can be measured by the queues to buy black beans in Rio and the importation of those same beans and other foodstuffs, including rice.

In the minister's opinion, it is necessary to deconcentrate agricultural credit, permitting fixed and semifixed investments because the possibilities of increasing production within the present area occupied by agriculture, which totals 50 million hectares are almost exhausted. Investment credit is going to gain in importance because the new agricultural strategy seeks to achieve selfsufficiency in wheat, in the medium term, through planting 10 million hectares of savanna, where the wheat crop can be irrigated and the grain harvested mechanically.

The basic premise of the new strategy is expansion of the agricultural frontier but not too distant from the country's principal consuming centers, namely, Rio and Sao Paulo. The expansion of the agricultural frontier, with the incorporation of the flood plains near the large metropolises (in the state of Rio alone, there are 455,000 hectares of flood plain with very fertile soil) comes at the expense of the expansion of that same frontier in regions of Mato Grosso, Para and Rondonia, the distance of which increases the cost of agricultural products because of transportation, including that of the materials needed for planting.

Minister Amaury Stabile revealed that utilization of the savanna, mainly in Minas Gerais and Goias, is part of the basic premise of the new agricultural strategy because it is arable soil located relatively close to the large centers of consumption and exporting ports that lends itself to the cultivation of numerous basic foodstuffs and grains, which have a good world demand, as is the case with soybean. In addition, the savanna is an area that already has an adequate infrastructure to handle large-scale agriculture without the need for major investments for storage and distribution of the crops.

The new strategy is going to give priority incentives to crops of rice, corn and wheat, and oleaginous grains that will serve to produce the diesel oil substitute (peanuts, sunflower and rape), without neglecting beans, soybean, cassava, cotton and sugarcane. According to Minister Amaury Stabile, rice is a food item that is growing very rapidly in importance, taking the place left by wheat, which is no longer being subsidized. Rice has to be encouraged to increase production by a minimum of 30 percent by the next harvest because the consumption of that grain will tend to increase in the same proportion as the decrease in the consumption of foods produced with wheat flour.

Minister Amaury Stabile revealed also that the new agricultural strategy is not going to disregard the idle areas that still exist in the old agricultural area of the country. In that regard, he explained that the Rural Territorial Tax (ITR) is going to be used as a pressure device to discourage keeping agricultural areas permanently idle. Anyone who holds arable land that is not being put to economic use will have to pay the government for that privilege by being penalized with a much higher tax than that exacted from those who really use the land to produce.

The new strategy is also going to tend to increase productivity per hectare of the existing crops in the traditional agricultural area of the 11 states in the Center-South through the dissemination of modern growing techniques and the introduction of genetically new, more resistant seeds, which are thereby capable of providing an immediate increase of production as soon as they are used. Minister Amaury Stabile believes that with the increase of productivity in the traditional agricultural area together with the incorporation of the savannas and the flood plains in the cultivated area, the country's domestic supply will be normalized.

He recognizes that the inadequate increase of productivity of many agricultural products--which in some cases have even decreased over the years, as is the case of beans and cassava--is the principal cause of the unreliable supply of foodstuffs in the consumer market. The minister indicated that all possible emphasis will be given to the dissemination of new seeds so that the gain in productivity will be a minimum of 20 percent. All existing research centers in the country are being encouraged to produce new seeds and there already are varieties that assure the increase of productivity of some plants.

UNE HOLDS ELECTIONS, SEEKS DIALOG WITH MRC

New UNE President

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 16 Nov 80 p 30

[Text] Sao Paulo--The new president of the National Students Union (UNE), the Alagoan, Aldo Rebelo, of the Viracao slate, who as of yesterday evening was leading by 15,000 votes over the runner-up said that when his election is formalized he plans to seek out Minister Eduardo Portella to talk: "We want a dialog."

Aldo Rebelo said that this election, in which 40 percent of the Brazilian students participated (the total number of whom is estimated at 1 million) presented the Ministry of Education with a fait accomplit: "Whether it likes it or not, the UNE represents the students' interests."

Countrywide Charts

As of yesterday evening, 250,000 votes had been confirmed in Sao Paulo but the current president of the UNE, Rui Cesar Costa Silva proclaimed the victory of the Viracao slate and said that the official result will only be known during the week when the charts arrive from all over the country. The new directorate will be installed in Sao Paulo in 2 weeks.

Five slates contended in the election. The two main ones, Viracao, the winner, and Voz Ativa [Active Voice], are the result of a split within the current directorate. Rui Cesar supported Voz Ativa, headed by Sao Paulo sociology student Marcos Galvao. Aldo Rebelo, secretary general of the current directorate, and Marcelo Barbieri, vice president, formed their own slate, Viracao, together with dissidents from the Unidade [Unity] slate.

Mobilizacao Estudantil [Student Mobilization] was headed by Ricardo Melo with the support of Libelu. Unidade was headed by Rio medical student Amancio Paulino Carvalho. The Nosso Tempo [Our Time] slate, for the first time in the history of the UNE, was headed by a woman, Lidia Mata Machado, a medical student from the Federal University of Minas Gerais (UFMG).

Rio Follows the National Trend

In Rio, 40 percent [as published] of the voters (45,000 of the 140,000 university students) voted, giving victory to the Viracao slate with 16,230 votes. It was followed by Voz Ativa (14,308) and Unidade (12,001). Last year, 54,000 voters participated.

In Maranhao, the Nosso Tempo slate headed by Minas student Lidia Mata Machado obtained more votes (2,089) than the contending slates put together: Voz Ativa (824), Viracao (492), Unidade (116) and Mobilizacao (103). The four contenders put together obtained 1,535 votes. A total of 3,787 students voted from the Federal University of Maranhao and the Federation of Colleges of Maranhao. There were 13 polling places in the city and 51.2 percent of the students voted. The students conducted an intensive campaign for 3 weeks not only in the student area but also in the streets, bars, "republics" and at the doors of theaters and movies.

In Acre, the rector of the Federal University of Acre, Aulio Gelio Alves de Souza, who last year prohibited the holding of elections within the university changed his attitude, providing rooms and attending the voting; he congratulated the students for the "atmosphere of calm and order." He observed only that there were "some infiltrators." Of the 1,400 registered university students, only 609 showed up to vote, giving victory to Mobilizacao Estudantil (supported by Libelu), with 212 votes. It was followed by Viracao (176), Voz Ativa (171), Nosso Tempo (15) and in last place, Unidade (10).

In Alagoas, only 6,226 students voted of the more than 12,000 students registered in the Federal University, Advanced Studies Center of Maceio, State School of Medical Sciences (which cast 15 votes for the CCC) and the School of Philosophy and Teacher Education of Arapiraca and Penedo. There were many invalid and blank votes. The Viracao slate scored an overwhelming victory, receiving 5,755 votes compared to 34 for Unidade, 48 for Voz Ativa, 62 for Molibizacao and 105 for Nosso Tempo. The Viracao slate candidate, Aldo Rebelo, a student at the Federal University of Alagoas (UFAL), is 24 years old and was born in Vicosa, 95 kilometers from Maceio, in the Boa Sorte Ranch owned by Senator Teotonio Vilela of the Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMDB), for whom his father worked as a farm worker.

In Goias, the Viracao slate won by only 3 votes over its principal contender, Unidade: 3,380 votes against 3,377. They were followed by Voz Ativa (608), Mobilizacao (417) and Nosso Tempo (73). Student participation in the election was considered good, being held in the midst of the teachers strike. Some people had feared that the stoppage of school activities would dampen voting participation.

In Sergipe, the Voz Ativa slate won in an election in which the students of the Federal University of Sergipe and the Pius X College participated but not the Tiradentes College, the directorate of which decided "current concern revolves around other problems rather than the UNE." At the Pius X College, the director, Professor Sebastiao Santos, asked the students not to vote: "The UNE is illegal and we should not violate the law," he declared.

Voz Ativa obtained 2,008 votes followed, by Viracao (408), Unidade (207), Mobilizacao (87) and Nosso Tempo (21).

In Santa Catarina, with a turnout of only 25 percent of the 24,000 students in the state, the Unidade slate won with 2,979 votes, followed by Viracao (1,584), Voz Ativa (1,480), Mobilizacao (476) and Nosso Tempo (267). A total of 7,028 students voted. The president of the Santa Catarina Students Union, Adolfo Luis Dias, believes that the large abstention was due to the short time for mobilization and the lack of funds for the campaign.

In Natal, Rio Grande do Norte, with an abstention of 60 percent, the Voz Ativa slate won the election in the Federal University of Rio Grande do Norte, with a 400 vote margin over the runner-up, Viracao.

In Bahia, less than half of the university students participated in the election, giving victory of the Viracao slate. Lacking the votes of the University of Santa Cruz (Ilheus and Itabuna), Viracao had almost 6,000 votes against almost 5,500 for Voz Ativa.

In Para, with a massive turnout of voters, the Voz Ativa slate beat the Viracao slate by 1,707 votes.

In Espirito Santo, the result of the count is in contention. A first tally gave victory to Voz Ativa by 1 vote. In the recount, the Viracao slate came out ahead (1,400), followed by Voz Ativa (1,314), Nosso Tempo (1,259), Unidade (526) and Mobilizacao (265).

In Rio Grande do Sul, according to the estimate of the president of the State Students Union, David Fialkow Sobrinho, 30,000 university students participated out of a total of 110,000 university students in the state. As of noon yesterday, with 90 percent of the votes counted, the Voz Ativa slate was leading with 7,800 votes, followed by Viracao (6,600) and Nosso Tempo (5,940).

In Minas Gerais, with 80 percent of the vote counted, the Nosso Tempo slate (headed by the Minas student, Lidia Mata Machado) is leading with 17,403 votes, followed by Voz Ativa and Viracao. Fifty thousand students out of a total of 110,000 voted.

In Brasilia, only 35 percent voted of the 20,000 students registered in university courses. The latest results indicated that the Unidade slate was ahead. In Amazonas, the Viracao slate obtained 1,481 votes against 787 for Nosso Tempo, 457 for Unidade, 91 for Voz Ativa and 59 for Mobilizacao. Fifty-two percent of Amazonian students participated in the election. In Pernambuco, about 12,000 of the 25,000 voters voted for the Viracao slate. There are 60,000 registered students in the state.

In Parana, where 25,000 students voted, the Viracao slate won by a almost 4,000 votes over the runner-up, the Voz Ativa slate. Of the almost 15,000 votes counted yesterday, Viracao received 7,425, followed by Voz Ativa (3,611), Unidade (1,565), Mobilizacao (403) and Nosso Tempo (303).

Portella Comments

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 14 Nov 80 p 7

[Text] Salvador--Education Minister Eduardo Portella is not going to receive the new UNE directorate that is being elected, because as a member of the government he can only receive representatives of legal organs. But he admits that the youth need to have political participation.

In the opinion of Eduardo Portella, the demands of the teachers throughout the country are basically fair. "I identify with them," he said, pointing out that they are part of the overall context of the Brazilian economic problem and "as soon as we see our way more clearly in that area, there will be a progressive increase in the response to those demands."

Less Hysteria

The education minister decided to postpone the discussion of the question of paid education in the federal universities until the political debate is "more realistic and less hysterical." For the time being, the subject is not on the agenda because it is recognized "that conditions do not exist at the present time to increase the financial burden from the middle class on down.

"When I thought of a relatively paid, not a fully paid education, I was thinking of trying to correct the distortions that exist today, in which the son of a rich man completes the best 2d grade, the best entrance exam course, and picks his university. But that controversy proved to be so untimely and so misunderstood by the so-called progressive sectors that we had to postpone the matter."

He considers the plan for federalization of college-level education to be valid in theory:

"But concretely, it is not feasible because if today we have not been adequately able to take care of the federal universities, which represent only 25 percent of college-level education, imagine if we federalize all college-level education in the country. We would create an unrealistic and unfeasible situation. There is also no possibility of privatizing the federal universities."

PALESTINIAN ENTITIES DECIDE TO FORM FEDERATION

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 10 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] Porto Alegre (O GLOBO)—The Second Congress of Palestinian-Brazilian Entities, which includes more than 150 persons in this capital, among them seven ambassadors of Arab countries and the PLO representative in Brazil, Farid Sawan, ends its work today with the revelation of a document in which it establishes the creation of a federation which will bring together 21 Palestinian-Brazilian entities representing approximately 27,000 Palestinians living in the country.

The presence of the ambassadors of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Algeria, Morocco, Syria, Iraq and the Arab League States demonstrates the importance being attributed to the Palestinian question and, according to Farid Sawan, shows that the PLO "is the only representative of the Palestinian people who struggle against Zionism."

Several telegrams were sent to the congress, among which is one from the Workers Party (PT) members in the Federal Chamber. Yesterday, Deputy Jorge Uequed (PMBD-RS) [Brazilian Democratic Movement Party-Rio Grande do Sul] made an impassioned speech which drew from the audience, which consisted exclusively of Palestinians, great demonstrations of enthusiasm.

Office

The director of the Arab League States, Muhamad Adnan Pacdady [as published], said that a PLO office in Paris would be the best way to inform the Brazilian people about "the just cause of the Palestinian people and to fight the Zionist and racist propaganda against the Palestinians."

"Zionist propaganda," continued Pacdady, "is being practiced throughout the world and seeks to show the Palestinians as terrorists. It is very important that the 21 Palestinian-Brazilian entitites show through their unity that the Palestinian people are a group with culture and traditions."

In turn, the representative of the PLO in Brazil, Farid Sawan, said he hopes President Figueiredo "Will put into practice his realistic policy with respect to the Palestinian people and will give official approval to the organization's office in Brazil before an office is given approval in the United States." The PLO has offices representing it in 74 countries.

Sawan said: "On 15 May 1978, Brazil recognized the PLO and promised the office would be legalized. Later, the government said that the office would be legalized at an opportune time. However, up to now the government has not begun a dialog with the PLO and the reasons for that silence are only known to the government."

CUBAN REFUGEES NOW IN PERU WILL BE ALLOWED ENTRY

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 16 Nov 80 p 9

[Text] Brasilia (O GLOBO)--Itamaraty spokesman Bernardo Pericas reported yesterday that Brazil will receive 35 Cuban refugees who are now in Peru, with the only condition that they express their willingness to live in the country. Pericas, however, said that the date of arrival has not been set yet because it depends basically on the preparation of the papers of the refugees with the Peruvian Government, preparation which will be accomplished by the Brazilian embassy in Lima.

The agreement with Peru so that Brazil may receive the Cubans was negotiated by the Brazilian ambassador in that country, Manuel Guillon,as soon as he received authorization from Brasilia 15 days ago. The Peruvian ambassador in Brazil, Manuel Roca Zela, said yesterday that the decision had been expected because the Brazilian Government expressed the intention of receiving some refugees.

The majority of the Cubans who arrived in Lima expressed the preference of going to live in the United States, but they bewailed the fact that they could not realize their dream. Some managed to board aircraft with airline tickets issued to other persons but the Peruvian authorities prevent a Braniff airliner from taking off with a large group of Cubans who attempted to go to Miami with illegal documents. At this time only 500 Cubans remain in asylum in Lima. They are being kept in an improvised camp in a soccer field.

TRADE WITH AFRICA EXPECTED TO REACH $2 BILLION IN 1980

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 13 Nov 80 p 31

[Text] Trade transactions between Brazil and Africa this year will be in the order of $2 billion, with the balance inclining toward the African side, mainly because of Brazilian purchases of oil from countries such as Gabon. Last year, for example, the value of Brazilian exports to Gabon were only $2,600 against imports amounting to $110.1 million. According to experts of the Foreign Trade Study Center Foundation, these figures, revealed in Sao Paulo yesterday during the First Brazil-Africa Symposium, showed the need "to lend an impetus to the Brazilian presence in the new African markets."

One of the recent indications in that regard, they explained, was the invitation made by the Brazilian Government to 72 representatives of the governments and of largest public and private importing firms of 16 Central African countries to participate in Brazil Export-80, which begins Friday in Anhembi Park. Those invited (the majority of whom are already in Sao Paulo) expressed an interest in purchasing domestic appliances, textiles, food, iron and steel products, industrial machinery and equipment, services and toys. They come from Angola, Cape Verde, Ivory Coast, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Guinea, Mozambique, Nigeria, Kenya, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Tanzania, Togo, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Last year, Brazil sold the equivalent of $650 million to Africa, $300 million of it to the Central African market, where Nigeria, Angola and Mozambique absorb 85 percent of the total exported. Thus, the need indicated by the experts "to redirect Brazilian exports to that region." They said that the Central African market is of particular interest to Brazil because of factors such as the simplicity of consumer habits, which implies a reasonable potential market for technically unsophisticated Brazilian manufactured products. In addition to that, they pointed out that Brazil is practically free of protectionist or restrictive measures in that market and that Portuguese is the official language of three of the countries in that region (Angola, Mozambique and Guinea-Bissau).

EMPLOYMENT STATISTICS IN 10 MAJOR CITIES REVEALED

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 16 Nov 80 p 40

[Text] Brasilia (O GLOBO)--The January to July employment rate this year had an accelerated growth in Porto Alegre (3.98 percent), Belo Horizonte (4.54 percent), and Salvador (5.50 percent), with a moderate increase in Curitiba (1.14 percent), Brasilia (1.50 percent) and Recife (1.60 percent), but practically stagnant in Rio (.80 percent), Sao Paulo (.26 percent) and Fortaleza (.83 percent). There was a decline in Belem, where employment fell off 4.5 percent.

These figures were revealed by the National Employment Service (SINE) of the Ministry of Labor, which examined the employment situation in the sectors of industry, civil construction, business and services in 10 metropolitan regions in the first 7 months of the year.

Turnover

The survey indicates that the average rate of turnover in manpower in the first 7 months of the year varies from 3.5 percent in Sao Paulo to 5.55 percent in Belem. In another seven metropolitan regions, that average was above four percent and less than three percent in Rio, Sao Paulo and Belo Horizonte. The rate showed a declining rate in eight regions: Sao Paulo, Rio, Recife, Curitiba, Salvador, Brasilia and Porto Alegre.

Coordinated with the Economic Research Institute Foundation of Sao Paulo (FIPE), the survey of the Ministry of Labor indicates that the development of total employment in Rio during the period "was practically cancelled by the decline of July," when there was a .71 percent downturn.

From January to July, employment in the business sector increased by 1.25 percent but suffered a decline in July, which according to economists, "shows a situation of instability in the creation of employment in that subsector."

In services, employment increased .84 percent in July, thus exceeding the increase accumulated from January to July, which was .41 percent.

RESORTING TO IMF--Brasilia--"It is not good to be in favor of resorting to the International Monetary Fund (IMF)." This statement was made by President Joao Baptista de Figueiredo to Jorge Gerdau Johannpeter, president of the Brazilian Iron and Steel Institute [IBS], in the presence of Finance Minister Ernane Galveas and Central Bank President Carlos Langoni, at the dinner given by the IBS for the president of the republic in Brasilia, on Tuesday. President Figueiredo did not directly answer the question regarding the need for Brazil to resort to the IMF in 1981 to even up the balance of payments. He decided rather to question the IBS president on whether he was "for or against going to the IMF." Gerdau answered that he was "neither for nor against, much on the contrary." But on saying goodbye, President Figueiredo said that "everything will be all right." [Excerpt] [PY051409 Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 4 Dec 80 p 20]

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION RECEIVES PEREZ ESQUIVEL

Santiago LA TERCERA DE LA HORA in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 32

[Text] The Chilean Human Rights Commission headed by attorney Jaime Castillo last night received Nobel Peace Prize winner Adolfo Perez Esquivel.

The meeting, which was held at the organization's headquarters at Alameda 1584, was also attended by members of the National Commission for Juvenile Rights, and delegations from "Relatives of Missing Prisoners," "Committee for the Return of Exiles," "Organization of Relatives of Political Prisoners," "Organization of Relatives of Executed Prisoners," and the "Department of Health of the Commission on Women's Rights."

At the beginning of the meeting there was a brief review of Esquivel's work, defining him as a leader of "active nonviolence."

Later Jaime Castillo, referring to the personality of the present Nobel prize winner, said that the prize was given to "a person who has personally faced the problem of human rights, and who also is constantly concerned with the problems of peace."

The president of the Chilean Commission on Human Rights urged the Argentine visitor "to continue your work to the fullest, in Latin America, supporting actions to make the people's basic rights respected everywhere."

Guillermo Yunge, delegate from the National Committee for Juvenile Rights, gave the Nobel Peace Prize winner a copy of the Universal Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Youth, which the organization will soon send to the headquarters of the United Nations.

Esquivel began his speech by saying that the Chilean people "are always with us and will continue to accompany us, since your problems touch us very closely because we are brother peoples struggling to develop the great Latin American family."

He added that the Peace and Justice Movement, of which he is general coordinator for the continent, "is fighting for the dignity of the human person in all dimensions," and "we must seek the causes of present injustice."

"We must demand," he added, "restitution of justice on the continent to produce a lasting peace to live and defend it."

MINING OF POLYMETALLIC NODULES DISCUSSED

Santiago HOY in Spanish 29 Oct-4 Nov 80 pp 31-32

[Article by Hugo Traslavina: "The Diving-Suit Miners"]

[Excerpts] If nothing unfortunate happens within the next 2 years, mankind may witness the birth of the largest body of laws since the Justinian Code was formulated 1400 years ago: the Universal Treaty on the Law of the Sea. Among other matters, this treaty will contain international regulations concerning exploitation of "suboceanic polymetallic nodules," better known as marine nodules.

Technological Race

The developed nations, with a pressing need for a sure supply of raw materials, first took an interest in exploiting the nodules. The United States, Europe and Japan are dependent on the four minerals the nodules contain: cobalt, nickel, copper and manganese. These are vital elements for their heavy industry, aerospace industry, weapons industry and other finished goods.

The developing countries are the terrestrial producers of these minerals and they want to maintain the demand level. They know they are incapable of exploiting the nodules by themselves because they lack technology and financing.

But Chile feels optimistic. According to a Chilean Copper Commission report, "The prospects for speedy technological development and a resulting sharp drop in the costs is much better in undersea mining than in land operations, because in one case it is a matter of new technology, and in the other it is basically developed to the maximum."

This optimism led Mines Minister Rear Admiral Carlos Quinones to accelerate bidding on the rich deposits of nodules found a short distance south of the Juan Fernandez archipelago. He also announced the intention of forming mixed companies with the transnational firms that possess the technology and capital necessary to begin exploitation around 1985.

Size of the Nodules

Explorations to date indicate that the largest deposits are located in the Pacific Ocean, but there are also exploitable sites in the other oceans. It is estimated that nearly 14 percent of Chilean maritime territory could be worked for nodules.

It is calculated that mineral reserves in nodules are twice the present reserves on land. It is believed that there are 3 billion potentially recoverable tons of copper alone.

A typical nodule is shaped like a potato and is porous. To produce copper, nickel and cobalt on more or less profitable terms, about 3 millions tons of dry nodules a year would have to be extracted, after an investment of about $600 million. If one elects to extract manganese, these figures drop considerably.

The exploitation system under study basically consists of a mining ship that collects and raises the nodules from the seabed. Once on the surface, the material is taken to treatment plants on the coast.

Engineer Carlos Molina, head of extractive metallurgy of Intec-Chile, believes that "The technological problems have already mostly been solved, and international legal-political problems remain to be solved." He adds, "Mathematical models developed to evaluate economical exploitation of marine nodules give intrinsic rates of return that are 15 percent greater with similar or small investments than those required for land mining.".

Molina maintains that exploitation of the nodules "will fundamentally affect the countries that produce nickel and cobalt, and will secondarily affect the copper producers," so that Chile does not feel threatened and is cooperating as much as possible to begin equitable exploitation of these resources.

BRIEFS

COOPER PRODUCTION IN 1990--"Our goal is to enter the year 1990 with an annual production of 2 million tons of copper," said the executive vice president of the Chilean Copper Commission, Carabinero General Ruben Schindler, during sessions on the "Engineers' Role in the Development of the Mining Industry." Speaking during a roundtable which also included the technical director of the Chilean Copper Commission, Guillermo Uguarte, the adviser of the National Mining Association, Jorge Mantero-la, with Rolf Benhke as moderator, the carabinero general discussed "Foreign and National Investments" in copper mining. He stressed that although we are basically a mining country, there has never been a mining policy consistent with the benefits that activity has brought in Chile. He continued by saying that, on the initiative of the Mines Ministry, creation of a "Committee on Mining Policies" is being considered. Representatives of all the activities related to the industry will take part. The first task of that organization will be the formulation of an overall policy for that activity. The executive vice president of the Chilean Copper Commission stated that our country has copper reserves to last about 135 years at the present rate of production. He added, "The sale of copper will be a profitable business for some 50 years. Our goal for the year 2000 is the production of 2.5 million tons of copper per year, so we exepct to produce about 2 million tons a year by 1990," he explained. Later, the technical director of the organization, Guillermo Uguarte, indicated that the investment situation in the mining industry is comparable only to that at the time of the creation of the large copper mines such as Chuquicamata and El Salvador. U.S. ELECTION RESULTS, POLICY CHANGES NOTED

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 16 Nov 80 pp 16-18

[Article by Juana Carrasco: "Victory for Reagan or Defeat for Carter?"]

[Text] The New Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary was not wrong when it issued 50,000 copies of the dictionary in July of this year and listed Ronald Reagan as the 40th president of the United States. The election results of 4 November have confirmed this premonition.

A Hollywood-like frenzy possessed the Republicans at the party headquarters in the luxurious Continental Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles on the night of 4 November after learning at 2153 hours of the brief speech given at the Sheraton Hotel in Washington by the Democratic opponent, Jimmy Carter, acknowledging his electoral defeat.

The happy and noisy atmosphere continued. The Oval Office of the White House would be occupied by a man from the party of the elephant who will begin a 4-year term as president of the United States next 20 January. He will be accompanied for the first time in 26 years by a Senate with a Republican majority.

The figures showed that Reagan simply "swept away" his opponents; he received 43,201,220 popular votes (51 percent of those cast) which gave him 489 electoral or delegate votes in 44 out of the 50 states in the union. President Jimmy Carter won 34,913,332 popular votes (41 percent) but only 49 delegate votes from six states and the District of Columbia. Independent John Anderson had 5,581,379 votes (7 percent) with no electoral votes.

Carter became what in U.S. political jargon is called a "lame duck" president—that is, an incumbent president who does not win reelection.

Nevertheless, the essential characteristic of this election has been very noticeable in the last four U.S. elections: the new president has been elected by a minority of the citizens of the country since only 52.9 percent of the electorate voted, the lowest participation in 32 years.

Abstention is a phenomenon that is widespread in the United States, incrusted in the elections. It evidently symbolizes the discontent and lack of confidence in the leaders of the nation, whether Democrat or Republican.

A certain psychological factor that has obvious significance in U.S. politics plays an important role in this. In the last two decades, the ordinary American, the so-called man in the street, has gotten tired of political scandals, sensational revelations, his nation's loss of international prestige and unfulfilled economic promises. That is the cause for the growing apathy about electing the person who will hold the reins of the country in his hands.

Unquestionably, this sector which does not express itself with votes has clamored for some 20 years for other options which the traditional bipartisan system denies it.

A third party with new prospects has still not emerged on the U.S. political scene and the choice remains between stale Republicans and Democrats. One U.S. citizen who watched the elections in his country while drinking scotch in Harry's Bar in Paris stated pragmatically: "In the United States, the difference between Republicans and Democrats is infinitesimal." He added: "When the Americans get tired of always seeing the same ones, they decide to change to the other which is exactly the same."

This simple explanation revealed the feeling that produced the change in party at the White House. In the extensive electoral campaign that cost more than $250 million in propaganda for one or the other candidate, the analysts agree that it was actually a self-inflicted defeat of Carter.

Let us look at this more in detail. Since 1934, the American Institute of Public Opinion under the direction of J. Gallup has asked its responders the same question each year: What is the most important problem in the United States this year? Naturally, from 1934 to 1938 the response was always the problem of unemployment. For the next 34 years, foreign policy and military problems took priority; these were the years of World War II, the "Cold War," the Korean aggression and the Vietnam War. Starting in 1973, the answer was mainly domestic problems. The economy again reflected the social discontent of broad masses and this inevitably has repercussions on the political processes of the country.

In his 1976 electoral campaign, Carter exploited the U.S. economic situation which had just gone through one of its worse cyclical recessions and he won. In 1980, this same campaign was used by his Republican opponent and he also won.

During the last 4 years, in the eyes of the people the person responsible for unfulfilled promises, galloping inflation, growing unemployment, the recession and the energy crisis--in other words, the economic ruin--has been the president. This created an anti-Carter image which the Republican Party knew how to exploit to the maximum in its political campaign. It also used constant propaganda on lack of leadership and alleged weakness in foreign policy which exacerbated nationalism and encouraged conservative ideas of world predominance, a search for lost supremacy.

The rejection of Carter is basically a rejection of his economic policy which definitely defeated him. In a poll taken of voters, the NEW YORK TIMES found that two-thirds of them cited economic problems--unemployment, inflation, taxes--as the decisive reason for their vote.

Reagan's television campaign fulfilled its duty. The Republican opponent constantly reminded the people that there were 8 million unemployed in the country, that since Carter's arrival to the White House consumer prices had risen 42.3 percent and that annual inflation rose from 4.8 percent to 12.7 percent. The final motto of his messages gave results: "Vote for a change. Vote Republican."

In a people clearly dominated by a culture of supremacy and power, the exacerbated nationalistic feelings also had an effect. This was seen more clearly in the results of the other elections--the fights for the Senate and the House of Representatives.

After the elections on Tuesday, 4 November, the House of Representatives felt a Republican surge that could improve even more in the congressional elections that will be held in 2 years. Now the situation in the House of Representatives is as follows: the Democrats continue in the majority with 243 seats but suffered a loss of 30. The Republicans have 191 seats compared to 159 before and there is still one independent.

The "sweep" occurred in the Senate after 26 consecutive years of Democratic majority. A total of 52 seats (41 before) are in Republican hands, 47 (58 before) in Democrat hands and one independent. This represents more than a simple change of majority if we keep in mind one essential thing: the majority party chairs the Senate committees.

For example, the powerful Foreign Relations Committee passes to ultraconservative Jesse Helms (North Carolina) who is known for his anti-Soviet position. He replaces Frank Church, a liberal Democrat who was defeated in the election.

Edward Kennedy will be replaced as the chairman of the Justice Committee by Strom Thurmond (Georgia), a conservative who has voted against civil rights legislation for blacks. Robert Dole (Kansas) replaces veteran senator Russell Long (Louisiana) in the Finance Committee and, of course, the new majority leader in January will be Republican Howard Baker.

It is interesting to note that all the Democrats who lost in the senatorial elections belong to the liberal wing of their party: George McGovern, Frank Church and Birch Bayh (chairman of the Tax Committee). Only one Republican--Jacob Javits from New York--lost and he lost to a more conservative Republican.

In summary, the conservative trend was one of the main characteristics of this election.

Although we have given some reasons for Carter's defeat, we believe it is also interesting to indicate certain actions and statements that have greeted Ronald Reagan's victory.

Dictatorial regimes throughout the world hurried to present congratulations. A statement by Pieter W. Botha, prime minister of South Africa, serves as an example of this reactionary way of thinking: "As president of the United States, Reagan now is also the leader of the West whose freedom must be protected from the slavery of communism."

David Rockefeller, the American multimillionaire president of Chase Manhattan Bank, told the press in Peru of his satisfaction in the triumph of the Republican candidate. He stated that Reagan will cut down government expenditures and will strongly support the private sector. The large monopolies agree with this. Since these statements by the founder of the Trilateral Commission which carried Carter to power in 1976 could be considered a personal reaction, let us look at the reaction in stock markets throughout the world.

Wall Street, London, Paris, Tokyo, Zurich and Frankfort stock exchanges recorded unprecedented rises as a result of Ronald Reagan's victory, clearly showing what interests the president-elect of the United States represents. The large corporations involved in arms production did well in the stock exchanges; a wave of buying their shares predominated on 5 November. Meanwhile, concern spread among the producers of raw materials who feel threatened by Reagan's declared sympathy for the free play of market forces and the rejection of international agreements that maintain price stability.

However, according to an old saying, it is one thing to say it and another to do it. Robert Byrd, head of the Democratic majority in the Senate, expressed his doubt that the Republican Party can behave in the ultraconservative manner demonstrated in its electoral campaign. His statement was convincing: "The winners moderate their positions when the mantle of power falls on their shoulders."

Now we have to wait and see if the veteran Democratic politician is right or not. Reagan did not lose any time and has already met at his Pacific Palisades ranch near Los Angeles to form his "brain trust" for domestic, foreign and military policy in order to prepare for the transition of presidential powers. Richard Allen, who was excluded from the campaign a few days before the election when he was accused by the WALL STREET JOURNAL of wielding influence during Nixon's administration to obtain personal business, now presides over the foreign policy and military committee.

There are other well-known names among the 120 experts who will make recommendations to him: former president Gerald Ford; former secretary of state Henry Kissinger; General Alexander Haig, former chief of NATO forces; Democrat Henry Jackson, the representative of the military-industrial complex in the Senate; and George Shultz, a former member of Nixon's cabinet.

The next Republican cabinet will be revealed in December. We will have to wait until 1981 to really learn the future U.S. domestic policy and view of the complex and problematic outside world. The words spoken during the campaign hint at war; we will see what the actions bring.

REASONS FOR MANLEY'S ELECTION DEFEAT DISCUSSED

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 16 Nov 80 pp 14-15

[Article by Roberto Morejon: "Respect for Joshua"]

[Text] Although buried by the avalanche of news on the Carter-Reagan fight, the results of the recent election in Jamaica are still a topic of analysis for the people in the hemisphere.

On this small island bathed by the waters of the Caribbean, two different opinions on how to face the economic and social calvary that affects the nations of the so-called Third World in these critical times were voted on. Of course, these opinions are supported by opposing political ideas.

On one side, Michael Manley, the prominent prime minister (since 1972) defended points of view that, translated to practice, meant: state control of key sectors like monopolistic activities, especially bauxite; the promulgation of popular measures favoring lower-income families; free education; etc.

Edward Seaga, leader of the opposition based in the PLJ [Jamaican Labor Party], favors closer ties with the United States, a return to the unfair conditions of the International Monetary Fund, an open-door policy for investment and domestic measures which benefit the private sector without considering the harm to the working class and the peasantry.

The capitalist press media which always use adjectives call Seaga pro-North American or, at least, conservative. They do not even mention the word "moderate."

Recently he told NEWSWEEK of his interest in attracting governments with ideas similar to his and others with concepts that are not similar. Then, "we could develop ourselves and become a very important bloc....We need to reconstruct the Caribbean and Jamaica could be the leader."

While Manley extolled all the just causes in the meetings of the nonalined nations and supported the national liberation movements in their fight against colonialism and imperialism, Seaga pleaded to "speak softly in foreign policy."

The first thing noticed in the election results other than some vote irregularities denounced by the PNP [People's National Party] (Manley) is the high percentage won by Seaga in spite of the undeniable popularity of the prominent prime minister.

Several factors influenced this. The first was the violence in 1980 (more than 600 deaths) unleashed by members of the PLJ who were even supplied weapons from abroad as was denounced.

Days before the election, security forces seized war supplies being sent to the opposition which was involved in the increase in subversive acts. The climax was the assassination of deputy Roy McGann, vice minister for national security, by members of these armed bodies. Last June a military and civilian coup d'etat was aborted.

The plot was clear: to sow terror during Manley's administration in order to intimidate the voters. They would vote for the PLJ because if the same government continued, "violence might continue."

If this did not work, the more sinister forces made three attempts on the prime minister who bravely decided to tour almost the entire country and talk to his people before the election.

In this tense environment, the polls began to predict electoral results. Many of them gave the advantage to the PNP with the warning that rightist violence and abstention could change the predictions.

Certainly another aspect to be considered in the defeat of the PNP is the imbalance in the placement of districts and the number of voters, especially in the cities where the party has more strength.

In spite of all that, the economic crisis on the island was the backbone of the PLJ campaign. It distorted the real causes and gave Manley all the blame for the serious deterioration.

As sources of the PNP indicated, any government would have suffered these blows: increased oil prices; decreased exports of sugar, rum, coffee, banana, molasses, copra, etc.; increased costs of machinery and manufactured articles; and, of course, sabotage by sectors of the bourgeoisie and tradesmen who paralyzed investments, worked at half capacity and exported their foreign currency to "safe" places.

With 30-percent inflation, 30-percent unemployment and a debt estimated by the EFE news agency at some 500 million pesos, it was easy for the DAILY GLEANER (mouthpiece for the PLJ) to stir up hatred and blame those who tried to help the impoverished classes survive.

The opposition never mentioned the refusal of U.S. banks to advance credit to the country. It ignored the fact that economic plundering is also increasing in other parts of the Caribbean and the Third World, almost always for the same reasons as in Jamaica. In the Antilles, only Trinidad-Tobago with its oil resources seems to be temporarily unharmed by the recession.

As to international reaction to the election results, the joy felt in certain parts of the United States, very possibly in Ronald Reagan's ranks, is obvious.

After a stormy 1979, year of the liberation of Nicaragua and Grenada and the popular governments in Surinam, Santa Lucia and Dominica, pressure from the White House was felt throughout the Caribbean. It was quiet work without the stridence of other occasions.

Whether related or not to this, the truth is that a change occurred in 1980. While the revolutionary governments of Managua and Saint Georges consolidated their victories, a woman named Eugenia Charles assumed the leadership in Dominica after defining herself as an anticommunist and defender of free enterprise.

In Surinam, a coup d'etat by officer Deisy Bouterse seemed to block the nationalist process initiated there after the famous sergeants movement. Carter once said that Surinam, along with Grenada and Nicaragua, is "a harsh blow for democracy."

Considered a safe backyard, the Caribbean was soon viewed by Washington as an unstable zone. From Caracas, Christian Democracy began to pull strings, perhaps concerned by the same signs. It should be recalled that in Central America, El Salvador and Guatemala could go either way. In a hegemonistic policy, it is necessary to play with balances and compensations "just in case."

Returning to Jamaica, the election results again bring up the difficulty of maintaining sovereignty and distance from the centers of imperialist power within the so-called traditional democratic society. The existence of traditional armies with reactionary elements at their heart and opposing leaders capable of being involved in destabilizing adventures almost always leads to a combination of different factors in the search to smother nationalism.

In Kingston some of Edward Seaga's statements after his victory have a much more definite tone if we compare them to his earlier statements.

His evaluations about the need to quickly end the economic crisis--acquiring oil at reasonable prices and loans for $155 million--taken as the focus of his next administration were well received by some press media.

If prudence, reflection and the desire for peaceful coexistence, internally as well as externally, are the main features of the PLJ policy, this would be an important step in regional efforts to emerge from the present difficult situation.

For Michael Manley--or Joshua, as some of his people called him--respect for the social and political work that made him popular not only in Jamaica but also in the Third World must be expressed.

PAPER URGES FRANKNESS IN LOCAL ASSEMBLIES

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 27 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Ada Mendez]

[Text] The speeches began with a heated subject. Voter Agustina Vichy took the microphone resolutely and said boldly: "The clerk in my butcher shop does not follow the order of the waiting line and does not treat the people well; furthermore, he sometimes drinks alcoholic beverages, and what he does with the meat is not clear. Sometimes he has said there is none, and people have been seen coming out of the shop with packages. There have already been complaints about him, and there is never any explanation of how they have been handled."

Assembly Night

These two blocks, which include the members of Rigoberto Martinez Oliva CDR's [Committees for the Defense of the Revolution] 10 and 11, district 34 in Central Havana, always hold their accountability assemblies together. The population density, which includes 2,087 voters, does not permit separate meetings.

The level of participation on the night of this recent assembly was a surprise for this reporter. Really, these people had not previously demonstrated much fighting spirit, but there is no doubt that when a delegate does his duty, when the results of his work can be seen, the people are imbued with a new determination.

However, one must fight a certain amount of apathy which still persists in the aforementioned blocks. Central Havana, as a heavily populated municipality in the country's capital city, has many problems to solve, and what is most important, they are things which are within our reach if we give effort, enthusiasm and support to the work of the people's government.

We know that there are other problems which are beyond the control of the voting masses, and temporarily even out of the hands of the delegates, but why be silent? Why refrain from asking any question at all, if it is precisely the representative we have elected who has the answer we need, and if the assembly is the suitable time to speak?

"It is because there are problems that have been brought up many times, and we have seen no results," commented an elderly woman.

"Certainly, but there are others which have been solved to the benefit of the community," another answered her. "Let's see. Didn't you yourself just tell me the other day that the leaks in the big building you live in, which were bothering a lot of people, have been fixed?"

"Well, yes, that was fixed; that is true. And in addition, we had that situation for years. But now that I think about it, you are right; sometimes we ask too much...."

Duty of the Voter

It is not that they are asking too much. Besides, it is the duty of every voter to bring up the problems, because this is how they are solved. Nobody must allow himself to be dragged down by frustration or by conformism if a request is delayed. It is an obligation to bring it up as often as necessary.

The report for the period analyzed in this meeting is an example of what we have been saying: According to Nelson Negrin Santos, delegate from district 34, thanks to the joint participation of the people in state affairs the executive committee for this municipality has achieved the repair of several schools, the cleanup of areas contaminated by sewer overflow, the expansion of polyclinic installations in the area; the beginning of construction of small dentistry offices in some primary schools and the extension to 2300 hours of the schedule for treating the public in the Sainz Casado dental clinic.

The renovation of butcher shops, increased service in several restaurants in the area, the transfer of disabled personnel from one establishment, repair of leaks in several apartment houses, as well as plumbing and other work, are the result of a joint delegate-voter effort.

What Is Lacking

There are still things pending, we know, and some of them have been brought up again and again, but their solution is not easy. Boys and girls playing baseball in the streets is an ever-present problem which causes the people some concern, the lack of gas service on weekends, streetcleaning, inadequate distribution of industrial products, cracks, leaks--lots of things. But we must continue to approach the problems and not to tire of the long waiting periods and to assist and cooperate with those who have a solution--as, for example, working in the repair of houses, looking after sanitation and decoration and other things--but above all and most important, we must speak out clearly about these things in the accountability assemblies.

Don't Be Silent

Our idea was inconclusive, because that was our impression until the meeting ended. Oneida, of the zone executive committee of the CDR's, was clear and concise about one thing we must all fight against?

"Do you know why nobody supported Agustina's complaint?" she said. "Because they are afraid of the butcher. Furthermore, I am sure that someone will go to him tomorrow and tell him, "So-and-so spoke ill of you last evening."

If her complaints are valid, the butcher must be replaced for the good of all, or else his error must be explained to him frankly and democratically, as she proceeded to do.

But never be silent, because when two sides to a question contradict each other, one of them is right.

We must all fight ambiguity, because the solution to the problems brought up depends on the clarity with which they are presented. This is precisely why our real power, the people's government, exists. Let us exercise it!

PEREZ HERRERO NOTES IMPORTANCE OF 'JUVENTUD REBELDE'

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 22 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Speech delivered by Antonio Perez Herrero, member of the Secretariat of the party Central Committee, closing the main ceremony celebrating the 15th anniversary of the newspaper JUVENTUD REBELDE, held in the Luis A. Turcios Lima room at the Ministry of Communications on 21 October 1980.

Comrades:

The 15th anniversary of JUVENTUD REBELDE is an occasion for justified joy for this collective, for the Union of Young Communists, for Cuban youth and for all the people. I can still hear the words with which, on 21 October 1965, our commander in chief announced the birth of this daily, whose name arose in a memorable dialog between Fidel and the masses of young people. Since then, this newspaper has performed its daily labor, acquiring experience and working faithfully, earning the affection of its readers.

Born out of the revolutionary process, which created optimal conditions for the development of young people's organizations, JUVENTUD REBELDE became heir to Cuban youth's traditions of struggle and, at the same time, a vehicle of information, a tool for political orientation and influential means of cultural betterment. This fact determined its orientation and delineated its responsibilities.

As an important element of the revolutionary press, JUVENTUD REBELDE continued its best traditions, whose essential quality is its unbreakable ties with the masses.

It Has Fulfilled Its Twofold Assignment

From the very moment of its founding, the JUVENTUD REBELDE collective has worked assiduously and intelligently to carry out that specific directive from Fidel: that this newspaper should above all be devoted to young people, but at the same time its contents should meet the interests of a broad spectrum of society. Throughout its existence, JUVENTUD REBELDE has fulfilled this twofold assignment.

It is to this newspaper's credit that, without failing to carry out its task, it has succeeded in fulfilling the role of a general-interest news organ, in practice turning out a product that, while not perfect, satisfies basic needs. We can affirm that because of this particular approach it has managed to fulfill two fundamental principles of the revolutionary press: Its contents reflect our party's thought, expressing the interests of the people, and they insure real, constructive communication with young people.

The layout and content of the newspaper are its personality, so to speak: its character, its individuality, which is expressed not only in formal procedures but also in essential values that insure appropriate communication with the group to which it is addressed, and with the entire population. This quality springs from the particular paper whose collective is able to interpret the feelings of the masses for which it is intended and able to identify with their needs. To the extent that this is achieved, communication is more complete and the paper's influence grows.

When an undertaking of this nature reaches such a signal occasion, it is appropriate to consider all that it means. Behind each page of the paper, behind each of its articles and news reports, are the daily tasks of the editors, of the reporters, of the workers in the plant and other workers in the collective. This labor is carried out with daily dedication that makes them deserving of the most exalted recognition. Hence they all feel justified satisfaction at having contributed to the common task and at having helped to achieve the successes attained.

Journalism entails difficulties, but it is also a source of invaluable rewards. Time imposes the rigors of haste on editors and writers and on plant workers. Each day, before the latest edition has reached the readers, the collective is already engaged in preparation of the following day's edition. The rhythm of publication of the paper becomes the life pulse of each of those working on it. To it they contribute the fruits of thought and the enthusiasm arising from hours of dedicated work.

Each working day is made up of a succession of tasks that must be carried out properly for the desired results to be achieved. At the same time, nothing is more satisfying than knowing the day's edition is awaited by thousands of readers who seize it with interest and affection, for in it they find needed guidance, information sought, and agreeable, enlightening commentary. It is the reader, for whom the journalists' labor is intended, who completes and enriches it with his opinions. It is among the readers where we find the paper's most ardent defenders as well as it most exacting critics.

In its daily work, JUVENTUD REBELDE has endeavored to bring young people in contact with national and international problems of a general nature that at the same time are related to their interests in terms of information.

In 15 years of activity, this evening paper has won a place within the national press. Its presence has been felt at times of extraordinary importance our party has gone through in the course of these fruitful years. Its pages have reflected various aspects of the national scene, focusing on matters involving youth. By means of such sections as "Correspondence" and "Student Mailbox," as well as others, it is engaging in the necessary dialog with the young reader.

Increasingly Important Politico-Ideological Work

But JUVENTUD REBELDE is called upon to play a more important role in the national press. To the same extent that Cuban young people are a vital element, taking part especially vigorously in the building of socialism, the paper must carry out increasingly important politico-ideological work among the young as a tool of our party and the Union of Young Communists in the education of the great masses of young people in the principles of Marxism-Leninism.

The lives of the new generations should be reflected every day with greater depth and accuracy in the pages of JUVENTUD REBELDE. This concept can be realized only through repeated, systematic effort, and it is a goal fully within reach of the collective, which is experienced and mature. There should be more consistent striving to provide information and to deal with subjects involving working youth and students, to whom the paper must bring news of important events related to production and in general to the country's entire social life.

Every day the pages of the young people's newspaper should be placed more effectively at the service of intensified vocational guidance for the student masses, so that their career choices will correspond to the country's economic development needs. Moreover, it should consistently pay attention to the social problems of working young people, promote the identification of the different generations making up the labor collectives, focus on crash work, stress high-priority projects, and also exalt the daily heroism with which young people in the military are performing their duties. Furthermore, it should give more attention to the politico-ideological motives that lead to proper conduct by the new generations, which today have before them the opportunity to participate in truly historic tasks.

The paper must feature all constructive efforts by our young people in production, in services, in the arts and in sports. It must promote familiarity with the lives of the young in the socialist countries and pursue a war without quarter against the ideological enemy. It must increase its efforts to stress still more the role of young people in the development of socialist culture, to deal with family relationships and to discuss at length issues involving ideology.

We find the highest moral, political and human values in Cuban youth. Our young people have been and are a decisive force in the fulfillment of all the Revolution's tasks.

There is actually no sphere of social activity in which they do not stand out, assuming full responsibility, showing a strong sense of duty and a solid, secure adherence to revolutionary concepts. Their newspaper has been able to broaden and deepen that image, and thus the country, and especially youth, is satisfied with their work.

But the quality of our young people cannot cause us to neglect ideological work among them. On the contrary, this quality obligates us to undertake more profound, serious, responsible work.

To tackle problems of ideological development in a young-people's publication is an extremely complex process, for it is not a matter of theorizing, of setting forth principles more or less correctly, but rather of analyzing their practical effect, criticizing incorrect attitudes vigorously, firmly and calmly, stressing with better examples, denouncing discriminatory practices and exploitation to which young people in the capitalist countries are subject--all this in an agreeable, skillful, convincing way.

Under the conditions of our time's ideological struggle, the role to be played by the newspaper in the defense of socialist ideas and communism has expanded and is firmly linked with the task of unmasking the enemy. To achieve this, we cannot content ourselves with facile formulas or mere adjectives. We have to demonstrate the falsity of positions contrary to Marxism and the reality of young people's lives in capitalist countries. There, alienation, vice, unemployment and poverty are concealed and justified with a propaganda machinery whose specific objectives include attempting to corrupt the youth of the socialist countries, of the countries fighting for liberation, and especially those of our country.

The reactionaries and imperialists use great resources in this mission. Their methods are not always obvious, nor do they often bare their true face. On the contrary, one of the imperialists' most cherished goals is to find an attractive wrapping in which to peddle their shady, false ideology.

This fact naturally requires the newspaper to devote a certain amount of space to international news that should always be extensive enough that a balance exists between it and news of our country and of our young people's constructive efforts. It's necessary to work assiduously and very well to satisfy our youth's hunger for culture and information. Increasingly greater efforts must be made, and everything tending toward superficiality, speciousness and vulgarity must be rejected.

In particular, the paper should combat the resurgence of bad habits from the past that attempt to survive under the new conditions. The integrity and spiritual values treasured by young people may not be corrupted by prejudice, dishonesty or bad taste.

An Important Task: Economic Education of the New Generations

One of the most important tasks for our communications media, especially the young people's newspaper, is the economic education of the new generations. The newspaper should deal with the issues of production and services in a clear, simple, direct manner so that its readers feel like active participants in the great task of constructing the new society's economic base.

Also, issues relating to studies should be the subject of commentaries and news items appearing in the paper.

The paper must deal with subjects related to culture and, in short, with all social activity, from a Marxist-Leninist standpoint, pointing out new things springing up like a joyful sprout produced by the new society and censuring the always possible persistence of habits and customs belonging to the past.

The JUVENTUD REBELDE collective must work assiduously to reach all the country's young people in a timely fashion. At present, with the measures being taken by the Ministry of Communications, the growing support of local organs by the People's Government and the efforts put forth by the party, the conditions have been created for improved circulation and distribution of the paper. A great effort must be made to achieve higher quality in each successive edition and to insure that it reaches the reader at the proper time.

The Young People's Loyal, Closest Comrade

JUVENTUD REBELDE must always be the loyal, closest comrade of the young people who throw themselves with revolutionary fervor into the crash tasks assigned them by the Union of Young Communists. It must be the educator that enlightens and re-creates the young people who are building socialism in our country. It must imbue the new generations with love of the fatherland, contributing to their patriotic-military education and to their technical, professional and human training.

The distance traveled in these 15 years enables us to view the future with optimism.

They have worked and are working on many of the things I've mentioned.

We know that the collective will fight daily to achieve greater victories. Now, when millions of workers, including young people, are laboring tirelessly in honor of the Second Party Congress, this collective must take more decisive steps to deliver its most complete product to Cuban youth each day. To achieve this it has the support of the Union of Young Communists as well as that of all our people, especially the young.

The efforts of all the paper's workers have been a decisive factor enabling us to see today that, throughout the time they have carried out their tasks, the paper has risen in quality, and this is reflected in the respect it now has. When it first came out, its press run was 80,000 copies, a considerable number in itself. At present, it publishes 255,000 copies a day, with a Sunday run of 350,000.

The paper's contribution to the mobilization and organization of the masses has been notable. This was demonstrated particularly well during the great public gatherings in April and May of this year and prized highly by our party's first secretary. Comrade Fidel's assessment of the work done during that time is a strong stimulus to all the paper's workers and inspiration for the winning of new victories.

Comrades of JUVENTUD REBELDE, accept our party's recognition on this 15th anniversary. The Revolution has entrusted you with a great responsibility: to be one of its chief means of communication with the new generations. This distinction is an expression of its confidence and its respect for the fruits of your labors.

Thank you.

STATE LABOR, SOCIAL SECURITY COMMITTEE ISSUES FORM

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 14 Oct 80 p 4

[Article by Pedro L. Arteaga: "Security for the Future"]

[Excerpt] The socialist society offers broad protection to the people, in which the preservation of life, health, education and social security are outstanding, aspects which are a responsibility and primary objective of the Cuban state as is expressed by the constitution of the republic.

Social protection provided by our revolution to the people generally begins at birth, and even before, when it protects women during pregnancy, and includes the entire process of free education, right to work, and later, assures the worker various services and a tranquil and decent old age.

We should not wait to reach retirement age before beginning the search for certifications which confirm years worked or the time of services rendered. Every worker should be ready to exercise that right if circumstances so require because we are part of the potential beneficiaries of Social Security in the case of any eventuality, benefits which range from maternity services, so that life may begin, until the moment of a well-deserved rest and retirement.

The amounts of pensions for age, complete or partial disability and death benefits depend on the number of years served and that is why it is of vital importance that each worker explain to his administration any error he believes he has detected, or he should ask for information on anything he does not understand. To insure these proofs, existing legislation provides that administrations update their workers' service times and the worker has the duty to require compliance with this.

Social Security Law No 24 says in its Article 17 that a year of service is understood to be the normal working time, depending on the sector or activity concerned, contained in the period of 12 consecutive months when such service is recognized as having been performed in either civilian or military activities.

It then explains that service time can be accredited by means of documentary proof, and if it is lacking, by means of a declaration or any other means which may be established for the purpose.

Decree 59, Regulation of the Social Security Law, offers the facility to the workers that time of service performed between January 1950 and 31 December 1979, if there is no documentary proof, can be certified by means of two witnesses, while after 1 January 1980, it shall be done pursuant to the provisions of Article 59 of the regulation itself, which stipulates a new system for monthly recording of time worked and salary received and which the worker is also duty-bound to request compliance with it.

It is of vital importance that the workers and their families, as well as the administrations of state and private work centers and Social Security officials pay close and systematic attention to the creation and preservation of the labor history of each worker, which means the documentary recording of service time and wages received without blanks or errors, because these documents are the ideal means for requesting benefits and justify the right to receive them.

Referring to the quality of the forms SS6 in the provincial checkup on the delivery of these certifications held in Limonar, Matanzas, Francisco Penalver, vice president of the State Labor and Social Security Committee [CETSS], urged those present to finish the work on time, but he was emphatic about the preparation and appearance of them.

He said: "This is an official document, not just for one day but for 20, 30 or more years, therefore, it requires good quality of preparation and a strict correctness.

"A worker who is now about 30 years-of-age and receives a document from his administration, should save it for when he needs it, which could be at any time, or when he retires for reason of age. After more than 30 years, the document will have deteriorated if it is not well protected, but it is also important that it be properly certified so that it will be of service when the time comes to use it."

Status of Delivery of Certifications

At this time the administrations of work centers throughout the country are working in preparing and delivering Form SS6. Up to this time 652,603 workers have already received their certification, which means one-fourth of all the worker population.

Among the most oustanding organizations are the Price and Norm State Committees, which have already finished their work, followed by the Hydrography Institute with 90 percent; the CETSS with 80.9 percent; State Statistics Committee, 78.5 percent; Academy of Sciences of Cuba, 76.2 percent, and INDER [National Institute for Sports, Physical Education and Recreation] with 79.9 percent, while those which are lagging the most are the Cuban Institute of Friendship with Peoples, 12 percent; Ministry of Foreign Relations, 29.9 percent, Basica, 21.1 percent and INTUR [National Tourist Institute], 30.8 percent.

As to the progress of work in the provinces, Matanzas is leading, with a pledge of finishing by 30 November to hail the Second Party Congress, followed by Guantanamo and Camaguey. Those lagging the most are Santiago de Cuba and La Habana.

CONTRIBUTIONS, AID TO MPLA, ANGOLA NOTED

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 14 Nov 80 pp 64-69

[Article by Juan Sanchez: "Angola, Its Long Road to Independence"]

[Excerpts] On the fifth anniversary of their declaration of independence, the people of Angola are enthusiastically working for the establishment of the people's government, which corresponds to the needs of a society that is building socialism.

He is a man who is getting on in years. But he is still strong. Certainly the fact that he lives in constant contact with nature has contributed to his maintaining the broad vigor of the old trees of the forest. Everyone in this little town in the southern part of the People's Republic of Angola says of him that, fighting with a rifle, "the enemy is afraid of him." Moreover, in Huila too everyone says: "He is a tireless guy." His name is Felipe Francisco Geronimo and he is the MPLA [Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola] Labor Party's municipal coordinator and member of the Huila Provincial Committee. He said: "Talking with our Cuban comrades, we have resolved to build a children's park here for the children of the district."

This happened in early 1980. Where would they find the material and technical resources in that Godforsaken place? A brigade was immediately formed, composed of Cuban internationalists who had some knowledge of the construction-related trades. That is how it all began. Gelacio Lopez Licor (Pupi), a Cuban soldier from an industrial assembly enterprise, decided to design and build with recycled materials: a Ferris wheel and various revolving airplanes, swings, little boats and slides. With the aid of Huila residents, the brigade for weeks worked late into the night. And the little corner of joy for Angolan children was inaugurated on 4 February, on the occasion of the 19th anniversary of the beginning of the armed struggle for liberation. That is precisely why the little park is called "4 February," in commemoration of that historic date.

"Do you see the gear box on that Ferris wheel? We restored it. It came from a South African truck, dating back to the time of the invasion, which had remained unused. The towers? They belonged to a crane, also lying idle," Gelacio (Pupi), the soldier, said.

For us, all this assumed the power of a symbol. The simplicity of the achievement did not in any way detract from its power as a symbol and an expression of the profound fraternal feelings of these two peoples.

This simple achievement might also serve as a reply to those who have attempted to compare the Cuban internationalists or lump them into the same category with the mercenaries or interventionists of the former colonial powers. Of course, the example set by this little park in Huila is only a small sample of the kind of cooperation that has been growing over the years. To be sure, these cooperative relations began to develop from the very moment the second war for Angolan liberation ended — in early 1976 — when hundreds of Cuban civilian technicians who went to that African country, composing part of the military units as internationalist fighters, stepped forward in response to the MPLA appeal for help in handling civilian affairs. This made it possible for about 3,500 Cuban technicians and workers to lend their aid to a free and independent Angola between 1976 and 1977.

"The Cubans returned to the African continent which their forefathers had left as slaves centuries ago to contribute to the struggle against the backwardness inherited from the days of colonial oppression, in response to the appeal made by the peoples and legitimate governments who were opposing the aggression conducted by racists, annexationists and servants of imperialism, and to modestly contribute to the struggle for national liberation, the struggle against racism and apartheid."[1]

There are many examples similar to Huila.

In Kifagondo, where FAPLA [People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola] and Cuban internationalists defeated the enemy in a decisive battle, Angolans and Cubans are now too engaged in another important battle: They are enlarging the water purification plant to guarantee the capital, Luanda, a supply of the precious liquid its people require. Let us not forget that the colonial regime guaranteed a supply of running water only to those parts of the city in which its supporters lived. Months ago, at a meeting with Cuban construction workers in Luanda, Government Minister for Foreign Construction Projects Levi Farah commented on this situation and on President dos Santos' request, saying that Cuba would collaborate on this project, committing itself to completing it by the end of this year, because it is one of the priority projects dedicated to the First MPLA Labor Party Special Congress. Within this framework, Cuba and Angola have just signed an agreement on construction jobs providing for the completion of a housing plan for Luanda in 1981 as well as four bridges in different provinces and the construction and equipping of two tile and brick works.

But in addition to this, there are the Cuban health workers, scattered throughout towns and remote villages, just like the active youths of the "Che" Guevara Internationalist Teachers Brigade, who help to eliminate the illiteracy left behind by the Portuguese colonialists.

Aggression Came From Elsewhere

Right after Angola's declaration of independence on 11 November 1975, the newly established government headed by Agostinho Neto requested aid from friendly nations to deal with a combined attack by the imperialists and their African agents. The country was just then being attacked from both the north and the south with the complicity of the former Portuguese colonialists. Powerful South African forces were advancing from Namibia on the province of Huanza Sul while elsewhere additional enemy forces were advancing on the outskirts of Luanda, the capital. The aim was to overwhelm the young People's Republic of Angola and turn the government over to the counterrevolution represented by the puppet organizations, the FNLA [National Front for the Liberation of Angola] and the UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola], headed by Holden Roberto and Jonas Savimbi respectively.

According to English historian Basil Davidson, the FNLA, led by Holden Roberto, a veteran in the service of the CIA, proclaimed itself to be an anticolonial nationalist movement, headed by the Kongo ethnic group, of which it was almost exclusively composed. The other organization, the UNITA, led by the puppet Savimbi, in a bit more confusing fashion presented itself as a simple reform movement, also tribally based.

The patriots received immediate aid from Guinea Bissau, Mozambique, the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea and Algeria. It was during this phase that the Soviet Union and Cuba "provided the most important aid ever seen in Africa in defense of the Angolan nation."[2] Reading aloud the Central Committee report at the First MPLA Congress, held at the end of 1977 in Luanda, President Neto noted:

"... Cuba not only supplied us with the equipment which we could not at that time have made use of due to the limited technical preparation of the FAPLA; it also sent us officers, men and women, some of whom were highly qualified in fighting techniques and in the exercise of internationalist solidarity." And he added: "We lower our combat banners in memory of the Cuban comrades who fell on Angolan soil, opposing alongside our people the invasion by the South African racists."

Before the invasion, the U.S. Government had secretly advanced all the financial support for the South African interventionist action with the aid of mercenaries. Toward the end of 1975, the South African Government was the most solid and capable bastion of racist domination in the southern part of Africa and therefore presented itself as Washington's most reliable ally. American interests wanted to assume the role of the former Portuguese colonialists so that the oil, coffee, diamonds and other wealth of this African country would not fall into the hands of the Angolan revolutionaries. In Angola cotton was exploited by companies backed with Belgian capital, oil was in the hands of PETROFIRA [expansion unknown] (English and Belgian) and the Gulf Oil Company of Cabinda (American) and iron was in German hands (Krupp) in partnership with the Portuguese. The Benguela Railroad and the DIAMANG [Angola Diamond Company] (a diamond-mining firm) belonged to English, American, French and Belgian monopolies. The oilworks, copper and maritime freight companies were also in foreign hands.[3]

500 Years of Struggle

With timely internationalist aid, the MPLA, the only truly revolutionary movement, crushed the invasion. The battles that were fought to defend Lubango, Benguela and Ingunza were tough ones. Finally, the front line was stabilized in the south, along the Keve River and in the north at Kifangondo. Thus it was possible to declare the country's independence in November 1975 in the unconquered capital.[4]

The people of Angola had achieved the objective of 500 years of struggle. The fact is that the Angolans had opposed colonialism since the 15th century. At that time the inhabitants of the land that comprised Angola did not constitute a single nation, but in the different regions kings, chieftains and native leaders fought colonizers from the very moment they tried to impose themselves by force.

It was not until the second half of the 18th century that they began to make a great effort to produce some material goods in the colony and organize the meager domestic market and trade with the outside. As late as the beginning of the 19th century, the largest class in the country was composed of slaves. The freedmen, former slaves freed by their masters or the authorities, began to emerge in 1850, joining the ranks of the wage-earners.[6]

The people's resistance to exploitation was constantly manifested. Worthy of note are the major rebellions of Kissama, Los Dembos, the Plateau States, etc. There were also other uprisings like those of Bailundu (1902) in opposition to forced labor and Tulante Bata in 1913 against the exploitation of those hired for Sao Tome. In 1917 there was a major rebellion by the Ambeims against the expropriation of their lands which the colonialists were carrying out.

The MPLA Is Born

Almost all historians agree that, after World War II, something very peculiar happened on the African continent. We are referring to the emergence of a new kind of nationalism, marked by the founding of African political parties.

In December 1956 the MPLA, a product of the merger of the United Struggle of Africans of Angola (PLUA) and others like the Movement for Angolan National Independence (MINA), came into being in Luanda.

The MPLA was really the first party to represent all the people of Angola because it was the only organization that advocated a national effort and because it rejected the factional, tribal or messianic attitudes that prevailed in other organizations.

The War for Liberation

Conducted by the MPLA , the struggle for liberation was the war of an oppressed nation against a minority group of foreign oppressers. As Agostinho Neto has pointed out, this struggle was all-out and, in addition to arms, the treacherous colonialists employed the most diverse tactics of corruption, division and even organization of puppet bands, as was the case with the UNITA. The correspondence between UNITA leader Savimbi and the heads of the Portuguese Army — disclosed by the international press — shows how the UNITA began its "cooperation" with the Portuguese against the MPLA. In his "Memoirs" (pp 180-181, 1974 edition), ex-Prime Minister Marcelo Caetano also mentions the opening of a new guerrilla front by the MPLA "which constituted a tremendous concern [for us]." Caetano adds that "General Costa Gomes, assuming responsibility for the defense of Angola, took advantage of the situation with intelligence and decisive authority. General Bettencourt Rodrigues was charged with the mission... of pacifying the region," which he undertook, Caetano claims, "with the agreement of the UNITA , a rebel organization which, under Savimbi's leadership, was operating in opposition to the MPLA."[7]

Already recognized by the Organization for African Unity (OAU) as the sole liberation movement in Angola, the MPLA in 1968 opted for generalization of the armed conflict throughout the entire country. New combat fronts were opened.

But it was the guerrilla action at Cabinda which was the first to be carried out exclusively in accordance with the revolutionary thinking of the MPLA. "Cabinda taught us," said Neto, "that, no matter how powerful tribal action may have been, a self-critical analysis of the situation led us to the conclusion that on the new front, in the east, we had to from the start concentrate most of our attention on mobilization of the local populations. And this is what happened. On the eastern front the MPLA became a great mass movement."[8]

MPLA guerrilla fighters began to dominate great expanses of territory. The defeat of the colonial army was a question that no one disputed. Thus at the beginning of the 1970's several crucial problems arose, such as the question of a cease-fire and the difficult conversations with the Portuguese authorities concerning a "transition government" prior to the declaration of independence. In September 1974 the truce agreement with the Portuguese was signed. In December the so-called Alvor Agreements were signed, which promoted the formation of a "transition government" composed of representatives of the MPLA and the two other groups. However, with the intention of keeping the MPLA our of the provi ional government, the FNLA launched a military offensive in July 1975 which resulted in the Battle of Luanda. On the other hand, the UNITA's aggressive actions were exploited as a deceptive cover for direct invasion by regular South African troops. As a result of the conflict, the MPLA expelled the FNLA and UNITA puppets from the capital.

Once the armies of South Africa and its allies were expelled from Angolan territory, the MPLA tackled the tasks of national reconstruction.

National Reconstruction

The First MPLA Congress in December 1977 was an event of historic significance for the People's Republic of Angola. With the active participation of Agostinho Neto, the congress transformed the MPLA into a vanguard workers party and it came to be called the MPLA Labor Party. "The MPLA has completed its historic mission as a liberation movement. In future, it will be the party of the Angolan working class."

On completing a visit as a guest, Second Secretary of the Central Committee of the Cuban Communist Party Raul Castro said: "It is a great honor for the Cuban Communist Party to share these memorable days with you. This First MPLA Congress is a faithful rendition of the glorious traditions of that revolutionary vanguard which, through two wars of liberation, led the Angolan nation to the attainment of its independence, which is today guiding it through a phase of national reconstruction and which, in this great assembly, has with clarity, creative spirit and firmness of principle accepted the historical imperative of establishing itself as a Marxist-Leninist party."

An account of achievements was made at the congress and future tasks were outlined.

On 10 September 1979, 2 years after the historic MPLA congress, the first president and founder of the People's Republic of Angola, Agostinho Neto, died as a result of a serious liver ailment. A note issued by the Political Bureau of the MPLA Labor Party's Central Committee let it be known that his death occurred in Moscow, where he had gone on 5 September to receive urgent medical attention. The Political Bureau communique stressed the fact that the everlasting name and memory of deceased President Agostinho Neto would be an inexhaustible source of energy for the ever more determined continuation of the struggle for the triumph of his ideas and teachings, the cause of socialism, the implementation of the people's government and the national unity of the People's Republic of Angola. In a message to Angolan party and government leaders, Fidel Castro, first secretary of the Cuban Communist Party's Central Committee and president of the Cuban Councils of State and Ministers, considered Agostinho Neto to be "a most affectionate comrade in the struggle to put an end to colonial and racial oppression in Africa and the world and against any form of imperialist exploitation."

For this year, 1980, the MPLA Labor Party has pointed out two basic tasks to the people of Angola: 1. the holding of the party's first special congress in December, and 2. the creation of the People's Assembly as a supreme government body, deceased President Neto's final concern. In the Central Committee report to the First MPLA Congress in 1977, the founder of the People's Republic of Angola, Agostinho Neto, said: "The working class and its allies must have political power, it being necessary to consolidate it constantly in order to break the resistance of the exploiter classes and do away with all attempts at restoring the former government and to defend the revolution, militarily as well, that is, equipping the revolution to guide and guarantee the establishment of a socialist society."

FATE OF LATIN IMMIGRANTS TO U.S.

Latin Americans in General

Havana PRISMA LATINOAMERICANO in Spanish Oct 80 pp 34-39

[Article by Nilda Navarrete and Walfredo Angulo: "'Second-Class' Citizens Flee to Environment That Scorns Them"]

[Text] A refugee from poverty, the emigrant is plunged into new misery on what is generally a no-return journey.

A bag across the back, containing the articles absolutely needed for the trip, a miserable life which one wishes to leave behind, and the big question that clouds the future--these generally constitute the first act in a drama which in many cases assumes the proportions of a tragedy on the Latin American continent.

In periodicals and magazines one can frequently find reports such as this one which was recently sent out by a capitalist news agency:

"Thirteen illegal Salvadoran immigrants died in the Arizona desert in the course of a failed attempt to cross it while entering the United States. The victims were members of a group of about 40 persons without documents who had come from El Salvador but who had been abandoned by the smugglers."

Here is another news item in the periodical EL SOL DE MEXICO in May of this year: "Two Mexican youths drowned in the waters of the Bravo River when the United States police forced them to swim back to their country's side of the border. The boys begged the border police to allow them to rest a few minutes but they did not give them a chance."

In July of this year, the PRENSA LATINA news agency reported from Mexico City that 50,000 Central Americans, mostly Salvadorans, enter Mexico each month in an effort to escape from repression in their country.

The dispatch added that the immigration office of the Mexican Secretariat of Interior noted that, to the exodus coming from Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador, one must add another 20,000 persons from those nations who enter each month under official control.

According to the Fund for Population Activities of the United Nations, 1,775,000 Latin Americans emigrated in 1960, with most of them going to the United States. The same source reported that the number of workers who were on the move on the Continent in 1974 was 3.8 million.

From Geneva, labor union organizations this year admitted that one out of every five Uruguayans lives outside his homeland. In Chile, the proportion is one out of every ten.

The destiny of those people who, impelled by motivations which are mostly political and economic, leave their homes, tearing themselves away from their culture and their way of life in order to become "second-class" citizens in other countries, is a matter of indifference to those who derive a profit from them.

To understand this phenomenon, it is necessary to make a distinction between unskilled manpower entering the industrialized capitalist countries legally or illegally, and so-called emigration of intellectuals, in other words, the brain drain.

In its report entitled "La industria en el ano 2000: perspectivas" [Industry in the Year 2000--Prospects], the UNIDO points out that the United States, Canada, and the United Kingdom are getting 75 percent of the total "intellectual exodus" coming from developing countries, which signifies a reverse flow of technology.

The document, prepared on the occasion of the third general conference of UNIDO held in New Delhi, India, in February of this year, noted that the engineering field in the countries of the so-called "Third World" contributed 28 percent in the increase in the number of engineers in the United States during the first half of the decade of the Seventies.

UNIDO continues stating that the value estimated for the migration of specialists from all developing countries to the above-mentioned three industrial countries has been figured at $46 billion, in other words, $3.8 billion per year, a figure almost equal to government assistance given for the combined development provided by those countries during the same period of time.

The migration of skilled personnel from the developing countries is explained by UNIDO in the light of the fact that "not all underdeveloped countries share equally in the benefits of industrialization. Only a few are experiencing a high economic growth rate while the majority of the inhabitants of the so-called "Third World" live in countries with per-capita incomes of less than $200 and experience slow growth rates, both regarding the gross domestic product and the manufactured added value; some have even gone down in absolute terms."

Underdevelopment

Another aspect of the problem is analyzed by the Chilean economist Pedro Vuskovic in an article reproduced by the Center for Studies on America in Havana in its Bulletin No. 1,1980.

Under the title "Latin America Facing New Deadlines in the International Division of Labor," Vuskovic points out that the decline in the profit rate and requirements for big investment, under current conditions, add up to an internal contradiction in the capitalist world which is beginning to challenge the essential patterns of accumulation that characterized it during the last several decades.

It is in this context, according to the economist, that the more intensive and more direct utilization of the enormous masses of "cheap" labor from the underdeveloped and dependent countries assumes growing importance as support for new accumulation schemes, along with the relocation of production activities oriented toward the world market, the extension of "free production zones" and, finally, the changes we are witnessing in the international division of labor.

Vuskovic believes that the figures, which point to a practically unlimited availability of manpower and a manpower cost which is substantially lower than the cost in the more highly developed areas, are not only eloquent but even brutally traumatic.

In his study entitled "Progreso Tecnico de Internacionalizacion del proceso productivo" [Technical Progress of Internationalization of the Production Process] Isaac Minian of the CIDE (Economic Research and Teaching Center) of Mexico (a private organization), says that hourly wages in electronic consumer product assembly work in the United States are 4.4 times higher than wages in Mexico, 2.8 times higher than in Japan, 11.8 times higher than in Hong Kong, and 18.2 times higher than in Taiwan. Looking at office machines, the ratio turns out to be 7.2 times higher compared to Brazil, 6.2 times higher than in Mexico, 9.8 times higher than in Taiwan, and 10.1 times higher than in South Korea.

We have abundant estimates for the dimension of this labor force which is supposedly available. One of them comes to us from the ILO which tells us that the underdeveloped countries in 1975 had around 33 million unemployed and something like 250 million part-time employed persons--figures which, when added up, would come to about 3.5 times the number of persons employed in the manufacturing industry of the developed Western countries (some 77 millions in 1970) and which therefore would constitute an enormous industrial reserve army for the international capitalist economy.

The ECLA in turn in November 1979 believed that, around 1970 and on the basis of estimates for ten countries in the region, approximately 40 percent of the Latin American population lived in conditions of poverty.

By that date, ECLA continues, Latin America and the Caribbean contained about 113 million poor people of whom 72 millions lived in rural areas and a little more than 40 millions in urban areas.

Domestic Migration

Looking at rural-urban migration, ECLA estimates that, out of the total number of poor people who will live in the region by the end of the century, about 160 millions will live in urban areas and 85 millions will live in rural areas.

In other words, in a span of less than one generation, from 1970 until 1984, regional poverty will be a majority and predominantly urban phenomenon.

In this sense, the conference on Human Settlement, sponsored by ECLA and held in Mexico City, from 7 to 10 November 1979, reported that there is a progressive trend in Latin America toward metropolitanization, toward the growth of disadvantaged population segments, toward the rise of explosive population growth centers and rural dispersion.

Although there is still a considerable shortage of statistical data and systematic studies on the phenomenon of migration from the rural areas to the cities in Latin America, we find in a book put out by a group of researchers from various Central American universities that capitalist dynamics in Central America is associated with population expulsion and the only factor in rural attraction is to be found in those areas where usufruct property prevails.

In the book entitled "Estructura Agraria,Dinamica de Poblacion y Desarrollo Capitalista en Centroamerica" [Agricultural Structure, Population Dynamics and Capitalist Development in Central America], put out by EDUCA (Central American University Publishing House), an agency of the national autonomous universities of Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras, El Salvador and Guatemala, it is pointed out that the expansion of so-called "dynamic" crops--imposed by the transnational enterprises in the region--is leading to conflict over the land with the traditional crop growers on the domestic and subsistence markets, shifting them toward less fertile soil.

Along with this displacement of population employed in agriculture, the Central American economists continue, there is a major flow of migration toward the cities which points up the difficulties the rural population is having in becoming involved in agricultural activities in a steady fashion.

The following table, which appears in the work mentioned above, illustrates what we have just said:

Number of interprovincial migrants by place of birth in recent decades: Central America

Year	Guatem.	El Salv.	Hond.	Nic.	C.Rica
1950	326,621		112,542	113,776	261,367
1963	631,480		277,574	212,748	207,147
1973	757,061	523,221	525,090	341,086	350,413

One of the topics of the Tenth National Eucharistic Congress of Brazil—which was held in July 1980 with the participation of 344 Brazilian priests and which was opened by Pope John-Paul II—dealt with the problem of domestic migration.

During the sessions it was reported that there are presently about 30 million emigrants constantly in motion in Brazil, looking for a job or for land to subsist on.

The working document prepared by the priests is actually an inventory of troubles in Latin America: Lack of support for the peasants, absence of schools in rural areas, racial discrimination. "The blacks," the document say, "are despised in Brazil" and it also reports organized prostitution "which is being developed and managed particularly with regard to emigrants." Thus, pushed along by the consequences of what in economic terms is known as dependence and underdevelopment, the tides of emigrants in Latin America and the Caribbean flow rather erratically from the rural areas to the cities, from the slums to the border or in a boat heading for the coast of the United States, abandoning in most cases a life of misery in their home countries for another life that is even worse abroad.

According to the WFTU, in a study prepared by that organization's economic and social department, emigrants face common problems:

Inferiority in terms of work situation: They are doing the hardest, the unhealthiest jobs, anywhere, and they are looked down upon and extremely poorly paid;

They exist under living conditions that are even more difficult than those of the domestic workers in those countries;

They are subject to many forms of discrimination in the matter of social and labor union rights.

Persons without documents, farm laborers, wetbacks, illegal residents, peasants, seasonal workers, contract farm laborers—these are some of the names by which this cheap manpower army is known in Latin America.

The Whipping Boy

Jorge Bustamante, a Mexican specialist in the matter of migration, maintains that, since 1919, Mexican immigrants to the United States constitute "the preferred whipping boy" of politicians in that country who blame them for domestic problems such as unemployment, inflation, and the rising crime rate.

In reality, the Mexican farm laborers were an important component in the growth of the industrial proletariat and above all the agricultural proletariat in the southern part of the United States. At the beginning of the century, they numbered about 100,000 and 30 years later there were more than 1,225,000 of them; they came to be the primary factor in economic activity estimated at that time at $5 billion.

After surviving the depression of the Thirties, the United States government blamed the immigrants for causing the crisis and unemployment. More than 300,000 Mexican workers were expelled, including chicanos who had legally settled in the United States.

Cheap manpower was again needed at the start of World War II which is why the "Farm Laborer Program" was approved in 1943; through it, hundreds of thousands of Mexicans worked in factories connected with war industry and on plantations.

After the end of the war and following the first few years of reconstruction in Europe, the expulsion of Mexicans was stepped up. Between 1953 and 1956, coinciding with the start of the so-called "Cold War," more than 2 million persons were forced to return to their country in what was called "Operation Wetbacks" which was carried out by United States authorities.

Years later, during the failure of United States aggression against Vietnam, the population of Mexican origin was used as a spearhead for this adventure in Southeast Asia. According to Juan Jose Pena, Chairman of the "Raza Unida Chicana" Party, 20 percent of the total number of killed and wounded in that war were chicanos.

According to the expert Bustamante, the United States needs about 9 million Mexican immigrants over the next 5 years to sustain an economic growth rate of 3 percent per year.

On the other hand, those workers are finding that they are being hindering in negotiating on this demand from a posture of union organization because as a rule they do not have their papers.

The presence of farm laborers in the southern states is indispensable for the economy of that area due to the slow growth rate of the autochthonous population, according to Wayne Cornelius, Director of the Mexican Studies Program at the University of California; to that we must add the need for persons who will perform low-paid jobs or work considered degrading by certain sectors of the white population.

In the Treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, signed on 2 February 1848, the United States took away from Mexico more than 1 million square kilometers but the population of that vast region continued to feel tied to those people who lived beyond the new border.

This produced the "chicanos" who, in spite of humiliation and discrimination suffered in the United States for more than 130 years, still hold on to their customs and cultural traditions.

About 20 million chicanos, as well as 3 million Mexicans without papers, live on United States territory and subsist under difficult living conditions, with income and education levels far below the national average and, as a matter of fact, without any protection or rights.

Now, when the effects of economic recession make themselves felt in the United States, the 3,500 kilometers of border with Mexico are again very tightly watched by the Border Patrol and thousands of members of the United States Immigration Service.

Control measures along the dividing line were recently stepped up following an announcement by President James Carter to the effect that there would be a search throughout the entire area.

As part of the plan, a 90-kilometer long wire was completed early this year between the Mexican city of Tijuana and San Diego, in the United States.

The strip was furthermore equipped with sophisticated technological systems including electronic sensors, land, air, and sea vehicles, as well as hundreds of police officers who try to intercept about 1,500 immigrants who every 24 hours try to cross the border into the United States in that region, one of the main infiltration points.

However, the zeal with which the authorities carry out the job of watching the border many times depends on the generosity displayed toward them by farm labor bosses who want to keep the flow of immigrants coming.

Traffickers in Persons Without Papers

The United States newspaper the NEW YORK TIMES recently admitted that the United States Immigration Service had set up an entire corruption machinery to handle persons without papers.

The job--according to the newspaper--begins on foreign territory, where embassies and consulates of the United States, particularly in the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean, issue fraudulent visas for entry into the country.

The sale of residence permits for foreigners comes as high as $20,000 and these are the most common cases of law violations which are committed according to the newspaper.

The so-called "Coyotes," that is to say, persons who serve as guides in crossing the border, in most cases are in cahoots with the Border Patrol or with the United States Immigration officials.

There are smugglers who have set up real travel agencies and who hire a large number of "coyotes."

A smuggling operation involving more than 5,000 persons, workers from Honduras and Guatemala who were trying to get into the United States, was discovered last May by Mexican authorities.

The group had gone to Mexico over a period of 2 months by paying the smugglers more than $400 per person to cross the border at the Mexican city of Tijuana.

Mexican federal agents also for several months held two officials from the Treasury Department of the United States when it was established that they were running a gang that was trafficking in persons without papers. The officials held--Ronald Lee Anderson and Charles Richard Gregory--were caught in Tijuana while transporting 15 immigrants in a vehicle; they had collected large sums of money from them to cross the border.

Approximately 20,000 foreign farm laborers enter the United States each year under the temporary visa program known as the H-2 program.

According to the United States publication NCLA in its December 1977 issue, the H-2 program is not the only method used by the United States government to institutionalize the use of foreign labor in domestic agriculture. Other methods, such as the method of contracts between the government and the agricultural operator, likewise provide little protection for immigrants, allow low wages, and prohibit the organization of labor unions.

Another advantage in this formula for United States farmers is that the contractors can select the manpower and pick among the applicants those whom they want.

The contractors prefer to get single men because that means rather rudimentary barracks with very poor sanitary conditions and insufficient kitchens and dining rooms. The programs offer the contractor a high degree of control over the labor force in the field. The men are hired for a specific employer--individual or corporation--and protests over working conditions, food, or wages mean firing or deportation.

Haitian Tragedy

Each year, thousands of Haitians emigrate to the United States and other islands in the Caribbean, trying to escape from centuries of misery in a country which is listed among the world's poorest 25 nations according to UN reports.

In March 1980 alone, the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service recorded the arrival of 1,366 Haitian peasants, many of whom were furthermore victims of political persecution on their home territory.

Right now, deportation orders have been issued by American courts against 30,000 of them who are charged with entering the country illegally.

According to recent statements by Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm to a subcommittee of the United States Congress, the Haitians who have been arriving in the United States over the past 8 years frequently remain in jail for many months, including children and old people, subjected to "mental cruelty and beatings" by their guards.

The government in Washington, the main support of the Duvalier dictatorship since 1957, grants loans and controls a large portion of the island's resources.

About 80% of a population of 4.9 million inhabitants live in the rural areas. The infant mortality rate comes to 150 per 1,000 live births and the illiteracy rate is more than 75 percent.

Thousands of Haitians leave the country in fragile and improvised boats and head out to sea with their entire families, including their working tools and breeding animals.

The coastlines of several islands in the Antilles in recent years witnessed these expeditions which frequently failed to reach the United States because of bad weather, errors in the course charted, improvisation by guides,and other causes.

Unscrupulous shipowners collect between $500 and $1,500 per person on board and make systematic trips from Haiti to the United States coast. A portion of the money in many of the cases is collected when the emigrant sells all of his belongings. The rest must be paid as they start on their jobs in the United States.

Other Victims from the Caribbean

Each year, thousands of people from the Caribbean are hired by United States companies and they fly all the way to Florida in shaky and unsafe airplanes.

Late at night they are received at the destination airport by the Maranda Company of Miami whose business is to transport cheap manpower.

These men come from Jamaica, Santa Lucia, Saint Kitts, Barbados, and other islands in the Caribbean; they have been hired by United States sugar companies and their main job will be to cut cane.

Three companies out of a total of 12--U.S. Sugar Company, Okeelanta Sugar Division of the Gulf and Western Food Products Company, and Sugar Cane Growers Cooperative of Florida--control two-thirds of the contracts.

Fred Sikes, of the United States Sugar Corporation in Florida, describes the existing contract program in the following manner:

"In the spring of 1947, the government and a large group of us agricultural employees were using foreign labor under wartime contracts. After that we began to look into the possibility of continuing the program, but on a private basis. Thus, the contractors took the place of the government in these programs."

The temporary foreign worker contract, Sikes continued, such as it is being implemented at this time, gives the contractors sole power of control over the workers in order freely to utilize that manpower.

In the cane fields there are all kinds of reptiles, insects, and diseases but the growers so far are prohibiting the cane cutters from killing the snakes because they eat the rats.

To protect themselves against bites and cuts, the workers cover themselves with medieval-type metal armor. Nevertheless, many of them lose fingers and even limbs, without getting any kind of compensation.

Few American workers agree to do this kind of work under difficult conditions and low pay. "The main reason is that the contractors do not want us," said an American who was rejected when he applied for a job. "They prefer the foreigners because they can return them to their home countries without any right to appeal."

According to official statistics, the minimum wage given a cane cutter in 1964 was $1.15 per day. In 1977 it was $3.23. This increase in manpower cost means that the contractor tries to make sure that the worker will produce more for the same pay.

The slogan of the contractors is "docility, obedience, and high productivity." The United States Labor Department admitted in an investigation conducted recently that 65 percent of the workers were getting wages lower than those stipulated in the contracts.

The immigrants are suffering four times more work accidents than the rest of the workers in the United States and their life expectancy is only 49 years as against 72 for the United States average.

Many workers interviewed by the magazine NACLA said: "If the foreman sees us talking to a white man, he fires us; if we criticize the food or if we ask for more money for our work, or if we do anything that he does not like, we are certainly fired."

The Puerto Ricans

After Mexico, Puerto Rico is the second country which shows the largest number of workers who emigrated to agricultural plantations in the United States. Officially they are considered "citizens" but in reality they are relegated to the status of "persons coming from the colony."

Between 60,000 and 200,000 Puerto Ricans emigrate each year in search of work in the United States because 21 percent of the island's population are unemployed.

Some of them go privately but most of them are recruited by companies engaged in this kind of traffic, in complicity with the island's colonial government.

Over the past 27 years, more than 350,000 Puerto Ricans worked on harvests in 22 of the states of the United States.

Colombian Emigrants

About 3 million Colombians without papers are living in Venezuela. They left their country in search of better economic prospects which they find very rarely.

According to statistics from the National Statistics Department of Colombia, the largest group of emigrants is found, in order of importance, in Venezuela and then in the United States.

About 40,000 Colombians without papers were expelled from Venezuela over the past 4 years, according to the press of that country. Most of those who met this fate were arrested by the Venezuelan police on request of the landowners and bosses who reported their presence so that they would not have to pay them their wages or so that they could get out of any claims against them.

The family head is deported almost always without his family group and those who remain on foreign soil are forced to suffer not only persecution from the authorities but also economic and social calamities.

As for the women, the only way for them is to become servants or prostitutes and proof of that is to be found in the high rate of prostitutes among Colombians without papers.

In Venezuela there is a real xenophobia against persons without papers who are blamed for all kinds of troubles in the nation. This leads to arrest, jailing, torture, and plunder of all their belongings before they are expelled from the country.

Oddly enough, a treaty was signed between both countries in 1959, the Treaty of Tonchala, which prohibits the mass deportation of persons whose papers are not in order.

In recent months, there has been rising tension between foreigners in Venezuela (about 5 million) following the signing, by President Luis Herrera Campins, of a decree ordering all residents who are not nationals to register with the National Identification and Alien Directorate.

Anyone who cannot prove that he has legal status or who does not register by the deadline, will be expelled from the country according to provisions currently in force.

The situation is getting difficult for hundreds of thousands of Colombians living primarily in Caracas and other major cities; after emigrating they do not reach the hoped-for "paradise" and they have to walk the streets in search of jobs or work for short periods of time on low-paid jobs.

These situations, which are repeated in the Brazilian northeast, in the southern praries of South America, are not, as World Bank President Robert McNamara said, the result of the population explosion but rather the direct consequence of underdevelopment and the systematic deterioration of the quality of life.

These "second-class citizens" flee to the environment that scorns them and that is the home of the gigantic transnational corporations which to a great extent are responsible for their calamity. They go off in search of chimeras but the powers which oppress those countries in most cases only offer them the simple and degrading condition of disadvantaged persons.

Which Cubans Left

Havana PRISMA LATINOAMERICANO in Spanish Oct 80 p 39

[Article by Elsy Fors: "Just Exactly Who Is Emigrating From Cuba?"]

[Text] When several thousand persons broke into the compound of the Embassy of Peru in Havana last April, there were shouts of "mass dissidence" from the sensationalist press.

But a close look at the persons there and the way in which the overwhelming majority of the people rejected those elements day after day for more than 2 months reveals the origin and real magnitude of this flow of emigration.

Scores of Western newsmen in recent months witnessed the development, in Havana, of the most recent attempt by the government of the United States to downgrade the revolution which is now already 21 years old.

Prior to 1959, in Cuba and in other Latin American countries, there was also emigration. Poverty, unemployment, and generally the system of exploitation forced professional men and clerical employees who could pay for the passage to leave the country, most of them going to the United States.

Then the United States government instituted a strict limit on the entry of Cubans, a policy which was changed after the people's triumph to permit the entry, into that country, of criminals, of those who had plundered the public treasury and who were now hit economically by the revolutionary laws.

They received the chief personalities of the Batista dictatorship, all of the landowners, the big businessmen and bourgeois who would usually deposit their ill-gotten gains in banks in the United States.

Voluminous investments by various United States government agencies in propaganda and diplomatic campaigns as well as subsidies for counter-revolutionary organizations directed by the CIA maintained the incentive for getting Cuban doctors, engineers, artists, and intellectuals of all kinds to leave the country in an attempt to deprive the young socialist state of skilled personnel.

The open hostility of the United States government against the island grew and, starting in 1962, they closed the doors to hundreds of citizens who had been having their passports and visas ready to go to the United States, at a time when the economic blocade against Cuba was being stepped up and when illegal departures from the country were being encouraged.

In 1965, Cuba opened the port of Camarioca and the Cuban government expressed its readiness to negotiate; this permitted the departure of some of those citizens. But shortly afterward, Washington again restricted immigration and continued to stimulate illegal departures from Cuba by all kinds of persons.

Those individuals who left the country illegally, taking their families with them in fragile boats, were received with a big publicity buildup in the United States and were presented as "political persecution victims."

More recently, Washington had the support of some Latin American governments in its campaigns aimed at stepping up the discontent among former counterrevolutionary prisoners and ragamuffin individuals for whom there is no room in present-day Cuban society.

The whole thing blew up when a truck crashed through the front gates of the Embassy of Peru in Havana, causing a burst of firing in which a Cuban guard lost his life. The truck's occupants were immediately received as "political asylum seekers" at a moment when there were no more than half a score of antisocial elements.

Peruvian and Venezuelan diplomatic provocations as well as attacks by the government of Costa Rica from abroad did not take the Cuban government by surprise but were considered just another step in the series of unfriendly actions against Cuba.

Thousands of common criminals, bums and prostitutes, who were dreaming of making easy money in any old way, as is the custom in the United States, crowded into the compound of the diplomatic mission, encouraged first of all by President James Carter who stated that he would receive them "with open heart and arms."

Later on, the daily newspaper THE NEW YORK TIMES pointed out that the antisocial individuals who were leaving Cuba "were arriving in the United States with a false idea of reality, thinking that life was easy here."

They all had an opportunity to march toward what they believed to be the "promised land" or its branches in Lima and San Jose, by airplane or in safe ships which have been using the sealift from Mariel to Florida for several months now.

But, rejection by the working people became obvious throughout the country, block by block. Three gigantic demonstrations in support of the process of building socialism in Cuba took place: On 19 April, on 1 May—both of these in the capital—and on 17 May, when about 6 million Cubans paraded throughout the island; they thus demonstrated the popular will.

Over a period of 21 years, the creative work of the vast majority of the Cuban people enabled the country to advance toward the attainment of records in education, health, and other fields which today place the country at the head of the line in Latin America.

Shortages however do still exist. Cuba is still an underdeveloped country and, as pointed out in an editorial by the official organ of the Cuban Communist Party, GRANMA, underdevelopment causes ragamuffin elements and emigration.

In view of this reality, President Fidel Castro asserted that the construction of socialism is a task of free men and it is precisely those who decided to stay in the country: The overwhelming majority of the 10 million Cubans.

WORK ORGANIZATION, PLANNING ADVANCES NOTED

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 30 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Felix Simon of AIN]

[Text] The report on the work organization approved by those attending the national plenary session's check on the Economic Management and Planning System [SDPE] in February of last year warned about the lack of hierarchization, drive and systematic control of that task.

The statement was also based on the weakening of efforts toward improvement by the basic work organization and especially in setting standards, with particular emphasis on the updating of the standards that do not give a true picture of the productive potential of the workers at present.

During the third national assembly of the work organization which met recently, the encouraging headway being made by that organization was communicated with the report that up until that date more than 500,000 norms had been updated and the form of payment due had been applied to more than 300,000 workers.

The former represented double that initially planned and the latter was 1.5 times more; due to that as well as to the increase of more than 350,000 workers stimulated by bonus systems, the balance reached in the putting into practice of those principles during this year was favorable.

It should be recognized that the enactment of the wage reform, which makes the total revision of the standards and the entailment of those workers affected essential conditions for its application, favored and promoted those results to a great extent. By the same token, it should also be pointed out that action taken toward improvement of the work organization has a past history.

Since the second national meeting of that task in 1979, certain steps--such as meetings on provincial and national levels--have been taken with tremendous support of the labor movement to hierarchize the work organization as an initial response to the successful putting into practice of the economic system.

The transition to socialism stage requires the putting into practice of the principle based on the idea that the individual renders according to his ability and is paid according to his work in direct relation to the maxim that he who works the most and the best has the right to receive the most from society.

Furthermore, the application of standards that respond to the productive potential of the workers on more and more scientific basis will, in fact, favor a more rational and exact contribution of its efforts toward collective wealth and toward the general productivity of the country's economy.

Also, inadequate putting into practice of these measures had revealed that at the beginning of last year there was a high percentage of entities whose growth level of labor productivity was below that of its average salaries.

That relationship, which reflects the behavior of the efficiency of each enterprise and economic unity, improves in that its agencies or individual producers free productivity reserves; this is only possible when the standards that govern its labor activity are scientifically adapted to its productive capacities.

110 Percent of That Planned for This Year

The figures for the revision of standards set forth at the beginning of this article are equivalent to having updated to last August 28 percent of those existing; this represents 110 percent of what was planned for 1980. The Ministry of Agriculture stands out among state-controlled organisms as does Holguin province locally.

At this point, it is opportune to reiterate the fact that important steps have been taken in those indexes of the work organization, but that they are still inadequate due to the fact that only 38.4 percent of the entire work time of the country's workers is guided by standards; this figure is unacceptable with relation to the true potential.

In addition to that drawback, 14.7 percent of the workers on a national level still overfulfill the norms by 136 percent; this reflects the fact that there are still a high number of badly drawn up or obsolete standards.

On the other hand, an equally worrisome reality arises and requires special attention; it is a 0.8 percent increase of workers who do not fulfill their obligations, and when it is considered that the workers are economically motivated to fulfill them, that situation can only be explained by a high rate of indiscipline or poor drawing up of the norms.

The above calls for a serious effort by the administrations and unions to eliminate the causes and assure that these non-compliances are due solely and transitorily to periods of adaptation by the workers.

By the end of 1980, the State Committee for Labor and Social Security hopes to have updated 36 percent of the norms and to have fulfilled 141 percent of that objective, but that effort of organization needs the support that the labor movement and the administrations have had with the aim of keeping it intact and of truly responding to the economic requirements of socialism.

LIGHT INDUSTRY PRODUCTION FIGURES ANNOUNCED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 2

[Article by Nancy Robinson Calvet]

[Text] Up until 30 September 3, the textile sector of light industry produced 921 metric tons of yarn and 6,612,000 square meters of fabrics, more than in the same period last year, according to Pedro Gonzalez Guadarrama, director of that sector at the third check of the Second Congress Special Emulation of textile workers in the City of Havana.

Gonzalez Guadarrama added that there are now 844 tons of yarn in inventory. Taking this figure into consideration on drawing her conclusions, Ana Irma Galiano, second secretary of the Union of Light Industry workers [SNTIL] in Havana said that the weavers could raise as many questions as they wanted since the yarn would wait for them.

Ana Irma pointed out that on the road to success it is still necessary to produce a yarn of better quality in order to do away with the weavers' complaints.

For his part, Miguel Llanes, second secretary of the provincial committee of the Union of Light Industry in the City of Havana, pointed out that out of a total of 4,570 workers of the sector, 85 percent are committed to the emulation and 73 percent of them fulfill the indicators. He noted that of all the groups involved only 91 percent have their plans. Futhermore, he said that although the period of the "45 most productive days to honor the Second Congress" will end on 5 December, the workers affiliated with the SNTIL in the City of Havana will be just as resolute and enthusiastic until the end of the year.

The Most Outstanding of the Quarter

In the third quarter check of the Second Congress Special Emulation of the textile sector which was held at the Vilo Acuna textile mill in Guanabacoa, it was reported that the most outstanding workers of this period in the City of Havana are: Antonio Leon del Monte (Vilo Acuna), Berta San Gil and Jesus Cartaya (Hilanderia Wajay), Jorge Cartaya and Ernesto Ordonez (9 de Abril), Alberto Jorrin (Antonio Garcia Moran) and Reinaldo Caromay Cruz (Julio Trigo).

The group from Hilandera Wajay was the most outstanding of the period and the establishments that performed the best work are Antonio Garcia Moran and 9 de Abril; the number one enterprise was Vitalio Acuna.

NATIONAL BUS FLEET ANSWERS PASSENGER COMPLAINTS

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 14 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] Marianao, 6 Oct 80, Year of the Second Congress
Comrade Jose M. Ortiz
Editor, TRABAJADORES
Virtudes No 257
City of Havana

Dear Comrade:

We are responding to the article published on 28 August under the title "Inconveniences Suffered to Enjoy Well-Deserved Prize." The writer criticizes a Fleet bus for failing to meet its contracted schedule at 0700 hours on 26 August, when it was to have picked up at Maceo Park a group of workers, their children and families—sugarcane cutters who have devoted themselves for years to the worthy task of helping the country overcome its underdevelopment and to the strengthening of our economy.

First, we express our respect, admiration and love to that group of comrades, their children and families who went through some despairing moments waiting to enjoy their well-earned and deserved vacations in Varadero—a wait which caused their loud protests and indignation.

Without a doubt, this administration is in full agreement with the criticism, since we did not give a convincing explanation to the press or to the group of workers and the people in general who read the articles. Please believe that this was not our intention, and we beg everyone's pardon.

We believe, comrade editor, that the criticism was good and constructive, since it has taught us a great lesson which will teach us and help us in the future to be more careful in the discharge of our delicate duty as administrator of the goods the state has placed in our hands.

Naturally, now more than ever we will join efforts with those of the workers at the central office to eradicate definitively the deficiencies which may still exist, to bring to our people the service they so well deserve.

We want to explain, not to justify, what were, really, the causes of this unfortunate incident.

We have on hand a document received on 10 July which confirms that, at a meeting held on 27 June in Guanabo with the comrades from the national CTC [Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions] and all the provinces, we planned the transportation to Varadero in July, August and September of the outstanding sugarcane cutters from all the provinces for a week's vacation. This requests a guarantee of the necessary transportation, and it is signed by Raul Sosa Gruma, director of passenger service, MITRANS [Ministry of Transportation]. In this specific case, that of the comrades to which the newspaper TRABAJADORES refers, the schedule states, "26 August, 1000 hours; place: Provincial CTC." As you can see, the hour indicated was not 0700 hours, nor was the meeting place Maceo Park.

For this purpose and to give the service in question, Comrades Eugenio Casanova and Luis Solar arranged on the previous day to meet at 0900 hours on 26 August, or 1 hour before the departure of the bus from its place of origin. According to schedule No 022794, they were supposed to be at the Provincial CTC, Havana, at 1000 hours to leave for Varadero, and once that trip was complete, they were to pick up in Varadero another group of riders bound for Santiago de Cuba.

The bus arrived at the Havana Provincial CTC at 1000 hours on the day indicated, and when they did not see anyone waiting for the bus, Comrades Eugenio Casanova and Luis Solar contacted the reception desk of the agency to inquire about the sugarcane cutters who were to be transported to Varadero. The person in charge of the desk, J. Vega, after checking with agency officials, wrote in his own handwriting in the place set aside for "remarks,"—at the request of the drivers, since that is the proper thing to do in such cases—"no departures planned," and signed it at the bottom. Having done their part, the drivers continued their trip to Varadero to pick up the other passengers.

Regardless of the foregoing, the drivers should have called the traffic department of the Fleet Headquarters to tell them of the incident, and they were criticized at the production and services assembly for this failure. It is true that there were calls to the traffic department at 1205 hours, inquiring about the bus which had been requested, and the callers were told that the bus had already left for the Havana Provincial CTC, and not for Maceo Park. I think what caused this mixup was the fact that the bus's point of departure had been changed, and this had not been communicated to the bus headquarters.

At that time neither Comrade Victor Zarabaza, deputy administrator of the headquarters, nor Comrade Felipe Morell, chief of operations, could give a detailed explanation of the incident, since the schedule was missing and there was no responsible person there to explain what caused the mixup. We would also like to point out that Comrades Eugenio Casanova and Luis Solar, the drivers, are two fine workers with spotless work records, and they are concerned about the tasks entrusted to them by the central agencies.

We repeat that we deeply regret this incident, which has caused so much annoyance and grief to those workers who are so self-sacrificing that they work from sunrise to sunset for the good of our country and our society.

We hope that this explanation will satisfy all those who in one way or another were interested in receiving a reply about this unfortunate incident.

Yours for the revolution,
Rolando Gomez Chala, Administrator
National Bus Fleet Headquarters

ROLE OF INTERNATIONALIST CONSTRUCTION WORKERS NOTED

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 2 Nov 80 pp 26-27

[Article by Rafael Calcines]

[Text] "To see the needs of others as your own; that is the chief lesson I have learned from all this. Just as the brothers from the socialist countries saw our difficulties and came to our aid, so must we do, cooperating with all those who request our cooperation, anywhere."

Without much variation, this is the reply any Cuban worker who has stepped forward to undertake an internationalist mission can give, if we ask him what is the basic lesson this meritorious work has taught him.

Tomas Atin Izquierdo, a robust 45-year-old construction worker and father of three children, is one of those thousands of workers who answer modestly and firmly that they have done their duty, their only remuneration being that of knowing that other people, no matter where they are, are happy.

A veteran in this work, he says he "went to Angola in November, 1976 as part of the first internationalist contingent, which laid the foundation for the work developed by others who follow."

"We did some very good work there, very positive, and we were very enthusiastic about it, especially since its results can be seen now in what other construction workers are doing.

"We took charge, chiefly, of organizing the safety and administration of the places where the first Cuban internationalist construction workers would stay when they arrived in Luanda.

"Those 18 months," Atin recalls, "gave me the opportunity to practice, with my modest help to that brother people, the internationalist principles professed by the revolution."

One of the many brigades, which include more than 2,400 construction workers in Angola at present, recently arrived in Cuba, having completed its task ahead of time.

Among the projects completed in that nation were 60 apartment houses constructed, the modernization of 26 others, several bridges in the south and several water plants.

These people work under a rotation system through which they return to their homeland once the task entrusted to them is completed, and they no longer remain overseas for 18 months, as they formerly did.

This measure has had a very favorable effect on increased productivity and the quality of the projects finished. Thus, while the productivity indicator used to be 941 dollars per month per worker, this rate is now 1,642 dollars, while total production increased from 547,900 dollars to 1,239,128 dollars. This also results in savings in salaries and living expenses and opens up the possibility for the construction workers to put their efforts to new tasks, either in Cuba or in some other country which might need them. The work of the internationalist brigades dates back to the early 1970's, when many Cuban workers went to Vietnam and Peru to heal the wounds of the criminal Yankee war in the case of Vietnam and of an earthquake which razed a large section of the Andean country.

This work, which has now become a tradition of the Cuban people and which the revolution holds to be one of its purest principles, is demonstrated today in many economic and social projects on three continents.

But if at present the job of construction worker, the basic foundation of development, is an honor for everyone who does that work, 20 years ago life did not smile so easily on Tomas Atin, nor on most of those who earned their wages in this sector.

"Thanks to a letter of recommendation, at 16 years of age I began to work with a pick and shovel, and I remember that the first day, while digging a hole, I fainted from hunger, but I had to find money to take home, because my father was on the streets...

"Then they gave me another chance. They told me, 'Take 10 minutes and then go back to work.' For me that was something from another world, because I could continue to work. Later on I worked as a laborer, a carpenter, a riveter—one had to know something about everything, because if not, one would die of hunger.

"Even so there were days when you had to wander the streets with your sack, as they say, picking up water and coal, to be able to bring something home for your children to eat. That time, fortunately, will never return, but the memories remain, and we must always keep them with us."

At present Atin is chief of services for UNECA (Union of Caribbean Construction Enterprises), an agency of the Ministry of Construction which is in charge of everything concerning overseas construction.

UNECA carries out projects in more than 10 countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America, in some cases through the disinterested aid of the Cuban Government to the people who lack resources, and in others contracted with those who are able to finance them.

Through the export of construction, complete projects, construction materials and technical assistance, this sector could in the next few years become one of the most important sources of income, according to the minister of state for overseas construction, Levy Farah.

Taking 1977 as a point of departure, overseas construction had grown 150 percent one year later, and 330 percent by 1979, with a growth rate of 75.2 percent, a figure which should be sustained in 1980.

Cuba has some 7,000 construction workers in various nations on three continents, and that figure will increase to 10,000 by the end of the present year and to 15,000-20,000 in 1981.

Through its trade agreements with Angola, UNECA is constructing, in addition to the projects mentioned above, a meatpacking plant and a dam in the Dala region, among other things.

In Iraq it is building houses in Al-Bakir and constructing the Mosul-Kirkurk highway, while in Libya it is building apartments and schools in the port of Tobruk and a highway linking Al-Araneb and Gastrum.

This unit is cooperating in the building of the "Camilo Cienfuegos" school in Huambo, Angola, a poultry farm and a highway in Guinea, a 450-bed hospital in Vietnam and a rural dairy in Laos.

In addition it is building in Jamaica a school for teachers in Spanish Town, an urban basic secondary school for 200 students in Montpellier and other social projects.

Similarly the Cuban construction workers have been gaining a solid prestige which adds to the fact that in this area the prospects are ever more broad, even leading to cooperation with third countries, as in the case of an important cement factory being built in Ethiopia as part of a project of the German Democratic Republic.

However, over and above any economic value, for these men the basic thing is the moral and ideological connotation of each building they construct with their efforts.

If Cubans, forgetting the tranquillity of their homes and the possibility of never again seeing their loved ones, have stepped forward to fight in the defense of Angola and Ethiopia, they have responded with equal interest to the revolution's call to work in other lands.

And it is not surprising, as Tomas Atin recalls, that when he told his children that he had been chosen for an internationalist mission, they began to cry, and when he asked them why all those tears, the reply was unexpected. "Not for sadness, they told me, but for joy, for pride, because their father had received the great honor of going to cooperate with other peoples."

FAILURE OF U.S. GRAIN EMBARGO FOR USSR NOTED

PA041423 Havana International Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 4 Dec 80

["World Events" commentary]

[Text] Early this week the Canadian Government announced its decision to end the grain embargo against the USSR and revealed the sale to that socialist nation over 6 million tons of grain.

The sales of wheat and other grains was suspended early this year on request by U.S. President James Carter, who imposed this coercive measure on his allies in an effort to affect the USSR's economy. On the occasion, Washington exhorted its Canadian and Australian allies to join the embargo decreed by the White House and refrain from selling any grain to the Soviet Union.

At the same time, the United States promised not to intervene in the traditional market of those countries. The United States, however, failed to keep its word and recently sold large amounts of U.S. wheat to China. In mid-November, the wheat-producing countries held an international conference in Adelaide, Australia, in which they examined the world situation of the grain market. At the conference, the Australian and Canadian representative harshly criticized the United States for having signed during the embargo period an agreement whereby they sold huge amounts of grain to China, a traditional buyer of Canadian and Australian grains.

To the demands of its allies, the U.S. delegate to the conference, Dale Hathaway, cynically replied that the grain needs of China are increasing; therefore, all large grain producers will have access to that market.

Since then, it has been assumed that the Washington allies would no longer be forced to support ehe embargo policy imposed by the United States which has seriously affected the economy of the United States, Canada and Australia, because the sales restrictions against the Soviet Union mostly affected the farmers from the United States, Canada and Australia.

The Soviet economy, meanwhile, has advanced satisfactorily. A document recently published in the USSR reveals that the real per capita income of the Soviet citizen has increased 10 percent during the current 5-year period, while the domestic consumption in that country reached 4/5 of the national income, having reached the amount of R400 billion, some $540 billion.

Another indicator of Soviet progress during the period 1976-1980 is that during that period, 150 million Soviet citizens improved their housing conditions.

The document issued by the CPSU's Central Committee also indicates that in the next 5-year period, agriculture in that country will experience a high rate of development. Estimates show that the annual grain production during the period will amount ot between 238 million and 243 million tons.

As can be observed, the grain embargo did not cause difficulties to the USSR, which obtained the grain in other markets and has considerably increased its economic potential in the present 5-year period.

The attempt to blackmail the USSR through economic pressures has resulted in a new setback for the U.S. imperialists.

Guillermo Garcia stated that more than 300,000 metric tons will be arriving from the Soviet Union during the last days of the year which is why it is essential to work with dedication and discipline in order to avoid payment of per diem. He explained the need for creating the conditions to accumulate as soon as possible a reserve of 3 months of raw materials and of 1 year later on. This will make the country's economy more solid because in that manner we will be able to work without depending on the arrival of vessels which do not bring on time the goods needed by the country. GOVERNMENT, ALCOA REACH NEW BAUXITE AGREEMENT

FL031409 Santo Domingo Radio MIL Network in Spanish 1900 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Text] The Dominican Government and the Alcoa Exploration Company yesterday reached a new agreement by which the Dominican Republic will get more for its bauxite.

A statement from the Presidential Press Office says that the last agreement between the government and Alcoa expired on 31 December (?1976). It says that since then, the company had been operating under conditions simply set out in letters exchanged between the state and the company. The new agreement will be in effect until 31 December 1982. Under the agreement, the Dominican state will receive higher payments than those obtained so far under the system regulating relations between the two parties until now.

One of the provisions is the creation of a fund for the development of Pedernales Province. The company will contribute 50 cents for each metric ton of bauxite exported. The fund will be used exclusively for public works to benefit Pedernales Province, the Presidential Press Office reported. In addition, the 55 cents royalty Alcoa currently pays per metric ton of exported bauxite has increased to 60 cents. The agreement also provides for a guaranteed minimum payment of 17 pesos per metric ton of bauxite, an amount higher than established in the provisional system in effect up to now. This payment will increase as international bauxite prices go up. The tax on bauxite sales (?will be computed) at a rate equal to 40 percent of the net profits as has been done to date.

The agreement between the Alcoa and the Dominican state does not introduce any changes in the original contracts on exploitation concessions which constitute the basis for contractual relations between the two.

The Presidential Press Office reports that the agreement will make it possible to carry out studies to determine the (?actual) amount of bauxite available in the Dominican Republic so that an aluminum refinery may be established here.

It is reported that the government is now in a position to reach definitive long-term agreements with Alcoa.

FDR REPRESENTATIVE DENOUNCES JUNTA, UNITED STATES ROLE

West Berlin DIE WAHRHEIT in German 16 Oct 80 p 7

[FRG radio interview with FDR [Democratic Revolutionary Front] Representative in Europe, Jose Rutilio Sanchez, by Andreas Hamann; date and place not given.]

> [Text] Yesterday was the first anniversary of the coup d'etat against ex-dictator General Romero in El Salvador, who was deposed with the aid of the United States on 15 October 1979. What was sold for a short time as "democratic opening" soon turned out to be a disguise for the stepped up terrorism against the popular movement. During the past 12 months these conflicts have greatly intensified. The wave of terrorism by the military junta has taken on greater and greater dimensions. A few days ago, the four armed revolutionary organizations decided to form a coalition on all fronts. The FDR is the political alliance of all democratic and revolutionary forces. The European representative of the FDR, Jose Rutilio Sanchez, answers questions in the following interview with our editor, Andreas Hamann.

Question: In the judgment of the FDR, what is the possibility of an intervention by U.S. imperialism in El Salvador? How acute is the danger?

Answer: We are already speaking about direct intervention. We believe the United States has never quite given up the idea of a direct, massive intervention. This is why the United States has reinforced the armed forces of Honduras. A month ago, 55 military advisors arrived. A crew of 11 pilots was also sent there.

Or take for example the delivery of five helicopters, which enables Honduras to check on the border with El Salvador even better.

Guatemala is receiving aid. The United States has granted a loan in the amount of $10 million. In addition, it has reinforced the bases in the Panama Canal Zone. The U.S. warships in the Pacific, based in Hawaii, have already been brought in closer. The increase in military personnel to 120,000 at the Cayo Hueso Base in Florida has been known for a long time. Recently, military maneuvers were conducted in the Caribbean, to which the Venezuelan Navy was invited. This country was also granted loans for use by El Salvador in addition to a financial contribution, for training the Salvadoran military in Venezuela.

Question: What is the common denominator, i.e. the motive for all these measures?

Answer: The United States uses the junta, which includes the military and the representatives of the Christian Democrats, in an attempt to save its interests in the region. United States ships pass through the Panama Canal and carry 40 percent of the oil from the Pacific side to the industrial regions of New York and beyond. Of necessity they must pass through the Central American and the Caribbean Region. The United States therefore believes it must have the necessary tools at its disposal to secure the region and the route. This is why they blackmail, stipulate conditions and soft-soap, and are intent on bases for their supremacy.

Question: How are the political maneuvers of the Salvadoran reactionaries to be assessed with respect to the maintenance of their power?

Answer: We have reached the conclusion that the division within the Salvadoran Army, which was to have been faked recently, was a planned occurrence, just like the coup d'etat against General Romero. It has to do with the fact that they are looking for a way out of the present situation in El Salvador, which is no longer possible, even now. They want to give the regime a new veneer.

On the international front, the United States has set into motion a clever campaign of disinformation and has supported the junta economically, politically and militarily. If the junta had not been aided by the United States this month, the people would have come to power without spilling one drop of blood.

In the El Salvadoran media, the desire was expressed to enter into a dialog with the DRU, the United Revolutionary Leadership. (The Farabundo Marti People's Liberation Army, the El Salvador CP, the armed forces of the National Resistance and the Revolutionary Militia belong to this group; the editors) The U.S. ambassador invited the leaders of the people's organizations to his official residence. Without prior consultation, only one representative of an organization of the Revolutionary Coordination Committee of the Masses (CRM) accepted. Later, however, a discussion with the comrade took place, where it was made clear that there could never be a dialog or an alliance with this enemy because he is responsible for the many deaths in El Salvador.

Question: In the case of the FDR, is this only a temporary alliance?

Answer: There are no factions in the Democratic Revolutionary Front who do not understand the meaning of class struggle and the complete change in the societal structures. We state very clearly that the struggle of the FDR is a part of the class struggle in defense of the exploited masses in which the workers and the peasants must take the predominant role. We are certain of a strategic alliance. Our revolution is of a political-military nature. Before we win militarily, we already have won politically because 80 percent of the people are organized and are politically aware. Furthermore, the people have created their own unity and have at their disposal an organization which is already prepared for the day of the military victory, as the representative of the people's power.

Question: According to the reports from El Salvador, the terrorism of the regime has reached a new high recently. Can you confirm this?

Answer: The general strike during the middle of August was a complete success. Although the armed forces of the junta mobilized their entire forces, and even employed artillery helicopters, they were unable to prevent the strike. Now they are attempting to get the leaders of the unions and of the people's organizations under their control. They have gone as far as murdering the children, the spouses and the parents of these revolutionaries. The mutilated bodies of men and children are distributed in different communities to provoke acts of desperation. The United States is heavily involved in this because it is their advisors, who, as they themselves say, "scientifically" plan the terrorism. This is why they have poisoned the streams, which provide the peasants, who fight and who have taken refuge in the mountains, with fish and other edible things.

Question: How strong is the direct military enemy; how do you assess the chances of a victory by the revolutionary movement?

Answer: Actually we must fight against five complete armies, not counting the paramilitary gangs. There are the regular forces, then the National Guard. Then there is the National Police which is divided into two large subgroups, the traffic divi-ion, with whose aid the civilian population is controlled, and the repressive police. Finally there is also the customs police.

In addition there are the armed elements of the paramilitary gangs in each community, who call themselves ORDEN(Order). They lend themselves to be used to guide the military at night so that they can burn houses and commit murder. This has been especially true recently, since the enemy troops have many mercenaries among their ranks--reactionary Vietnamese, supporters of the deposed Thieu regime, Venezuelans, Chileans, and of course, U.S. citizens--who do not know the communities.

Presently there are four fronts and approximately 30 enemy encounters occur daily, during which the armed forces of the enemy are kept busy and because of which many desertions have occurred. The United Revolutionary Leadership has directed an appeal to the armed forces, according to which all honest soldiers, who immediately disassociate themselves from the regime, will be recognized as simple citizens and not soldiers. We still do not have a total revolt, but we are preparing the conditions for this, so that the people of El Salvador can very soon announce to the world the victory of the working class.

COUNTRY TO BENEFIT FROM CIM FUNDS

FL031505 Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 27 Nov 80 p 14

[Excerpt] St George's, Grenada, 26 Nov (CANA)--Grenada expects to benefit from the funds made available annually by the Inter-American Commission of Women (CIM), according to a senior government official here.

Secretary for Women's Affairs Phyllis Coard, said the facility for Grenada came out of the island's attendance at a recent conference in the Dominican Republic of CIM, Women's Arms of the Organization of American States.

As a result of Grenada's participation in the conference, the women's desk here can share in the funds available annually, said Mrs Coard, who represented Grenada at the conference.

She said that CIM will be funding a trade union seminar in December aimed at developing the skills of Grenadian women to enable them to perform better in leadership roles.

In response to the high level of unemployment among women CIM will also pay two women here to be employed in the creation of cooperatives, she said.

Should Grenada be interested, Mrs Coard said, the commission CIM is also willing to fund a national conference on women to aid in the process of social education. An alternative to the national conference would be a series of 1-day parish conferences with the same aim.

In addition to receiving funds, Grenada has also been elected to serve for 2 years on the executive committee as a representative of the Caribbean region.

Grenada will serve along with the United States, Venezuela, Colombia, Chile and the Dominican Republic, who are representing the other regions of the OAS.

JCC HEAD SCORES COMMUNISM, CAPITALISM EXCESSES

Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 28 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] President of the Jamaica Council of Churches, (JCC) the Most Rev. Samuel Carter, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Kingston, yesterday condemned atheistic communism and the excesses of capitalism and said that the Church did not align itself with any political ideology or economic system.

Responding to critics of the council who, he said, had mistaken the JCC's concern for justice and peace for allegiance to some political system or economic theory, Archbishop Carter said: "Let me state clearly that the Church aligns itself with no political ideology or economic system."

Archbishop Carter was delivering the President's address at the half-yearly meeting of the JCC at the Webster Memorial Church Hall on the Half-Way-Tree Road, St. Andrew.

The chuch must remain impartial with regards to political parties, seeking to favour no party or candidate, but to establish an atmosphere of peace and justice in which free and fair elections could be held, he said.

"Our impartiality, however, does not demand that we refrain from condemning those political systems or individuals whom we feel are destructive of man's God-given destiny and rights," he said.

The Archbishop condemned atheistic communism, declaring that "we do not now, and never will, support a tyrannical system which denies the existence of God, or the supernatural destiny of man; promotes violence or absorbs individual freedom into the collectivity of the State as the supreme authority."

The church equally condemned the excesses of that system "which considers ownership as an absolute right that has no limits and carries no corresponding social obligation." The Church, he added, aligned itself with the Gospel and with the mandate of the Gospel "that all God's people are equal and that all the people of the earth have a right to the goods of the earth."

Also responding at the same meeting to criticisms levelled at the Council, General Secretary, the Rev. Edmund Davis, said that it would have been "grossly irresponsible" of the JCC not to become "compassionately involved and concerned" in the political experience and reality of the people over the past six months.

One of the crucial ecumenical tasks facing the JCC today was to help the people to understand and appreciate the role of the Council in contemporary Jamaica with its polarization, ambiguities, crime and violence, as well as its socio-political, economic and moral problems.

The Rev. Mr. Davis said that the question was: "Can the Church remain faithful to the cross of Jesus Christ and her mission to the society if she does not become compassionately concerned and compassionately involved in the struggles of the people to create and maintain a liveable society?"

Over the past six months, he said, the society had become so politicized that it would have been grossly irresponsible of the JCC not to become involved in the political experience and reality of the people.

PROPOSED JLP, PNP TRUCE BETWEEN GANGS BREAKS DOWN

Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 27 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] A PROPOSED TRUCE between political factions in troubled West St. Andrew fell through yesterday morning as PNP activists did not turn up at the agreed place.

JLP supporters turned up at Balmagie Avenue and Joshua Edwards Avenue corner separating the Waterhouse (PNP) and Tower Hill (JLP) communities for the signing at 10 a.m.

They had come out by the scores, and at 10.30 o'clock were waiting patiently in the bright morning sunshine on the border of the embattled communities for what to them was a hoped for ray of peace and love.

The minutes dragged by and about 11.25 o'clock, a party of policemen came to the meeting-ground and told them that PNP representatives said they would not be signing a truce that day until certain differences among them were "ironed out".

The Police who relayed the message said the PNP activists said they hoped this would be done this week for a signing on Sunday.

THE JLP SUPPORTERS EXPRESSED DISAPPOINTMENT and hoped that "the PNP side would quickly come to their senses and sign the truce."

Father Michael Linden of St. Patrick's Church on Bay Farm Road, in the community, was present. Mr. Owen Stephenson, former assistant Commissioner of Police, who ran as JLP candidate against the PNP's Dudley Thompson in the general election was also there. The seat is the subject of a magisterial recount.

SINCE THE ELECTION ON OCTOBER 30 there have been covert peace moves by other ghetto communities, where most of the pre-election violence occurred. But, unlike the historic West Kingston truce of January 1978, which spread to other troubled, politically tribalized communities in the Corporate area, these new truce moves have no apparent "top ranking, ghetto leader".

No "Claudie" Massop. No "Buckie Marshall". No "Red Tony" Welsh, and no "Biah" Mitchell, and no "Green Bay" affair to accelerate it.

Massop and "Buckie Marshall" have died by the gun. "Buckie" in New York and Massop by police bullets in a case now before the courts. Word is that "Red Tony" and "Biah" have been keeping a low political profile since the 1978 truce.

The Gleaner understands that the Matthews Lane gang in downtown Kingston (from whence came, "Buckie Marshall) has had an unofficial truce going on with nearby Tivoli Gardens since October 30.

IN HANNAH TOWN, PNP activists of the "Super Stars" gang had reportedly made overtures to Tivoli Gardens, about four blocks away, about a truce. But clashes occurred and efforts stopped there.

Tivoli Gardens and arch rivals Concrete Jungle (in Arnett Gardens) with Rema in-between, are wary of each, as memories of the vicious pre-election campaign waged die hard.

However, Prime Minister Edward Seaga, who is MP for West Kingston, has repeated instructions to Tivolites not to trouble Concrete Jungle residents.

An obviously disappointed Mr. Stephenson yesterday said, when the truce did not come off, that the signing would have been a Christmas gift to the troubled communities.

But, unlike the New Year's gift in January 1978 when at Beeston Street and Oxford Street, warring political factions hugged one another and cried "peace" there is no real "top ranking" around to unite the ghetto youth.

In the 1978 truce no politicians were prominent. This is where they (the politicians) could now lead the way to a lasting peace, one ghetto dweller told the Gleaner. — N.T.

GADEA CHARGES COUNTRY BEING DISINFORMED

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 10 Nov 80 p 2

[Article by Fabio Gadea Mantilla: "Freedom of Disinformation"]

[Text] Just 3 days ago Pedro Joaquin and I were invited to participate in a discussion on freedom of expression in Nicaragua. We engaged in a noble debate with the veteran Ignacio Briones Torres and the young journalist Xavier Reyes. We believe we set forth our viewpoints with dignity, although the Briones-Reyes team introduced political ingredients which we do not believe should be taken into account in this debate.

At its conclusion, the communications media director, Dr Guillermo Roschutd Villanueva, took the opportunity to assert that the debate itself was a palpable proof of the "freedom of expression" enjoyed in Nicaragua. The Sandinist news report in its televised program on the two channels owned by the people and managed by the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] party said the same.

Well then, only 3 days later the reality in Nicaragua took occasion to define what freedom in our country is: not only freedom of information, but of movement and political proselytizing.

The director of communications media himself received the order to keep silent about Decree No 511, and everything pertaining to Mandaime and the MDN [Nicaraguan Democratic Movement] party. LA PRENSA carries as its main headline today "Mandaime Censored," and reasons of "national security" are given.

Well then, we cannot discuss this subject because it is prohibited, so I cannot continue to speak of it. Let our hearers answer for themselves. Is there or is there not freedom in Nicaragua? In my judgment, what exists is at the least disinformation, very harmful to all. We are disinformed, and then there are complaints when the SIP protests.

On reflecting, we have thought about how men change when they reach power. On the people's level we demand and urge a freedom which we are not prepared to grant when we reach power. Once on the heights, we are no longer in agreement with what we demanded, but seek the easy expedience of "national security" in order to prevent others from having what in the past we loudly demanded: freedom.

Will all of us be men of an unredeemed race? Will we be immersed in a Satanic spirit which makes us humble when we are fallen and omnipotent when we are in power?

The history of Nicaragua is a poor one, a history of individuals who have been seizing power for four centuries in order to crush their political adversaries by force

At this point, I must review what I have written. Let us see . . . I have spoken of the SIP, of freedom, of the discussion Pedro Joaquin and I had with the Briones-Reyes team, and I have spoken of the director of communications media.

It is all correct—neither the SIP, nor freedom, nor the discussions were included in the "et ceteras" in the recent decrees. They have not yet fallen into the category of disinformation, but at the rate we are going they will at any moment. I have not discussed either the MDN nor Mandaime, because these things are forbidden.

Let us conclude, then, with some statements which many people will not like.

For example: "A government which does not allow itself to be criticized is a bad government." "The government which fears freedom of expression will have difficulties." "The government which will not allow its citizens to express their right to choose their leaders in secrecy at the electoral polls fears something." These thoughts can be termed the "aberrations of a decadent bourgeoisie," but up to the present, given the imperfection of mankind, these phrases, put in practice, have been a powerful brake upon abuses by the powerful. And what we have today in Nicaragua, far from being freedom of expression, is the freedom of disinformation. Regrettably, every passing day shows us how our people are being more and more disinformed. God help us.

'LA PRENSA' PROTESTS AGAINST WHEELOCK ACCUSATION OF SOMOZISM

[Editorial: "Our Protest"]

[Text] We wish to express our most vigorous protest to Major Wheelock for the defamatory words with which he has tried to impugn the spotless record of struggle of LA PRENSA, hinting to the masses gathered at the Plaza de la Revolucion that this daily has at some time, directly or indirectly, supported the cause of Somozism or encouraged intervention.

Those who govern today were still children when this daily was already established as the most steadfast bastion of opposition to Somoza and Somozism. And that banner of yesterday, which stood for an imposing history of sacrifices, struggles, dangers and destruction, including the martyred and heroic death of our director, is our banner today and always. We challenge those who slander us to quote one single line in this daily that can be interpreted as sympathetic or encouraging to Somozism.

Using the weakest of arguments, that of coincidence, Wheelock has tried to link the complaints or criticisms the people make through this daily with the subversive movements on the northern border. This is an inconsistent argument, which in addition to its bad faith, carries with it a terrible threat of repression against freedom of speech and the press since it imposes a permanent silence and a permanent insecurity because it is always possible that when a critical article is written or a complaint against an abuse or an injustice is published, a raid by a subversive armed group could take place in some far-off border. Dictatorships have always practiced their policy of paralysis of democracy and threats to public freedoms (Somoza practiced it also) through these arbitrary linkages of separate and unrelated events. We lament that in the heat of a speech he fell into this trap of power which does not encourage unity, trust or credibility.

We lament that in order to maintain popular credit there is recourse to these types of calumnies which label as enemies those who are not. It is completely suicidal for production and for the economy to label as enemies all those who support the revolution but who are not "unconditional supporters," and to cover an independent daily, political parties, free unions, independent organs of communication, businessmen and all those who have a revolutionary but critical position, with a single wrapper of vileness. That is strengthening Somozism; that is giving it a force it does not have as a gift, doing profound harm to the revolution and its unity.

Finally, we protest against another lie: that we are proimperialists or that we favor intervention. When the present Sandinists were barely babbling their first letters, LA PRENSA was already commemorating—facing the ire of the dynasty—the heroic figure of Sandino every 21 February. We have been against any imperialism and against every intervention for a long time and no event today or tomorrow is going to change our patriotic position.

We do not want Espino Negro but neither do we want Afghanistan. Our dignity, which is that of Sandino, does not align itself with any power nor does it submit to any policy of those which today divide the world at the expense of the small and poor countries.

We do not want the past to return. We want an effective people's power and a revolution which can develop in favor of the poor without fanaticism committing it to dangerous adventures or extremist improvisations which lead it to economic failure.

We want our nation to be strengthened with deeds and realities. To divide it because of inflexibilities or hates is to weaken it purposely and expose it to interference by foreign powers.

We want the unity of a country of free men and of "unconditional followers." That is the real and only sovereignty; that of a country domestically free and sovereign and which for that reason can raise its free and sovereign head abroad.

RADIO STATION SPONSORS JOURNALISTS' DEBATE ON FREEDOM OF PRESS

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 7, 8 Nov 80

[Article by Ana Maria Ruiz: "Great Debate on Freedom of Press"]

[7 Nov 80, p 12]

[Text] An interesting debate, worthy of being copied in other mass communications media, was held yesterday at Radio Sandino. The subject of the burning discussion was "Freedom of Expression in Nicaragua." Because it is a subject of great interest, we are publishing, in two parts, a summary of the debate, which lasted more than an hour.

The panel members, who set forth their concepts of freedom of the press entirely frankly within the ideological framework of their thinking, were:

Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Barrios, journalist and member of the editorial board of the daily newspaper LA PRENSA; Xavier Reyes Alba, chief editor of BARRICADA and a member of the Union of Nicaraguan Journalists (UPN); Fabio Gadea Mantilla, director of the Radio Corporation; and Ignacio Briones, vice president of the Latin American Journalists' Federation (FELAP).

This was the first discussion panel sponsored by the periodical YA VEREMOS, on the subject "Freedom of Press in Nicaragua."

Monthly Discussion Panels

YA VEREMOS, according to its chief editor, journalist Marcio Vargas, "proposes to serve as a tribune for dialog on current problems, sponsoring a discussion panel every month, since it regards this as one of the primary goals of the communications media."

The panelists, in the sequence determined by the panel coordinator, Guillermo Rothschuh Villanueva, national communications media director, defined their concepts of what freedom of expression is.

"My concept of freedom of the press is the same as that of the Inter-American Press Association (IAPA) and the daily newspaper LA PRENSA, in other words freedom of expression is broad freedom of information, freedom of thought, the freedom of a people to inform and be informed on all events occurring in the country," Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Barrios said.

Chamorro recalled that there are no perfect governments in the world, and that therefore they are all subject to errors and the criticisms which will help them correct these errors. "If the right to free expression does not exist, other individual freedoms are limited. Freedom of expression is basic to a democratic and pluralist society like that we Nicaraguans want to forge in Nicaragua," he added.

Reyes Alba defined freedom of expression as the right of an entire people and the oppressed classes to be included within the historical framework of society.

"In the case of Nicaragua," Reyes said, "the right to be informed is most important within the correct perspective of its proper guide, which is a revolutionary state."

Fabio Gadea, for his part, said that freedom (he went into detail on this concept) is in his view basically a free gift of God to all men of all social classes.

"Freedom is the status and condition of one who is not a slave and one who is not a slave has the right to express his views at all times, the right to do and say anything which does not violate the laws and proper customs," and he added that "a willingness for dialog on the part of the government is the healthiest way of maintaining the proper meaning of freedom of expression."

Obsolete Concepts

Ignacio Briones, in turn, said that he did not agree with the views of Chamorro and Gadea because these were concepts more than 200 years old representing "provisions unobserved since journalism has existed.

"Until social classes are abolished, we must define what freedom, or freedom for what, we are discussing and to what end," Briones said, on the subject of freedom of expression.

He said that "the right to freedom of expression could not exist until the people could conquer the means of communication and production in order to exercise this right, and this is the principle the FELAP maintains," he emphasized.

At this point the coordinator asked two questions to focus the discussion, concerning the freedom we want, and how this has been achieved under the revolutionary government.

Pedro Joaquin Chamorro answered the questions as follows: "The forms we would want this freedom to take are implicit in the definition of freedom Fabio and I gave before, in other words unlimited freedom of the press, without laws limiting it, and the full right of the people to express themselves in the media, be they state or private.

"According to Ignacio, all communications media should be a part of the state, but if they are, we fall into the demagogic position wherein only the state would have freedom of expression, the government officials alone would have the right to inform the people about what they want, and in the form they want," he said, adding that "it is very fine to argue that the people have this right which must be won, because obviously absolute freedom of expression does not exist anywhere. What needs to be examined is to what point the people can express their criticisms, their thinking, their disagreement through the communications media. This is what truly reveals the level to which the people have won the right to freedom of expression.

"Freedom of expression does not mean that the media should be controlled by the state, but that the people should have access to them," Chamorro Barrios stressed. He also recalled that the newspaper LA PRENSA, in the Somoza era, often sacrificed its economic interests for the political goal of freedom for Nicaragua.

Reyes Alba said in his second statement that he agreed that absolute freedom of expression does not exist anywhere in the world, and he voiced the view that LA PRENSA "was something different prior to 19 July," although he said that he would not like it to be said that LA PRENSA took risks as a business, because the people as a whole took risks too.

Quoting the declaration on human rights, journalist Reyes said that the people's ownership area, although it had a dark past because it belonged to the dictatorship, is different at present. "Here it is not the interests of a class but those of the majority which are defended."

Concerning the constructive dialog to which Gadea Mantilla referred, Xavier Reyes said that this occurred in the Council of State and he gave assurance that "until a short time ago there was an information embargo on what happened in the Council of State for certain communications media. The interests LA PRENSA defends are not those of the Sandinist system," he said, and he stated that the Sandinist media defend the interests of the people, entailing constant self-criticism and criticism of the Sandinist state, on which they must focus.

[8 Nov 80, p 7]

[Text] Continuing the discussion, Fabio Gadea referred to the statement made by Ignacio Briones to the effect that he and Chamorro defended a freedom 200 years old. "I believe that freedom," he said, "since it is a gift of God, continues to be freedom, and that it has neither age nor date, but is the freedom of yesterday and forever."

Gadea referred to Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Cardenal, as owner of the daily newspaper LA PRENSA, and his constant defense of the interests of the people, to rebuff the statement that the owners of newspapers defend their own interests.

Concerning news embargoes, Gadea said that the Radio Corporation was the first broadcasting station to send crews to the Council of State for live transmissions, interrupted only for the newscast "Central America Here" at 1200 hours.

"Freedom of expression," he stressed, "is a principle which must be maintained throughout all regimes, and I beg of Xavier not to believe that we are embarking upon hateful comparisons between the past and the present, because there is no need. If errors are committed there is no reason to interpret this in terms of comparison with the past.

"We humans are not angels. A government which has weapons and a whole established apparatus, whatever it may be called, is more likely to fail the people, even if it be a new government in which the majorities are represented, than private enterprise, because we are subject not only to international moral laws but the basic statutes and the restrictions included in these same statutes, which we know by heart," he said.

"No one likes muzzles," he said, "and freedom of expression must be maintained under all governments, because however good a government may be, it is not made up of angels but of men, and all of us who are human tend to want to use our criteria and to believe that our criteria should prevail, as if we alone were right. This is not true, for in this very debate we are having, we are all of us somewhat right," Gadea Mantilla said.

Ignacio Briones spoke again to challenge Fabio Gadea, who in referring to the concept of liberty 200 years old was recalling history itself, since these concepts were born with the French Revolution, and he then went on to recall that Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Cardenal had never given the recognition FELAP did in stating that only LA PRENSA and the daily newspaper EL COMERCIO in Lima had upheld the dignity of the profession, commenting on their status as private media enterprises.

However, Briones said that he "like thousands of Nicaraguans" would say that the LA PRENSA of yesterday was not the same as today, "because the historic political situation which changed on 19 July 1979 is not the same as before."

Briones made clear his view that journalism has ceased to be "a creation in the realm of the mind and has become merchandise, an industry, and lies have become the stock-in-trade of the capitalist system . . . This is the thinking voiced by true theoreticians of opinion," he said.

"The capitalist press has muzzled millions of men and continues to muzzle millions of men throughout the world," and he added that "a very special situation in the history of journalism has developed at the daily newspaper LA PRENSA, for no one is unaware that Pedro Joaquin Chamorro has never let the advertisers impose their criteria," he said.

"We are in a country which is building a new era in its history, and while granting Fabio his concept to the effect that there must be criticism, freedom of expression in Nicaragua today is exercised by millions of Nicaraguans who could not do this before.

"A press which is financed by the economic interests of the bourgeoisie cannot be the defender of the majorities," Ignacio Briones said in conclusion.

Coordinator Guillermo Rohtschuh then asked to have statements focused on the "tangential reference made to what are called news embargoes."

News Embargoes

Chamorro admitted that LA PRENSA did not cover the sessions of the Council of State satisfactorily at the beginning. "We are trying to improve this, but it is not a question of a news embargo because it is nothing but a problem in our work such as any other medium has, and we recognize it as such. Now we are trying to overcome this problem and we have considerably broadened the news pertaining to the Council of State.

"What I call a news embargo," he said, "is something consciously suppressed in the news areas on which the media may report, and this is concretely seen in the decrees recently promulgated by the government junta, since there are a number of areas on which reports are not allowed without prior government approval.

"The problem this creates," Chamorro Barrios explained, "is that often the officials responsible for approving these reports either do not have the information available or are not to be found just then, or if they give approval, they do so 2 days later with an official document, such that the communications media become readers of government statements."

Chamorro stressed the fact that the news areas covered by the decrees are rather broad, and also include such terms as "et cetera" and other similar ones which are entirely ambiguous. "What has occurred in Nicaragua is a broad news embargo in various sectors. Just to mention Decree No 511, it covers everything which could be interpreted as counterrevolutionary actions, armed clashes, mutinies, uprisings, land seizures, strikes, interruptions of mass transport. Nor can one discuss labor problems existing in various enterprises, and these decrees mentioned also include the term 'et cetera.'"

The Et Cetera Problem

Chamorro related how when the annual report on Nicaragua was presented to the SIP, one of the members of the board asked if the term "et cetera" had been used in order to avoid a further listing of the prohibited news areas or if it was included in the law. On learning that the official statement of the government junta on 2 October 1980 included the term, he responded that there is "poor freedom of expression in Nicaragua."

"I believe that not only concealing information but concealing part of it constitutes a news embargo," Xavier Reyes Alba said in response to Chamorro Barrios, citing a headline which appeared in the daily newspaper LA PRENSA a few months back, "If He Is a Cattleman He Is in Prison." "When it is said that if someone in this country is a cattleman, he is in prison, it is because something is meant, in other words that one who engages in cattle raising should be in prison.

"When there is failure to defend the revolution, for example, an embargo is being decreed. We believe that freedom of expression is not only saying things openly and not concealing them, for freedom of expression also includes the right of the workers to be guided, to be informed about their affairs and to receive correct information," Reyes stated.

On the subject of news embargoes, Fabio Gadea said that in his view another term should be used. "Any chief editor of a newspaper," he said, "determines hundreds of news 'embargoes' every day, because he would be irresponsible if he did not do so. He has to assign a priority to the news."

Noting Errors

"At no time have I seen LA PRENSA fail to promote the revolution," he said in answer to Reyes Alba. "LA PRENSA says to be revolutionary, to support the revolution, but it reports the errors of the revolution, and not in watered-down fashion, as any sector whose own media criticize it would want, claiming that a signal interferes with the green light. No, the errors within the revolution must be pointed out profoundly, and we are tired of saying this."

Referring to the radio news of the Corporation, Gadea explained that they are sponsored by independent enterprises, "and it is no crime to be a businessman, I say, and I am one myself and proud of it. For 17 years now I have been with the Radio Corporation and I would like someone to show me where my millions are."

Speaking to Ignacio Briones, he said: "Nacho said that LA PRENSA in the past was different from that today, and he says this is the opinion of 'thousands of Nicaraguans.' This is not proper for a journalist on Nacho's level, nor for anyone. We have the very bad habit, many of us in Nicaragua, of saying 'everyone gets up early because I get up at 0500 hours.' But no, there are many people who get up at 0900 hours--they are very lazy--and others who get up at 1000 hours. And they say: 'No sir, do not carry the news at 0600 hours, because at that hour everyone is asleep,' and they do not realize that people have been working in the markets since 0300 hours. Nacho cannot say that this is the opinion of thousands of Nicaraguans, because he hasn't the right to give the opinion of these thousands. Surveys are made for this purpose and a survey would have to be made to see if the people think that LA PRENSA today is not the same as it was yesterday.

"I spoke of manipulation, a term which one uses if he likes it, otherwise not. But I should make it clear that the term is much more applicable to enterprises of a state type than private enterprises, for the very reason that states are more powerful and have greater strength. That news is merchandise, I agree with Nacho, but in the state media too it becomes the party political stock-in-trade, which is worse. A muzzle is very evil, very bad. In private enterprise it is bad, in the capitalist system a muzzle is very bad, and in the socialist system a muzzle is worse," Gadea said at the conclusion of his last and brilliant statement.

"We must establish two premises," Briones said in his final statement. "One is that at no time in history have peoples given journalists the right to represent and speak for them. If you are correct and I am denied the right to say that thousands of us Nicaraguans believe that the LA PRENSA of the past was not the same as it is today, I also deny LA PRENSA the right to speak on behalf of the people."

His second premise was: "The class which dominated for centuries and which sees its privileges threatened will have recourse to anything, just as the Spanish generals have always ordered their troops to seize independent newspapers and the battle was joined with weapons and in the newspapers, and Bolivar said that newspapers are the artillery of thought. Imperialism and capitalism, then, assign specific tasks to the communications media."

PAPERS APPLAUD WOMEN'S RELEASE FROM JAIL

Revolutionary Work Urged

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 12 Oct 80 p 3

[Editorial: "A Pardon With Dignity"]

[Text] The pardon granted by the National Reconstruction Government Junta to women who were connected in one way or another with Somozism, demonstrates once more the generosity of our revolution.

As one more proof of the humanist sentiment which motivates it, our revolutionary leaders have decided to free a number of women on the eve of the Christmas holidays so that they can return to their homes and start a new life. This event reaffirms the flexibility of the revolution and clearly demonstrates that it is interested primarily in rehabilitating those who previously were attacking our people and in reuniting Nicaraguan families. We hope that, in keeping with the spirit with which the revolutionary government has opened the doors of hope and work to these people, they will begin immediately to serve the interests of the country and to share with our people the joy of working to build a new society.

The revolution is opening new horizons in their lives. It is dignifying their position as women and is releasing them from the prisons where they had been held for a variety of reasons. It believes in the need to offer them another chance, and we hope they will be deserving of it.

In keeping with revolutionary principles, the revolution is not being demagogic in this attitude, because in having proceeded in this fashion, it is only being faithful to its humanist position. But its gesture and its generosity must be recognized, since there are sectors divorced from popular interests which talk of an alleged class hatred, in a disproportionate effort to blame the revolution for the various hues our society is taking on in its gradual process of social transformation.

These are facts which speak for themselves of the grandeur of a revolution which encourages and seeks, at all costs, the reconstruction of Nicaraguan society on new economic, social and moral bases.

And in the face of its magnanimity, there have been some who have carried on their own campaign of hatred against the people with reactionary political proposals in their desire to take over the revolution.

In spite of their lies about the generosity of the revolution and the full enjoyment of human rights in the country, our leaders have given another example of their deep humanism, because the revolution is love.

Generosity of Revolution Hailed

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 15 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text] The decree pardoning a number of women prisoners accused of various crimes under the former regime has had a very favorable effect throughout the country, because it brings to the atmosphere an attitude of pardon and magnanimity which favors brotherly unity among the Nicaraguan people and strengthens a very honorable characteristic of this revolution which must not be allowed to erode.

In spite of the exceptions--and relapses--history must record the Nicaraguan revolution which triumphed on 19 July as one of the most generous in the history of America, especially if one considers the previous history of repression and genocide which motivated the people's heroic rebellion. Not everyone contributed to maintaining this spirit, which not only represented an honor, a solid base of prestige for the Nicaraguan process and its government, but had the virtue of promoting trust, brotherhood and the spirit of cooperation.

Then verbal attacks and other attitudes of superiority, as well as party misunderstandings among some leaders seemed to extinguish that spirit. It seemed as if they wanted to abandon the Nicaraguan's natural attitude and his psychology of spontaneity and good will. The present decree--over and above its immediate effect--has the value of lighting once again that flame of courage that appeared to have been extinguished, and it is a message of hope that the Nicaraguan spirit of dialog and comradeship still prevails and will be victorious in the end.

In addition, the pardon is a Christian seed whose fruit is deeply humanistic. The "new man" does not arise from hate--the effects of which are always destructive--but from love, which is always creative. And love is not defined by romantic gestures, but by respect, understanding and forgiveness of the other person, since we all have faults and can all be redeemed.

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT HANDLING OF INFLATION

Lima EXPRESO in Spanish 16 Nov 80 p 35

[Article by Humberto Li Verastegui: "Is There a Plan Against Inflation?"]

> [Text] Some commentators have stated in different ways that it is very difficult for the constitutional government to reduce the suffocating inflation to the promised rate of 40 percent in 1981.
> Some of the main criticisms are harsh: for example, lack of a strategy and a monetary program--that is, a monetary budget.

Nevertheless, the boys at the Central Reserve Bank under Richard Webb say, not smugly but optimistically, that the plans are made and approved and the first corrective measures--like the tariff policy--are part of the plan.

They state that the strategy is very simple. It is based on the reduction of liquidity and control of the issue of money through the use of three major instruments: balance of payments, public expenditure and neutralization of additional monetization through short-term capital (especially financing of imports and exports).

Declining Dollar

As to the balance of payments which can be simplified by describing it as the balance among goods, services and capital that come in and go out, Richard Webb, president of the emission institute, said that the surplus in dollars provoked by the boom in exports (more than $4 billion) should decrease through the liberalization of imports (about $2 billion). This provides the justification for the new tariff policy as well as other measures like the bilateral agreements to be signed with the countries of the Andean Group.

The long-term foreign debt plays an important role in the balance of payments. Therefore, the main task for Webb and his boys is to keep the offer of credit from private foreign banks and suppliers--of which there are too many--from dazzling Belaunde's ministers who want to make history as quickly as possible. The optimum level of long-term foreign debt is allegedly between $500 and $600 million.

Concerning the pressure of the public sector, the problem is an eventual deficit included in the budget bill. The deficit can be caused either by overestimating income or by budgeting expenditures above the level of estimated monetary expansion.

Fear of Deficit

The main problem is to insure that the planned financing through foreign debt—80 billion soles—is not based on intentions but on contracted loans. The boys at the Central Reserve Bank say that the loans are a reality.

The other side of the coin in the fiscal deficit is the increased demand of almost all the ministries and public agencies. There is no backward movement; the ministers and top officials will have to adapt to the indicated "ceiling."

Another anti-inflationary instrument is to achieve a real rate of exchange that eliminates the present underevaluation of the dollar. Added to the existing negative interest rates, this creates a speculative situation (obtaining loans in soles to buy dollars and deposit them for a net gain of 70 percent), provokes a lack of savings in soles and, even worse, accelerates the displacement of money. Everyone knows it is better to spend than save under the present conditions. If the presence of "inflationary expectations"—the preconceived idea that inflation will have to increase because of the increase caused by the liberalization—is added to this, it is easy to conclude that it is not enough for the Central Reserve Bank to correctly manage the primary expansion of the circulating currency. It is also necessary that the government carry out the activities proposed by the emission institute.

Looking at the Rural Sector

Consistency—the key to success or failure in economics—is put to the test daily. That is probably the reason a joint team of top officials from the economic, financial and trade sector on one side and the Ministry of Agriculture and Nutrition on the other have lost a week putting together the Law for Agricultural Promotion and Development which was promulgated as a legislative decree by parliamentary delegation. The first version of it had been rejected by Ulloa and his team because of the agricultural tax, credit and marketing aspects.

Those who head the so-called "economic team" are convinced that, at the beginning of next year, inflation will decrease because the rising pressure caused by liberalization will have spent itself. It will enter a stage of stabilization based on agriculture, agroindustry and exports. Concerning the new economic stage, it was indicated that it is indispensable to keep the dollar at its real value. Otherwise, it would hurt exporters—who are mainly members of agricultural cooperatives, not old-time sugar and cotton barons—and foreign producers would be subsidized. This would hurt the truly national industries which do not have unreasonable tariff protection.

BRITISH TO PARTICIPATE IN DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 17

[Text] A new refinery will be built on the Peruvian coast by PETROPERU [State Petroleum Agency]. It will have the capacity to refine 80,000 barrels of crude oil a day.

The project which means an investment of $240 million responds to the estimates of a growing demand for derivatives by 1986 and 1987.

The plant should start operating then, according to the plans considered by PETROPERU.

This announcement was made yesterday as part of the talks officials of the Ministry of Energy and Mines, Ministry of Housing and Construction and Ministry of Transportation and Communications held with members of a British mission which is visiting the country to discuss national development.

There was a report on the construction project for a small complex to produce 100,000 tons of lubricants per year and 20,000 tons of paraffin.

Although the amount to be invested—some $210 million—was announced, the location was not specified. Feasibility studies will begin in 1981.

Concerning transportation and communications, engineer Nicolas Urtado revealed that a new field and terminal for national flights will be constructed next to the Jorge Chavez Airport.

He also announced government plans to provide airports with adequate installations in Huanuco, Tarapoto, Tingo Maria and Pucallpa and to begin expansion of the port of Matarani.

In the energy field, construction projects for short-term powerplants (Chiclayo, Piura, Arequipa and Cusco), medium-term powerplants (Alto Chicama and La Libertad) and hydroelectric powerplants like Chorro in Santa, Olmos in Lambayeque and Sheque in Mantaro were announced.

The talks emphasized mining projects like the second stage of Cerro Verde which will permit an annual production of 60,000 tons of copper concentrates and the exploitation of Tintaya (50,000 tons of copper concentrate per year) and Antamina (30,000 tons of refined copper per year).

At the end of the talks, the British mission headed by E. M. Lewis showed its interest in making more extensive contacts to finance the cited projects.

FURTHER NATIONALIZATION DENIED BY FISHING MINISTER

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 11 Nov 80 p 6

[Text] Rene Deustua, minister of fisheries, revealed yesterday that the position of the SNP [National Fishing Association] is "truly ridiculous." He stated that "it is not true" that there is an attempt "to nationalize" this activity.

He also said that other than PESCAPERU [State Fishmeal and Fish Oil Production Agency], PEPESCA [Peruvian Mixed Fisheries Enterprise] and CERPER [Public Enterprise for Fishing Certificiates] which are public enterprises, "we are not planning to nationalize any enterprise. It is ridiculous to think that we are going to return to an erroneous policy."

The minister of fisheries revealed that this does not mean that the interests of the state will not be protected. "We are going to take care of national assets," he said.

He added: "This means putting these state enterprises on their feet so that they are profitable and businesslike."

Minister Deustua called the SNP position "intransigent" since it "publishes communiques that cost a lot of money."

He indicated: "That money would be better spent if it were allocated to the popular cooperation program, for example."

He said that a large amount of money is being spent in that campaign to try to discredit the government, using language that is not appropriate for people of that type, alluding to the SNP directors.

Minister Deustua later stated that, between the SNP and the government, "there are three fundamental differences. The first is the fine imposed on the trawlers which set an example but was not excessive because we did not want to bankrupt the companies. That is not the policy of the government.

"Secondly, they say that I did not let them market their products. We are talking specifically about fishmeal. By law, this has to be marketed by PESCAPERU. I cannot break the law to make them right although I do not discard the possibility that the law could be changed," he added.

"The other point is related to the opening of fishing in Ilo which responds to a need to catch fish in the border zone," he stated.

Finally the minister said that he will continue in his position. "I have not come to serve the SNP or the trawlers or anyone," he stated categorically.

He stated that he is not committed to anyone. As a member of Popular Action for several years, "I am here to help President Fernando Belaunde Terry from the Ministry of Fisheries and I am trying to do it the best I can."

GUERRILLA GROUP ACTIVITY--Alfredo Olivera Rodriguez, subprefect of the city of Huancayo, reported today the presence of guerrilla groups in the areas of Panti, Pariahuanca, Pucuta and Santo Domingo de Ancobamba, located on the border between Junin and Huancavelica. Olivera Rodriguez made the announcement upon returning from the area, where for 8 days he visited several places receiving extensive information on the work of political and municipal authorities of districts and villages in the jurisdiction of Huancayo. He said that included in the information he received there was a report about the existence of armed groups, possibly at the height of training, in moutainous regions of very difficult access. Subsequently the subprefect of Huancayo announced that according to his information the armed civilian groups belong to the terrorist organization called "Shining Path" and might have ties with groups discovered in other places of the country's central region. He also stated that those guerrilla groups might have the support of communist elements, who years ago had traveled to study in Cuba and Moscow and then returned to promote subversion in our country. Those instigators could be the ones presently engaged in the training of guerrilla groups that Alfredo Olivera Rodriguez had uncovered in his recent trip. He concluded by recalling that it was also in the area of Pucuta, during the previous administration of architect Fernando Belaunde Terry, where a similar guerrilla movement was discovered and fought by the armed forces. INCREASED NONTRADITIONAL EXPORTS--Arequipa, 13 Nov--Mr Leslie Bierce Diez Canseco, president of FOPEX [Nontraditional Export Fund], said today in Arequipa that nontraditional exports of Peruvian products will reach the record figure of $1 billion by the end of 1980. After signing an agreement with the Arequipa Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Bierce Diez Canseco stated: "As of July 1980, nontraditional exports totaled $565 million, almost as much as nontraditional exports for all of 1979. Based on this, we feel that these exports will go over $1 billion by December 1980," he added. He pointed out the notable increase in nontraditional exports; 7 years ago they only totaled $68 million. He also indicated that there are 800 industrial enterprises in the country with the opportunity to export their products to the best markets in the world. "As of July 1980, nontraditional exports represented 21 percent of all Peruvian exports." He also stated that textile and fishing products are the largest categories of exports and FOPEX is now encouraging exports from the craftwork sector. The agreement signed by Bierce Diez Canseco and Alfredo Bustamante Bustamante for the Arequipa Chamber of Commerce and Industry was named after Edgardo Bedoya Forga, a recently deceased Arequipa industrialist. That agreement will establish a permanent exhibit in Arequipa of articles manufactured in the country. Arequipa's participation in international fairs and events will also be coordinated. OPPOSITION DAC WINS ELECTION ON TOBAGO

[Text] Scarborough, Tobago, Nov. 25 (CANA): The opposition Democratic Action Congress (DAC) led by former Deputy Prime Minister A. N. R. Robinson last night defeated Prime Minister Eric Williams People's National Movement (PNM) in an election billed to give this section of the twin-island state, Trinidad and Tobago, more control of its affairs.

The DAC won eight of the 12 seats up for grabs in a new Tobago house of assembly that replaces the country council and will carry out the government's economic policies here, as well as initiate development projects on the 116-square-mile holiday island.

The other seats went to the PNM.

Thirty-two candidates faced a 24,500-strong electorate. The main parties each fielded 12 candidates, with the other running on a Fargo House Movement (FHM) ticket.

More than 50 percent of the electorate voted, according to electoral officials, in what has been described by the government as a move to give Tobagonians more control over their affairs than they had for the 92 years that followed Britain's anexation of Tobago to Trinidad.

The DAC today listed the development of agriculture and tourism among its priorities.

Robinson listed unemployment, poor educational opportunities, and inadequate industrial development among the problems which his administration would face.

Robinson also said today that his party intends to lodge a strong protest with the elections and boundaries commission over "very severe and blatant irregularities" which took place during the poll.

He was not satisfied with the electoral process in some districts, especially Scarborough, where the DAC candidate Eulda Jack, lost to the Peoples National Movement (PNM) Beatrice Julien by 29 votes. Jack polled 724 votes and Julien 753.

"We are going to take efforts in order to get the Scarborough seat," he said, adding: "persons who were eligible to vote, whose names were on the preliminary list, who had their identification cards, who turned up to vote, found that the names were not on the final list."

Simeon Alexander, one of the commissioners of the elections, however, said the Elections and Boundaries Commission was satisfied with the conduct of the polls. Alexander disclosed that the commission had received one complaint and that it was dealt with expeditiously. He made no further comment.

Robinson said that he would take his protest as far as the Privy Council if the need arose.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE RACKET UNCOVERED BY FRAUD SQUAD

Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 26 Nov 80 p 9

[Text] PORT-OF-SPAIN, Trinidad, Nov. 25 (CANA):

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO'S fraud squad has uncovered a big foreign exchange racket here in which more than TT$120 million (US$50 million) in hard currency is believed to have left the country illegally, senior police officials confirmed today.

Investigations headed by Acting Police Superintendent Hugh Roach turned up what the police said was a conspiracy by a group of local businessmen and a civil servant attached to the Ministry of Industry and Commerce, to defraud the country of large sums of foreign exchange.

According to the police, the civil servant sold stamped official forms authorizing the export of foreign exchange to a syndicate of local businessmen, who in turn auctioned the forms to the highest bidders.

In one incident involving a local businessman, who obtained US$600,000 from a local bank ostensibly to purchase goods after presenting one such form, it was later discovered that the form had not been authorized by the competent officer.

It was also found that the company in whose name the form was made out was non-existent. Similarly a company in the USA which was to supply the goods did not exist.

A leading commercial banker explained to CANA, that for quite some time local businessmen have been breaching the foreign exchange act and getting hard currency out of the country very freely.

He said many businessmen were establishing "paper companies" in the USA and applying to the Ministry of Industry and Commerce for foreign currency to purchase goods from their own companies.

"They apply for US$600,000 for the purpose of buying equipment. They then buy the equipment second hand, but their own paper company sends a bill for the full amount. The difference, usually around 225,000 dollars is then stashed away in a U.S. bank."

COLOMBIAN 'WARMONGERING' SECTORS--Venezuela has always espoused a peaceful foreign policy. When Venezuelan soldiers have gone beyond our borders, like in the time of the good wars [Guerra Buena], it has been to take independence, freedom and a message of improvement to the other Latin American countries. This was stated by President Luis Herrera Campins in his Christmas message to the Barcelona garrison in Anzoategui state, responding to statements made by Colombian warmongering sectors who are interested in provoking an armed conflict between the two countries. [Begin Herrera recording] Venezuela has always espoused a peaceful foreign policy. When Venezuelan soldiers have gone beyond our borders, like in the time of the good wars, it has been to take independence, freedom and a message of improvement to the other Latin American countries. That is why we are pleased and truly proud of the fact that Bolivar is not only the father of Venezuela; he is also the liberator of Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Panama, and the creator, along with sucre, of the Republic of Bolivia. No other figure on our continent has a comparable history, full of so much meaning and dignity. Venezuelans have to live up to this history and not merely remember it as something already accomplished and of the past.. We have to project it in its entire scope, and this requires our constant attention as well as continuous actions from the generations to come. MEXICAN-COSTA RICAN AGREEMENT--Mexico and Costa Rica have signed an agreement whereby Mexican Petroleum (PEMEX) will undertake exploration in the regions of Talamanca and Llanura de Santa Clara in order to give a boost to the knowledge of the geological characteristics of Latin America. The state enterprises of the two nations, Mexican Petroleum and the Costa Rican Petroleum Refinery, agreed to safeguard the sovereignty and liberty of both sides so that the bilateral accord will not hurt them. According to PEMEX, the pact adheres to the principles of international cooperation of the World Energy Plan of the Mexican president, Jose Lopez Portillo. With regard to the regional aspect, the decentralized enterprise adds that the agreement implements and extends some of the provisions of the San Jose Agreement which Mexico and Venezuela signed in order to promote the knowledge of the geological characteristics of Latin America. That knowledge has been expanding in recent years. In that agreement, Mexico and Venezuela committed themselves to delivering crude oil to Central American and Caribbean nations at international prices, granting credit for 5-year periods for 30 percent of the oil bill, with annual interest rates of only 4 percent and the possibility of extending the period to 20 years if the credit is specifically limited to energy. In the pact signed yesterday, PEMEX agreed to provide consultation and supervision for exploration projects; evaluate the electrical records of the wells drilled; draw up a superficial geological program; and commission a Mexican geologist to coordinate the projects for the study of transversal sections, etc. Costa Rica, for its part, agreed to pay PEMEX for the expenses involved in the projects through the Compania Mexicana de Exploraciones, S. A., and to provide the auxiliary technical, administrative and field personnel required, as well as materials and equipment. [Text] [Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 7 Nov 80 p 1-B, 4-B] 8926

DIAZ: WE WILL NOT SPECULATE WITH OIL PRICES

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 29 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Estela Vaylon]

[Text] Mexico will maintain its supply and demand policy, and will not speculate with its oil prices, asserted the director of Mexican Petroleum (PEMEX), Jorge Diaz Serrano, yesterday. He was interviewed moments before the beginning of the meeting on productivity in the semi-state sector which was held at the National Productivity Center.

Diaz Serrano repeated that in no way will oil production for export be stepped up due to the conflict between Iran and Iraq. That issue was amply covered in his recent visit to Tokyo, where a request was made that production be increased. Diaz Serrano remarked that Japan is one of the largest consumers of petroleum, using more than 5,000 barrels a day.

He added that it is impossible for Mexico to raise its production levels, which have already been augmented from 90,000 barrels in 1976 to the current level of over 1 million barrels. Intensive and accelerated oil exploitation should not be our goal; the important thing is not to stop working in the exploratory phase, which is essential to the petroleum industry. Moreover, he made it clear that to produce more for export is not just a question of opening a valve; there must be a large-scale operation, and at present that is not possible.

Concerning the prices of this important source of energy, Diaz Serrano stated that the law of supply and demand will be adhered to, and that Mexico will most assuredly not enter the oil price speculation market.

With regard to the prices of gasoline on the domestic market, without going into much detail he explained that PEMEX' studies of this matter have been turned over to the Intersecretarial Commission on Rates of the Public Sector, where they will be examined.

He stressed that the matter of price adjustments on the domestic market is very delicate, and the commission will be the one to give more details later.

The price of oil is not floating, said the PEMEX director. It is set at $34.50 for light crude, and $29.00 for heavier crude.

He explained that perhaps later ideas can be expressed about new prices for exported petroleum, but that depends on what happens by the end of the war. Even so, at least a year will have to pass, because the countries now engaged in hostilities will be licking their wounds. Nothing can be said right now.

In the case of Petronor, the Spanish oil enterprise 19 percent of whose stock Mexico may purchase, the director of PEMEX commented that our country does have that option, and will exercise it at the appropriate time.

For now, it will continue to talk with Spanish representatives to seek a solution that will benefit both nations.

PEMEX GAS PIPELINE NETWORK DISCUSSED

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 4 Nov 80 Sec A pp 1, 9

[Text] The director of Mexican Petroleum [PEMEX], Jorge Diaz Serrano, stated that by 1990, the national pipeline network will be 35,100 kilometers long and have a capacity to transport 115 billion kilometer tons, which represents a capacity three times larger than the railroad installed capacity up until 1979 and equal to that of the highway system, comprised of 200,000 kilometers, contributing to the uncrowding of both communications routes.

This system already has 15,800 kilometers, and plans call for the construction of an additional 19,300 kilometers during the present decade, according to the official, who spoke at the ceremony initiating the work on construction of the gas pipeline between Salamanca and Leon, Guanajuato, in the presence of the state governor, Enrique Velasco Ibarra.

The PEMEX director commented that, "Upon including the town of Leon in the National Gas Distribution System, we are making available to the industry that may wish to become established here an essential energy for its development, which will have a preferential price in this area."

He explained that the gas pipeline system with which PEMEX supplies natural gas to many of the nation's states has made it possible to use a cleaner and non-polluting energy; something which is an advantage to all existing human settlements and those that may be established in the industrial sphere of influence.

He noted that the volume to be carried through the pipes has been planned on the basis of the country's needs and, insofar as natural gas is concerned, our current production of 3.3 billion cubic feet per day, makes it possible to meet the present domestic demand and that to be generated by the new development poles.

Diaz Serrano gave a reminder that the Antonio M. Amor Refinery, located in Salamanca, was the most important one built completely by PEMEX after expropriation, and its refining capacity, in the space of 30 years, increased from 25,000 to 200,000 barrels per day.

He remarked that the amount of the PEMEX investment in Guanajuato has given an impetus to the state's economy. "We are not unaware of the state's large potential for economic development, because its activities have always been highly diversified."

And he said: "Although mining at present is not as important as it was in the past, other branches of industry such as agriculture, livestock raising and the agricultural-livestock, food, clothing, hide tanning and footwear industries have caused the state to be supported on the basis of a sound economy."

He went on to say that the level reached to date affords a hint of all that can still be achieved by giving a greater stimulus to all its sectors, and thereby creating new sources of employment.

Moreover, he pointed out: "It is not healthy to be monoproducers in the rural areas, but the activity of a town should not be limited to a single branch of industry either."

In conclusion, he explained that the gas pipeline that will extend from Salamanca to Leon will be 90 kilometers long, with a diameter of 10 inches, which will give it a capacity to transport 75 million cubic feet per day. The estimated cost of the project will be 120 million pesos, and it will go into operation in mid-1981, supplying the business establishments set up in Leon, Irapuato, Silao and Guanajuato.

JUAREZ-CHIHUAHUA GAS PIPELINE DUE IN MARCH

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 12 Nov 80 Sec A p 2

[Text] The director of Mexican Petroleum, Jorge Diaz Serrano, announced yesterday that, in March of next year, the gas pipeline between Juarez and Chihuahua would go into operation and would be extended as far as Sonora, gradually forming a gas distribution network in the strategic areas for the state's industrialization.

The foregoing announcement was made during a work meeting in Hermosillo, Sonora, attended by the state governor, Samuel Ocana Garcia, and representatives from industry, agriculture and mining in the state, who cited their needs for industrial and domestic natural gas.

During the function, the PEMEX director reported that the gas pipeline to Ciudad Juarez would be completely finished in March 1981, and from there it will be extended to Naco and Nogales on the Sonora border. He said that while the gas pipeline is under construction, a gas exchange system with the United States would be in operation.

He said that Mexico will deliver gas to that neighboring country at Reynosa, and will received United States gas at Naco, in Sonora. Thus, in a totally rational and logical manner, the two countries will be meeting pressing needs for this type of energy, and will be giving each other mutual assistance in overcoming obstacles such as the distance between the sources of supply and the consumption centers.

Diaz Serrano said that, when this gas pipeline is built, Sonora will be equipped to plan new investments and to expand the ones that it has made.

This industry, which now ranks fifth in the world insofar as production is concerned, and sixth on the basis of the volume of its proven reserves, has as its sole purpose to help break our age-old bottlenecks and to foster the development of our productive activities, not only those of an industrial type, but also agricultural, for which increasing volumes of fertilizer are being supplied.

DRILLING COMPANIES SAID TO COVER UP ACCIDENTS

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 29 Oct 80 Sec A p 16

[Text] Dr Augusto Podio, a researcher from the University of Austin, claimed that the international drilling companies are concealing information about oil-related accidents, and hence no statistics are available in this regard, despite the fact that, during recent years, there have been over 300 cases of wells going out of control.

Engineer Gustavo Ponce Maldonado, an official from the Federal Electricity Commission [CFE], for his part, stated that in spite of the fact that the field of geothermy is quite extensive, and could supply large volumes of energy supplies, this potential has not been developed and it has been neglected.

Both technicians made these statements upon being interviewed during the convening of the Second Latin American Drilling Congress, organized jointly by Mexican Petroleum and the Mexican Petroleum Institute.

At the outset, Dr Podio upheld the need for oil companies all over the world to provide systematic information on the explosions of wells that they encounter; because from the studies made to date in this regard it is impossible to draw any conclusions which could resolve this type of accident.

He claimed that the frequency of the accidents is greater than it should be; but the fact is that there is a lack of information on the accidents, because the only thing known about them is when and where they occurred, which is all that the United States drilling companies will provide.

He noted that, in the case of the Latin American oil companies, this situation should not be present; because there is state participation in all of them, and it is precisely the authorities who would benefit from exchanging this type of information, in order to preclude further problems.

He maintained that, of all the accidents recorded, taking into account those which last 15 minutes or longer, only between 10 and 15 percent are known. He said that, therefore, there have been over 300 cases during the past 20 years, but there is no information about them.

For his part, engineer Gustavo Ponce Maldonado, from CFE, declared that geothermy is still excluded from the programs to develop alternate sources of energy, in spite of the fact that it is cheap, and could provide a large portion of the generation that is currently being obtained from hydrocarbons.

He announced that CFE has conducted research on its utilization, but that the budgets available are limited; and he also noted that, in order to achieve complete development, a budget equivalent to that needed for the construction of another Mexican Petroleum would be required.

PEMEX TO SELL OIL TO INDIA, SWEDEN, EL SALVADOR

Mexico City EXCELSIOR in Spanish 11 Nov 80 Sec A p 4

[Text] Starting on 1 January 1981, Mexican Petroleum [PEMEX] will sell crude to India, Sweden and El Salvador, thereby increasing its exports to slightly over 1.15 million barrels per day.

The contracts were signed at noon yesterday by representatives from the oil companies of those nations, and by engineer Juan Aizpuru Viesca, PEMEX's foreign trade manager.

These contracts initially represent 87,000 more barrels of exports per day, plus 20,000 which will be supplied to Brazil starting next year, making a total of 40,000.

The contract was signed for the sale of crude with the Indian Oil Corporation, which will receive 30,000 barrels per day. The document was signed for that company by Mr C.R. Das Gupta, in the presence of that nation's deputy minister of petroleum, B.B. Vohra.

In all the contracts signed by PEMEX, there is a guarantee with the oil purchasers that the final destination of the fuel will be the same country which purchased it so as to avoid triangulation.

70,000 Barrels to Sweden

Insofar as Sweden is concerned, the transaction carried out was for the sale of 70,000 barrels per day, of which amount only 50,000 will be delivered in 1981.

A total of 20,000 barrels will be sold to the Svenska Petroleum company, and 30,000 to Ok-Oljeconsumenternas Forbund. The contracts were signed by the heads of those companies, the Messrs Gunnar Nermanck and Lennart Andersson, respectively.

Furthermore, there was implementation of the San Jose Accord, whereby Mexico and Venezuela promised to supply oil to the Central American and Caribbean nations, in accordance with the theory that fuel is an asset of mankind, as President Lopez Portillo stated at the United Nations.

According to the contract signed yesterday by Guillermo Diaz Salazar, head of the Rio Lempa Hydroelectric Executive Committee state enterprise, Mexico pledges to sell to El Salvador 7,000 barrels of crude per day, which will meet 50 percent of the needs of that Central American nation. Venezuela will provide the rest.

The official report did not disclose whether preferential prices would be given to El Salvador.

P R C PROSPECTING INVITATION--Mexico received an invitation from the Peoples Republic of China to participate in the oil exploration program it is developing on its continental shelf. Officials are also studying the possibility of exchanging oil technology and training with that nation, according to Mexican Petroleum (PEMEX). Upon informing the public of this invitation, the official oil enterprise indicated that the major companies of the United States have been making arrangements to be able to operate in the South China Sea. Companies from England and France have also been trying to negotiate such a deal, particularly with regard to the east coast. They are trying to establish the terms of the risk contracts that these agreements involve. The same PEMEX communique states that the visit by the director of the enterprise, Jorge Diaz Serrano, to the Peoples Republic of China, came to an end yesterday. The above-mentioned results are some of the issues that were resolved during the working tour. Diaz Serrano met with the vice-prime minister, Khan Sien, and leaders of the Chinese oil industry. He also toured the Renciu oilfield, which is the second largest producer in that country. PEMEX reported that during the director's stay, the desire of Mexico and China to exchange technology and training was reaffirmed. END OF PEMEX JALISCO PROSPECTING--Guadalajara, Jalisco--In the area where PEMEX was drilling the Jalisco well, the well has been sealed and all the machinery, equipment, drilling rigs and units that were used for exploration have been removed. The land has been cordoned off with a wire fence. But the exploration and study crews up to a week ago were still moving through the area of Tamazula de Gordiano, Jalisco, and many technicians even established residence there for more than 2 months, according to Dr Daniel Torres Alcaraz. Apparently the geologists penetrated deep into the Tigre mountains and the plains of the Tamazula and Tuxpan Rivers, as well as the areas of Ciudad Guzman, Zapotiltic, Mazamitla and Concepcion de Buenos Aires, Jalisco, without making any commitment, much less indicating whether any more exploratory drilling will be done in that region, stated the spokesman. Nothing has been said about the results obtained at Jalisco I in Pihuamo, Jalisco, except that a depth of 1,620 meters was reached. Different, contradictory reports can be obtained from locals, without any precise details. Municipal authorities of Pihuamo even express their surprise that the well was sealed and the land fenced in but there is no security in the area. That adds credence to the rumor that nothing was found there. PEMEX technicians left Tamazula de Gordiano, Jalisco a week and a half ago without leaving any indication of what they found in terms of possible oil deposits in the region. MATERIALS FOR OIL INDUSTRY USE--Puerto Ordaz, 16 Nov--A significant increase in the daily production of finished goods for the petroleum industry has been achieved by the workers of the pipe factory of Siderurgica del Orinoco. The chief of the small rolling mill of that factory, David Ribero, reported that on 21 and 22 October, the steel workers produced 161 and 168 tons, respectively, which meant a jump in production compared to the 1979 record of 145 tons. "These achievements," he said, "are due to the combined effort of the production and maintenance personnel, with whom we have formed a solid team to reach the 16,500 tons of finished goods that would enable us to surpass 1979 production levels by 4,500 tons. That would be the best yield of this mill in the last 10 years. These production figures are very significant, because we are dealing with 3½ inch steel, which requires a special process because the pipes must meet certain quality control standards in order to be used in the difficult job of oil drilling. Therefore, it is one of the most expensive products made in this factory." The chief of the rolling mills of the Orinoco Iron and Steelworks (SIDOR) pipe factory announced that the goal for 1981 is 20,000 tons. Personnel have been trained in key positions in order to meet this challenge. He appeared very optimistic about this year's commitment, because of the 16,500 tons expected to be produced, 13,000 tons have already been produced so far this year. The SIDOR Pipe Products Plant has three rolling mills called the Large, Medium and Small Mills, or the Thrust Bank, which process semifinished pipes of different kinds of steel. This allows for a great variety of products of varying lengths, diameters and resistances. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 17 Nov 80 Sec 1 p 13] 8926

CARDON REFINERY EXPANSION--Punto Fijo, 10 Nov--The Maraven enterprise issued a press release announcing that work on its new lubricant packaging plant at the Cardon Refinery is progressing quite well. Eliecer Silva, chief of the project, stated that work is now being done to prepare the building for the temporary offices, dressing rooms, dining room, warehouse and workshop. The foundations of the tank and buildings are 50 percent completed. Technicians began erecting the first structures of the plant, which will have a capacity four times that of the present plant. The new plant for mixing and packaging lubricants from the Cardon Refinery is located outside the industrial area, and occupies an area of approximately 14 hectares. The release concludes that its production will help meet the increasing demand for lubricants on the national market. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 11 Nov 80 Sec 2 p 26] 8926

LIGHT CRUDE DISCOVERED IN ZULIA--Major light crude oil deposits were discovered by Meneven at the Ceuta field at Lake Maracaibo, announced Dr Bernardo Diaz Lyon yesterday. Dr Diaz Leon is the president of that subsidiary of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. Exploratory well 77-Z-9X resulted in the discovery of several deposits with significant amounts of light crude in deep eocenic formations in the southwestern part of the Ceuta field. The well reached a depth of 15,935 feet, and is located approximately 2.5 kilometers from exploratory well 77-Z-4X, which was also productive. The production potential of one of the geological horizons evaluated is 5,368 barrels (five thousand three hundred sixty-eight) per day. Its characteristics exceed expectations about the area, and will corroborate further the potential of the deep eocene of the Ceuta anticline. The crude is a light type, with a gravity of 30.2 degrees API. This discovery enhances the prospects of finding hydrocarbons with similar characteristics not only in the area under exploration, but also in the area that is currently being exploited, whose eocenic section has not yet been drilled. OIL SEARCH OFF TRINIDAD--Maturin, 8 Nov--Preparations are being made on all levels to begin an oil drilling program in the Venezuelan territorial sea and along the border with the neighboring island of Trinidad. "Now we are going south of Trinidad, and we will drill our first well in this area this very month," said a Lagoven spokesman here. That company is in charge of developing the offshore exploration program on the eastern continental shelf. Reportedly, everything is being done very carefully in order to avoid any problems related to the proximity of the area in question to Trinidad. At this time Lagoven is drilling the Plata 1 well, very close to Trinidad but in the Gulf of Paria. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 9 Nov 80 p 1] 8926

LIGHT CRUDE DISCOVERED IN MARACAIBO--The Ministry of Energy and Mines, in its Weekly Newsletter (revised since yesterday), reports that Corpoven, a subsidiary of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc., has found light crude oil in a well drilled in the Maracaibo Basin at a depth of 16,443 feet. The crude apparently has no sulphur content. The report indicates that the well in question is the 30-F-IX "new field exploratory" well, which was drilled to the limestone of the cretaceous layer. Production tests yielded a very positive result: an average of 4,155 barrels per day of crude rated at 27.7 degrees API, and some 509 cubic feet of incorporated gas per barrel produced. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 9 Nov 80 Sec 1 p 1] 8926

SIMULTANEOUS STEAM INJECTION--Lagoven, a Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. subsidiary, has begun to use simultaneous steam injection in twin wells. This new system has been developed in this country and is being used for the first time in national and international lake and maritime areas. The system, which was used on Barge C-7089 of the Lagoven Production Organization (which is operating in Lake Maracaibo), is an interesting and effective contribution by Venezuelan engineers and technicians to the world oil industry. The method in question allows for the integral use of injection equipment, reducing the associated costs and optimizing the heat cycles of the deposit, according to Lagoven spokesmen. The simultaneous injection of two wells is being evaluated. Initial tests made on Barge C-7089 have been satisfactory. As a result, Lagoven intends to apply the system to another barge that is operating now, as well as four more that are on the drawing boards and will begin operating in late 1981. This innovative method of injection and production will be very useful to the national oil industry, which is making every effort to step up secondary recovery programs in order to obtain a higher yield from deposits by means of the injection of fluids to increase the final amount of oil recovered from those reserves. The injection modification project on the above-mentioned barge consists basically of the addition of a new steam injection line to the unit by installing a system of prefabricated pipes, with individual control of the steam going to the wells. The new system thus allows the deposit to be stimulated from two sides. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 13 Nov 80 Sec 1 p 23] 8926

The organization contends that the struggle being fought by those patriots in the neighboring country should be militantly defended by all proponents of democracy in the world. The Committee of Solidarity with Haiti demanded that President Duvalier immediately release all political prisoners, including journalist Silverio Claude and his daughter. It stated that the dictatorship which is oppressing the Haitian people is not content with having killed other members of the Claude family, and now it is imprisoning others without justification. It adds that Duvalier Jr. and the so-called elites of Haiti are at the service of the transnational enterprises that monopolize tourism in that nation and use the proletariat as cheap labor in free zones and on sugar plantations. PRESS ITEMS DEPICT CRISIS IN UNIVERSITY SECTOR

Complaint to Economy Minister

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 35

[Text] The minister of Culture and Education, Juan Rafael Llerena Amadeo, called on the minister of Economy, Jose Alfredo Martinez de Hoz, last night, for the purpose of finding a solution to the critical budgetary situation affecting the administration of the national education system, according to what was revealed by a reliable source.

Llerena Amadeo has been faced, in the last few months, with situations stemming from an almost total scarcity of funds as a result of the fact that this year the Treasury Secretariat did not grant Culture and Education the budgetary aids for June and October.

The budgetary shortage has already caused some serious difficulties in the administration of the national education system, according to what was stated by a source in education to NA [expansion unknown].

That source stated that "for 6 months now, the ministry has not been sending to the schools the expenditure allotments that it should send quarterly."

Preservation and operation of the buildings depends specifically on that allotment. The situation described affects all the national secondary schools.

It is stated that "the shortage of funds is most noticeable in the state universities" and that, "as was said weeks ago, some universities do not have enough funds to pay the expenses required by public services," still according to the source. The Universities of Salta and of Mar del Plata, among others, are said to be in this situation.

Universities

The most serious revelation on this situation was made by the president of the Council of National University Rectors (CRUN), Guillermo Gallo, during a conversation that he had with NA on 22 October.

At that time, Gallo said that "if certain budgetary difficulties are not reversed shortly, it is going to be very difficult to run the universities, because economic problems give rise to other kinds of problems" and "in this way control may get out of their hands."

It was also stated that, "if things go on in this way, there will be no money for the ministers of Education of each province to come to Buenos Aires, next month, to hold the Assembly of the Federal Education Council."

CONICET [National Scientific and Technical Research Council]

The situation also affects the sphere of science, because the Treasury Secretariat has not released funds for a large number of research projects approved for the current fiscal year.

University Politization Predicted

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 11

[Article by "Observador"]

[Text] The main characteristic of the system that will govern the future activities of the University of Buenos Aires will consist in its being directly under the executive branch and, therefore, in its official politicalization. This is inferred from the information published so far on the forthcoming statutes of the institution of learning, prepared by high-level officials in the Ministry of Culture and Education and by specialists on the subject. Apparently, they have already been submitted to President Videla. In the sense indicated, the statutes do not deviate from what is specified by the present University Law. They limit themselves to specifying it detail and probably the same thing is true of the statutes stipulated for the other national universities. It is not necessary to go into an analysis of the whole legal-administrative mechanism of the document to observe that its sign is vertical, that is to say, direct subordination of the university authorities -- from the rectors down to the assistant professors -- to the executive branch.

Now then, this would not have to mean the most absolute politicalization of university activity, if it only were possible to conceive of an "apolitical" executive branch, that is to say not only officially removed from any public opinion trend, but, rather, consisting, also, of politically aseptic persons. A president who would not have the slightest ideological inclination in one direction or another. A minister of Education who would always have cast a blank ballot, and so on. That utopian creature not only does not exist today in this country, but it can also be regarded as certain that he will never exist. Therefore, subjecting the entire activity of the university to the discretion of the figures succeeding each other in the executive mansion means inoculating it to the highest possible degree with the virus of the worst politics. No aspect of academic activity, not even the purest or the most abstract, will be able to be exempt from "what is said" in the president's mansion.

Precisely, the main country in the world in which the executive branch injects itself down to the smallest details of academic activity is the Soviet Union. Not many years ago, an attempt to create an absurd "Marxist genetics," which, when applied to agricultural crops experimentally, yielded catastrophic results. On the other hand, the situation of Soviet scientists who dare to criticize the Kremlin's whims is all too well known.

By mere association of ideas, it would not be cause for amazement if, within some time, the Process would attempt to dictate its own laws on chemistry and physics.

Order For the Sake of Order Itself

Without doubt, other winds brought this mud. The period in which the students examined each other at cafe tables and spent less time with books than handling aerosol tubes is still fresh in our memory. It was "politicalization from the bottom" carried to its most unusual extremes. But the solution does not consist in decapitating the university and in depriving it of all academic freedom by politicizing it "from the top." The Ministry of Culture and Education consulted several hundred institutions and specialists, in due time, concerning what the future General Law on Edcuation should be like. In its reply, published on 7 June 1980, the National Academy of Fine Arts included this paragraph: "Experience shows, Mister Minister, that the reply given on some other occasion to the disorder prevailing in practically every institution of learning was not valid. Order was resorted to exclusively -- an undoubtedly necessary measure -- but, in view of the lack of renewed means that will also throw new light on a new course, order became an end in itself. Thus, creativity was exhausted and we went into mediocrity."

Toward Elitist Education

Some days ago, in Cordoba, the adviser to the Ministry of Culture and Education, Gonzalez Saborido, denied that there are plans for establishing an elitist university. Reference was made in those terms to the establishment of admission quotas in the universities and to the imminent payment for studies. As open to question as that private opinion may be, there is no doubt at all that, on the other hand, strict subordination of university activity to the executive branch will put in the hands of the executive new recourses to give education, if it so decides, an elitist orientation in the direction that it likes best. The bureaucrats' lethargy is proverbial, but their inventiveness for interposing formalities and conditions on stamped paper is no less proverbial. Once the mechanisms of university activity are subject to a politicalization imparted directly from the executive mansion, it takes little effort to imagine how much collaboration can come from a bureaucracy more or less terrified of "elitization" of studies.

There is no doubt that Lieutenant General Viola will receive, in March 1981, an instrument already made but red hot.

SUBVERSIVE PROPAGANDA IN SANTIAGO--Santiago, Chile, 4 Dec (AFP)--It has been reported here that an alleged leftist subversive command took over a bus full of workers to carry out a propaganda in support of 1,500 workers who today ended a long strike. The group, armed with machineguns, made up by three men and a woman first set street fires before taking over the bus in a neighborhood of the Chilean capital. Once inside the bus, the subversives unrolled a canvas with the words: let us support the Panal Company workers. They also handed out literature concerning the current labor plan, the new social security and the formation of a workers militia. It was reported by union sources that the Panal Company workers (Panamericana de algodones) returned to work today after 59 days of a legal strike in demand of wage increases. After the commando operation, called operation Juan Olivares, was carried out, police forces with the support of helicopters and security service personnel began an extensive operation in search for the subversive group. CLODOMIRO ALMEIDA CRITICIZES CONSTITUTION--Clodomiro Almeida, secretary general of the Socialist Party of Chile, has declared in Havana that the fraudulent approval of the draft constitution aimed at institutionalizing fascism in Chile opens a new phase in the Chilean people's struggle. The former foreign minister of the popular unity government added at a press conference that since the new constitution excludes [as heard] the people and their organizations, the people have the legitimate right to rebel against the constitution and to use all forms of combat against the fascist regime. He stressed that there are broad sectors of the Chilean people that are opposed to the military junta but they have not been mobilized against the junta and, therefore, work must be done to this end. TURBAY: NO MOBILIZATION ON VENEZUELAN BORDER

Bogota EL ESPECTADOR in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 1-A, 14-A

[Press conference given by President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala in the Dominican Republic on 3 November 1980]

[Text] President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala yesterday emphatically denied that troops had been mobilized on the Colombian-Venezuelan border, asserting that "there is a typesetting mobilization" by journalists.

"There have not been any incidents or troop mobilizations or anything like that," the president said at a press conference yesterday shortly before the close of his 4-day visit to the Dominican Republic.

The following are excerpts from the question-and-answer session between President Turbay and newsmen:

Newsman: Mr President, thank you very much for granting us this press conference as you prepare to leave the Dominican Republic. One of the most important issues currently being debated in Latin America in connection with relations between Colombia and Venezuela seems to be the status of borders in the ocean areas of Venezuela and Colombia. A news cable published today in Santo Domingo says that Venezuelan troops have been put on alert because there were troop movements on the Colombian-Venezuelan border. Could some sort of confrontation between Colombia and Venezuela arise on account of border disputes?

President: I get the impression that this is a typesetting mobilization, not at all a military mobilization. Our reports are that at no time has any order gone out in connection with what the press has said and that therefore Colombia's military authorities have opportunely rectified the situation. Everything is normal in relations with Venezuela, and we would have no need to mobilize troops because what we have been mobilizing is the fairness, affection, friendship and traditional brotherhood between our two countries, which have succeeded in demonstrating that it is easier to draw closer along that path than along the path of intimidation.

The U.S. Election

Newsman: Good day, Mr President. In view of the world situation, in which the two major blocs, that is to say, the United States and the Soviet Union, are battling for political hegemony, and given that there are not too many democratic regimes in our region, we would like to hear your opinion on the future of democracy in Latin America and the world. What is your view in this regard?

President: I have faith in the future of democracy. I know that it is the true way to achieve the goals of development with social justice. I do not think that the energies and creative capacity of the people can be developed under oppressive regimes. Therefore, I think that the terms and responsibilities of international cooperation have to be enhanced to help democratic countries or countries with democratic ambitions to adopt or strengthen the system, as the case may be. I do not think that the election in the United States, regardless of the results, is going to affect democratic systems. On the contrary, the invigorating example of a democratic face-off in the United States is once again demonstrating that it is up to the people to choose their leaders and that once the choice has been made, they have to be given firm, resolute and permanent support to perform their difficult tasks.

Newsman: Mr President, we would like to know what factors, in your judgment, could determine the establishment of a new economic order.

President: The factors are very well-known. The international conditions in which nations are at odds, social tensions, inequalities in terms of trade and the contrasts between the nations of the so-called developed north and the developing south, demonstrate that peace cannot be maintained unless those terms of trade are modified radically and unless efforts at international cooperation are made to provide an opportunity for involvement to the countries that are still outside the major decision-making of the world community. To me, the new international economic order must translate into more equitable conditions of trade, enhanced cooperation and technological and financial aid from the countries that can provide it to the ones that need it, so that we can do away with this civilization of contrasts in which affluent nations live side-by-side with poverty-stricken ones.

Drug Trafficking

Newsman: Mr President, for many years now our countries have been actively engaged in battling drugs. It so happens that much of the smuggled merchandise seized in our country has come from Colombia. We would like to know whether the Dominican Republic and Colombia have worked out some sort of plan to combat drug smuggling, especially marihuana.

President: Today the foreign relations ministers of Colombia and the Dominican Republic signed a treaty creating the mechanisms and establishing the commitments for the total eradication of drug trafficking.

But let me take this opportunity to tell you that the drug market is not, properly speaking, generated in Colombia; rather, these items have to pass through our territory also. The coca suppliers are located further south, but they have to pass through Colombian territory to get to their consumer market. We are victims of these circumstances and we are therefore exerting major efforts too. We have invited the countries to the south to work with us in shutting off this lethal trafficking, which not only harms drug addicts but also morally destroys many of the lower-level officials who handle customs and border matters.

Guerrillas and Human Rights

Newsman: President Turbay Ayala, why are there guerrillas in your country?

President: I would say that the guerrillas there are a very complex and hard-to-define matter. I do not rule out that there might be some idealists among them who think that it is easier to come to power by de facto, rather than de jure means. But guerrilla activities have in many cases also degenerated into common crimes. It could become a good livelihood for people who are making an industry out of the most disgraceful of all crimes: kidnaping.

Newsman: Mr President, you are a chief executive who has been elected by a vote of the people, but news cables often carry reports of alleged human rights violations in your country. I would like to know whether you feel that your administration is a democratic administration, whether Colombia is a democracy, bearing in mind that Colombia has been under martial law for many years.

President: I would be glad to answer you. A few days ago I read in the papers that the members of the opposition in the British Parliament were accusing Mrs Thatcher of encouraging violations of human rights. If this can happen in England, what couldn't the Colombian opposition say, which in a way is hinting at all these charges and is linked to a degree, at least emotionally, to the people who are physically part of the subversion. But I can tell you that there is no country with broader freedom of the press or greater respect for the dignity of the human person. This does not mean that Colombia is the waiting room for heaven, because it is inhabited by man and women who are members of the human race, which, as we know, has some shortcomings. Thus, lower-level authorities have unquestionably committed abuses of authority; this happens all over the world. It would be a serious thing if these cases were not investigated, sanctioned, punished. We do not claim to be a faultless realm, just a country with its shortcomings and virtues, with a great devotion to law and a great democratic tradition. So, go and spend some time in Colombia and you will see that correspondents are not always as objective as you are in practicing their profession.

Latin American Democracies

Newsman: Mr President, a few months ago a coup d'etat was staged in Bolivia; President Lidia Gueiler was deposed, and Mr Hernan Siles Suazo was prevented from taking office. What is your administration's stand regarding the military junta governing Bolivia?

President: Our stand has been voiced in numerous documents from the Andean region, when we met in Lima and then in Riobabma. Before that, in Panama, we had expressed our repudiation of the coup d'etat because that is not the way we think nations should get their leaders. We have nothing against saying that we are not at all pleased about the use of a coup d'etat as a political strategy.

Newsman: Sir, I would like to know whether you feel that the democratic governments of Latin America, like yours, are effective in tackling the problems of disenfranchisement and poverty, which as you admitted, are factors jeopardizing the social peace.

President: I have no doubts about it. As far as development models are concerned, the democratic model is much better than the totalitarian model, because it does not require the limitation or curbing of freedoms as a driving force. To me, the channeling of energies and their creativity depends a great deal on the climate of freedom surrounding these activities. Relative material development can be had where freedoms do not exist, but those of us who believe in cultural and spiritual values must always remind ourselves of the saying in the Gospel that "man does not live by bread alone."

Santa Marta Summit Meeting

Newsman: Could you tell us in advance some of the specific issues that will be taken up at the forthcoming Santa Marta summit?

President: Yes, of course. The specific issues that we will stress are: democracy, the new international economic order, the new dimension, the need to broaden involvement and the need to upgrade the status of the region's inhabitants. All of these things will be broached at the presidential summit meeting, which will also render homage to the Liberator, whose ideas still have currency and constitute the real avenues of the integration process going on in the Andean subregion.

Reelection

Newsman: Mr President, the issue of presidential reelection is much talked about in countries with democratic systems. Do have any views in this regard?

President: Several countries permit reelection, while others, such as Colombia, prohibit consecutive terms but not a second term after some time has passed. We can obviously not say that reelection is an undemocratic practice because the free Western World's leading democracy, the United States, allows reelection. Since a president is constitutionally limited to 8 years in office, in other words 2 terms, we could say that the president is elected for the two terms but if while on the job the people realize that he is inadequate, they dismiss him at the end of 4 years. The people confirm only the ones that have won their trust while in office. This is a democratic interpretation of what exists there. Moreover, under the American system the people elect their mayors and governors too, so the executive does not carry as much weight as in the countries in which the entire administrative retinue and the executive's representatives at all levels depend on who is chosen. But I think that you cannot have a fixed idea "per se" on the matter. Reelection is neither good nor bad. It should be considered with regard to the person who is or is not to be reelected, because one of the arguments against reelection is that a country ought to make use of intelligent people who could be very useful to it, or on the contrary a country could prevent its most experienced citizens from being used by turning to less qualified people on the sole condition that they have not previously been president. So this is an important issue that each nation has to resolve democratically. If a candidate is chosen according to established procedures, whether or not he has been president before, the will of the majority of the country is being complied with.

Martial Law

Newsman: The international cables reaching here are constantly saying that there is repression in Colombia, there is martial law in Colombia, there are guerrillas in Colombia. We know that in the 1974 the National Front was abolished, under which the Liberal and Conservative parties alternated in office. What has the country gained economically and socially since it achieved definitive political liberalization? Why is martial law, as some observers note, being maintained? What has been achieved in these areas?

President: Your question contains all of the facts for an answer. You ask: Why are there guerrillas and why is there martial law? I can tell you that there is martial law because there are guerrillas, because there is subversion and because some people are trying to use violence as a strategy, and the Colombian Constitution provides for systems to combat those kinds of activities. Opposition movements that operate within the constitution and democracy must be treated differently from subversive movements. The opposition has every guarantee; as far as the rebels are concerned, it is the constitution, not us, that says that we can declare martial law; once the uprising is repressed, public order is reestablished, and we return to normalcy. We are not advocates of martial law because we like to run the government that way but because it is indispensable in handling public order situations when there are individuals who are subverting that order. I have often said that people use crutches not because they are fond of them or because they want to get used to walking with them but because they have suffered some sort of injury that prevents them from walking around on their own two feet and therefore have to use crutches whether they like it or not because otherwise they would fall down. If we do not use the crutch of martial law to combat and prevent subversion, we are neglecting a tool that the constitution has placed at our disposal. It is better to save democracy by resorting to martial law at a given moment than to let democracy succumb and chaos prevail by not resorting to it.

Social Change

Newsman: What have you achieved economically and socially, Mr President?

President: A great deal has been achieved in the economic and social spheres. I can tell you, for example, that this administration (and we are not an exception because prior ones have devoted themselves with equal zeal to social matters) has given priority to social investments in its development program; that a great deal has been done in expanding medical coverage and in extending basic services; that there have been extraordinary improvements in schooling, as classrooms have been set up in the most remote areas of the country; that the country is being physically integrated through an ambitious projects program that this administration is implementing and that many unfinished projects begun by previous administrations are being resumed. So anyone who visits Colombia can see an appreciable change for the better socially, in the Colombian people's living conditions, in the buying power of wages, in what the minimum wage represents, in the social welfare system and in the way in which the workers are taken care of at their companies. Everything indicates that we are living in a country in which social justice really exists, to the extent that our limitations allow, but we will persist in this effort. We are the champions of development with social justice and we feel that social justice and development should go hand in hand. I said so before in a speech. We do not feel that social development is a by-product of economic development; both must exist independently. Those are our aspirations, our intentions. But for your information I would like to clarify that striking a social balance in a country is an undertaking that takes more than 4 or 5 years, because there is no known administrator who is so competent that he can resolve mankind's age-old problems during his limited constitutional term of office.

Atrocious Dictatorships

Newsman: Mr President, what do you think of the dictatorial regimes that still exist in Latin America?

President: My opinion is that their peoples ought to change those situations, but since we respect the principle of nonintervention, we have no way to further such goals, aside from reiterating our devotion to democracy, not only individually but at each meeting of presidents that we hold. It is atrocious that governments having roots other than among the people still exist at this late date in Latin America, which must be the continent of peace, progress and freedom. Nevertheless, I would ask what procedures we could use within the framework of the inter-American system to get involved in the internal politics of nations in a way that is not reprehensible.

The Embassy Takeover

Newsman: Mr President, you were congratulated by President Antonio Guzman for the wisdom with which you conducted the negotiations that put an end to the occupation of the Dominican Embassy in Colombia. Influential circles in your country, Colombia, are saying that the then U.S. ambassador in Bogota, Diego Ascencio, took a direct part in the negotiations. There has also been talk in your country that several governments, including yours, paid millions to the M-19 guerrillas to come out of the occupation incident looking successful or moderately successful. We would like to hear your version of the negotiations, because in the Dominican Republic we still do not know the specific details of how you ended the occupation, which kept 50-odd diplomats captive for more than a month.

President: I would be most pleased to dispel your doubts in this regard in my 10th answer. In the first place, the ambassadors who were kidnaped were obviously not in a position to do any independent negotiating, even though all of them were, of course, interested in creating the conditions to facilitate their release. The ambassadors (and now is not the time to judge or praise them) were treated with respect by their captors because the Colombian Government sent them a clear, precise and categorical note saying that it would not order the taking of the embassy by force unless the captors undertook actions jeopardizing the physical integrity of any of the kidnaped diplomats. As far as we know, not a single government paid a ransom to the kidnapers, and as far as the Colombian Government is concerned, not a cent was forthcoming. Our stand was: no prisoners, no money. And we did not pay and we did not release the prisoners, as many of them wanted. After a long, hard give-and-take the captors finally decided to avail themselves of the possibilities that the Colombian Government offered them in its overriding desire to protect the lives of the hostages. As far as my knowledge goes, that was how the drama at the Dominican Embassy in Bogota concluded.

If I wanted to be a bit aggressive with the captors' movement and wanted to portray it as a venal movement, I could say that yes, their ulterior motive was to come away with some money. But there is no way that I can distort the facts just to make them look bad. The fact is that no government gave them a cent.

Agreement with Venezuela

Newsman: Are you hopeful that during your term of office an agreement can be reached with the Venezuelan Government concerning the border dispute that has arisen over the Guajira Peninsula?

President: We are more than hopeful. We have a conditional agreement that has been worked out by Venezuelan and Colombian negotiators. I have no doubt that the desire of the Venezuelan and Colombian governments is to resolve the dispute through peaceful means that conform both to our devotion to law and our Bolivarian spirit. I would be very pleased if this problem, this dispute were resolved right away. But of course I do not want to force any situation either just to have something done during my term. I have to think about Venezuela and Colombia, not just my administration. It would be good both for my administration and for President Herrera Campins's administration for something to happen now, but if we can't do it, it does not necessarily mean that Venezuela and Colombia have failed. They will surely try again in the future and resolve their differences peacefully, but I think that we are on the right road and that the people with leadership responsibilities have a sense of understanding. Of course the people who are accustomed to making grounds and pretexts for opposition out of international problems can find banners to combat the governments in any settlement. I of course feel that there are greater numbers of patriots who see an agreement as a peaceful solution to disputes that opens up enormous opportunities for action by the two governments.

Newsman: Mr President, my question is directed at the same issue. According to international cables, there have been incidents between members of the Venezuelan National Guard and members of the Colombian Army on La Guajira Peninsula, more or less along the border between Venezuela and Colombia. Does the president of Colombia have any reports on these incidents, and what does he think of them?

President: Perhaps because you are way in back you did not realize that I have already answered that question. But I do not mind telling you that there have been no incidents, no confrontations of any sort, no military mobilizations and that the people who are fond of violence in the news must be very sad that nothing of the sort has happened.

I would like to thank the newsmen who have gathered here for the very valuable questions you have posed to me, which have enabled me to clearly establish my administration's views. Thank you.

SECURITY FORCES ARREST M-19 FOUNDER

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 11-A

[Article by Hector Rodriguez Villa]

[Text] The former vice president of the Indigenous Regional Council of the Cauca and one of the founders of the M-19, Maximiliano Izco Cuene, was arrested yesterday in that department by DAS [Administrative Department of Security] units.

Izco Cuene, an Indian who was described as the head of the organization's mobile command in that section of the country, harbored M-19 leaders Jaime Bateman Cayon and Carlos Toledo Plata when they fled into the Cauca after the thwarted "eighth" summit meeting of the organization, which was supposed to have been held at the Potosi spa in Tocaima, Cundinamarca.

As he was being arrested, it was also learned that military units involved in trackdowns in the "Guayabero" section of Meta killed a member of the First Front of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FACR) known as "Libardo." A soldier was wounded during the incident and was taken to Villavicencio.

Over the past 3 months this area of the country has witnessed numerous confrontations with guerrillas, which have left five soldiers and several subversives dead.

Troops from the Vargas Battalion and the Seventh Brigade are conducting an offensive to recover parts of the region taken over by the rebels.

Izco Cuene was said to have been arrested in a home in the village of Mora, Cauca. He was wanted for kidnaping, inciting rebellion and criminal association.

He is currently being tried in the court martial hearing against more than 200 alleged members of the M-19 in "La Picota" Jail.

The DAS said that the guerrilla took part in the slaying of Luis Ernesto Solano Sanchez, known as "El Llanero," who was alleged to be a bandit who operated in the "inland" region. This incident took place on 11 November 1978.

Izco Cuene was born on 24 February 1949 in Mosoco. He was arrested on the basis of information obtained by the DAS after the capture in Bogota of several members of the M-19, among them Jose Antonio Navarro Wolf, with whom he operated in the Cauca.

It was established, furthermore, that Izco Cuene was placed under investigation in 1979 after more than 5,000 weapons were stolen from the northern military cantonment, but when the then commander of the Military Institutes Brigade, Gen Miguel Vega Uribe, issued the resolution containing the summonses, he failed to include his name.

GUERRILLAS TRAINED IN CUBA, DEFENSE MINISTER SAYS

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 22 Oct 80 p 6-A

[Text] Last night in the Senate Defense Minister Gen Luis Carlos Camacho Leyva accused the Communist Party of creating turmoil and subversion in the country.

During the debate sponsored by Communist Humberto Criales de la Rosa, the minister said that "we cannot continue to have members of the Communist Party, regardless of how eminent they might be, engage ministers in debate and claim that they are the allies of peace and that the government is responsible for every misfortune."

Criales de la Rosa summoned the minister for questioning on the guerrilla situation, the latest developments in the El Pato area and to explain the guarantees that the government, through the army, is providing to the subversive groups so that they will lay down their arms.

He outlined statements by the defense minister himself and other ranking military men to the effect that the country was in a state of war, that no one could be neutral in this war and that the people who wanted guarantees from the government ought to collaborate with the army.

Camacho Leyva first of all accused the Communist Party of being the direct sponsor of the so-called Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia. He even read what could be considered the bylaws of the FARC, in which they admit that they have the direct support of the Communist Party.

He noted that at no time have the Communists attempted to deny their links with that armed group, adding that it has been established that at least 745 persons have been trained in guerrilla warfare in Cuba.

The minister mentioned the names of 17 individuals who have received guerrilla training on the Caribbean island: Fabio Vasquez Castano, Plutarco Elias, Mario Hernandez, Hernando and Raimundo Cruz Modesto, Heriberto Espitia, Ricardo Lara Parada, Victor Medina Moron, Abelardo Joya Quintero, Alfonso Rodriguez Ruiz, Jose Ayala, Plutarco Corso, Miguel Pimienta, Mario Moscoso, Heriberto Cabrera, Hernando Gonzalez Arnedo and Libardo Lora Toro.

He also said that neither the military nor the government has contended or asserted that the Soviet Government is sending aid to the guerrillas or that Fidel Castro is doing so directly. However, he noted, it has been established that guerrilla training has been given to many Colombians in the area of Cuba.

He also asserted that outside aid for the guerrillas reaches Bogota via Paris and Prague, noting furthermore that this aid often takes the form of scholarships from Patrice Lumumba University.

Camacho Leyva said the following in reference to the Communist legislators and the members of the party: "They create turmoil, foster subversion and disavow the current system but avail themselves of it for their activities. This is an obvious fact that we have no reason to keep quiet."

In further replies to Criales de la Rosa's questions, the general said that the legislator is proposing a return to peace, an end to the state of siege and the revocation of the Security Statute.

His answer to this request was the same as the president gave during a meeting with members of the Human Rights Commission: "You can help us a great deal, for example, by telling the revolutionary forces to lay down their arms and return to civilian life in the republic."

Camacho Leyva also advocated that the Communist Party repudiate the FARC, especially in connection with what these guerrilla groups are doing in the countryside.

He also called on the party to totally repudiate "Voz Proletaria," which systematically justifies crime, he said. We would thus have a straight path to peace, he stated.

The minister disclosed that any sum of money spent to upgrade the Armed Forces and the police is too little.

In this connection he mentioned Criales de la Rosa's criticism of the military high command's request for a 17 billion peso increase.

He said that the commanders of each of the branches had submitted a report on their situation to the Second Committee of the Senate and House, and he hinted that defense and combat equipment are not in very good condition.

"As military men we are aware that the country is not in a position to exert enormous efforts, because of the current national political situation."

"We are using the tools that the country has given us to defend our institutions," he said, noting in conclusion that in order to combat subversion "we cannot please the friends of the guerrillas."

COMMUNIST PARTY CALLS FOR GENERAL AMNESTY

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 29 Oct 80 p 10-A

[Article by Roman Medina B.]

[Text] The Colombian Communist Party yesterday called for a general amnesty law, considering it a "unique opportunity" to civilize the methods of political struggle in the country, especially since the 1982 election campaign is already under way.

"As far as the Communist Party is concerned, amnesty is a fundamental element in a move towards democracy, to emerge from martial law and the Security Statute and to end military criminal justice, which is leading the country towards 'Uruguayanization,'" asserted Congressmen Gilberto Vieira yesterday in the First House Committee.

Separately, Liberal Representative Luis Villar Borda asserted that under the amnesty law the country is not going to return to peace, saying that we need fundamental changes in political, social and economic organization to achieve these objectives and goals.

Villar also proposed formally yesterday that the Criminal Division of the Supreme Court of Justice be the body to examine the details of the most serious crimes, in order to establish whether they are political or common and thus whether the amnesty can be invoked.

The debate on the amnesty bill resumed yesterday with speeches by Representatives Vieira and Villar, who in general came out for a general amnesty. The session was attended by the ministers of defense, government and justice.

Gilberto Vieira, the secretary general of the Colombian Communist Party, initially voiced a series of objections to the government's original bill, commenting that it speaks of "atrocious crimes" and noting that it overlooks, however, that because of martial law and the Security Statute, the executive himself has determined the nature of these crimes.

He asserted that it is nothing more than an attempt to get the guerrillas to lay down their arms, feeling that it does not get to the heart of the matter, "such as ending martial law and official repression."

With regard to the report by Representatives Dario Ortiz and Simon Bossa, he noted that they pursued an independent approach that deserves the committee's applause. Nevertheless, he posed a number of objections, especially with regard to the creation of an amnesty tribunal that would include the commander of the brigade that will examine the amnesty petition.

He said that such tribunals ought to be completely civilian, "because the country needs to have the army's involvement in the justice system ended."

With regard to Defense Minister Gen Luis Carlos Camacho's speech last week in the committee about the guerrilla groups operating in the country, the Communist leader said his figures are no pretext for the recurring interruptions of the peace under the prolonged enforcement of martial law.

He recalled recent statements by General Camacho and contended that if we get to the vacuum of power that the minister spoke of, "those guerrillas will become a major focus of attraction for the Colombian people."

Regarding the allegation that the FARC [Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia] are the armed wing of the Communist Party, Vieira reaffirmed that this is untrue. "We Communists have great admiration and respect for the guerrillas. They are people who have taken up arms for a political ideal that they have chosen as a form of protest against the despotism that is being practiced under martial law," he added.

His statements were taken issue with by Liberal Representative Abelardo Forero Benavides, who asserted that the unfortunate thing about the guerrillas is that the ones who suffer in every case are the peasant farmers. "It is the blood of Colombian peasants that is being spilled in these incidents."

Gilberto Vieira responded by saying that he is disturbed as much by the death of a soldier as by the death of a guerrilla. He stressed that an amnesty must emerge as a turn towards democracy so that "the government's terrorist actions against the people and the guerrillas' reactions to the government for now they are treated cease."

He said that as long as martial law is not lifted and the Security Statute not revoked, the rebels are not going to abide by the law. He proposed that the law cover those who are in prison or on trial; they should be the first ones to benefit, before the people who are not in custody.

Villar Comments

Liberal Representative Luis Villar stressed that the bill must be the fruit of a broad consensus, not an imposition and that it has to come from those who realize that now is the time that Colombia must urgently reinstitute the fundamental values of a democratic structure, which has been marred in recent years.

He said that the bill is eminently political, in the loftiest and most noble meaning of the word.

Villar specifically backed two points brought up by the sponsors of the bill: 1) The original text is not in keeping with the provisions of the National Constitution, which says that it should be general, not conditional; 2) It is not enough to reestablish the public peace and freedoms.

He said that it ought to be extended to persons who have been arrested and found guilty under specific circumstances, to which end he proposed that such cases be resolved by a body with the qualifications of the Supreme Court of Justice.

He noted that the motive is what determines the type of crime. "If the motive was to try and change institutions, the crime is political." After commenting that the benefits of a pardon have been practically done away with, Villar said that the amnesty must be broadened and made general "to cover political offenders and related crimes."

NICARAGUAN COUNSELOR SAYS NO INVASION OF ARCHIPELAGO

Bogota EL ESPECTADOR in Spanish 19 Oct 80 p 1-A, 15-A

[Article by Hernan Unas]

[Text] The counselor of the Nicaraguan Embassy in Colombia, Dr Gustavo Adolfo Vargas, told this newspaper yesterday that his country's plans do not include a possible invasion of the islands or keys that its government is claiming.

"Our intentions have not included and do not include an attack on or an invasion of the territory that we are claiming, as people have been led to think, not only because we are respectful of our neighbors but also because we lack the resources that would be needed for such a move," the diplomat said.

Vargas clarified, however, that "what there can be doubt about is that we will make use of arms if attempts are made to violate our territory and our national sovereignty."

The counselor of the Nicaraguan Embassy, who described himself as a "full-time opponent of the Somozas," studied international public law and international relations at the University of Geneva in Switzerland, which he later joined as an assistant professor at the Institute of Higher International Studies, where he did his post-graduate work. He was a United Nations official until the triumph of the Sandinist Revolution and also served as adviser to the Central American Common Market and as a consultant in the Division of Cooperation among Developing Countries.

"The Tyranny Drafted Maps"

The reason why I visited the diplomat's office was to inquire about the map that his government had drafted, which shows the islands of San Andres and Providencia, as well as the keys of Serrana, Roncador and Quitasueno, as belonging to Nicaragua.

Vargas, like a good diplomat, beat around the bush for a while before finally admitting that "it is true that my government ordered the drafting of that map, including the islands and keys you have mentioned as part of our territory, because we feel that they belong to us."

He noted, however, that "although this might look like something new, it really isn't, because under the Somoza tyranny maps had been drafted to include these spots, the difference being that they described them as 'disputed territories,' a description that has now been dropped."

When I told him that Colombia feels strongly that the Sandinist Government is trying to win popularity and gain solidarity by claiming our islands and keys in the Caribbean, he contended:

"We have no problem whatsoever to hide. The difficulties we might have are known to all, so that we have no need to resort to such devices in a bid to conceal them. You want to attribute the claim of sovereignty over the keys entirely to the Revolutionary Government, when the fact of the matter is, as I already told you, that this concern already existed during the regime of dictator Anastasio Somoza."

When I pressed on in my efforts to delve deeper into the hidden meaning of his words, the diplomat said: "This is a nationalist solidarity movement based on our claims to the islands and keys, but the objective has not been achieved. I also feel that the issue is being used here to hide the problems that your country is facing, among them the problem of the guerrillas."

Question of Ideologies

I deliberately led the counselor into an eminently political field to see to what extent politics is at the heart of the matter. In this regard he commented:

"Territorial conflicts are far above ideological questions. If this were not the case, there would not have been or would not be friction between Chile and Argentina, China and Vietnam and Colombia and Venezuela. As far as Colombia and Nicaragua are concerned, we can point to a major ideological difference, because we are trying to establish socialism, and the Colombian Government defends the capitalist system."

Without ever losing his patience or cordial tone of voice, the counselor stated that "there are two ways to resolve the conflict: through a political agreement or through a strictly legal mechanism, by submitting the dispute to the International Court of Justice. A third solution could be to have the two countries designate a neutral nation to decide the conflict."

The diplomat said that Nicaragua respects Colombia's laws and that it is willing to discuss the issue in whatever form is deemed most appropriate.

"We had a similar conflict when Luis Somoza was president, around 1959," Vargas said. "The dispute was with the Republic of Honduras and was brought before the International Court, where we lost. We abided by the decision of the court, which included a Colombian attorney, Dr Urrutia Holguin."

Nicaragua's "White Book"

The following is the complete text of the "Declaration on the Islands of San Andres, Providencia and Surrounding Territories," issued by the National Reconstruction Government Junta of Nicaragua and contained in the country's "White Book." The document bears the signatures of Sergio Ramirez Mercado, Violeta de Chamorro, Alfonso Robelo Callejas, Moises Hassan Morales and Daniel Ortega Saavedra. Counselor Gustavo Adolfo Vargas delivered the White Book yesterday to EL ESPECTADOR.

"The National Reconstruction Government Junta of Nicaragua, a government that emerged from the very struggle of our people and that is totally devoted to the task of recovering, maintaining and defending Nicaragua's national sovereignty and territorial integrity, an indisputable right of free nations, cannot remain impassive in the face of determined efforts by third countries to dismember our territory.

"The historical conditions under which our people lived ever since 1909 precluded a real defense of our continental shelf, jurisdictional waters and island territories emerging from the shelf. This absence of sovereignty was reflected in the imposition on our country of two treaties that were most harmful to it: the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty of 5 August 1914, the abrogation of which, once the U.S. Government felt the treaty was useless, constituted one of the dictatorship's many parodies, and the one known as the Barcenas Meneses-Esguerra Treaty, which Nicaragua was forced to sign in 1928 and to ratify in 1930 (in other words, both acts took place under total military and political occupation of Nicaragua by the United States of America). Not only was the Barcenas Meneses-Esguerra Treaty the result of an imposition by a world power on a small, weak country, but it was also kept secret for some time and entered into in flagrant violation of Nicaragua's constitution at the time, which categorically prohibited the signing of treaties that entailed an impairment of national sovereignty or a loss of national territory.

"In addition to being detrimental to Nicaragua, the Barcenas Meneses-Esguerra Treaty entailed the occupation of much of our island territory, namely the islands of San Andres and Providencia and the surrounding keys and sand banks, but not including Roncador, Quitasueno and Serrana.

"This injustice is even more evident since all of these islands, islets, keys and sand banks are integral and indivisible parts of Nicaragua's continental shelf, an underwater territory that is the natural extension of our mainland and, hence, unquestionably sovereign Nicaraguan territory.

"At that time, that general of free men, Augusto Cesar Sandino, the symbol of the Nicaraguan people's anti-imperialist determination, was struggling heroically in Nicaragua's northern mountains, and his struggle succeeded in safeguarding not only our national honor but Latin American honor as well.

"A great deal of time has passed since the Barcenas Meneses-Esguerra Treaty, but the fact is that as of 19 July 1979 Nicaragua had not recovered its national sovereignty, because before the triumph of our people it had been impossible to defend Nicaragua's island, ocean and underwater territory.

"The signing of the treaty between the United States and Colombia on 8 September 1972 was simply the final step in a territorial dispossession of Nicaragua that began in 1928.

"In light of these circumstances, it is our patriotic and revolutionary duty to declare null and void the Barcenas Meneses-Esguerra Treaty signed on 24 March 1928 and ratified on 6 March 1930, in a historical context that disqualified as leaders the presidents imposed by the American forces of intervention in Nicaragua and that violated, as mentioned before, the principles of the existing National Constitution.

"The Revolutionary Government of Nicaragua would like to take this opportunity to inform our sister people and government of Colombia that this measure does not constitute an affront to a country that we have always loved and respected and whose people made wonderful common cause with the Nicaraguan people's struggle for their national liberation.

"We want both the people and the government of Colombia to know that Nicaragua is not claiming territories that are within Colombia's continental shelf or within 100 or 200 miles of its mainland, only territory that geographically, historically and legally is an integral part of Nicaragua.

"It is our firm determination and intention to resolve this problem, which unfortunately seems to be setting two sister peoples at odds, in a bilateral manner and in accordance with the strictest standards of respect and friendship recognized by international law. This in no way implies that Nicaragua attaches any validity whatsoever to the Barcenas Meneses-Esguerra Treaty; rather, we are merely champions at all costs of unity and harmony in Latin America, a regional community of which our two nations are part.

"Thus, the doors are open for a dialog between our two countries, realizing as we do that both Colombia and Nicaragua have inherited historical situations a more in-depth knowledge of which will enable our sister nation of Colombia to see why our stand is just, since it is a historical fact that Nicaragua was stripped of these territories in an unreasonable manner that from every standpoint runs counter to the principles of international law and to the very principles that have governed relations among Latin American countries.

"The reincorporation of these territories into the Nicaraguan nation should not be construed in the least as weakness on the part of the Colombian Government, but rather as tangible evidence of the respect for justice and reason that the people and government of Colombia have traditionally had, because we do not think that Colombia is dedicated to a policy of plundering a nation that throughout its history has never expressed anything but fondness and affection for a people with whom we share the same origins and language and many common aspirations."

FERNANDEZ MARMOL RESIGNS POST TO RETURN TO PRD

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 10 Nov 80 pp 1-2

[Article by Roberto Marcalle: "Resignation"]

[Text] Mr Manuel Fernandez Marmol submitted his resignation to the Secretariat of State of Industry and Commerce today and said that in the event that President Antonio Guzman accepts it, he will become an officer of the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD) again to strengthen the leadership of Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez.

"I believe," the resigning official said, "that the PRD needs me among its officers again. I do not mean by this that my replacement, Ivelisse Prats de Perez, has not done efficient work, but I believe that our party needs men of peace at this time."

Marmoz, who was also one of the founders of the government party, said that he is a disciplined man, noting that he does not term his resignation "irrevocable, because I leave President Guzman the option of accepting or rejecting it."

He added that he hoped President Guzman would accept his resignation speedily, saying that "this government needs to be supported."

He then went on to speak of the rejection by the Senate of the 90-million-peso loan, and he said that one of the goals which led to this step was his desire to struggle to eliminate the differences between the Congress and the executive branch.

He said further that a weighty factor in his action was the need to ensure that democracy never disappears in this country, and that freedom and human rights continue to be tangible realities rather than vain and demagogic words.

He said moreover that, as has been discussed between them, President Guzman will give him full authority to resolve problems in any state body in which these occur.

He also said he has left the door open "for the president to appoint me to another post of less consequence, if possible, but one consistent with serving as an officer of the PRD."

He then pointed out that serving as secretary of state of industry and commerce is not compatible with heading the political organization, although he noted that this body has an excellent working team, mentioning among others the undersecretaries of state and the director of price control.

Fernandez Marmoz then went on to justify the government's indebtedness policy, saying that with increasing inflation, the money obtained now will be paid off with very little.

He said that according to government reports, only 224 million have been obtained to date. He said that other loans are subject to counterpart and other conditions delaying their authorization.

Also, Fernandez Marmoz defended the leadership of Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez, who he said is now a figure of international importance.

In referring to the announced price increases for edible pasta and powdered milk, he explained that this is still in the hands of technicians and that the advice of the executive branch is also being awaited with a view to dealing with the situation.

He announced, however, that the pasta producers have indicated that these products will shortly be on the market again.

MND EMERGES AS NEW PEOPLE'S PARTY

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 17 Nov 80 p 13B

[Article by Disraeli Guillen]

[Text] A new political organization has come onto the public scene, and in its first statement it says that "it will struggle to ensure that a true democracy is established in the country, in which it has the support of worker and peasant sectors."

The Democratic National Movement (MND) announced its establishment in the course of a meeting held on Saturday at the La Campana restaurant.

Mr Pedro Julio Evangelista, president of the movement, said in his opening address that "the development of the organization does not represent a method of dealing and deceiving all sectors of the country.

"Our movement is made up of workers and peasants who are fighting for the establishment of a true democracy," Evangelista said.

He said that the roots of the problems we Dominicans face lie in the fact that although we have the resources to develop ourselves, they work exclusively to the benefit of privileged minorities sold out to foreign interests.

The Democratic National Movement has the support of the Popular Party of Puerto Rico, Evangelista said.

Through a document it made public the organization explained that after a profound analysis, it has decided that the Dominican Republic is not a sovereign, free and independent country. This falsehood inculcated into the Dominican people for years is a direct result of the poverty of the country and the death of Dominicans in various ways.

"The leaders of the movement are inspired by the democratic system enjoyed by the Puerto Rican workers, peasants and professionals, who are true patriots, because they fought to establish a government for the benefit of all those who reside on this neighboring island without regard to religious or political creed," the document says.

The board of directors of the political organization includes, in addition to Evangelista, Jorge Antonio Fernandez as vice president, Felix Valde. 's secretary general, Ruben Guerra as assistant secretary general, Cirilo Tejeda as organization secretary, and Juan Marcial David as press and propaganda secretary.

Other officers include Maria Zoraida Garcia as recording and corresponding secretary, Bernabe Valdez as secretary for workers' affairs, Wilson Baez as secretary for student affairs, Froilan Gil Carrido as general supervisor and Dr Juana de la Cruz as secretary for professional affairs.

PCD'S ISA CONDE DISCUSSES LOCAL POLITICS, USSR, CUBA

Caracas BOHEMIA in Spanish 17-23 Nov 80 pp 28-30

[Interview with Narciso Isa Conde, secretary general of the Dominican Communist Party, by Luis Manuel Martinez; date and place not given]

[Excerpt] Santo Domingo, November 1980--The disillusionment of the leftist groups which placed their hopes in the Dominican Revolutionary Party [PRD] as an instrument for substantive social reforms, the distrust of the bourgeois sectors and of private enterprise, and the erratic orientation of an administration devoid of political charisma appear as critical elements as we approach 1981, the pre-electoral year in this country, which is suffering more severely each day from the onslaughts of unemployment, underemployment and an economic crunch.

Balaguer's Rehabilitation

The unchanged obstinacy of Joaquin Balaguer who, at the age of 72, is touring the most remote provinces and localities, insisting that his health is as "strong as a rock," is causing the miracle of the rehabilitation of his Reformist Party, which was defeated in the 1978 elections after 12 years of corruption, assassinations and a conservative regime, a carbon copy extension of the Trujillo era.

The internal division in the PRD, with four or five presidential hopefuls entrenched in different factions, and the demagogy of that organization's secretary general, Dr Francisco Pena Gomez, publicly reiterating his differences with the government and telling anyone willing to listen to him that he will not visit the National Palace again in protest against the dismissal of some of his followers, compound the institutional crisis that has cropped up between the Legislative and Executive Branches because of the attacks from the leader of the Chamber of Deputies, Hatuey Decamps, regarding President Guzman's disdain for Congress and his refusal to consider a bill to reform the Constitution and extend the president's term from 4 to 6 years.

In the midst of this proliferation of initials, and the incoherent efforts to polarize the frustration of Balaguerism and the disappointment of PRD, founded in 1939 in Havana Cuba, which came to power in 1964 [as published], and with Juan Bosch overthrown only 6 months after having assumed the presidency, with the resultant insurgency which prompted the landing of the Marines in April 1965, the most balanced mind and the most serene thinking are at the head of the Dominican Communist Party [PCD].

Its secretary general, Narciso Isa Conde, answered six questions that we asked him in a skillful manner and with dialectics which identify him more with the maturity of Eurocommunism than with the ever-conflicting, aggressive style of Cuban Castroism.

[Question] Are the essential conditions present in the Dominican Republic for a shift toward a communist system to occur, with some tropical variations such as those constituting the Cuban model?

[Answer] If those conditions were present today, we would not be lacking in the desire and determination to win power and begin the changes called for in our program.

Our intentions are clear, and candidly defined with regard to the establishment of a system of transition toward communism, based on the predominance of social ownership of the means of production and distribution, and the abolishment of large-scale capitalist private ownership and of dependence on North American imperialism.

Insofar as the model or the individual features are concerned, although we attach a positive value to all the accomplishments of the revolution in other countries, we do not intend to reproduce or mechanically copy other experiences, even though they be "tropical." We prefer a model that relates to our concepts, and that results from the creative application of Marxism to our real situation.

We prefer one that eliminates the flaws and mistakes of other processes, that is geared to the new international correlation of forces and that takes into account the features inherent in all areas of our country.

Hence, we are striving for a Dominican model, and for a revolution that is socialist in content and Dominican in form.

As for the conditions and the possibilities for the victory of communism, we have stressed the following: The height of the social struggle has begun. The revolutionary political consciousness is progressing, and the people's sympathy for communism is in a process of growth.

There are still lacking conditions which are not contingent on us alone; also needed are more consciousness, better organization, greater numerical strength, and a greater capacity for mobilization and action.

But in a situation such as ours, the attainment of these qualities and conditions, and the prospect for power, should not be viewed solely over the long term; but they obviously appear possible over shorter terms.

True, that prospect does not depend on our desire alone, but our determination, our participation in the daily struggle and our action in the direction of winning power are highly important factors in its accomplishment.

We have that intention; we have that attitude.

We leaders of the Dominican Communist Party regard our participation in the present political struggle with a clearcut determination to convert our organization into a factor for power and revolutionary changes from that power.

Moreover, our country is part of a subregion of the continent which is obviously in the course of revolution, and is receiving the stimulating winds of the new revolutionary outburst that is taking place in Central America and the Caribbean, and that has recently materialized in the victories of Grenada and Nicaragua, and is constantly advancing in El Salvador.

[Question] What is the reason to justify the fact that the regimes in Cuba and Nicaragua refuse to consult the people's opinion through elections?

[Answer] The comparisons between Cuba and Nicaragua are not fitting. The Cuban regime has been in effect for 21 years; that in Nicaragua only completed its first year recently.

Authentic revolutions, with the replacement of one socioeconomic establishment with another, through revolutionary action, entail the abolishment of the old institutions, and pose the serious problem of devising new institutions.

The latter, and specifically the creation of new institutions that will guarantee self-management, the people's control and the masses' participation in the political administration with opportunities to recall rulers and officials, is one of the problems of the socialism currently in effect.

To return to the representative democracy of a capitalist type is an illusion; the point of reference cannot be that type of election, nor that type of institution.

The question is how to overcome the provisional status (generally very authoritarian) of the initial transition period which, in most instances, has lasted longer than anticipated.

We say this frankly but, at the same time, we point out that, in the delay in the development of socialist democracy (and this is obvious in the case of Cuba), the share of responsibility borne by the encirclement, blockade, harassment and aggression from the imperialists, particularly the North American imperialists, is very great. And that hostility has become as horrendous as the terrorist act in Barbados, which Venezuelan democracy blessed with the acquittal of four criminals who were implicated therein.

Cuba has been forced to engage in a kind of "communism of war."

[Question] In 1982, will PCD participate in the elections in some coalition, or will it, by itself, again gage its influence on the Dominican masses?

[Answer] It is still too early to determine one possibility or another of participation in the elections.

What is quite clear to us is that we must be prepared to exercise one option or another under the best possible conditions, without having the notion in mind of being an appendage or a mainstay supporting reformist, Social Democratic, Christian Democratic, right wing or center movements.

Right now, while simultaneously giving an impetus to the rising social protests and struggles, we are striving to put ourselves in a position and meet the requirements that will enable us to convert ourselves into an electoral option, regardless of the attitudes of the other organized forces toward us. Our greatest energy is concentrated on our own strengthening, and on the intention of being a great party, a prospect that is possible to attain if the sympathy for the PCD and its influence on the masses increase in the same proportion as the exacerbation of the social and economic crisis and the increase in the people's lack of confidence in the Dominican Revolutionary Party, which thwarted their most recent hopes, and in the Reformist Party which, in 12 years, has proven incapable of solving the serious problems besetting the majorities.

[Question] There is a great deal of hegemony and absorption in the North American foreign policy in our time, but is the occupation of Afghanistan possibly a message of understanding and peace for the Third World peoples?

[Answer] The increased presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan is a result of the high degree of internationalization in the conflicts and, quite obviously, a militant response to the massive infiltration of the American CIA and its allies from Pakistani territory, to the reinforcement of United States Naval units in the Persian Gulf and to the American military counteroffensive started at the end of 1979.

It was apparently an extreme expedient for preventing the collapse of a regime allied with the Soviet Union as a result of indirect intervention from abroad, the factional conflicts within the state apparatus and dangerous excesses, in the context of a country located in an area of great strategic-geographic importance, with extensive borders with the Soviets and with very low cultural levels and slight political participation by the masses.

The counterrevolution fomented from the training bases in Pakistan was also quite far removed from representing the desires of the Afghan people and Afghan national interest.

What occurred there is an act of acute confrontation between the two systems and we, while noting the negative consequences of any intervention, consider it inevitable for the Soviet Union, in the context of that confrontation and that specific situation.

The Soviet troops and those of other Warsaw Pact countries acted in another very different situation after the Prague Spring of 1968. There, it was clear that the will of the majority of Czechoslovaks and of the majority of the Communist Party leadership in that country was on the side of the democratic reforms that were promoted; reforms which, rather than benefiting imperialism, tended to back up socialism and enhance the communists' authority and influence within that society. There, an intervention contrary to the renovation and democratization of socialism occurred, and therefore we condemned it.

In acting in the realm of international policy, the PCD does so with its own criteria; but it does not become lost with regard to the confrontation with capitalism, what is feasible for it or what affects the anti-imperialist struggle and the socialist system

[Question] You are a young leader (only 37 years old), whose talent and depth of analysis are recognized internationally. Do you believe that the excessive number of political parties in the Dominican Republic is a factor for the consolidation of democracy?

[Answer] The consolidation of the political democracy depends essentially on respect for the standards tending to guarantee equality of opportunity, organization, expression and participation among all groups and all citizens, in a civilized competition.

Whether or not there is a proliferation of many parties or groups depends on other factors, and may or may not occur in close association with the democratic progress.

The predominance of large-scale private ownership of the means of production, of distribution and of communication imposes an unsurmountable barrier against the possibility of full equality of opportunity, and of the eradication of discrimination in the realm of freedom of association, speech and political participation.

In that socioeconomic framework, the parties defending the system enjoy, in the democratic competition, far greater opportunities than those within the reach of the revolutionary forces.

Added to that are administrative restrictions which reduce, in a discriminatory way, freedom of association, of assembly and of striking, and legal expedients which affect the rights of the minorities.

The existence of a great many parties is not necessarily an indicator of the consolidation of democracy; because it may happen that, in spite of this (as has occurred here in the Dominican Republic), anti-democratic restrictions may continue (bans on outdoor events outside of the electoral campaign, a requirement for over 100,000 members for electoral recognition, periodic repression, discrimination in the use of the state-controlled news media, etc.), and there may also be an attempt to set up an electoral system to benefit the two-party system in the service of dependent capitalism.

[Question] Are there any chances that the Dominican economy may react favorably during the second half of Antonio Guzman's presidential term?

[Answer] No. The tendency that one observes, given the government's economic policy and the high degree of administrative inefficiency that it has shown, is toward continued stagnation, increased cost of living, greater poverty and exodus from the rural areas, reduced public investment, a galloping debt that is extremely burdensome, a deterioration in the state sector of the economy, an increased deficit in the balance of goods and services, the exacerbation of the energy crisis, and more acute dependence that is now not only reaffirming the oppressive bonds of subordination to the North American consortiums but also includes the area of penetration by Venezuelan capital.

This government is an inefficient option for a system and, to top it off, the economic crisis in our country has reached a point where it is not only impossible to resolve it within the framework of the dependent capitalist system, but it is also impossible to mitigate or reduce without affecting interests of powerful sectors which this distorted, native version of social democracy (allied with the United States) does not dare to confront.

REASONS FOR SEAGA'S VICTORY IN JAMAICA NOTED

Santo Domingo EL CARIBE in Spanish 19 Nov 80 p 10

[Editorial: "Jamaica and Free Enterprise"]

[Text] The victory of the Labor Party of Jamaica in the recent elections held in that counrry has opened up an area of hopes for the friends of free enterprise. To tell the truth, nothing more than this can be noted in Edward Seaga's victory over Michael Manley because, although the defeated Jamaican politician had a close friendship with the Cuban dictator, Fidel Castro, he cannot be claimed to have violated the democratic credo. Evidence of this was the free elections which dashed his hopes of continuing to govern Jamaica.

The serious problem for Seaga is that Manley left him an economy in a state of ruin. The policy pursued by the former prime minister caused not only an exodus of capital from Jamaica, but of talent as well. And it destroyed the once flourishing tourist industry. To rebuild the economy, rehabilitate tourism, give an incentive for investment and attract new capital, both monetary and human, is an immense task. And there is no guarantee that Seaga will be able to perform that feat without a large amount of foreign aid.

If it does not quickly rebuild what Manley destroyed, if it does not create new job sources and if it fails to increase all types of production, the new government could suffer a fate similar to that which befell Indira Ghandi's successors in India. And then, indeed, Manley would have full access, with a free enterprise system that failed, to embrace socialism, with the backing that has now been denied him.

The system of free enterprise and representative democracy has an excellent opportunity in Jamaica to prove that it works. But this cannot be expected to occur automatically. If this is to happen, the Jamaicans will have to expend a sustained, assiduous effort to restore strength to the institutions weakened by the socializing, leveling and "redistributing" regime of Michael Manley. And for this purpose they will need foreign aid, a large amount of foreign aid.

Therefore, it is to be hoped that those who can give aid, particularly that from democratic nations and international agencies in operation, will not skimp on it.

MEXICO, USSR DESIRE TO INCREASE DIRECT TRADE

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 28 Oct 80 p 9

[Text] The common denominator of the three meetings at which work will begin today lies in the mutual desire to bring about progress in the bilateral relations in the economic area. The starting point for their deliberations might be recognition of the objective factors which have thus far impeded dynamic progress in these relations. Rather than the geographical gap, the oppressive inertia stemming from the traditional patterns of trade appears to be the most important of these obstacles. This statement was made yesterday by Jorge Castaneda, secretary of foreign relations, at the opening of the meetings between Mexico and the Soviet Union on commercial matters, scientific and technical cooperation and maritime transportation.

Castaneda also remarked that the overall goal of the talks now being undertaken is unquestionably the spotting of concrete, feasible possibilities for comercial, industrial, scientific, technological and transport cooperation. Rather than high-sounding statements or grandiose projects, these are concrete actions, which are unassuming but constant, which will allow both countries to progress effectively toward a progressive enhancement of their bilateral economic cooperation.

He noted that the bilateral trade has been marked by irregularity in the flow of exchange and very slight diversification. It would appear necessary to program the development of trade on the basis of a better understanding of the market opportunities and the existing supplies, improvement in transportation and the elimination of unnecessary triangulation. This programing could, in some instances, lead to medium and long term agreements on supplies, based on the planning instruments which govern and guide the overall economic activity in each of the two countries.

Jorge Castaneda also commented that the Soviet Union, among the socialist countries, and Mexico, among the developing ones, are participating in the endeavor of the international community aimed at establishing a new international economic order in an effective manner. He observed that Mexico has a particular intention of stimulating the increase in economic exchanges in the world, because it realizes that international cooperation is a powerful mainstay, not only for development, but also for the easing of tensions and peaceful coexistence. Hence, we consider it essential and urgently required to allocate for economic promotion and cooperation the resources which are now being used in the arms race, as well as to rationalize the use of energy so as, through a plan of universal scope, to regulate the exploitation of the non-renewable sources of energy and hasten the utilization of alternate energy sources.

For his part, Mr Aleksey N. Manzhulo, vice minister of foreign trade of the USSR, said that the Soviet Union and Mexico attach great importance to the rebuilding of international economic relations, based on equality and justice; which we think can only be achieved if inextricably linked with the elimination of international conflicts, the solution of the problems involving the easing of tensions, and the elimination of exploitation, inequality, discrimination and dictating in international relations.

He then pointed out that the Soviet Union attaches great importance to the subsequent development of economic and scientific and technical cooperation with Mexico. He said: "I think and you probably agree that the possibilities for cooperation based on mutual advantage and equality have not been exhausted in their entirety."

Finally, he said that, "In advance of the economic and technical cooperation, we would like to discuss some problems that are deterring its progress, and to determine insofar as possible the concrete means for its implementation and diversification."

The Mexican representatives were also headed by Jorge Eduardo Navarrete, undersecretary of economic affairs in the Secretariat of Foreign Relations, representing the Commercial Joint Commission; Dr Edmundo Flores, general director of CONACYT [National Council for Science and Technology], representing the Joint Commission for Scientific and Technological Cooperation; and naval engineer Jose Juan Velarde Bonnin, undersecretary of ports and merchant marine in the Secretariat of Communications and Transport, who served as chairman of the Mexican delegation on the Joint Commission for Consultation on Maritime Transportation.

EARLY DISCUSSION OF PRESIDENTIAL POSSIBILITIES

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 12 Nov 80 Sec A p 4

[Article by Margarita Nolasco: "The List of Those Under Wraps"]

[Text] Ronald Reagan is now the president-elect of the United States of America. So many have already said that he will approach us as if on a holiday that it is scarcely worthwhile repeating; but there is no doubt that he will approach us as if on a holiday. Now we are left with only two rays of hope: one, that candidate Reagan will modify his opinion and attitude toward the reality which President Reagan will be facing in the future: in other words, the international pressures, and the need to preserve a certain amount of peace for the progress of American affairs in the world, will make his administration hardly different from that of Carter (which obviously was of no great benefit to us either).

The other hope for Mexicans is 82. Not the constitutional article, but the year of the change in presidents. Thus far, there are nine possibilities: De la Madrid, De la Vega, Diaz Serrano, Garcia Paniagua, Ibarra, Mujica, Ojeda, Olivares and Solana, in strict alphabetical order. Unless there is a better opinion of the great elector (according to a report from Castillas, JLP's [Jose Lopez Portillo] secretary and adviser), some of the foregoing have little chance. Let us analyze the situation, keeping the strict alphabetical order.

Diaz Serrano lacks the strong position of a state secretary, but on the other hand he does have control of the oil industry which has, to date, been the national option for seeking economic development and independence. However, for Mexico and 82 his position is extremely vulnerable: the vice-president who will accompany Reagan in the United States is a partner and friend of Diaz Serrano. In fact, Busch and Diaz Serrano have been partners in the well drilling business since 1965. Busch, on the other hand, has been director of the CIA. In other words, it would be intolerable for the country to have as its next president an ex-partner of the current United States vice-president as well as former CIA director. As if that were not enough) we should recall that Diaz Serrano was a representative of General Motors (one of the major multinationals) during the first third of the 1970's. Hence, Diaz Serrano's chances have been undermined, and some no longer consider him included on the list of those under wraps.

Garcia Paniagua, son of Gen Garcia Barragan, is the closest to a military man among the presidential hopefuls. He lacks political force and does not hold the strong position of some of the other candidates. His chances are slim, and hence he is often forgotten when the list of possible candidates for 1982 is made.

Mujica was uncovered by Ruben Figueroa, who made him his candidate as well. And that, obviously, detracted sympathy from him among the politicians and the public as a whole. Moreover, although he has proven to be brilliant as an intellectual (a professor and director of the National School of Economics, an adviser and a prominent writer), as a politican and state secretary he has acted so inconspicuously that his performance can only be described as mediocre. If it had not been for Figueroa's "stab" at mentioning him and making him his candidate, few would think of him in drawing up the list of those under wraps.

Olivares Santana is a skillful politicians, and including him among those whose chances of being on the list of those under wraps are dubious may perhaps be a gross error. But he has always been a second rate politician, outstanding and skillful, yet more of a politician that one with a place in public administration. In any event, it has only been since May 1979 that he has been serving as secretary of government, and hence has had sufficient chance of becoming president. Perhaps the fact that he has only been in the position for a year and a half has prevented him from assuming a strong position as yet, but the possibility of his doing so next year cannot be precluded. At any rate, during this November 1980, his position on the list of future candidates is not among the best.

Solana is the last one whose inclusion on the list is disputable. It so happens that he occupies the state secretariat that is most vulnerable, politically speaking. Any student disturbance, any teachers' movement, a brief review of the educational lag and waste in schools, in short, any of the things that happen during one month or another, leaves the secretary of public education in an extremely compromising position. And this in addition to the fact that his political career is more closely linked with university politics than with the national PRI politics, which obviously detracts from his political strength within the party. Finally, his performance as secretary has not been especially brilliant; and therefore he is often overlooked when making the list of those under wraps.

Thus, we can eliminate five of the nine, which leaves four likely ones: De la Madrid, De la Vega, Ibarra and Ojeda. One of them will have to confront Reagan, and defend the nation's future. Which one would be the most suitable? Which one has the best chances?

PCM PROTESTS ALLEGED ELECTORAL FRAUD

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 23 Oct 80 Sec F p 5

[Text] They are trying to prevent our victory, they claim....

In the La Montana and Tierra Caliente areas the election authorities have illegally stopped the issuance of voters' credentials, attempting in this way to avoid likely victories of the Communists, according to the PCM's [Mexican Communist Party] state directorate.

The foregoing complaint was made by the general delegate in Guerrero, Raron Sosamontes, who added that this was noticed after he accompanied the Communist candidate for the governorship of Guerrero, Prof Othon Salazar Ramirez, on his campaign in those areas.

He mentioned specifically that in Tlapa, Alcozauca and Malinantepec, in La Montana, as well as Tlapehuala, Cutzamala de Pinzon and Coyuca de Catalan, in Tierra Caliente, municipalities wherein the Communist Party has great influence, the authorities responsible for issuing voters' credentials suspended the census taking as soon as Salazar Ramirez appeared.

During a popular gathering held in Taxco de Alarcon, attended by Sosamontes, the Communist candidate for state governor announced that the PCM would participate in the state's 11 electoral districts.

In the same location and later in Iguala, Salazar Ramirez said that they uphold the democratic participation of all citizens, regardless of whether they agree with their ideas.

He also mentioned the respect that he has for Alejandro Cervantes Delgado, the PRI [Institutional Revolutionary Party] candidate, but remarked: "It must not be forgotten that he represents the monopolies which have made transportation and food more expensive, and which have deprived the peasants and settlers from their land in order to promote foreign tourism investments in Acapulco, Taxco and Zihuatanejo."

He concluded by saying: "This, understandably, benefits the foreigners in particular, and there is no course of action against this other than organized struggle in the next people's assembly in Guerrero, which will take place on Saturday, in Chilpancingo."

CCE CLAIMS PESO IS OVERVALUED

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 11

[Text] Queretaro, 12 November--Today, the general director of the Coordinating Business Council (CCE), Francisco Calderon, in an address at Encounter 80, the main theme of which is productivity, stated that the National Employment Plan calls for the gradual elimination of unemployment and, in order to attain that goal, it is essential that the programs be backed by fitting monetary and finance policies.

In his report, he stressed the factor of an inflexible exchange policy which has been overvaluing the peso, while inflation has increased in excess of that in the countries with which Mexico trades, particularly the United States.

Calderon noted that an attempt has been made to maintain a fixed rate of exchange for the peso with respect to the dollar, and this has been an incentive for importing machinery and a deterrent to the creation of jobs in activities which promote the sale of Mexican goods and services abroad.

He claimed that, with oil, Mexico can continue to develop and increase per capita production. However, he said, an economic development based only on imports of machinery would make it possible to raise the productivity of the workers already employed in the existing plants, but it would limit the opportunities for creating new jobs.

As for the National Employment Plan, Calderon indicated that, with backing from the monetary and finance policies, it would improve the distribution of income and would hasten economic development; "however, it is impossible to create unproductive jobs in order to distribute the present income among more individuals, because that would lead to economic stagnation and to a progressive overall impoverishment."

The new jobs must generate tangible social wealth, through increasingly productive processes and techniques. In order to increase the overall employment and the society's standard of living, there must be increasingly larger supplies of equipment and tools per employed person.

Development demands the total utilization of all of the community's resources, with an attempt to prevent their remaining idle, and to have them used for the most profitable purposes; because unemployment in particular is the greatest waste that a country can commit.

Greater production per worker can be achieved through larger supplies of producer goods, the training of human resources who participate in productive and commercial activities on all levels; better work organization within the business firms; changing the sequence of productive processes or eliminating unnecessary movement and time spent; and, finally, adopting new techniques for production and distribution, discarding the outdated machinery and equipment and replacing it with more efficient types.

Calderon said that all these methods could be summarized into two: the capitalization and training of the individuals who take part in production.

Calderon stated that, in the case of Mexico, productivity could be increased through a modernization and mechanization of productive activities in both industry, and commerce and services, but without going so far as to cheapen the capital goods in relation to the cost of labor, because that would foster unemployment, by occupying the factor in short supply which is capital, and failing to occupy the factor in large supply which is labor, and which would remain idle.

Finally, he declared that the investment has been constant, and has brought about a constructive development in the country, because the ratio between the total gross investment and the gross domestic product has already reached 24 percent, a proportion similar to that in several industrialized countries, and the overall development plan calls for an increase in the rate to 27 percent.

FERTIMEX CHEMICAL INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX DISCUSSED

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 25 Oct 80 Sec B p 8

[Text] Mexican Fertilizers [FERTIMEX] currently has 14 industrial complexes in operation and one more under construction, located in Lazaro Cardenas, Michoacan. They process solid fertilizers, intermediate products, insecticides and various chemical products.

Owing to the number of its plants, their capacities and the diversity of products that they make, FERTIMEX is the country's leading chemical industry, and its productive activity is vital to much of the industry, apart from its basic function of producing the fertilizers necessary for the nation's agriculture.

The line of solid fertilizers is the main one, and includes virtually all the usual types, with both low and high concentration. Included among the nitrogenous types are ammonium sulfate, ammonium nitrate and urea; among the phosphated types, the simple and triple superphosphates; and among the multiple types, diamonic phosphate and the NPK type complex fertilizers.

In the area of pesticides, FERTIMEX has concentrated its efforts on the production of basic types, both chlorated (DDT, Toxaphene and BCH) and phosphated (methylic and estylic parathions), without going into the preparation of formulas, which in itself constitutes another industry already provided for by a large number of small private enterprise firms.

The fertilizer industry is based on ammonia and on the three major inorganic acids: sulfuric, nitric and phosphoric; and hence it is the most important sector of the basic chemical industry in Mexico. The large share that it has in other activities of the chemical industry is due to this. By way of illustration, we cite a few examples of the backing that FERTIMEX gives to various manufacturing activities:

Urea is used in the soap industry, and in the manufacture of synthetic adhesives, plastics, and synthetic aminoacids, as well as for feed in the large livestock industry.

Ammonium nitrate is used as a base for explosives, in open cut mining operations, in quarries and in public works.

Phosphoric acid plays a very important role in the manufacture of detergents, and nitric acid is an essential ingredient in nitration, a unifying process of great significance in organic chemistry, particularly in the manufacture of explosives. Sulfuric acid assumes major importance and deserves special mention. Mexico is rated as the 10th-ranking producer in the world, and FERTIMEX is the leading producer in the republic, contributing 2 million tons, or 70 percent of the total installed capacity in the nation.

The course of its development as an industrial enterprise began with the production of bonemeal and the processing of marine bird guano in insignificant amounts, until the first plant producing chemical fertilizers was built in San Luis Potosi, where 8,015 tons of simple superphosphate were produced by 1948.

The growth of the company's industrial plant stemming from the natural gas supplies in the vicinity of the Federal District fostered the building of the first ammonia producing plant in Latin America, and other industrial complexes for the manufacture of fertilizers, as well as the integration of the industry under state ownership, through the incorporation of the private enterprise producing solid fertilizers, until a total of 1,752,111 metric tons were produced in 1976.

During the current 6-year period, Guano and Fertilizer of Mexico, Inc was merged with Mexican Phosphated Fertilizers, Inc, giving rise to FERTIMEX; and by 1979 a production of 2,126,282 tons was attained, showing an increase within those 3 years of 21.4 percent in comparison with 1976.

In 1980, production amounting to 3,346,900 tons has been scheduled,which will represent an increase of 57.4 percent over last year, and 91 percent over that for 1976.

By the first quarter of this year, 554,944 tons were produced,a volume 91,530 tons larger than the production for the same period in 1979.

Expansion

By the end of 1976, the installed capacity of the Mexican fertilizer industry was comprised as follows:

1976

	Final Production	Intermediate
Guanomex	1,776,000	838,000
FFM [Mexican Phosphated Fertilizers]	270,000	1,290,000
Univex	187,500	906,000 *
Total:	2,233,500	3,034,000

* PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum]-Ammonia

The foregoing figures show a sustained impetus since 1943, where the growth was achieved by the state and private groups which became assimilated, until 1976, when the preliminary negotiations were reached for FFM to become the property of the nation.

It is imperative during the present government term, 1977-82, to culminate the absorption process with the merger of FFM and Guanomex, giving rise to FERTIMEX, and to start a medium and long term expansion program, which will not only guarantee self-sufficiency for increasing rates of consumption, through accelerated growth, but also, in view of the natural resources, geographical advantages and trained human resources, enable us to compete on the international markets and, with exports, generate the economic surplus that will give the national industry a sound financial position.

These expansion program includes two periods: one over the short and medium term, which will end with the 6-year period; and another over the long term, which will conclude in 1990. The first one consists of the construction of 21 new plants and the expansion of five of the existing ones, which, combined, will raise the production capacity by 4.29 million tons of final products and 3.562 million tons of intermediate products. The second one, from 1983 to 1990, calls for meeting the long term demands of the domestic market and sustained competition on the international markets, making use of economies of scale which the scheduled industrial complexes will have. During this second phase, it is anticipated that there will be a need to build 15 plans for final products and 19 for intermediate products, which will increase the installed capacity by 4.965 million and 7.451 million tons, respectively.

The first expansion program is under way, and the second one has begun on the study level; so that unfavorable conditions for the supply of fertilizers will not occur again in Mexico.

During the period from 1977 to date, FERTIMEX has completed and put into operation the following industrial projects:

COSEP SCORED AFTER WALKOUT FROM STATE COUNCIL

FSLN Economic Policy Threatened

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 14 Nov 80 p 5

[Commentary by Carlos B. Gallo O.: "Whom Does COSEP Represent?"]

[Text] There are leaders and "leaders." Real leaders are loyal to the end to the interests of those whom they represent. The "leaders" of COSEP [Higher Council of Private Enterprise], who say that they represent the truly patriotic businessmen, reached the pinnacle of incongruency when they stated categorically that "the economy has not been revived," in the 11 November pronouncement.

With this statement, the board of directors of COSEP not only demonstrates its disregard for and its disinterest in the contributions being made by patriotic businessmen to the process of revival, but, rather, they go so far as to disavow and deny the effort made by the businessmen to fulfill the economic goals established in Plan 80. Blinded in their eagerness to impugn the power of the people, the directors are launching a frontal attack on a group of financial measures, on prices and marketing, that are intended for benefiting every sector including the businessmen. And these benefits are easily identified in the field of economics and politics.

We can point out that the revolution solved a series of conflicts that definitely affected the economic activities of private businessmen in the period of the dictatorship.

An example of this is the conflict kept up between the cotton-growers and the landlords who imposed high prices on land rent, or between importers of agricultural materials and implements, and we must add to this constant friction with the financial sector, which was in the hands of imperialist bankers.

The pronouncement made by the board of directors of COSEP makes it possible to perceive the political aims of this group that is trying to provoke and break up the process of National Unity, disregarding the interests of honest businessmen.

These gentlemen are launching attacks against the price, financial, taxation and labor policy of the Revolutionary State, without reflecting that the measures taken tend actually to strengthen the process of National Unity and, therefore, to benefit the working class as the fundamental axis of the revolutionary process.

When this board of directors questions price control, it is obvious that it is specifying interests that are not the interests of all its affiliates. The attacks on the price policy only confirm that: the aims of COSEP, its historical calling to plunge the working people into hunger and poverty. They do not agree with the Revolutionary State's encouraging a stability in prices as a basic requisite for guaranteeing the people's minimum standard of living. They reject the principle that prices of basic products should have a subsidy level as a solution so that the people may have access to those basic products.

We believe that honest businessmen do not agree, either, that our economy should again be subject to imperialism, but the board of directors of COSEP is so in agreement when it states that the solution is not taxes but, rather a good use of loans. We must point out to our people that, in order to raise the standard of living and to take care of public and private investment it is necessary to have funds and that the COSEP board sees only two ways of obtaining them. One is to go into debt in a limited way and the other is to have taxes levied exclusively on the sectors of the people, as has happened historically.

COSEP is trying to act surprised and to shun the responsibilities that it agreed to assume months ago when Plan 90 was presented. The FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] was very clear in this connection about who should pay for revival and it stated the following: "If a redistributive revival is proposed, an increase in taxes has to be carried out to balance the new expenditures in behalf of the people. Actually, this solution the only one because the working people would tolerate paying with hunger for a revival, after having paid for liberation with blood."

The fields with regard to economic and social policy are being defined on the basis of the statement by COSEP. These gentlemen assure irresponsibly that "the process of inflation of domestic origin is high." On various occasions, the present president of COSEP stated that in our country there never has been inflation percentages "as high as now," in a desire to shift this responsibility to the revolution. COSEP must be reminded that inflation in this country did not worry them during the dictatorship, because the workers paid for that inflation. It was the illegal tax that the working class had to pay.

It is important to point out that that irresponsable "analysis" by COSEP makes them go so far as to point out that inflation has a domestic origin. Is our country, perhaps, avoiding the inflationary pressure of the world capitalist market, which is wallowing in a crisis at present? Gentlemen, the inflation that we have is expressed by that capitalist market by way of prices for the products that we sell and buy.

COSEP's class violence was laid bare in that pronouncement, when it went so far as to state that the present labor code is all right, that there is no need for promulgating a new one, that the correct course was to ensure compliance with the Somoza labor code. How about that? COSEP is demanding and invoking the right to dismiss and give notice to workers whenever they so desire, imposing on them labor rules and hours that were proper only in the period of the dictorship. That whole set of considerations developed by the board of directors of COSEP does not express the interests of that group of honest businessmen who are ready to march alongside the working people toward new tasks. Therefore, we dare state that we can describe the positions taken by those businessmen who do not subscribe to COSEP's proimperialist, desperate plan as not only honest but also patriotic. Their nature lies in their attachment to the interests represented by the revolution and to the political objectives stated in this period. The forthcoming 1981 plan concentrates the will of the thousands of rural and city workers. It concentrates the aspirations of those honest businessmen and technicians. It concentrates the validity and justice of the Sandinist economic policy that is materializing in opposition to the incapability of weak, desperate groups horrified by the people's freedom.

Threat to Revolutionary Unity

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 3

[Commentary by Carlos Fernando Chamorro B.: "These Are COSEP's Real Positions"]

[Text] "They should return the power to us. We want to reconstruct dependent capitalism. We invoke hunger for the masses and cessation of the Anti-imperialist People's Revolution." That summarizes the arguments of the leaders of COSEP [Higher Council of Private Enterprise] that they have put forth -- behind the false front of "denouncing the deviations of the government's program" and of "reviving true national unity" -- to justify their withdrawal from the Council of State.

It suffices to read the pronouncement of those who arrogate to themselves, on behalf of COSEP, a false representation of all Nicaraguan businessmen, in order to arrive at this conclusion.

Their arguments are clear. They reject the role of the vanguard of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front], its nature as a guiding force at the head of the Government Junta and the Revolutionary Armed Forces, and the plan for Anti-Imperialist National Unity welded around the driving forces of the revolution: the masses of the people and their vanguard. Finally, they refuse to accept the historical fact that a revolution occurred in this country that transformed the power structure radically, above the proimperialist reform for which they longed. There are enormous differences in form and content between the two plans. Therefore, COSEP is wrong when it tries to put the Sandinist Revolution within the framework and systems of its democratic-bourgeois conception that has already been buried by history.

They suggest with apparent ingenuousness that the process of national unity must be understood as an eclectic sum of forces living together in freedom. But their own conscience betrays them. In their opinion, this revolution has no enemies. The anti-imperialist struggle does not appear either in COSEP's documents or practical attitudes, because, basically -- when they demand national unity without the Sandinist vanguard -- they are opening the way for destruction of the process by imperialism.

The demagogy and reactionary nature of COSEP's positions, deprived of any patriotism, are evident in that proposal.

National Unity has a patriotic, anti-imperialist nature and is the appeal by the Sandinist vanguard and the forces of the people to every democratic, progressive sector in the country to oppose imperialism and to pursue the tasks of national reconstruction. COSEP did not invoke the anti-imperialist struggle, but, rather, its negation and disintegration of revolutionary power. In other words, the reconstruction of dependent capitalism in opposition to the revolutionary plan for national reconstruction.

On one occasion already, Ambassador Pezzullo urged COSEP to become the "vanguard of reconstruction," and right there defined reconstruction as something different from revolution. It is regrettable that they took him seriously.

His comments concerning economic recovery attempt to negate the effort of the patriotic workers, technicians and businessmen who have been engaged, for a year now, in raising production to meet the goals of the economic program.

They conceal the fact that the structural crisis of the Somoza regime -- a system under which they became rich -- left the country incalculable economic problems that can be solved only with the patriotic participation of every sector in the country that really wants economic independence. They reject the efforts to stabilize prices by way of subsidy, leaving as an alternative only the hunger of the masses. They renege on the tax burden, insinuating that the people should only be the ones to finance reconstruction with the help of greater foreign indebtedness.

And why do they criticize so ardently the policy of the Sandinist State? They themselves gave the answer recently when they required the state to account to the heads of COSEP. In other words, they want the state to cease representing the interests of the workers and of the country's democratic, progressive forces to become an exclusive instrument in their service.

We come back again to the same thing, to a refutation of the revolutionary authority. We are aware, however, that the positions of the leaders of COSEP do not represent the feeling of the majority of patriotic businessmen, of those men who not only regard themselves as patriots, because they remained to live in this country, but who also are ready to struggle for a new society. For a democratic, anti-imperialist Nicaragua, for economic independence and the crystallization of the dreams of Sandino and Carlos Fonseca.

NATIONWIDE RALLIES SUPPORT FSLN IN STATE COUNCIL CRISIS

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 13 Nov 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] To the cry of "people's power" and "state council, people's council," thousands of workers and residents of a number of cities in Nicaragua took to the streets in support of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] and the government junta, rejecting the maneuvers of the reactionary parties and the COSEP [Higher Council of Private Enterprise] which yesterday in a provocative manner walked out of the state council session.

Carrying blankets, signs, and holding demonstrations, the Nicaraguan people have shown their full support for the Sandinist people's revolution; just a few minutes after realizing the full extent of the provocative and reactionary action of the bourgeois organizations, the masses organized and held meetings, in this way expressing their desire that Nicaragua would remain free, even though that is not what the reactionaries want.

The CST [Sandinist Workers Federation], the Sandinist Defense Committees, the 19 July Sandinist Youth, the Luisa Amanda Espinoza Nicaraguan Women's Association, the Luis Alfonso Velasquez Sandinist Children's Association, and the Association of Rural Workers mobilized throughout the nation.

The Sandinist Popular Militias did not lag behind and marched along with the people to the cry of "Against imperialist maneuvers, the Sandinist popular militias," thus expressing the feeling of our people.

People in the Streets

Granada. The Sandinist people's organizations of the city of Granada yesterday rejected the maneuvers of the bourgeois parties against our Sandinist revolution, culminating yesterday with their unjustified walkout from the state council session.

Representatives of the people's organizations--the CDS [Sandinist Defense Committees], ATC [Agricultural Workers Association], and the AMNLAE [expansion unknown]--along with the departmental steering committee of our vanguard, the Sandinist National Liberation Front, held a huge assembly in the Gran Sultana where they agreed to demonstrate in the main streets in the city to reject these maneuvers which are aimed against the revolutionary process.

During the assembly, comrade Raquel Callejas, the CDS representative in the state council for the departments of Granada and Rivas, explained the joint legislative structure of the state council and its importance in the national unity program supported by the FSLN and the national reconstruction government junta.

Comrade Javier Lopez, political secretary of the CDD [expansion unknown], said that the workers are aware of the maneuvers of the bourgeois parties, primarily of the MDN [Nicaraguan Democratic Movement], headed by Alfonso Robelo. Their policy, said Lopez, is based on political sophistry and sabotage. The workers are defending the revolution, though, and they know that the bourgeois elements are trying to defend their own petty interests.

Poor Maneuvers

All the maneuvers employed by the bourgeoisie, said Lopez, endanger the security of our Sandinist state. Our FSLN flag has won for itself the right to fly at the side of the national flag, he said later, pointing out that the symbols used by the reaction, the bourgeois and reactionary parties, are stained by treason and by the pro-colonialist policies of the shameful past.

Immediately afterwards those attending the assembly left for demonstrations, led by the red and black FSLN flag and the blue and white national flag, marching through the main streets of the city and through the most densely populated neighborhoods of Granada.

In the poorer neighborhoods many people joined in the march in an orderly fashion, while others watched from their doors, calling out slogans against the maneuvers of the reaction, of the native bourgeois traitors, and of the bourgeois parties which are working against our revolution.

Chinandega. About 4,000 people gathered together in this city and chanted the slogans: "We are Sandinists from now on; if anyone doesn't like it, that's too bad." The demonstration was led by members of the CST and of the 19 July Sandinist Youth who, together with the people, marched through the neighborhoods of this city in perfect order.

Young people, workers, women, and the people in general clearly said that they will not tolerate any maneuvers on the part of the reaction, and that they will continue to consolidate the revolution in their daily work or with rifles in hand.

In the 2 June Plaza in Chinandega, a member of the departmental committee of the FSLN said that the people are prepared to continue supporting national unity and defending the revolution; they are led by an experienced and strong vanguard.

In the western area, the towns of Chichigalpa and Corinto rejected Robelo's supporters.

In Leon: Combat Readiness

In the city of Leon, the wartorn Indian neighborhood of Subtiava resounded to the beat of drums as the people marched through the main streets of the city.

The actions of the reactionaries who boycotted the regular session of the state council were described to the people, who condemned these maneuvers.

In the heroic neighborhood of Monimbo in Masaya, the voices of the workers and the people were heard all over the city, as they marched through the main streets of this city of flowers.

The Monimbo residents said that they will not allow the reactionaries to block the advance of the revolution, because it has cost them a great deal of bloodshed and many deaths.

Carazo: No More Provocations

In San Marcos, Carazo, hundreds of people met in the park to protest the reactionary and cowardly attitude of the representatives of the reactionary parties in the state council who attempted to provoke an artificial crisis to harm the revolution.

The humble faces of both rural and city workers are the common denominator in these demonstrations against the provocative and reactionary positions of the MDN, PSC, PCD [expansions unknown], and PSD [Social Democratic Party].

Chontales. In Juigalpa, Chontales, our correspondents also reported demonstrations and meetings led by the mass organizations there, against the destabilizing and provocative maneuvers of the bourgeois parties who yesterday ordered their representatives to walk out of the regular session of the state council.

Ready for Defense

The Chontales residents said that they are ready to do all they can to defend the revolution against these destabilizing maneuvers. They will respond with the revolutionary unity of all of the working people.

One group of demonstrators marched throughout the city from the National Institute, the Normal School, and the Pablo Hurtado Educational Center, walking through a number of the main streets as a sign of their rejection of the maneuvers of the pro-imperialist reaction.

Some home-made bombs were set off during the demonstrations all over the country and bonfires flared up again. This shows the readiness of our people to answer the call to defend the revolution. The harsh days of the war were remembered yesterday and the people showed their willingness to fight in defense of the revolution.

Rivas. In Rivas, to the cry of "Long live the state council and the revolutionary government," a demonstration marched through the main streets in the city.

Another slogan of the demonstrators was "people's power."

The armed forces also mobilized in rejection of the provocative and destabilizing maneuvers of the reactionary forces and said: "The people will not sell out nor will they ever surrender!"

COLUMNIST WARNS PEOPLE AGAINST CHOOSING 'PEOPLES DEMOCRACY'

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 14 Nov 80 p 2

[Editorial by Regina Aviles Torres]

[Text] Once Abraham Lincoln, the farsighted president of the United States, made the following comment: "If someone calls an animal's tail a leg, how many legs does a dog have? Will there be five? No! The dog will still have four legs, because a mistake doesn't change the dog's nature." This same reflection comes to the mind of many people when they see that some politicians call the political regime of Cuba and Company a "people's democracy," thus weakening the concept of democracy itself, which was brilliantly defined by Lincoln himself as the government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

Democracy is the government of the majority, but in Cuba, where the Communist Party controls all power, is this party the party of the majority? Does the majority rule in the Soviet Union where only 15 percent of the population officially professes the marxist ideology? In those places in the world where "people's democracy" has spread its roots, can most of thepeople raise their voices and decide their own fate?

People's democracy is the system of government in North Korea, where a "leader" has been in power, in a Stroessner style, for over 30 years, and has already chosen his son as his successor.

People's democracy is the system of government in Cuba, where Castro has been the "supreme leader" for over 20 years. It is the system of government in Yugoslavia, where only death could remove Marshal Tito from power. It is the system of government in Poland, where Walesa and his worker and peasant comrades are protesting the lack of free unions which can think of the welfare of the workers and not just of the marxist-leninist theory of surplus value. Perhaps the knowledge that this "surplus value" is not going to the capitalist but to the state helps the citizen to deal with problems caused by inflation?

Opposing this "people's democracy" without elections, without unions, without majority support, is the democracy that uses free elections, that allows free unions, that obeys the decisions made by the voters at the polls. This is the democracy which brought to the presidency an Abraham Lincoln, frontiersman; an Andrew Jackson, tailor; a Harry Truman, shopkeeper; a Jimmy Carter, farmer; and a Ronald Reagan, actor. This is the democracy which expressly prohibits anyone, no matter how wise and powerful he may be, from remaining in office for more than two terms--8 years. This is the democracy which respects the people's opinion, and which does not allow anyone to be above the law, and whose hand does not hesitate to remove a Nixon from office for having abused his authority.

Nicaragua is an adult nation, and should choose its own destiny. It is not right for one group, even though it may be acting in good faith, to force all the people to take "people's democracy" as a child is forced to take a laxative, by holding his nostrils shut and ordering him to open his mouth. This method has gone out of style in more sophisticated countries, and Nicaragua is a literate nation and does not want such impositions.

It would be a different matter if the people were being called upon to vote and if the ballots decided. The two trends of democracy would be in opposition and if the marxist-leninist version won, this mandate would be respected by everyone, whether they liked it or not, becasue the voice of the people is the voice of God. Acting otherwise is senseless, because no one is naive enough to accept a dog's wagging tail as one more "leg."

EDUARDO FERNANDEZ DISCUSSES IMPRESSIONS OF CHINA VISIT

Caracas EL DIARIO DE CARACAS in Spanish 11 Nov 80 pp 16, 17

[Text] China is fertile ground for the imagination of politicians. In this case it is Eduardo Fernandez who has returned from Peking and is giving the Social Christian point of view of the Chinese situation, the post-Mao leaders and relations between China and Venezuela.

His visit lasted a week, and was not all tourism. Upon arriving, the guests from the National Committee of the Social Christian Party (COPEI) found a very well-written itinerary which committed them to daily meetings at the National Palace with Chinese leaders Li Xi Nnian and Teng Hsiao Ping.

The itinerary provides information about the concerns of the Politburo of the Chinese Communist Party with regard to Venezuela: how our political parties function, how Venezuela perceives its responsiblity in the Caribbean and the Western Hemisphere, and how its oil policy is being carried out.

COPEI was interested in a review of the international scene with particular emphasis on the situation in the Middle East, the Chinese domestic situation, the role of the Communist Party as a liaison between the people and the government, and the management of popular organizations.

War

Eduardo Fernandez' notes indicate that he was most impressed during his visit by the constant mention of the imminence of war:

"With respect to the international scene, they spoke with us in very clear terms. They expressed the point of view of the Chinese Communist Party, that world peace is in a precarious situation. There are elements which are seriously threatening peace; they went so far as to say that war was imminent."

They enumerated four sensitive spots in the world: first, the control of everything that has to do with oil supplies. "Within this context we have the actions of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan and the truly significant decision to send Soviet troops beyond that country's borders for the first time."

Secondly, there is the situation in Southeast Asia and Vietnam's actions against Cambodia: "The Chinese maintain that to a great extent Vietnam is acting at the behest of what they call the hegemonic interests of the Soviet Union in the context of Southeast Asia."

Thirdly, the problems of southern Africa: Zimbabwe and the problem of the struggle for self-determination by the peoples of southern Africa.

Fourth, there is the Caribbean and the problems arising there because it is also a source of oil for the Western world.

Peking seemed to agree with Venezuela's position on the Caribbean, and the Chinese were curious about Venezuela's responsibility in the Western Hemisphere, "due to the fact," recalls Fernandez, "that Venezuela is an oil producing country and at the same time a model for development that can counteract the totalitarian model presented by the traditional dictatorships, or the Cuban model."

Four Modernizations

As far as domestic policy is concerned, the Chinese are fond of quoting statistics and numbers to illustrate changes in what they call the "Four Modernizations": in politics, economics, culture and science.

In politics, they claim that they are creating a certain degree of popular participation and democracy.

"Someone said to me, 'Is China returning to democracy? No, China never had a democracy. . . Now, after the revolution, the possibility exists to try out a democratic liberalization, and that is the great initiative that the Chinese leaders, particularly Teng Hsiao Ping, have taken.'"

Regarding economic modernization, Fernandez says that he was most impressed by his meeting in Peking with Milton Friedman, "one of the great priests of a school of economic liberalism." He was observing with great interest the process of stimulating a certain amount of private property and entrepreneurial capacity in order to optimize national economic production (profit margins, the eventual participation of private capital). And of course, that private capital is being encouraged to participate in certain specific initiatives. Foreign capital is also invited to participate "within certain limits, subordinated to the development plans of the Party. Remember that they are talking of things that were unthinkable 10 or even 5 years ago," remarks Fernandez.

Concerning cultural modernization, he says that the thing that struck him most "was the climate of rejection, repudiation, of everything involved in the Cultural Revolution, which is blamed for a series of errors and setbacks in the country." One of Fernandez' strongest endorsements of the Chinese process is that of the last modernization, science: "The Chinese have achieved an impressive development of the nuclear field, given that China is an underdeveloped country."

After commenting that comparisons should not be made among different levels of development, such as the United States, France and Venezuela, he said that there are comparisons that "come to mind": first, "How China was then and how it is now. Without a doubt, despite the immense ideological differences between me and the positions and creed of the present Chinese Communist Party, I must acknowledge that there has been impressive progress and development. In the second place, it must be compared with countries that are to some degree comparable with China, such as India. India has achieved a considerable democratic development, but there is no doubt that it has areas of very serious economic problems. The contrast does not exactly make India look good."

At any rate, it was stressed to the COPEI members that several basic principles were being followed in China: perseverence along the road to socialism, the dictatorship of the proletariat, Marxism-Leninism, the predominance of the Party, and the thoughts of Chairman Mao Tse Tung.

Fernandez made two comments with regard to the two latter points: "I was struck by the fact that it is the Party that makes decisions; the government is only an instrument of the Party which carries out the development program;" and "Concerning Mao's thoughts, I remember that sometimes they omit this part. Sometimes they forget to mention it when they speak of the four principles they stress."

Luis Herrera "Chinese"

"One point we also mentioned on the agenda was bilateral relations between China and Venezuela. They have existed for 6 years, and so far they have been maintained at quite a moderate level," explained Fernandez. "But there is room for a substantial acceleration of these relations. China made an express invitation to President Luis Herrera. . . and certainly I took the liberty of telling them that the president was called 'The Chinese.'. . . He has no doubt that those relations will improve."

Here are Eduardo Fernandez' impressions of the main political figures of China:

--Teng Hsiao Ping (vice chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee): "He is a man of small stature with a great personality, great sympathy, who is constantly smiling. Sometimes he looks like a Western politician. He is very intelligent, very spontaneous. That was what impressed me the most. I have a certain stereotype of socialist leaders: they tend to have very rigid ideas, prefabricated phrases, and they always answer with cliches and rhetoric. But Teng Hsiao Ping is a refreshing man who is capable of making completely spontaneous statements.

"Until recently he was vice prime minister, and now he is vice chairman of the Communist Party Central Committee. . . it is curious. . . he has always been vice something or assistant something, but everyone recognizes that he is undoubtedly the inspiration behind the modernization process that is taking place in China.

"He was defeated, and they sent him to an interior province of China to endure very humiliating circumstances. Now he has recovered, and is the inspiration, the leader, the standardbearer of this great process of modernization."

Li Xi Nnian

"He is a very interesting man, profoundly intelligent, perhaps one of the most intelligent people I have ever met in my life. He is very sharp, very deep; what's more, he seems very sure of what he is doing, and very experienced. He is a veterar of the revolution; he was one of the leaders of the Long March, which culminated in the victory of the revolution. He must be about 72 or 74 years old. He is quite vigorous, full of life. We talked with him for a long time; he was the most important and most constant of our hosts."

Hua Kuo Feng, Communist Party Chairman

"He is a very serious man, but equally profound. He has a habit of speaking very directly, about things like the problem of the USSR. One has to be impressed when one considers the fact that both are communist countries, but the Chinese denounce the dangers they perceive in what they call the 'hegemonistic and expansionist tendency of the USSR,' which has been expressed in clear, categorical and unequivocal terms."

Memory of Mao

"I went to a lot of trouble, and it cost me considerable effort, to visit Mao's tomb. Some of the officials told me that it was not very important, but I told them that it had to be necessarily. So on the last day, when we were already about to leave for the airport, we stopped a moment at the tomb. For me, of course, it was an emotional experience. I took the opportunity to pray to Our Father.

"They blame the whole Cultural Revolution on the 'Gang of Four,' led by Mao's widow. Moreover, some of our companions, whenever the Gang of Four was mentioned, would open their hands with all five fingers showing, implying that the Gang of Four consisted of not four but five, the fifth being Chairman Mao.

"No one will yet dare to say that Mao was part of the Gang of Four, which is held responsible for many crimes. They do not dare say that Mao was mixed up in that, of course. Teng Hsiao Ping has said that Mao was not immune to the errors of the recent past, that he was a great leader who made great decisions, but who also made great mistakes. We observed a very common tendency to reduce everything to statistical terms; it is said that Mao was right 70 percent of the time and wrong 30 percent. Apparently, that 30 percent involves a certain complicity in the development of the Cultural Revolution."

The COPEI National Committee delegation that went to China consisted of Secretary General Eduardo Fernandez, Haydee Castillo de Lopez Acosta, Freddy Delgado Dalo, Carlos Rodriguez Ganteaume and Gustavo Tarre, all accompanied by their wives. Their main hosts in Peking were officials of the Chinese Communist Party, Chairman Hua Kuo Feng and Vice Chairman Li Xi Nnian.

Chinese Self-confident

Eduardo Fernandez first visited China 6 years ago. Then he was part of a delegation of the World Interparliamentary Conference which had gone to Tokyo. There they received an invitation to go to Peking. They arrived in the middle of a campaign with signs and demonstrations against Lin Piao and Confucius.

"It was as if there had been a demonstration against Laureano Vallenilla and Boves in Venezuela," recalls Fernandez, "or against any contemporary leader and Captain Emparan." It was explained later that that was the way the Gang of Four attacked Chou En Lai, a man who could not be confronted directly because of his prestige and his close ties with Mao Tse Tung. That was his first impression.

Years later, Fernandez observes great changes: "The first time I went there were practically no cars on the streets. They were immense streets, very long avenues filled with hundreds of thousands of bicycles and pedestrians. On this trip, the number of automobiles had increased remarkably. They are all made in China, and are very comfortable but modest cars. They are very austere; one of the major features of life in China is austerity. There is no luxury, no opulence, but there is enough to meet the basic needs. I also noted feverish activity in construction. Everywhere we went they were building buildings. It is said that a major hotel is being constructed, financed by an international hotel agency. I saw some places where the famous sign, 'Drink Coca Cola' is displayed. A few years ago that was totally unthinkable. There are some signs of liberalization. After a long period of isolation, the country has self-confidence, confidence in its own resources. It has the courage to open up to foreign cultural influences, because it feels it can control and master the situation."

Most Impressive: Popular Organizations

One of the things that attracted the attention of the COPEI secretary general was "the nature and functioning of the popular organizations, the way they have managed to organize and discipline that huge population in the vast territory of China through a very interesting system of popular organizations, both urban and rural."

The people in the unions and the popular organizations are being allowed more and more independence. At the time of the Venezuelan visit, something basic to the development of the popular organizations was taking place. The Communist Party desired to eliminate the concentration of power, and decided that leaders could not hold more than one post. They were asked to choose between the Party and the government, and the majority chose the control of the Party, which has always played the most important role in national politics. In Shanghai, for example, they spoke with the mayor, "who is still the mayor, but he has already resigned in order to accept the position of first secretary," recalls Fernandez.

The Visit

A perfect indication of how Chinese diplomacy functions was the welcome the Venezuelan delegation received.

"Our reception was first class. They put us up in a special residence for foreign guests which is suitable to house chiefs of state. Talks were held at the National Palace, which is where the People's Assembly meets. When the Venezuelan delegation arrived, we even had military honors. Later we were given a state banquet at the Palace of the People's Assembly, and we were received by the highest ranking officials. The Party chairman is practically speaking the Chinese chief of state, and we had talks with him." The conversations were always characterized by generous servings of libations, with a beverage called Mo-Tai. The punch bowls in the salons turned out to be spittoons.

The Venezuelans did not engage in much tourism. They went to the Great Wall, the Forbidden City, the tombs of the emperors and, thanks to Fernandez' insistence, Mao's tomb.

Meanwhile, they learned that there is not just one political party in China; there are eight, each representing a sector such as the peasants, the intellectuals, etc. There is also the Kuo-Min-Tang Party, the section that broke off from Chiang Kai Chek's party and joined Mao. "I wish all the parties here agreed with COPEI," says Fernandez, smiling, "the way all the parties there agree with the government party."

Women? They were not seen very often. "Now that you mention it, there were few. I don't know if Mao's widow's experiences frightened them a bit about women's participation, but we did not meet with the female leaders of the party."

BRIEFS

MAS, MEP, MIR ACCORD--The political leadership of the Movement for Socialism (MAS), the Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR) and the People's Electoral Movement (MEP) in Caracas agreed to work together on a plan of action to promote social struggles and mobilizations in opposition to the Social Christian (COPEI) government. In order to publicize the three-party agreement, Eduardo Pozo (secretary general of the MAS in the Federal District), Pedro Perez of the MIR, and Jose Isabel Marcano of the MEP visited the EL NACIONAL offices. One of their first actions will be to implement the agreements of the successful Leftist Councilmen Encounter which took place recently in Central Park. They have also scheduled several unity work days for the labor movement, as well as propaganda events, demonstrations against the high cost of living and protests against the educational crisis. Regardless of the natural differences between them regarding the autonomy of each organization, pluralism and freedom of opinion, the three parties (according to their leaders) feel it is indispensable that they take a decisive, exemplary step toward unity of action among the organic forces of the left. The agreement reached in Caracas will be repeated on a regional level in order to build unity in the political forces that are demanding change in the country. Upon announcing the agreement, the leaders issued a statement expressing their opinion that the national situation has been aggravated by government errors. FOREIGN INVESTMENT NEEDED--The lack of management capacity, the absence of technology and poor management training of Venezuelans have forced the government to resort to foreign investment, with the condition that within a period of 15 years the enterprise be managed by Venezuelans. The president of the Superintendancy of Foreign Investment (SIEX), Alfredo Gonzalez Amare, cited the example of the lack of installed capacity in the country manifested in the construction of low-income housing. The goal is to build 600,000 units, and the national industry is only capable of building 70,000 units. Another sector that needs foreign investment is the agribusiness sector. Amare pointed out that Venezuela imports 60 percent of the food it consumes, which puts it below world parameters for productivity. The objective would be to provide incentives for foreign investment within the legal framework of Decision 24 of the Andean Pact, and thus help the country begin to produce these agroindustrial products that it now buys abroad. At a talk given for journalists, the president of SIEX explained the agency's function, and indicated that the bureaucracy has been eliminated, personnel has been reorganized and the public is treated well. He denied that SIEX has violated the statutes of Decision 24, and explained that each member country of the Andean Pact adjusts the common system for the treatment of foreign capital in accordance with its internal conditions. In this regard, Venezuela has passed about seven decrees that give greater flexibility to foreign investment in technology and to the choice of the sectors in which foreign capital is welcome. NEW TARIFF RATES FOR FUEL, ELECTRICITY IN EFFECT

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 1 Nov 80 p 9

[Text] Starting at 0000 hours today, the new prices for fuels, in addition to readjustments of telephone, electricity, sanitation services, gas and long-distance railroad tickets, go into effect. Although there is no official information with regard to electricity and OSN [Sanitation Services of the Nation], the average rate increase is said to range around 4.5 or 5 percent.

The readjustments are calculated on the tariff levels in effect in October, but the effect of the 20-percent VAT [value-added tax] increase must be computed, so that, actually, the increase to be shown on November bills will be a maximum of 25 percent or a minimum of 24.5 percent -- depending on whether or not the effect of the VAT and the readjustment from November is calculated cumulatively -- over the September levels. It should be pointed out that the average increase in tariffs is not applicable to fuels or to transportation.

According to a Treasury spokesman, the effect of the VAT will take place on the October rates, which thus will show definitely the impact of the 20-percent VAT on October bills.

Fuels

Yesterday, the Energy Secretariat announced the increase in fuel prices, amounting on the average to 4.5 percent.

The price for premium gasoline was fixed at 1,140 pesos (4.59 percent); regular gasoline, 940 pesos (4.44 percent); kerosene and gas oil, 680 pesos (4.62 percent); fuel oil, 262 pesos (4.80 percent) and diesel oil, 443 pesos (4.48 percent increase).

Tariffs for natural gas, the official selling price of oil, Rio Turbio coal and fuel for electric powerplants underwent the same average increase (4.5 percent).

As was stated above, there was no official announcement on the size of the tariff adjustment for electricity services and Sanitation Services of the Nation. Nevertheless, Ministry of Economy sources stated that, in these cases, the readjustment will range between 4 and 6 percent. In the case of telephone service, it was stated that the increase amounts to 3.8 percent.

Fuel Prices
[in pesos]

	Present	Former	% increase
Premium gasoline	1,140	1,090	4.59
Regular gasoline	940	900	4.44
Kerosene and gas oil	680	650	4.62
Fuel oil	262	250	4.80
Diesel oil	443	424	4.48

Railroad Tariffs

On the other hand, the Argentine Railroads company announced yesterday the increase that long-distance rates will undergo, starting at 0000 hours today. The increase is 3.5 percent. Freight, express and cattle transportation services will also be readjusted by the same amount.

Argentine Railroads also announced that, at this time, rates for urban and suburban passenger service will not be readjusted. This increase is normally made on the 15th of each month.

Thus, the rate increase for the beginning of the month was completed. Adjustment of metropolitan rail services, public bus transportation and subways is left for the middle of the month.

U.S. TUNA FISHING STAND CRITICIZED AT OLADE MEETING

PA062232 Paris AFP in Spanish 0350 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Excerpts] Costa Rican Energy Minister Fernando Altmann announced here today on his return from Bogota that the Latin American Energy Organization (OLADE) has condemned "the punitive measures taken by the U.S. Government" against Latin American countries that are defending their fishing rights, in particular their rights to catch tuna.

OLADE, which is made up of the Latin American energy ministers, met last week in Colombia and the tuna issue was discussed. The organization condemned "all activities that depredate the natural resources within 200 miles at sea" off the Latin American coasts.

Altmann announced here today that the OLADE charter "recognizes the full and indisputable rights of Latin American peoples to defend, safeguard and utilize the natural resources present in their territories, whether these be energy, mining, agricultural, fishing or other resources."

The minister explained that according to this charter one of OLADE's functions is to promote solidarity among the member states for the utilization and protection of their resources and for defense against any action, sanction or form of coercion that may be taken against them.

The minister explained that the 10th OAS General Assembly recently in Washington supported Ecuador's position in defense of its maritime rights in the tuna war.

Altmann noted that the OAS also called on the United States to refrain from economic or political action and coercive measures to influence the sovereign will of states, as is the case in the tuna embargo applied to several countries at present.

Citing the agreements reached at the last OLADE meeting, Altmann said that "all fishing activities that violate the laws of the coastal countries of America, particularly the activities of the fleets of the large fishing powers, are a threat to the conservation of species and the region's ecological balance."

AGUADO ADDRESSES CRISIS IN FARM SECTOR

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 3 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] Mar del Plata, Buenos Aires (NA)--The president of Argentine Rural Confederations (CRA), Jorge Aguado, asked here for refinancing of the debt of the agricultural-livestock sector at the same time as he pointed out that "reduction of the next wheat crop is sizable, because not even 7.5 million metric tons are going to be attained."

In newspaper statements that were made in this city by the head of the rural organization, he also objected to the national government's foreign exchange policy and he stated that, because of it, "we are not competing abroad, in many cases."

Aguado also said that "the situation in rural areas caused by the deterioration in income is still the same." He pointed out that it is owing "to the cost of financing, the issue of taxes and the persistence of inflation."

He added that "we are hoping that one of the pressure factors will be eliminated. In itself this is no solution. It is a question of refinancing of the debts that the agricultural-livestock sector has. This will, at least, make it possible for a search for profitability to be faced calmly."

He also pointed out that "the search for efficiency in production is something logical at any time and it is especially real, when there are completely free markets, in which there is no distorted economic term, as there is in the present one owing to the foreign exchange rules.

"In every superdirected economy," he pointed out, "efficiency lags very far behind in comparison with countries in which actual economic freedom prevails.

"Nevertheless," he went on to say, "we must not aim at subsidies, and we do not need them, insofar as the markets are really coherent and homogeneous. At the present time, we do not compete, in many case, with foreign countries because of the interventionist measure of directing the foreign exchange rules.

"I am a determined defender of economic freedom in every respect," he added, "and I should like so important a factor as the exchange rate also to be governed by the laws of the market."

Next, he did not believe that the solution lies in a sudden effect measure, but he was of the opinion that, "if the present situation persists, at some time it will be necessary to pay for a shock."

In his statement, Aguado denied that he had been offered an official post to serve under president-elect Viola and he stated that "I should not deny that this may happen later."

The head of the CRA finally pointed out that "reduction of the next wheat crop is sizable, "because not even 7.5 million metric tons are going to be attained."

STATE TO PARTIALLY SUBSIDIZE INDUSTRIAL, FARM INVESTMENTS

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 6 Nov 80 sec 2 p 1

[Text] The state will reimburse industrial, agricultural-livestock and mining activities for a substantial part of the amounts that they invest in equipment -- between 10 and 35 percent -- according to the new promotional system announced last 10 July by the minister of Economy and which is under consideration at present by the Legislative Advisory Committee.

Tax reimbursement will be automatic, without prior action by any administrative authority -- as is stated in article 5 -- and it will include investments made between last 15 August and 31 December 1984.

It is specified in article 1 of the bill that payers of the profit tax who make investments in new amortizable goods of domestic or foreign manufacture, with the exception of automotive equipment, intended for industrial, agricultural-livestock or mining activity, starting 15 August 1980 and until 31 December 1984, both dates inclusive, will be entitled to obtain a tax reimbursement equal to the amount resulting from application of the below-indicated quotas to the amounts invested. This system will include companies making investments covered by it for the purpose of environmental improvement (treatment plants for solid, semisolid, liquid or gaseous affluents) provided they are in accordance with projects approved by competent authority.

Investments receiving tax benefits from currently effective or future national promotion systems, either of an industrial, foresty, mining or other nature, or investments benefited by special systems or exemptions owing to their geographic location, cannot receive treatment under this bill.

Quotas

For purposes of determining reimbursement, the following quotas will be applied, in accordance with geographic zones:

Federal capital and Greater Buenos Aires, 10 percent; nonpromoted regions, 20 percent; promoted regions, 30 percent and south of latitude 46° and frontier areas, 35 percent. Regulations will specify precisely the limits of those geographic areas.

Reimbursement to each beneficiary cannot exceed, in each calendar year, an amount equal to a maximum investment of 15 billion pesos. Goods bought will have to be identified and remain in their location for a minimum of 5 years.

Bases

The message accompanying the bill explains its bases and doctrinary principles.

"The economic program," it states, "seeks optimum utilization of the available production resources for purposes of achieving lower real costs and greater per capita income for the people. In order to accomplish this, the measures issued for facilitating access to modern technologies must be supplemented by incentives to the outlay made by local enterprises for reequipment, which is usually most difficult in small and medium-sized companies.

"From the point of view of company size," it is added, "the instruments to be adopted must ensure "equal access" to their benefits by every enterprise, including medium-sized and small-sized ones -- on an equal footing with large-sized enterprises -- by means of an automatic system that will reduce the power of administrative discretion and complexity in procedures. In this way, the benefits of a gradual economic opening up to every national production structure are assured. A system of business diversity in which production units attain the optimum degree of their efficiency and size is consolidated.

"It has been judged that the ideal means for achieving the above-indicated objectives," it states further on, "is the granting of a subsidy in the form of a tax refund actually equal to a percentage of the amount invested in new machinery and equipment, depending on their geographic location. Commercial or service activities are expressly excluded, even though they are incorpored within an industrial, agricultural-livestock or mining enterprise. For the purpose of preventing abuses or simulated transactions, tax penalties are established for their perpetrators with not detriment to any criminal responsibility that might be incurred."

LACROZE ANNOUNCES WHEAT HARVEST ESTIMATES

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 10

[Text] Santiago del Estero--The chairman of the National Grain Board, David Lacroze, estimated that the wheat harvest in the current season will range between 6.8 and 8.7 million metric tons. He stated that the price for a ton of hard wheat, grade 2, will be 390 pesos as of this date.

He made this announcement during the visit that he paid to this city to put in effect the declaration of "dry port" and to authorize concentration of wheat purchases in the La Banda Cotton-growers Agricultural Cooperative. He pointed out that advancement of date for opening purchases benefits the producers who can begin to market their crops and that the quotation for the grain at the indicated price makes production in northern Argentina equal to the value of wheat internationally.

He specified that the procedure enables the producer to market his wheat without the disadvantages of high cost entailed by freight to the traditional receiving ports.

He also announced that the National Grain Board will sign an agreement with Argentine Railroads to fix sorghum transportation rates for over 600 kilometers and to limit the rates to a percentage that will not affect its cost.

PAPER AUGURS BRIGHT FUTURE FOR AMAZON PACT NATIONS

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 26 Oct 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Amazon Pact'

[Text] A very constructive meeting of the so-called Amazon Pact nations has concluded with the Belem Declaration, having manifested their objective of working toward achieving the goals of this regional agreement.

As it is known, the Amazon Pact does not have the same scope as the Andean Pact. Its final goal is not economic integration--including industrial integration--or the creation of a common market. Its goals are different and focus on cooperation and common action in development and unification of the entire immense Amazon River basin.

The first thing to point out is that this area is considered to be one of the few vast resources available to man today. The above-mentioned declaration brings up this fact but at the same time it points out that all that concerns exploitation and the future of the region is the exclusive right of the nations which exert sovereignty in that area, so as to nip any foreign claim in the bud. There is no room for intervention from third parties.

Some companies have started an irrational exploitation of that area's resources. Therefore, it is natural that the declaration should insist in its preservation so that it does not become--as some fear and proclaim--a desert in a few decades. All Amazon countries will work together to preserve the natural resources, especially the flora and fauna.

On the other hand, means of communication must be developed. The basic need is to take advantage of the vast fluvial network, which is the largest in the world but has not yet produced expected results. Combined efforts are necessary.

Brazilian participation concerning the utilization of international rivers with successive courses is positive toward Bolivia. Brazil displays an open attitude regarding the utilization we might make of the upper courses which are in our territory; there will be no problems or conflicting contacts, as has occurred in similar situations, concerning the utilization of waters for irrigation and electric power production. Brazil took such an attitude about the Parana River waters whose upper course is controlled by Brazil.

The topic related to the preservation of the rights of native populations deserves a special paragraph. All Amazon nations, at some stage in their history. have been the scene of abuses and even killings of the region's natives. It is obvious that we cannot recognize some sort of sovereignty over vast areas. But it is also unquestionable that they must be guaranteed ownership of areas where they can work, live peacefully, develop and progress, without being constantly submitted to all manner of abuses. If one speaks about the need to preserve the fauna and flora, with all the more reason one must face the survival of native populations, the original owners of the region. The abuses which have been denounced up to now must be stopped at the source. All economic development of the region would be lacking humanity if one does not consider the rights of its natural inhabitants.

The fact that the creation of preinvestment funds has been proposed demonstrates the purpose of all Amazon countries to move rapidly in perfecting the pact, taking it to its practical conclusions. That and the feeling of friendship and mutual trust which has prevailed in the Belem meeting are a good indication of the future of this new cooperation agreement.

LABOR UNION COORDINATORS SET FORTH OBJECTIVES

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 17 Oct 80 p 9

[Text] Approximately 600 labor coordinators were sworn in and received their credentials yesterday, thus beginning the process of reorganization of union activities in the country.

The ceremony was performed in the headquarters of the La Paz Construction Workers Federation, at 1830 hours.

Chief of the General Staff of the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, Gen Eden Castillo, representing the President, Gen Luis Garcia Meza, officiated.

"I congratulate you in the name of the armed forces and I expect from you the effort and contribution needed to strengthen the process of national reconstruction," he said during an improvised speech.

The Minister of Labor, Gen Augusto Calderon, said that the designation of labor coordinators constitutes the first step in a process that will gradually conclude in the organization of national federations and confederations.

"We will completely reorganize the union movement, with the certainty that the workers will not again be misled by politicized syndicates," he said.

"Together we will walk the same path to free the country from its present backward condition," he said, in calling the workers to unite with the military, reiterating that the government grants priority to the workers needs.

He emphasized that the government "respects in every way the unions and it has decided to promote the creation of new labor groups, completely independent from the imperialistic ones, exclusively devoted to defending the workers' interests, within the framework of the national interest."

He attacked former union leaders, whom he called "union traffickers, still intent on confusing the workers."

"We are going to unmask the extremists who have infiltrated the workers ranks. We, the soldiers, are the only ones who can speak with rightfulness and propriety, because we know the workers' desires and we are aware of what our people are and what they want," he added.

He wished them luck and asked the coordinators for sacrifices in the accomplishment of their mission.

Coordinators Rufino Pinto (construction worker), Fructuoso Cuaquira (factory worker), Pascual Segales (small businessman) and Ramon Morales (railroad worker), also spoke and asked for the support of the government to better accomplish their task.

They said that nationalist workers support the national reconstruction government, "because we understand the concern of the armed forces to take the country out of the anarchy in which it was, due to the actions of "union traffickers."

They criticized former leaders of the Bolivian Labor Federation, accusing them of neglecting the defense of workers' rights and promised to "defend the workers' rights uncompromisingly."

After the speeches, Minister Secretary General of the Presidency Col Mario Escobari presented credentials to the coordinators, who mostly represent trade unions and small businesses.

Officially, it was announced that the nomination of coordinators for all labor sectors will be completed in about 1 month.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES INTER-AMERICAN RELATIONS

Rio de Janeiro MANCHETE in Portuguese 29 Nov 80 pp 102-103

[Interview with Foreign Minister Saraiva Guerreiro, in Prague, date not given, by Haroldo Hollanda]

> [Text] Minister of Foreign Affairs Saraiva Guerreiro, a basically circumspect career diplomat, has achieved significant triumphs for Brazilian diplomacy, for example the normalizing of relations between Brasilia and Buenos Aires after successive tense situations, and the intensification of trade, cultural and political exchange with the African nations, apart from a far-reaching Latin American policy. In this exclusive interview with MANCHETE, the Brazilian foreign minister analyzes the main problems in international politics, above all the conflict between Iran and Iraq. In his view, the situation in the Middle East will not be internationalized and therefore there is no danger that it will develop into a world war. He says further that relations between Brazil and the United States are good and that the differences which have occurred on the nuclear and human rights issues have served to mature them. "We are prepared to pursue a faithful, open and constructive relationship with the Reagan government."

[Question] How do you anticipate Brazil's relations with the new U.S. government of Ronald Reagan will be?

[Answer] Brazil's foreign policy is guided by principles and shaped in accordance with Brazil's particular circumstances with due regard for the evolution of the international situation. This is reflected in our attitude toward every country. Regarding the United States in particular, our relations are excellent. On the one hand, these relations are characterized by the variety of issues involved, and on the other by the permanent willingness of the two countries to solve problems that spring up occasionally as is natural between countries with many-faceted relations. I see no reason for the election of a new U.S. government to make any difference, since I believe that it is in the interests of the two countries to maintain the best relations possible and to improve them all the time. We are inclined to carry on loyal, frank and constructive relations with the Reagan government. The methods and style of government may change, but the basic and essential interests of both countries remain the same. So I believe that Brazilian-U.S. relations will maintain their high standards, as is natural.

[Question] Could the war between Iraq and Iran cause some significant changes in Brazil's foreign policy with regard to the Middle East?

[Answer] The war adds a new factor to the regional situation. Its implications should be assessed and weighed very carefully, without haste and without alarmism. To date, nothing indicates a significant change in the Brazilian position on the Middle East. On the contrary, our positions are principial ones, and in all of our contacts, the basic guideline is provided by a desire for peace and harmonious coexistence among nations. The time has come to stress this message of peace from the Brazilian diplomatic sector firmly, rather than to withdraw or replace it. We have relations with both warring parties, and we believe that a formula will soon be found which can serve to reconcile the bilateral interests which, despite the war situation, continue to develop normally.

[Question] Could the war in the Middle East lead to World War III?

[Answer] The conflict between Iran and Iraq has bilateral and regional causes and up to the war was limited to the local level. There has not been a spread of the conflict moreover which could serve as the springboard for its escalation and internationalization. My impression is that both on the regional and on the world level, the behavior of the various interested countries, including the superpowers, has been in the direction of containment and a search for mediation. The non-aligned countries, the Islamic Conference, and the OPEC itself have sought to find formulae serving to deal with the impasse and put an end to the warlike activities. I believe that the conflict can profit no one and its pursuit only serves to create additional risks of regionalization and internationalization. In any case, the inclination of the international community is toward peace. This leads me to believe that we are not by any means on the brink of a world confrontation. Diplomatic efforts are being pursued precisely in the direction of peace, and I very much hope that they will be successful. I discount the World War III possibility.

Relations Based on Mutual Respect

[Question] Are the breakoff of the military agreement between Brazil and the United States and the differences between the two countries on the nuclear and human rights issues still interfering with Brazilian-American relations?

[Answer] Our relations with the United States are multi-faceted and complex and incorporate a firm tradition of friendship and cooperation. More than that, they are relations which have fully matured today in a clear understanding of the common values and interests which link them together. It is precisely the level of maturity achieved that allows us, both Brazilians and Americans, to accept our differences in prospective and specific interests without allowing this to shake the structure of the relationship. The episodes mentioned fit perfectly within this perspective: they represent moments of natural differences and have already been absorbed. Brazil has been able to maintain the integrity of its traditions and the Americans have understood that situational interests should not disturb the overall framework of the bilateral relations.

[Question] The visits paid by President Figueiredo to Buenos Aires and by President Vidella to Brasilia are auspicious events in the relations between Brazil and Argentina, which have a long history of disputes. On what principles is this new Brazilian policy with regard to Argentina based and what are the goals it seeks?

[Answer] We have a tradition of friendly coexistence with Argentina and our relationship today is extremely dynamic and comprehensive. Thus there is no new policy with regard to Argentina, but simply a desire to raise our relations to a higher level, to explore their full potential. We have a broad willingness to engage in dialog with the people of Argentina, as with Latin Americans in general. I even believe that this particularly difficult moment for the international system encourages an introspective trend in Latin America. We must pursue our potential for cooperation, which has almost been neglected in these years of independent life for our countries, to the fullest. I think moreover that the visit paid by President Figueiredo will have two basic goals: to indicate our readiness for dialog with our continental neighbors and to assert profoundly the natural solidarity which links us with the Argentine people. General Vidella's prompt repayment of President Figueiredo's visit clearly indicates the level of understanding the two countries have reached.

[Question] In Latin America, does the Itamaraty Palace espouse a broad policy with all countries or a bloc policy?

[Answer] I am certain that contacts based on blocs, in search of power balances, will only beget misunderstandings and will contribute nothing to the materialization of the ideal of continental unity and integration. Latin American countries are in a privileged position to practice cooperation and solidarity, a practice which on the basis of mutual respect and good sense can be instrumental in the substantial development of our countries. The situation is a privileged one for many reasons, mainly the variety of national experiences, diversity in development potential, well-rooted principles of mutual respect and self-determination, institutional structures for cooperation (ALADI, SELA [Latin American Economic System], Amazon Cooperation Treaty, Plate River Basin Treaty and other successful joint undertakings), absence of structural political conflicts, and an inclination to conciliation and peaceful solutions. It would make no sense to undermine this privileged position by inventing blocs or axes that would run against the grain of Latin American history and aspirations.

[Question] Is there a possibility that President Figueiredo will visit the Soviet Union or People's China?

[Answer] It is the president himself who decides on such trips. Obviously there is always the possibility that he will visit countries with which we have relations. The USSR and China are two great powers with which we maintain high-level diplomatic and economic relations, with a potential for expansion to our mutual advantage.

[Question] What is the Brazilian policy with regard to the Palestine issue and the PLO [Palestine Liberation Organization]?

[Answer] The positions of principle on the Middle East issue are well known. Beyond that, Brazil has consistently and coherently maintained the same basic guidelines on the Palestine question since the end of the 1940s. To summarize our position today, I would say that Brazil is interested in the establishment in the region of bases for a comprehensive and just peace and one likely to be permanent. In this connection, recalling the positions I set forth in my most recent statement at the United Nations, I believe that various factors must be taken into account. Finally, I believe that the problem of regional security should be placed within this general context, so that it will take on truly enduring aspects. Security must be based on a diplomatic process, mutual confidence, and not on military schemes which create situational guarantees but can undermine the need for closer relations and hinder any effective scheme for regional reconciliation.

[Question] Is the Itamaraty Palace working to ensure that the oil supply will not be interrupted as a result of the war in the Middle East?

[Answer] The Itamaraty Palace, within its proper sphere of action, has always worked with PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] and other government bodies involved in the sector with a view both to guaranteeing an oil supply for Brazil on a proper level and diversifying the sources of supply as much as possible. It is clear that the present conflict between Iran and Iraq is making this collaboration still more crucial. After all, about 50 percent of our oil imports are at stake. Fortunately, thanks in particular to our excellent relations with the oil-producing countries, it has been possible to keep the oil supply at an adequate level.

[Question] Why is Brazil opposed to the military pact among the countries in the Southern Cone?

[Answer] Brazil does not support the idea of sub-regional alliances. In general, alliances are defensive in purpose. We do not see, at least within the present Latin American context, the slightest sense in a bloc policy with divisive effects.

Brazil and Africa

[Question] What are the political goals sought by the Brazilian government in its policy of closer relations with the emerging nations in Africa?

[Answer] We have in fact sought to intensify our contacts with African nations in the most widely varied sectors. And the results can be seen: trade has increased, we have launched programs for providing services, programs and technical cooperation, political dialog is developing and contacts covering widely different levels and sectors are becoming frequent. This increasing closeness and its intensification are positive and pertinent aspects of our foreign policy. It is important to make it clear that in this effort toward closer relations with Africa, which is also an effort being made by Africa in our direction, we have no intention of strengthening our international image. Brazil's purposes are to pursue with its African partners a policy of strict equality, mutual respect, and a common search for undertakings and achievements beneficial to our peoples. In short, we have already made substantial progress in this path. We Brazilians and Africans have succeeded in overcoming obstacles which, due to the tradition of vertical relations, have made difficult and often prevented contact and exchange of experience among the developing countries. As I have already mentioned, the results are visible, but the main thing I believe is that we have succeeded in establishing firm channels for closer approach and dialog. The path toward co-existence is clear and is today being pursued in friendship and realism, offering excellent prospects for the future.

[Question] How does the Itamaraty Palace view the criticisms to the effect that President Figueiredo's visit to Chile did nothing but contribute to solidifying the international position of the government of General Pinochet?

[Answer] Relations between Brazil and Chile have a long and rich history, always characterized by mutual respect and cooperation. This is a relationship which historians have already termed exemplary friendship. The basic goals of President Figueiredo's trip to Chile were to renew the traditional sense of friendship and at the same time to seek new ways and means for contact between the two peoples.

FORMER BRAZILIAN COMMUNIST PARTY SECRETARY PRESTES EXPRESSES VIEWS

Support of 7th Congress

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 21 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] Sao Paulo--Former Secretary General of the Brazilian Communist Party (PCB) Luiz Carlos Prestes announced yesterday that he will attend the 7th Congress of that party scheduled for the first half of next year, although he is not certain it can be held. He believes that the preparations for the congress are lagging and he recalled that under the National Security Law now in effect an effort to reorganize a proscribed party would be a crime.

Luiz Carlos Prestes, who has broken with the current leadership, criticized the PCB leadership again for adopting the convocation of a national constituent assembly as a priority goal and agreeing to this action by President Joao Figueiredo. He said that the new leaders are not communists, "because the true communist does not deceive the masses."

Self-Criticism

"A constituent assembly today," he said, "would not resolve the problems of the nation. In the situation in which we find ourselves, with the National Security Law, the Falcon law, the law limiting the right to strike, the law limiting trade-union freedoms, the law prohibiting party organization, and mainly the illegality of the PCB, such a constituent assembly would not be representative of our people."

Mr Luiz Carlos Prestes believes that priority should be given the struggle to get these laws revoked "and the constituent assembly should come as the culmination of this series of democratic triumphs." He insisted that the convocation of a constituent assembly would make no sense "unless it were possible to debate and criticize the dictatorship on television" and also "unless there were a trade-union structure different from the existing one, with its leadership subordinate to the Ministry of Labor.

"This position of mine," the former communist leader explained, "is the result of self-criticism. In 1945, under different conditions, without the National Security Law and while the PCB was legal, it was Getulio Vargas who convoked the constituent assembly and we supported him. The fact was we overestimated the capabilities of that constituent assembly. In a parliament of 300, we managed to win only 15 deputies' seats. We were not able to do anything. I recall that after speeches lasting 2 hours I made in defense of agrarian reform, Deputy Aliomar Baleeiro came to me and said: 'You are wasting your time. Don't you know that all of us here are sons or sons-in-law of large estate owners?'"

Mr Luiz Carlos Prestes went on to warn: "This propaganda in which the so-called communist leaders are engaging, agreeing with President Figueiredo on a constituent assembly, is useful to the government. President Figueiredo may even convoke the constituent assembly, but we should have no illusion that it will be any different from this parliament we have now. The people who are raising this banner are making a mistake and in practice they are deceiving the masses."

Opposition to Constituent Assembly

[Text] Sao Paulo--In connection with the immediate convocation of a constituent assembly, Luiz Carlos Prestes termed it yesterday "a double risk: if he wins the support of the masses, President Figueiredo will convoke it, and under the actual laws it will serve no purpose. If the dictatorship falls and immediate convocation is on the party schedule, we will have to convoke it and very frequently this is not desirable."

The former secretary general of the PCB initiated the series "Documents for History," sponsored by the Equipe School. In a 2-1/2-hour statement to about 300 persons, he reviewed his political life, ranging from 1922 up to an analysis of current political parties, proposing that "the opposition join with us," with the exception of the Popular Party (PP).

Constituent Assembly

In terming the proposed constituent assembly "a double risk," Luiz Carlos Prestes commented that "the fall of the dictatorship could occur at a revolutionary moment when anti-monopoly, anti-estate-owning and anti-imperialist power is won. And if the immediate convocation of a constituent assembly is a part of our program, we will have to convoke it.

"Nicaragua did not accept the proposal of the petite bourgeoisie and did not convoke a constituent assembly. Cuba waited almost 17 years after the revolution to convoke one. It is necessary first to consolidate power, the dictatorship of the proletariat," he added.

Applauded whenever he spoke directly or indirectly of his former post as secretary general of the PCB, Luiz Carlos Prestes defended "the opposition parties' joining with us," with the exception of the PP which he termed the "alternative party of the PDS [Social Democratic Party]." The PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement Party], he said, "is the heir to the victories of the MDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement], which achieved a great mass base and purged itself of its most conservative wing.

"The PTB [Brazilian Labor Party], with Ivete Vargas, is an artificial party. The image of Janio Quadros may have electoral influence, but it is negative, because of his past and behavior in recent years, as an admirer of Geisel and Figueiredo, an anti-communist and a reactionary. The PDT [Democratic Labor Party] carries the tradition of Vargas and Goulart and still has a certain influence. The PT [Workers' Party] is a workers'-class prerogative, but its program had some bad points at the beginning, opposed to Soviet imperialism, and some anti-communist positions. What influence does the PT have? There is a difference between participating in elections and voting. Unity is difficult, but we are not intransigent with any of the parties," he added.

Statement

In his statement to the teachers at the Equipe School, which will be the basis of a book, Luiz Carlos Prestes stated that in the 1964 movement "we were caught by surprise and defeated. The basic error was making claims to achieve which the strength was lacking. The trade-union movement was a top-level matter. There was no organized party in the enterprises. The workers' class was defeated without a struggle, which demoralized it."

He recalled that in 1981 "it will be 60 years since I became a conspirator," and he made a lengthy survey of his political life since 1921. He said that the lieutenants' movement and the Prestes Column had no concrete political or ideological goals. "The basic thing was to replace Arthur Bernardes." And simply by participating in the column, he saw poverty "and the social problem which is not resolved by the replacement of men."

He said that his withdrawal from the lieutenants' movement occurred in 1930, when he refused to support Getulio Vargas as a candidate, after meeting with him twice to ask for weapons for the revolution. "The pressure on me was very great. The lieutenants believed support timely. They wanted amnesty."

Although he termed the 1935 campaign the "peak moment in the life of the party, when we took up arms against fascism," he identified two errors. "It was exclusively military, without organization of the party in the enterprises. We narrowed the front by adopting an anti-imperialist and anti-estate-ownership tactic. Many anti-fascists abandoned us."

DECLINE IN TRADE BALANCE DEFICIT SEEN IN OCTOBER

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 22 Nov 80 p 24

[Text] Brasilia--The deficit in the trade balance last month was $80 million U.S., the lowest this year, if we exclude the fact that in May a slight surplus of $10 million U.S. was reported. With this result, the negative balance from January to October was increased to $2.976 billion U.S., with cumulative exports of $60.310 billion and imports of $19.286 billion, according to Foreign Trade Department (CACEX) figures released yesterday by the secretary general of the Ministry of Finance, Eduardo Carvalho.

The deficit in the trade balance in October of last year was $394 million, and the total for the first 10 months of 1979 was $1.982 billion. Exports last month totaled $1.91 billion, as compared to imports of $1.99 billion, including $697 million in oil--one of the lowest monthly expenditures on such purchases for this year. In September of this year, the trade balance showed a deficit of $430 million U.S.

In releasing these figures, Eduardo Carvalho stated that "there will be no problem" in reaching the $20-billion export level. He made a point, moreover, of one comment: "This is one of the few major government goals being achieved." In order to reach this volume of sales of Brazilian products on the foreign market, exports will have to come to $1.845 billion U.S. per month in November and December. If the October level is matched ($1.91 billion U.S.) this will not be a problem and the $20-billion-U.S. level will be assured.

This goal represents a victory for the government, which has succeeded in increasing its exports by 30 percent this year in comparison to the $50.2 billion U.S. worth of goods sold last year, the secretary general of the Ministry of Finance noted. "This is a spectacular result," he stressed, "in view of the fact that three factors were working against it: a very active domestic market, which discouraged exports; the very serious recession in the United States, reflected in the countries of Western Europe--the two main markets for Brazilian products; and the foreign exchange policy which has not always favored exporters."

The deficit this year is expected to come to between $3 and $3.1 billion U.S., according to Eduardo Carvalho. "Imports should continue at the rate seen in October, because we have our foot on the brakes," he said, stressing that the effects of Resolution No 638, which requires that the minimal period for financing obtained on the international financial market be observed for imports, will be felt more keenly in November and December.

Plans for '81

Although he did not wish to cite figures ($26 billion U.S.), the secretary general of the Ministry of Finance said that "there is no reason not to believe that exports next year will show the same development as was reported this year." This will be achieved, he said, through a more realistic exchange policy, which has already been announced, and more consistent financial support mechanisms and a larger volume of resources than were available this year. Carvalho also believes that the economy will not show as much growth as this year (8 percent), but that there will be a cooling process which will lead to a level nearer 5 percent, which would serve to encourage exports.

On the import side, Carvalho stressed that it is difficult to make a projection, because no one knows how prices will develop on the foreign market, particularly oil prices. He emphasized however that there was a physical decline of 3 percent in the volume of imports this year. "This is an important figure," he stressed.

GOVERNMENT TO ALTER FOREIGN TRADE POLICY IN 1981

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 21 Nov 80 p 21

[Text] The director of the Foreign Trade Department (CACEX) of the Bank of Brazil, Benedito Moreira, told industrialists in Rio de Janeiro yesterday that the government will completely reformulate its foreign trade policy beginning in 1981 for the purpose of achieving a positive balance of trade next year.

"From now on businessmen will be jointly responsible for the foreign trade results and when the time comes they will have their rewards. I can give assurance in advance that a positive balance next year will be achieved more through an increase in exports than through reductions in imports."

Benedito Moreira said that the CACEX proposal for the drafting of a new export declaration form will be presented to businessmen. From what he said, plans call for the substitution of a statement which will avoid the CACEX procedure for the export guide. The exporter will pursue his sales and shipment operations normally and the government will not approve the regularity of the transaction until after the fact.

As to facilities for imports, he said that each business sector will have to submit to the CACEX its purchase plans and, in a discussion between the government and business bodies, the products and the volumes to be imported will be listed. Benedito Moreira said that in the medium time range a program guide which will eliminate the import guide will be in use. In this case too the businessman will pursue his transactions without prior control by the CACEX.

Deficit

Benedito Moreira estimated the trade deficit for this year at between $2 and 3 billion U.S. He laid responsibility for the situation with the increases in oil prices.

"I endorse the criticisms businessmen made of our import control system, but the fact is that this policy had to be implemented to prevent a critical balance-of-trade situation. I know that many people suffered from this policy but there was no alternative."

He went on to say that there will be "greater calm" in 1981 for businesses to plan their imports. "And it is because of this that we are asking for suggestions from businessmen on the drafting of the new policy, since responsibility for control of the trade balance will now be shared by the government and the businessmen."

The government representative again gave assurance that there will not be another major devaluation of the cruzeiro "because this would hurt many people."

In his view, the anticipation of the new exchange policy to become effective in January is not causing exporters to hold back their products. He termed any such possibility "madness," because, he said, everyone should be trying to raise his export financing quota for next year at this time, since it is based on the performance of each exporter. "Who is going to stop exporting now and receive less financing at 24 percent interest next year?"

As to the new export goal for 1981 ($26 billion U.S.), Benedito Moreira said it is entirely possible. He recalled that the total foreign trade volume comes to $2 trillion U.S. "Twenty-six million U.S. dollars is a drop in the bucket on this market and therefore it can easily be attained."

Support

Sao Paulo--Benedito Moreira said during his visit to Brazil Export '80 that the government is studying a mechanism which would guarantee the machine sector profitable exports without suffering losses due to possible variations between the foreign and domestic inflation indices.

"This is a kind of exchange risk guarantee," Moreira explained, "which might either be produced by some kind of insurance or through a guarantee from the government itself. What we cannot allow is for this problem in the capital goods sector to continue."

FIGUEIREDO APPROVES CARAJAS EXPORT DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 20 Nov 80 p 29

[Text] Brasilia--Yesterday, during a meeting of the Economic Development Council, President Joao Figueiredo authorized the implementation of the so-called "Greater Carajas Project," which calls for the establishment within the structure of the Planning Secretariat of an interministerial council for the purpose of making the undertaking viable, including the granting of tax and financial incentives.

The Carajas Project, designed to stimulate exports, will require investments in excess of $33 billion over a period of 10 years. These funds, according to the Planalto Palace, will be obtained by means of enterprise capitalization, in order to avoid additional inflationary pressures. The mining portion of the project will come under national control, while the part pertaining to industrialization (such as metallurgy and others) will be covered by the establishment of joint-venture companies, with priority given associations with enterprises undertaking to guarantee the sale of the product. Immediately thereafter, the project should bring in foreign exchange, with exports worth $10 to $11 billion per year, at today's prices, enough to meet the country's needs, according to official estimates.

The Project

The Carajas Project will be implemented in the states of Para and Maranhao, over an area bounded by the Amazon, Xingu and Parnaiba Rivers, to the 8's [sic] parallel. The undertakings authorized yesterday include, in addition to other services, the building of the Serra dos Carajas-Sao Luis railroad, the building or expansion of the port system, undertakings to develop waterways with the capacity to transport a large volume of freight, and hydroelectric utilization of the rivers in the region.

Parallel with this, research, prospecting, extraction, primary processing, treatment or industrialization of minerals found in the region, as well as projects pertaining to crop raising, livestock breeding, fishing and agroindustries, aforestation and reaforestation, the processing and industrialization of wood. The major project also includes the utilization of the energy sources available in the area, including the Tucurui hydroelectric plant.

With yesterday's decision, the Economic Development Council (CDE) completed its examination of the Carajas undertakings. Last 15 October, during another meeting, the council approved the launching of the Carajas iron project.

According to information made available by the Planalto Palace, after the CDE meeting, it was decided to establish an interministerial council to supervise the project with a view to simplifying the handling of the processes pertaining to the program. The government wants to facilitate the advance of these procedures as much as possible, and to this end, it will have a single interlocutor for contacts with the business community interested in investing in the sector. The council will be headed by the minister of planning and other members will include the ministers of mines and energy (vice president), transportation, industry and commerce, finance, interior and agriculture. Apart from establishing policies and criteria pertaining to the evaluation and utilization of specific programs and projects, the interministerial council will also examine the provision of incentives and the supervision of the allocation of resources for such undertakings.

At yesterday's meeting of the CDE, President Joao Figueiredo said he hopes it will be possible with the creation of the council substantially to shorten the time needed for analysis and utilization of the projects which, once approved, will be regarded as having priority for licensing and other measures of an administrative nature pertaining to their execution.

Foreign Exchange

Within 10 years, when the Carajas Project is completed, the country will be able to count on an annual foreign exchange income of about $10 or 11 billion, "figures consistent with the needs of Brazil in the coming years."

The total Carajas investment is estimated at $33.613 billion U.S., of which 15.43 billion is included in the non-ferrous minerals portion of the project, 15.91 in the ferrous and associated ores project (sinter, pig iron, manganese, etc), and 2.28 billion in the crops and livestock portion of the project. However, the $33-billion-U.S. total is not consistent with an explanatory statement distributed yesterday afternoon by the mass communications secretariat of the Planalto Palace, which mentions a total investment of $26 billion U.S.

The crop and livestock projects include the purchase of areas, clearing, reaforestation, forest exploitation and charcoal-making, involving investments of $1.36 billion U.S., to bring in foreign exchange totaling about $420 million U.S. per year; the addition of 1.5 million hectares divided into modules for the production of rice, corn, beans, cassava, soybeans, sugarcane, African oil and other varieties of palm, and other crops, with investments of $570 million U.S. bringing in $830 million in foreign exchange, and livestock breeding, including modules for the raising of animals and the growing of forest crops, with resources totaling $350 million and foreign exchange income of $223 million.

The portion of the project involving non-ferrous ores, with an annual production of 6,420,000 tons of aluminum, bauxite, aluminum oxide, laminates, copper, metallic copper, gold, sulfuric acid and metallic silicon, will require a total investment of $15.423 billion U.S., with a return at the end of 10 years of foreign exchange totaling about $5.358 billion.

Finally, the iron ore and associated products projects will include the production of iron ore, sinter, pig iron, sponge iron, ferronickel and ferromanganese alloys and semi-finished steel products, with an investment estimated at $16.91 billion U.S. and production of 60.81 million tons per year, leading to foreign exchange income of about $5.07 billion U.S.

NATIONAL CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION VISITS USSR

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 24 Nov 80 p 9

[Article by Noenio Spinola: "Brazilians Seek Frank Dialog in USSR"]

[Text] Moscow--When the Brazilian congressional mission headed by Deputy Flavio Marcilio arrives in this city in the first half of December, at least one barrier will have been overcome. Even if the tone of the dialog between Brazil and the Soviet Union does not change drastically, the two countries will be establishing more open and direct political contact for the first time in many decades.

What the Brazilians are coming to achieve is a source of less curiosity in Moscow than in Brasilia. Almost every month and sometimes almost every week delegations from the most widely varied parts of the world come and go, even when the atmosphere has returned almost to a cold war status. It is the Americans themselves who are most realistic and pragmatic.

Sensitive Point

For example, 15 days ago, a mission headed by former UN Ambassador William Scranton came to put out some political feelers. The delegation included Gen (Res) Brent Scowcroft, Ronald Reagan's adviser on foreign policy matters; Helmut Sonnenfeldt, one of Henry Kissinger's closest advisers, and others, all with clear channels open to the new American government. Before the changing of the guard occurs in Washington, Senator Charles Percy, Republican of Illinois, the future chairman of the powerful Foreign Affairs Committee, will also have visited Moscow. Percy will replace Democrat Frank Church, drowned in the same tidal wave which carried off the liberals during whose terms of office the dialog between the United States and the Soviet Union, ironically, became harsh and hostile.

To judge from what is known of the agenda of the Brazilian delegation to date, the highest-ranking person with whom the congressmen will talk will be the first deputy chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, Vasiliy Kuznetsov, a substitute member of the Political Bureau in charge of state relations in general. The tone will emphasize mutuality, in view of the trip made by a Soviet delegation headed by the Georgian representative, E. A. Shevardnadze, to Brazil this year.

When they arrive in Moscow and begin their talks, which will extend to other Soviet republics, the Brazilian parliamentarians will have an opportunity to see and discover many things. The most important will certainly be the experience they will acquire by setting foot on a land subject for many years to taboos, including the possibility of coexistence between non-communist developing countries and the nation from which the strongest inspiration for the establishment of this system radiated.

Naturally, they will touch on what may become the most sensitive point for the entire mission: will Brazil engage in a regular political dialog with the Soviet Union, or will it limit itself to the trade relation modest even by Latin American standards?

Pragmatic Line

The Soviets believe that their economic system will win out in the long run, but they have nonetheless pursued a pragmatic line in relations with nations with different systems. The pronouncement in favor of detente and peaceful coexistence has been repeated in recent months, with great emphasis, perhaps to dispel the shadows the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan has cast everywhere. Two weeks back, in a statement during the visit paid him by the head of the government of Mozambique, Samora Machel, President Brezhnev said that he was in favor of deepening detente and peaceful cooperation among nations. As if in an effort to erase the traces left by Afghanistan, he said: "We have not interfered and we will not interfere in the affairs of other countries and peoples, and we would be pleased if other nations act similarly." More than Africa and Asia, he was perhaps addressing Poland as well.

From what has leaked over the high walls the Soviets place around their domestic and foreign policy, it would seem that this point in relations with Brazil has been raised in Moscow and has hindered negotiations or efforts toward negotiations under pressure from the segments who want full relations, not just economic ones. This is a little bit the reflection of the status as a superpower the Soviets attribute to themselves, but it might also be merely the equivalent of the barriers raised in Brazil by the opposition circles to any intensification of beneficial links with Moscow.

In a talk with this correspondent in Brasilia before the trip by the parliamentary delegation to Moscow was a certainty, Deputy Flavio Marcilio evidenced his pragmatism. If we interpreted his words properly, he does not anticipate anything more or less than the "possibility of coexistence with countries with different systems" and the exploratory nature of his mission in this sense. The culmination of a new "pragmatism" in the country's foreign policy would be the establishment of a date for a visit by President Figueiredo to Moscow, in response to the invitation from President Brezhnev.

Optimism Recovered

On this end, the arguments in favor of greater exchange with the Soviet Union among businessmen and officials in the Brazilian government dealing with foreign trade or investments are consistent. The Brazilian embassy has followed the passage of the delegations through this and other cities and in recent months both Ambassador Sizinio Nogueira and economic adviser Obertal Mantovaneli have recovered the optimism they had lost during the dark days of the Olympic boycott.

The fact is that despite the lukewarm tone in which political detente is discussed, the reflections of Governor Reagan's pragmatism are already beginning to be noticeable. Last week, for example, trade barriers between the United States and the USSR began to fall. It is not without reason that the American government itself has announced approval of the sale of oil pipeline components by Caterpillar for a gas line between the rich fields in Siberia and Eastern Europe. For what is the logic in hindering the development of raw-material production in a world which has an ever-greater need for energy?

Eastern Europe has already met 20 percent of its gas requirement through the USSR, and the prospects for doubling the supply as the rich producer regions in Yamal, in Siberia, are developed were announced this week.

Recognition of Interdependence

Those who live here know that the Soviets, in opening up their sources, are not just seeking a strong position as a supplier of vital raw materials, but also acquiring access to interdependence which will increasingly characterize international life in the coming decades.

The USSR, to speak the truth, is still a country with an economic system full of shortcomings, vulnerable to the fluctuation of the harvest, and with giant coexistence problems on its Asiatic frontiers. The standard of living of the people is low in comparison with Europe or the United States, and it can only rise rapidly with an atmosphere of international detente making it possible to limit its astronomical expenditures on the heavy security apparatus.

Similarity of Products

Greater trade with Brazil also means diversification of the sources of supply, which does not always seem to have been clearly understood by the Ministry of Foreign Trade here or that in Brasilia. Brazil can import technology and equipment and export raw materials and manufactured goods, but the range of options explored to date has not produced substantial practical results. An argument frequently used against such trade stresses the similarity of products in Brazil. This is a barrier which it would seem is being overcome.

In an interview with JORNAL DO BRASIL, Yuri Smel'yakov, chairman of Tekhnopromeksport, an enterprise which has to its credit the building of the Aswan Dam in Egypt, and international agreements in the most widely varied energy fields, expressed interest in the development of projects which he hoped would come about through the "development of contacts already established to our mutual benefit." Smeljakov admits that these problems of similarity exist, but he still believes that there are many sectors in which technology already tested and developed by the USSR can be advantageously transferred to Brazil.

"What has happened in the world," he said, "has simply been the abandonment of viable fuels in favor of others which emerged and became important while they were cheap, such as oil. Now we are turning again to other sources, such as the production of steam by turbines thanks to the burning of schist or other less heat-productive raw materials."

Brazil and Argentina

It is not without reason therefore that technicians from the Ministry of Mines and Energy and other representatives of private businesses or Brazilian state governments have come here to study the possibility of exploiting the resources of Santa Catarina, Rio Grande do Sul and other regions. The Soviets are negotiating agreements with Jordan and Morocco for the exploitation of schist, and they say that they have not only mastered the burning technology for thermic plants but also for the extraction of oil at competitive prices through the use of residues. There are two thermoelectric power plants which have been functioning in the Baltic region for more than 10 years with a capacity of 3.2 million kilowatts. "Therefore the crisis is not in energy," Smel'yakov says, "but in the prices of raw materials."

He says that it is necessary to return to solutions abandoned while oil and gas were the main concerns because they were cheap and easy.

Whenever there is talk of Brazil, the Soviets, who it must be admitted have a sometimes simplistic taste for politics, there is also talk of Argentina, in a search for what seems to them to be a way of encouraging competition in Latin America. They stand firm not only on the Olmos project, in the Peruvian Amazon, but also on the studies for a hydroelectric plant on the Middle Parana. According to still-unconfirmed rumors, sooner or later they will also supply some substantial raw materials proposed on General Videla's ambitious trade list. The fact is that the Argentines sold 7,300,000 tons of grains there this year and by September they will have sold another 1,300,000, as well as 70,000 tons of meat.

The agenda the Brazilian parliamentarians will follow will certainly not clarify all these details, but they will in any case be able to sense and see at close hand many sectors in which not only their industrial and technological progress, but also the level of their own interdependence with the rest of the world, are revealed.

On meeting with the head of the foreign relations commission of the Supreme Soviet, Flavio Marcilio will be able to ask for example about the development of the nuclear policy for peaceful purposes in the coming years. A similar question will certainly be asked by Senator Percy, author of the draft law on nuclear proliferation proposed in the same period when the White House was sending its famous non-proliferation bill to Capitol Hill.

The Americans have sought to achieve a political alignment with the USSR in all aspects related to the development or the dissemination of technologies considered applicable to nuclear proliferation. The two countries proceeded hand-in-hand for a time, but with the increasing line of differences between the Kremlin and the White House, the Soviets began to defend types of reactors which President Carter proposes to freeze. This, like other foreign-policy pursuits of the superpowers of vital interest to the countries in the process of development, will be defined or redefined in the course of the painful process of detente between East and West while the guard is changing in Washington and preparations are being made here for the 26th congress of the Communist Party, an atmosphere truly favorable to "feelers."

BRIEFS

PROFESSORS', PUBLIC SERVANTS' RAISES--President Figueiredo has approved a new academic scale which will go into effect on 1 January, according to which university professors will be divided into four categories: full professor, associate professor, assistant professor and instructor. The salary of a full processor working full time has been increased from 64,000 cruzeiros to 139,000 cruzeiros, that is, a 117 percent increase. The general strike command has issued a note calling the professors to hold general meeting to vote on whether to end the strike or not. Luiz Pinguelli, chairman of the UFRJ [Federal University of Rio de Janeiro], stated that the national strike of professors has been successful: "The proposal which has been submitted for our consideration truly fulfills most of the professors' demands." President Figueiredo has also approved an average 82.25 percent increase in the salaries of federal military and civilian public servants. The increase will be granted in two cumulative phases: 35 percent on 1 January and 35 percent on 1 April. The new pay scales will be released today. The DASP [Public Service Administrative Department] has reported that in compliance with presidential guidelines the public servants whose monthly salary is below the minimum (11,577 cruzeiros) will receive a greater increase which could be as high as 108 percent. In the meantime the officials of higher ranks will receive an average increase of 80 percent. [Text] [PY110218 Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 10 Dec 80 p 1]

SETTLERS HARASSED IN PARAGUAY--Curitiba--Five Brazilian families have been returning weekly from Paraguay after losing their land, and facing threats, violence and imprisonment. The 400,000 Brazilians who have been occupying land at the Paraguayan border have no guarantee for their tenure and are exposed to great instability and insecurity. These conclusions are included in a document released by the pastoral land commission--which is linked to the II Southern Regional Branch of the National Conference of Brazilian Bishops--based on a seminar on Brazilian migration, production structure and work force in the Upper Parana region, held late in November at Puerto Stroessner. The 200-page document states that 80 percent of the 400,000 Brazilian settlers in Paraguay have no land title. A title, when granted, is only given on a provisional basis and could be canceled at any time. Nearly 300 families residing at the Puerto Salse locality have already paid four times for their land to four alleged owners. WHEAT PRODUCTION--Brasilia--Brazil's 1980 wheat production will amount to 2.69 million tons, 20 percent less than previous estimates made by the Agriculture Ministry. This shortage in production will force the government to import more than 4 million tons in 1981 to meet internal consumption, which is estimated at 7 million tons. HIGHER-YIELD AGRICULTURAL VARIETIES--The Brazilian Agriculture and Livestock Research Enterprise has developed new varieties of wheat, corn, rice, beans, soybeans and manioc capable of yielding at least twice as much as varieties now planted. These newly developed varieties not only have a higher yield per hectare but are also more resistant to plant diseases prevailing in Brazil. Some of these new varieties are already being distributed for planting in regions where they perform best. [Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 24 Nov 80 [no page given] PY]

SOCIAL SECURITY REFORM LAW REVIEWED

Santiago LA NACION in Spanish 6 Nov 80 pp 1A, 16A

/Text/ Workers who choose to change from the current social security system to the recently adopted system will see their benefits increase 12 percent because of the new rate schedule, Labor and Social Security Minister Jose Pinera announced last night in his report to the nation on the major aspects of the social security reforms which will go into effect on 1 May 1981.

The Labor Minister was instructed by President Augusto Pinochet to speak on television about the current system and the one that was recently passed into law. In an 18-page speech Labor Minister Pinera analyzed the old system and underscored the benefits of the social security bill which was recently passed into law by the Government Junta and promulgated by the president.

Pension System

The social security reform consists mainly of the establishment of a new pension system without any changes in other benefits currently received by the workers. Such benefits as health, family assistance, unemployment compensation, accident insurance and so forth will not be affected.

The old system was based on the distribution of money from a common fund made up of paycheck deductions and employer contributions. Under such a system, the contributor did not know the exact amount of his contributions, he had no control over them and had no say on how the money he earned would be used. Under political pressures, an unjust system took shape which condemned those who retired to a life of poverty. In addition, the system did not cover some 800,000 workers who cannot retire because they have no payroll deductions. This group of workers includes small businessmen, craftsmen, real estate developers, fishermen and so forth. Another problem was retirement age discrimination. The situation was so abusrd that low income workers on the social securty rolls were required to be 65 years old before they could retire while the retirement age for congressmen was 15 /sic/.

Contributions

Contributions to the new social security system will be [section missing]

The changes in the Chilean social security system to be announced today by the Minister of Labor will guarantee the beneficiaries the following: security, justice, opportunity and efficiency.

First, the changes guarantee a minimum pension and that the contributions of low-income contributors, those whose individual contributions are below the norm, will be supplemented by government funds so that they can receive a minimum pension.

The minimum can be exceeded through the contribution system as expressed in accumulated contributions recorded in their personal record books. Deductions will be mandatory for all and will be in direct proportion to the wages received. Those who would like to receive a higher pension or retire before the required age will be allowed to make additional contributions. Voluntary and mandatory contributions are exempt from taxation within certain limits.

The new social security system is based on the principle of subsidies to prevent bureaucratic and ineffective administration from creating financial losses for the contributors. Therefore, the system will be administered by non-government agencies. These agencies will be competitive and will be subject to objective and precise regulations. The beneficiaries can choose the agency they wish to deal with and can change their account from one agency to another.

The new system regulates how the funds are invested and allows investment only in those financial instruments whose prices are public and are actively traded. The new system also regulates the diversification of said instruments and places the agencies administering the system under strict government control. There are new mechanisms which guarantee a minimum return on these investments based on the nation's overall development and that of the pension system as a whole.

The new system to be made public today will be comprehensive and thereby eliminate differences between self-employed and other workers. This is another effort to eliminate discrimination between different classes of workers.

The new system will be completely voluntary because it is based on the free decision of people to choose between their present system without changes or the new system.

Those who decide to change will not lose any benefits they have gained under the present system. It is important that these individuals obtain their individual records containing the number of years deductions have been taken under the present system.

The Main Points

The following is a complete description of the basic points in the social security reforms to be announced by Minister Jose Pinera today.

1. Minimum Benefits

The first goal of the proposed system is to provide solidarity and security at the lower end of the scale. To do this the changes call for minimum old age, disability and survivers pensions which will be applied equally to all who have worked most of their lives. The minimum pensions are guaranteed and funding will be provided from tax revenues to bring individual contributions up to the minimum level.

2. Individual Contributions

Individual contributors can exceed the minimum mentioned earlier through accumulated contributions listed in their individual record book. Thus, an indispensable tie is achieved between a life's work and benefits earned. This is a key element to blocking demagogy and insuring responsibility from individuals and workers as a whole.

For prgamatic reasons, it has been determined that deductions should be compulsory for all in equal proportion to the wages earned up to a maximum income level. Anyone earning above this level is not bound by this regulation. Mandatory deductions will lesson the pressure from certain irresponsible individuals who would remain at the minimum pension level, thereby pressuring the government and possibly forcing it to take discretionary action.

Anyone wishing to increase the amount of their pension or retire early will be able to make voluntary contributions to their pension savings plan. The resulting increase in benefits will come, therefore, from the personal efforts of an individual and not from government funds or from the efforts of others. The amount to be automatically deducted is calculated so that under normal circumstances total contributions will provide a pension that is comparable to a large percentage of the wages earned while a person is still employed. There is always the assurance of a guaranteed minimum pension. Mandatory deductions and voluntary contributions are exempt from taxation within certain limits.

Individual contributions will be converted into pensions after certain minimum age requirements are met or when total contributions allow it. To convert accumulated contributions into income during retirement, a system has been devised that is consonant with what has been described thus far. Suffice it to say that it is based on freedom and individual responsibility.

Personal contributions will be beneficial to other government actions because they will provide a platform of general opinion to help prevent irresponsible overall actions whose effects on personal income will be directly felt by a majority of the people. Thus, for example, undisciplined production or demagogic economic policy will be more costly for the government because their effects--a drop in the earning power of the social security account--will be immediately and directly felt by each Chilean worker.

3. Efficiency of Agencies

The new pension system is based on the principle of subsidies which should influence all of the government's actions. A well-designed pension system is of no value if it has bureaucratic, inefficient administrators and its funds are mismanaged, thereby creating losses for the contributors. The nation's social security history categorically shows that the government has not been a good administrator. The red tape and the arbitrariness with which the workers have been treated has been coupled with inadequate and irresponsible handling of the funds. All of this has resulted in the loss of fiscal revenues which have been used to cover the deficits. This loss has been most seriously felt by the very poor because funds were not available for the improvement of health, educational and nutrition services and so forth.

Thus, the reform bill calls for non-government agencies to administer the new pension system. These agencies, which receive adequate incentives and operate under clearly defined objectives, will guarantee that the system will be efficient. Competition among these agencies will be encouraged to the utmost. This competition, coupled with additional safeguards, will guarantee that illegal powers are not created because all of the agencies will be equally regulated by objective and precise regulations.

Another aspect of the bill is that it gives the contributor the freedom to choose the agency in which his social security deductions will be held. This freedom will give an individual an opportunity not only to select an agency but also to change from any one agency that is in compliance with the strict and impartial conditions set by the government to another that is also in compliance. This freedom of choice will reenforce efficiency, stability and security within the new system.

4. Realistic Security

It is possible to create systems which tend to, more so than others, instill greater confidence because they have built-in alert systems and safeguards which operate according to the real behavior of the human being and not according to alleged or unreal behavior. A free system which provides incentives for responsible behavior by all participants is an important guarantee of security. Both are achieved through a system of free choice and individual savings plans such as those outlined above, but, unquestionably, there is an important range of design elements and reasonable restrictions which can be imposed and which go hand in hand with security.

It is for this reason that the reform bill limits both the agencies and their operations. Some of these limitations are that the investment of funds is regulated generically; investments are permitted only in those financial instruments whose prices are public and which are actively traded; that conditions for diversifying these financial instruments are imposed both on the instrument as well as on the trader and the government will exercise strict control over the agencies.

In addition, the bill also contains mechanisms which will guarantee a minimum return on these investments based on the country's overall development and that of the pension system as a whole. Therefore, this introduces an additional incentive for showing good judgment in collective bargaining activities.

All of these provisions just mentioned provide what we would call real and concrete security which is distinct from that in collective or state systems where security is absolute in theory but nonexistent in practice.

5. Social Security for Self-employed Workers

The basic goal of a social security system is to guarantee the satisfaction of certain needs which the social-political system considers indispensable. The satisfaction of these needs should include the entire population since there is no reason why a certain segment of workers should be excluded.

This is why the new pension system is comprehensive and this means that a distinction will no longer be made between self-employed workers and those who work for an employer. With this step the government is again making strides to prevent discrimination among different kinds of workers. There no longer are differences--either in trade union matters or in family assistance matters--between blue-collar and white-collar workers. These will also not exist under the new pension system and they have been minimized in the area of health services. In the field of social security, we are making strides to eliminate discrimination between self-employed workers and those dependent on an employer.

6. Combining the New With the Old System

The profound consequences of social security reforms of this magnitude make it indispensable that a change in its structure take into account, as a basic variable, its political viability. We are not referring to the traditional meaning of the word but rather to general agreement by a majority that the proposed changes are just and necessary and that they safeguard legitimate individual rights.

Fortunately, the program we have just described and the nation's good economic health allow the new system to be offered on an absolutely voluntary basis. As a result, it is based on the free choice of each individual to choose between the existing system without changes and the new system.

This broad option that is available to current contributors, which obviously lessens any kind of pressure or criticism, is made possible, among other reasons, by the security we feel with respect to the advantages provided by the new system.

Those who choose to change systems will not incur any losses. The monetary value represented by an old age pension will be recognized based on a certain average of the contributor's wages and in proportion to the number of years the worker has made contributions to the current pension system in relation to the total necessary for retirement. Thus the importance of the work done recently by the Minister of Labor and Social Security together with the Social Seucrity Fund to recover individual accounts to determine the actual number of years current contributors have paid into the system.

It is important to make clear that the amount recognized, the amount which will be paid once retirement requirements are met, will not amount to an additional fiscal cost. Instead, it will represent only documented obligations that the Treasury and the Social Security Fund have incurred as a result of contributions made by individual workers.

U.S. ENVOY'S, ARCHBISHOP'S STATEMENTS ON KILLINGS DISCUSSED

PA101250 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSKL in Spanish 1325 GMT 9 Dec 80

[Commentary by Salvadoran Broadcasters Association]

[Excerpts] We are pleased to hear the apostolic voice of Monsignor Rivera Y Damas condemning the crime. We are, likewise, pleased with the solidarity of the U.S. ambassador, Robert White, who, shocked and deeply moved by the tragic events, said something that coming from a U.S. ambassador can be subject to many serious interpretations.

The U.S. ambassador told the Jesuit authorities of the San Jose Seminary, as he condemned Thursday's crime against the leaders of the Democratic Revolutionary Front, that they were not alone; that the government of the United States was joining the great majority of Salvadorans who wish for an end to these horrible crimes committed by mad extremists of both political extremes.

The ambassador has put the finger on the sore. However, we ask him how are we to interpret his statements that the Jesuits of the San Jose Seminary are not alone, and that the United States joins the great majority of Salvadorans? And to what majority of Salvadorans is he referring? Those who mourn the death of the six unfortunate leftist leaders or to the other majority that represents so many other slain leaders such as Ernesto Regalado, Foreign Minister Mauricio Borgonovo, or the Japanese industrialist Matsumoto, or Manuel de Jesus Rivas Rodriguez, manager of the international fair, or Dr Efrain Joveli, or Col Carlos Alfredo Choto, or Dr Ruben Alfonso Rodriguez, and a long endless list. All of them were Salvadorans, some representing the productive sector of the country, others merely persons who had through their personal efforts surpassed the average citizen.

It is difficult to believe, Ambassador White, that the United States should join a majority of Salvadorans, not including another majority that includes not only the rightist elements but also those of the center, but those who President Nixon [as heard] once called the silent majority, because it is the one that is not organized in either rightist or leftist groups.

Is it not time, Ambassador White, for a definition of position? Does the present U.S. Government really defend human rights or is it merely favoring one extreme while leaving the other extreme unprotected and at a disadvantage? Is the human rights doctrine onesided? Or is it even handed and can be used to punish those who, abusing of their rights, attack the rights of others?

As to Monsignor Rivera Y Damas, why is his solidarity directed toward one extreme while overlooking the bloody actions of the other extreme. They are all Salvadorans and human beings. The administrator of the Vatican Nunciature has the serious responsibility of saving the Christian regime by safeguarding the prestige of the Catholic church which in recent years has lost its moral position as spiritual leader of our people by making serious mistakes. Let the bishop visit the Flor Blanca National Stadium every afternoon to see the followers of the Protestant church praying for peace for there. He might learn a lesson.

COMMUNIST THREAT TO POSTINDEPENDENCE BELIZE NOTED

Belizean Editorial Quoted

Guatemala City EL IMPARCIAL in Spanish 12 Nov 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] In connection with the UN decision to recommend unilateral independence for Belize, the opposition daily, THE BEACON, which is published in that Guatemalan territory, includes in its most recent edition the following editorial which considers that the above mentioned decision sentences Belize to a destiny worse than death.

The editorial of THE BEACON says:

"That which presently is occurring in Belize is like one of those nightmares that cause the spine to shudder with terror even when the person is already awake. The basic difference between human nightmares and that of Belize is that Belize can never awaken from what it is experiencing.

The Belizean nightmare originates in the debate that is taking place in the United Nations, which proposes to the countries of the world that they sentence Belize to a destiny worse than death.

It has been decided that Belize should become independent, even though Guatemala's claim has not been resolved, and even though it means the invasion of a defenseless Belize by Guatemala.

But the destiny to which Belize is being sentenced is even worse than that of a Guatemalan invasion.

The communists are smacking their lips with relish at the opportunity of utilizing a defenseless Belize as a base to penetrate Central America.

What better ports than those of the city of Belize and Commerce Bight for the infiltration of communist armament into Central America and Mexico!

It will not even be necessary for the communists to lay hands on Belize through armed action. The ministers of the ruling regime have not said that the communists are already in power. The communists are the ones who are so vigorously demanding immediate independence.

But the worst of the Belizean nightmare is that it is in the name of self-determination that the United Nations are hurling Belize to the abyss of destruction. They claim that we want this because that is what the communists who are present in our government say so.

They do not permit the Belizean people to speak for themselves through a referendum and say whether or not we want to destroy ourselves. Central America is being snatched bit by bit and we are no exception. But Belize, which survived the battle of Cavo St. George, can surprise the conspirators and schemers. Wake up, people of Belize; wake up!"

British Neocolonialist Policy Scored

Guatemala City EL IMPARCIAL in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Popularization of Belize Situation in the UN"]

[Text] "Guatemala maintains its position with regard to the problem of Belize, a part of its territory that is unlawfully held by the United Kingdom, and it has not backed away from, nor will it back away from, its territorial claim against Great Britain. This is a problem that must be resolved before any kind of recognition and settlement of the interests of a cultural ethnology that emerged and developed in the old Spanish grant to the cutters of logwood and other lumber in the last third of the 18th Century, which logically is synonymous with the situation of ethnic minorities in national territories.

Said ethnic minority is not in any way British, even though the occupation was inaugurated and is maintained by the colonialist spirit and interest of the British, who openly declared that, upon seeing themselves obliged to liquidate their 'great empire,' gave greater attention and a new direction (what we have qualified as 'neocolonialism') to the British Community (the Commonwealth), on behalf of their political aspirations and the strengthening of the economic zone of the free sterling, apart from the fact that the presence of their allies in the area of the Caribbean makes it possible for them to maintain the remnants of their former predominance there and their influence in the Western Hemisphere, even through the member countries of the Organization of American States.

A calculating and advantageous attitude--characteristic of imperial systems and of colonialist tendencies--prolonged the resolution of the problem of Belize, always treated by the utilitarian power in a way that caused us to be politically and militarily weak. In time, it was able to make good use of even the liberation movement of countries that were subdued by Great Britain, by taking on the disguise of a lover of the free determination of countries, going to ridiculous extremes, like that of claiming that a detachment and the planting of some administrative employees can constitute a population in Gibraltar, with 'British desires' of self-determination.

Political interests of another type in the so-called 'Third World' and Soviet aspirations of predominance in the Western Hemisphere, nourished by ideologists and by political puppets managed by remote control, have seemingly wiped out colonialism from the British curule in the United Nations Organization, an area in which political interests do not allow enough breathing space for right and justice, raising their hands like lances against juridical thinking and even the precepts expressed in the San Francisco charter; as in the most recent and the previous voting in order to expedite, by misguided means, the solution of the problem, to the liking of the British palate and with no thought for Guatemala's territorial claim.

We are referring to a sign of communist interests, because several scattered incidents in the Caribbean archipelago cause this to be presumed, and finally to the Belizean newspaper, THE BEACON, which editorialized on the nightmare of Belize: the UN decision 'that Belize should become independent,' even though Guatemala's claim is not resolved, and even though it means the invasion of a defenseless Belize by Guatemala; but it indicates something worse, that 'the communists are smacking their lips with relish at the prospect of an opportunity to utilize a defenseless Belize as a base to penetrate Central America' (or in order to finish penetrating Central America, they could say), and also Mexico--counting, they add, on ports like Belize and Commerce Bight.

It is true that the handlers of the question of Belize in the United Nations do not dare (as yet) to deal the final blow, inasmuch as its 'generous recommendation' to give independence to Belize in 1981 before the closing of the next UN General Assembly considers that a petition has been entered for Great Britain (in consultation with Belizean leaders) and Guatemala to remove any obstacles to arriving at an agreement in the negotiations that have been initiated--which are being cleverly postponed or entrapped by the British in order to gain time and to augment UN sentiment or to be more outspoken in the matter.

What is truly inconceivable in a forum whose existence has a juridical basis, without which it could not exist, is that the voters are not aware of the damage they are doing to logic, right, and the essence of the UN, since they are asking that a matter be resolved prior to the solution that they want (or that may please the British, or that may please the communists), since they demand in concert, with former Guatemalan Price as soloist, the independence of Belize, through the generosity of treacherous Albion, with its entire territory--not yet delimited--that Great Britain unlawfully holds.

But to have a theoretical and latent just claim is not enough. Guatemala has stopped disseminating the historical truth and the juridical substance of its claim. The United Nations have increased in number--but they are still weak in quality because of their size, which is great, but which results in a loss of depth; and many of the delegates from new member countries are not acquainted with the past and do not have time (or perhaps even an interest) in reading background data, useless also for those who receive the word, sometimes orders, to argue or vote in a discussion of affairs which, without being of intrinsic political interest, may be useful on the voting market and for political influence. Guatemala must not rest on its laurels, but must race against the clock, so that foreigners and many indolent Guatemalans may become thoroughly aware of the problem of Belize and the fairness of the Guatemalan claim."

COLUMNIST VIEWS RIGHTWING'S REACTION TO REAGAN VICTORY

PA251910 San Pedro Sula TIEMPO in Spanish 17 Nov 80 p 7

["Viewpoint" column by Victor Meza: "Reagan's Victory and the Domestic Rightwing"]

[Text] Ronald Reagan's victory has had, among other things, the virtue of acting as a restorative, something like a revitalizing tonic that has returned strength and hope to an ultraright tormented by the victories of the continent's revolutionary forces.

The Honduran rightwing's reaction to Carter's defeat and the republican candidate's overwhelming victory has been tinged with anecdotes and folklore. Quite a few compatriots view Reagan's victory as their own and can hardly wait for the moment when leftist heads begin rolling all over the area. For these compatriots--believe it or not--Carter somehow symbolizes communism infiltrated into the top echelons of the U.S. Government. By the same token, they interpret his defeat as a victory for the anticommunist forces and as a strong blow against world revolution.

It would not be strange then if, in light of such opinions and hopes, Reagan himself would later seem too tolerant and benevolent. The complexity of world politics and the fact that political-military blocs exist in today's world are real and specific phenomena that no truly capable and intelligent ruler can ignore. Imperial interests can at times be more sophisticated than any thing the artless imagination of our crude and provincial rightwing can conceive.

As soon as Reagan won, many traditional politicians began talking about the possibility that a new coup might be staged. And surely, deep inside, more than one officer savored the hope of seeing himself becoming chief of state thanks to a coup.

As long as everything is reduced to mere hopes and dreams, there is not much to worry about. The difficult part will be the day someone more insolent decides to launch a coupist adventure and to thank the honorable deputies for their expensive services to our poor fatherland. That is when things will indeed get hard and our "oasis of peace" will become just the opposite.

The right apparently cannot learn the lessons of history. It is slow-witted and stubborn, as befits the productive forces of the most underdeveloped country in the area. Just as one cannot expect pears from an elm tree, neither can we ask underdeveloped Honduras to have a clear-headed and brilliant rightwing. It cannot be done.

The situation in El Salvador is slowly and painfully nearing a final solution. The harassment operations launched by the guerrillas merely forecast the proximity of the final offensive. In spite of the peace treaty signed with our government, the Christian Democratic-military junta is staggering and is threatening to collapse completely. Meanwhile, the internal contradictions of the Sandinist process have been more clearly defined and the political prospects of the Nicaraguan revolution now seem clearer and more precise.

At this new historic juncture that Central America is currently experiencing, a coup attempt is the only thing the Honduran rightwing can come up with. In order to unite their forces and sufficiently encourage their adventure, they interpret the U.S. republican victory as a pat on the back for their political ambitions and as open support for their undemocratic plans. There is no question: Honduras' rightwing is destined to continue being Central America's cinderella!

RATIONAL LAND REFORM PROGRAM URGED

PA032014 Tegucigalpa Voz de Honduras in Spanish 1145 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Commentary by Andres Torres]

[Excerpts] The occupations or invasions of agricultural lands continue to be carried out by organized groups of peasants, now with the argument that those who have nothing should take from those who do have, as if modern times had imposed the law of the strongest.

We cannot, nor do we wish to ignore the peasants' demands for land. We understand and we realize quite well that those who have no lands to cultivate feel neglected. The land reform program, however, cannot be conceived as the haphazard distribution of lands that are perhaps fulfilling their social purpose.

It is true that neglect creates desperation, because hunger hurts. However, the use of the land can be positive only if at the same time there is the technical assistance and the economic aid to exploit it.

For example, food imports this year total almost 60 million lempiras and of these--listen to this--40 million have been used for purchasing grain abroad. We feel that the government should implement a true land reform, an overall reform from which everyone will benefit. Only in this way will there be security for investment in agriculture and with this investment, there will again be rational exploitation of land.

It is no longer possible for us to continue being great importers of grain, when we have good land and when we are an agricultural country par excellence.

There must be a well-defined agrarian policy in which natural and economic resources are well utilized and distributed.

It is precisely the peasant invasions that contribute toward scaring bank credit away from agro-industry. With the economic contribution of the government alone, land reform will always be a myth, because the reformed sector will never be able to produce enough to meet the domestic demand.

The peasants may continue to invade lands. The government may continue to channel funds toward the organized peasant sectors. However, the grain shortage will continue to spiral alarmingly until the private sector has the necessary security for agro-industrial investment.

NEWS MEDIA SCORED FOR FAVORING SALAZAR

PA041843 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0300 GMT 4 Dec 80

[Commentary by Wilfredo Lopez Balladares: "Finger on the Sore"]

[Text] The counterrevolutionary news media, especially its most conspicuous mouthpiece, the newspaper LA PRENSA, is disregarding the charges investigators have leveled against Jorge Salazar Arguello. It insists on trying to depict him as a hero, a martyr and an apostle of their cause.

The irresponsible persons in charge of these news media do not give an iota to the fact that Salazar Arguello was up to his neck in activities against the people and the revolution. Nor do they care that he sought out and made contacts with former Somozist guardsmen and other enemies of the fatherland in order to carry out another bloodbath and impose the boot of fascism.

The super-brave directors of the local news media have not concerned themselves with Salazar Arguello's subversive activities. What hurts them to the point of hysteria is that the plans collapsed. These news media directors do not care if these plans only served the antinational ambitions of an oligarchy willing to sell the fatherland and who dream of regaining financial power so that they can divide among themselves the product obtained with the blood and sweat of the workers, as in the past. They do not care at all that if the coupists headed by Salazar Arguello had seized power, the properties confiscated from the Somozists would have been restored to the corrupt oligarchy and to a greedy private enterprise. They do not even care that former Somozist guardsmen would have been appointed to military posts which enable them to kill again, with revenge.

The news media directors want the counterrevolutionaries to seize power, even if they have to exterminate the revolutionaries to do so. What is driving them mad is the fact that their plans did not work. Those who talk so much about love support those who have hearts full of hatred and are preparing to kill without any mercy to regain what they claim they have lost. Those who talk so much about a white Christmas were planning to stain it with blood. Those who talk about peace were smuggling arms to start another war. For this reason the people have condemned Salazar Arguello and his henchmen and do not consider them to be heros or martyrs, but just plain counterrevolutionary plotters who preferred a galil rather than a dialogue, a pistol rather than the spoken word.

There are patriotic businessmen who are realistic and understand that the armed path against the revolution is stupid, irresponsible and also a waste of time, since it would cut production not only for personal gain but also for the nation.

Anyone who fights against the fatherland or tries to hand it over to the transnationals, is no hero.

Let us not put the merchants who are auctioning the country to colonels and millionaires in foreign markets on the same level as those who said that they would die for their country and who in fact did.

SANDINIST INVITATION TO PROFESSIONALS SEEN AS DEMOCRATIC

PA301956 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 26 Nov 80 p 3

[Editorial: "The Role of Professionals and Sandinist Democracy"]

[Excerpts] The invitation that the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN) has extended to all of the country's professionals to come together and discuss and enrich the draft law regulating professionals prepared by an ad hoc committee of our vanguard organization constitutes a specific example of Sandinist democracy applied to a matter of great importance for the country.

In addition to originating among the professional rank and file, the FSLN's draft document will once again be subjected to a process of consultation that will undoubtedly result in a better draft law, enriched with the contributions of the country's patriotic professionals and technicians. All this speaks highly of the democratic and popular bases of this process. Evidently, this process of consultation is also open to the rest of the people due to the nature and importance of professional activities in all areas of social life.

To speak of rules for the exercise of a profession within the context of a revolution simply means to define the role of professionals and technicians within the framework of a revolutionary process and the construction of a new society. In this manner, the objectives of professional work are placed at the service of the fatherland and do not constitute abilities to be exploited or from which to profit.

In addition, a position is defined on the importance of professional (due to their degree of technological and scientific training) in making the fatherland great and on their responsibilities in forging the new society, as members of the working people. For this reason, the systematic rise in the scientific and technical level of professionals is not only a duty contracted with the fatherland and the revolution but also a matter that concerns all workers who benefit from both the contributions made by the professionals and the country's development, to which the professionals contribute.

Naturally, in order to achieve these goals, the right of professionals and technicians to organize into associations, and the need to stimulate their incorporation and effective participation in them is recognized.

Lastly, a fundamental condition to guarantee that professionals fulfill their functions aimed at benefiting the people and the revolution is the participation of the government of national reconstruction to see that these goals become a reality. As the most recent document [considerando] states, "the government of national reconstruction is the organized expression in possession of [en poder de] the state and of the independence, self-determination and freedom achieved by our people. It is, therefore, vested with the moral and material authority necessary to rule on and watch over professional exercise so that it carries out the functions it has to on behalf of the Nicaraguan people." Those are the rights that the people have achieved through the revolution and patriotic professionals and technicians are a part of the revolutionary people.

DETAILS OF WORK-STUDY PROGRAM PROVIDED

PA031513 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 24 Nov 80 p 14

[Excerpts] "It is necessary to work so the country can have more wealth, more production to distribute." (Commander of the revolution Jaime Wheelock)

The work-study program has a theoretical basis: "If we consider it normal and necessary for our workers to study, then we must favor the development of an educational system in which our students should also work."

The students' participation in the work-study program does not necessarily have to be in the field. There are opportunities for the students to work in the communities close to their schools. The different tasks the student may carry out include environmental improvement and the maintenance of parks, streets, ditches, public buildings, nurseries, factories and industries which belong to the people.

It must be clearly established that the participation in the work-study program must be completely voluntary.

Those students who realize the need for the revolution to promote production in the field and who decide to participate in rural work, have two choices: to work in the daytime, which will allow them to return in the afternoon to their homes, or to live and work at the farms owned by the National Institute for Agrarian reform, INRA, equipped with the proper installations.

The tasks in the work-study program shall be distributed as follows: 5th and 6th grade students will carry out their work within their respective schools and in the district in which the school is located.

Junior high school students will work within their schools, in the district in which they are located or in other districts within the community.

They could also participate in the work-study program in the field in its first phase, for which it will be required to have the parents' written permission and an effective control over work attendence and the quality of the work.

Due to their maturity and responsibility, only high school students in the work-study program in the field will be allowed to work in the INRA farms.

Of all the previously mentioned work, only work done in the coffee harvest on public or private farms will be remunerated. The product of the students' work may be used to bolster the family budget or to create a special fund for the development of their schools or the youth association to which they may belong.

The high school teachers will be in charge of jointly coordinating the work of the students with the student authorities. Each brigade will be accompanied by a school teacher.

Grade school teachers shall direct and guide the work to be carried out by the students in their own schools.

A team of the education ministry's central office shall be responsible for this program. The team will be headed by the educational planning vice minister and will include one delegate for the training program division, one for the vocational training and occupational guidance department, and one for the high school general directorate, as well as representatives from the National Association of Teachers of Nicaragua, the Sandinist Youth and the Parents Association.

LIMITED FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION--Caracas, 2 Dec (EFE)--Fabio Gadea Mantilla, president of the Advertising Agencies Association of Nicaragua, disclosed here today that there are restrictions on the freedom of expression in his country. Gadea, head of Nicaraguan delegation of radio station and newspaper owners, said that the unconditional freedom of expression "is established in the constitution, but has been restricted by recent decrees." He said that the most recent case is that of television, in which the two channels "were allegedly taken over by the state, but are at the service of the Sandinist National Liberation Front [FSLN], which is a political party with definite Marxist-Leninist tendencies." Gadea Mantilla added that Decree 511 prohibits reporting news dealing with shortages of food, armed clashes, strikes, stoppages and "similar issues." Gadea Mantilla says that "this creates a critical situation, because anything the government wishes could be covered by this." "We hope that all democratic countries of America realize the situation we are going through," he concluded. [Text] [PA051754 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0236 GMT 3 Dec 80]

VIOLENCE IN EL SALVADOR CONDEMNED

PA051858 Panama City MATUTINO in Spanish 3 Dec 80 p4-A

[Editorial: "Uncontrolled Violence in El Salvador"]

[Text] Unfortunately, when men let emotions get the best of them, they settle their differences through violence. When they cannot control their emotions, they unleash the bloodshed that leads countries to a massive despair that is the threshold of chaos, and can only end in definite and generalized ruin.

This is being experienced by El Salvador. The will of the great majority of Salvadorans is being repressed through blood and fire by those who have the power and the weapons, and are mentally and spiritually insane enough to use them.

People are being killed by the hundreds in El Salvador. So many are being killed by repression that we could rightly call it genocide. This word is applied to the systematic extermination of a race, people or religion. However, in El Salvador, a defenseless people are being exterminated just because they have a different ideology from those in power.

This attitude should be condemned by all those countries, who are mature enough to have learned to coexist with different ideologies. This leads us to reflect on the great benefits reaped by a country like ours, which has learned to respect the opinions of others, amd at the same time demands for our own.

Ideological pluralism--which allows each country to have its own traditional way of thinking, acting, and settling its problems, including socio-economic ones--once again proves that it is the way of life of truly free men.

Some countries are engaged in never-ending war over differences, not in religion, but over minor discrepancies in rites. These wars are a permanent source of bloodshed of young men and result in economic imbalances. There are other countries like ours, whose constitution allows freedom of worship, and in which the Roman Catholic majorities are not upset or concerned because a neighbor belongs to another religion.

That is why, at the same time, we are praying for an end to the violence destroying El Salvador, we are also praying that our country will always maintain that respectful attitude, in which no group will tomorrow sow the seeds of religious or political fanatism with its ensuing violence and struggle among brothers of the same blood, as is happening in El Salvador.

FORMER PRESIDENT'S PRESS SECRETARY DENOUNCED BY WAR MINISTRY

Lima CORREO in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] The Ministry of War will take legal action against the editor of KAUSACHUM and former director of the Velasquist OCI [Central Information Office], Augusto Zimmermann Zavala, because of the serious accusations appearing in the most recent edition of this weekly.

One of the charges which will be lodged against Zimmerman reportedly will be falsification of documents attributed to the Intelligence Service and to Gens Francisco Morales Bermudez, Pedro Richter Prada and Guillermo Arbulu Galliani, in connection with the death of Argentine Montonero Carlos Alberto Maguid, of whom it was said that he had disappeared while living in Peru.

According to credible sources, the memoranda attributed to officials of the Intelligence Service are in reality clumsy falsifications in which phony texts were "rigged" with legitimate signatures from routine documents of the military organization. A military source, consulted by CORREO, said that the subjects dealt with in the memoranda not only did not exist but are not customarily handled in this kind of internal communication.

The Montoneros

The conclusions of military experts who have analyzed the memoranda published by KAUSACHUM would lead to the conclusion that foreign agents of the Argentine Montoneros had a hand in the falsification operation. This also included the suspicion that high Montonero leaders had participated. They are said to have entered the country during the last few weeks by using disguises and makeup similar to those employed by Che Guevara to enter Bolivia with false passports.

The KAUSACHUM report which implicated several active duty and retired generals was interpreted as part of a strategy inspired by the communists and coup d'etatists to undermine the unity of the Armed Forces. In the preceding edition of the same publication, there was a distortion of an in-house incident between Minister of Industry Roberto Rotondo and an officer which was exaggeratedly presented as a confrontation between the government and the military.

It was also said that a visit by the president of the republic to the offices of the Ministry of War, which had been scheduled in advance, was slanted to make it seem "an act of atonement to the Army." Legal advisers of the Ministry of War are studying the above-mentioned magazine to classify the criminal acts contained in it. They have cited defamation, falsification of documents, crime against public trust and others which will nail Gen Velasco Alvardo's adviser to the wall.

VISIT OF YUGOSLAV VICE PRESIDENT REPORTED

Cooperation Reaffirmed

Lima LA CRONICA in Spanish 17 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] Pleasantly surprised by the architectural beauty of the cities of Lima and Cuzsco, Sergej Kraigher, vice president of Yugoslavia, bade farewell to our country yesterday after a 5-day official visit.

During his stay in Peru, Kraigher met with the constitutional president, Fernando Belaunde and signed a joint statement. He also made a sightseeing trip to Cuzco.

He also had important talks with the ministers of foreign relations, Javier Arias Stella; agriculture and nutrition, Nils Ericcson; and energy and mines, Pedro Pablo Kuczynski.

On the first day of his visit, the vice president was declared "Illustrious Guest" of the city of Lima by the Provincial Council. Mayor Piero Pierantoni gave him the keys to the 400-year-old capital city.

A few hours after his arrival, he awarded the "Great Star of Yugoslavia" to President Fernando Belaunde, his country's highest honor, which is reserved exclusively for chiefs of state.

During talks with members of the Constitutional Government and representatives of the press, an important role was played by the interpreter, Nadezdia Milekich. She was a member of the illustrious visitor's official committee.

Nadezdia, with her natural friendliness, facilitated communications between the Yugoslav vice president and persons with whom he spoke.

Support for Irrigation Projects

While he was in our country, he was able to analyze our relations firsthand and to reaffirm the existing bilateral agreements.

In this regard, Sergej Kraigher, who in May 1981 will become the president of his country, stated the need for increasing cooperation between our countries.

He revealed that Yugoslavia is buying Peruvian products amounting to $100 million and is selling us products worth $1 million.

In his talk with the Minister of Agriculture and Nutrition, after describing the work being done by the Yugoslav enterprise Energo Project on the Chita-Piura irrigation program, he said that his government is keeping alive its expectations of an increase in existing collaboration and cooperation, particularly in agriculture and irrigation.

Also, during a talk with Pedro Pablo Kuczynski, he revealed that his government is interested in participating in several of Peru's mining projects.

The signing of the "joint declaration" by both governments signifies a commitment to maintain friendly and cooperative relations between Yugoslavia and Peru and means that the levels of this relationship are important, especially in the commercial and political sectors.

The distinguished visitor was broadly informed on the objectives and goals of the Peruvian government as concerns its political, economic and social development processes, with emphasis placed on restating the existence of full respect for human rights and democratic freedoms.

With regard to bilateral cooperation, Vice President Sergej Kraigher reaffirmed that his government is ready to participate in the exploration of Peru's water, energy and agricultural-livestock resources.

Solidarity With Nonalined Countries

Lima CORREO in Spanish 17 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] Peru has reaffirmed its position in the Nonalined Countries Movement, according to a statement made yesterday by Foreign Minister Javier Arias Stella, shortly after bidding farewell to the vice president of Yugoslavia, Sergej Kraigher, who traveled to Nicaragua after his official 4-day [as published] visit to Peru.

Arias Stella said that he and Kraigher had analyzed the major topics relating to the international political scene and the efforts being made by developing nations to bring about a new international economic order.

"The principal significance of Kraigher's visit was to affirm the common position of Peru and Yugoslavia in the Nonalined Countries Movement," he added.

Yugoslavia, jointly with India and Egypt, was the creator of the nonalinement policy; i.e., to maintain a position equidistant between the poles of world power: the United States and the Soviet Union.

Arias Stella said that the failure of north-south dialog is due to the lack of "cohesion and solidarity" in the negotiatint position of the Third World.

He said that for this reason Peru has proposed an effort to find great regional agreements in Latin America, Asia and Africa. "To succeed in achieving intraregional community and in this way to face up to the industrialized powers," he added.

The Foreign Minister said that the visit of the Yugoslav vice president has also served to strengthen commercial exchanges.

He recalled the old ties of friendship between Peru and Yugoslavia. In 1963, President Belaunde received then chief of state Tito. And during the civilian government, diplomatic relations were established in 1968.

MORALES BERMUDEZ STATES ARMED FORCES ROLE

Lima CORNICA in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] The role of the Armed Forces is one of total subordination to the legally constituted civilian authority because such authority derives from the will of the people, according to a statement made last night by the former head of the revolutionary government, Gen Francisco Morales Bermudez.

Speaking on the subject of "The Armed Forces and Politics," Morales Bermudez emphasized, "Governments are put into office by the people because it is the people who elect them." He added that the Armed Forces were not set up to govern, although they have governed.

"The civilian and military sectors must seek national unity because in the Peru of today a separation between the two is inconceivable," he stressed after saying that the obsolete concepts of "antimilitarism and anticivilianism" should be banished forever.

He also said that in the Peru of today there is a revival of the purest form of democracy in its broadest sense which can and must serve in attainment of the permanent stability of the political government born of the people's will.

The former president made these remarks before a large audience made up of University of the Pacific students, several former ministers of the previous military government, former editors of newspapers and national and foreign journalists.

He commented that the Armed Forces have an important role in the country's life, not only as a basic element of its territorial defense but also as a contributing factor to national development in the country's technological, scientific and problem-knowledge sectors.

"We must be united because all of us Peruvians are one," he said.

Using historical references and mentioning writers such as Plato, Aristotle, Bolivar and other personalities from world history, Morales Bermudez presented a sequential account of the military interventions which have taken place in the country since the republican era.

He said that these military interventions were in some cases motivated by pressures produced internally and externally on the Armed Forces, generally by movements headed by military leaders.

He underscored the fact that the Armed Forces at present cannot remain as mere observers of events which are of interest to the entire country, although he said that they should remain totally "apolitical"; i.e., they should not have any partisan political ties.

USE OF WIND CURRENTS AS ENERGY SOURCE EXAMINED

Montevideo EL PAIS in Spanish 19 Oct 80 p 12

[Text] "Uruguay has a potential resource in its winds, and if the day arrives when it is possible to harness them by means of modern prototypes (windmills) now being manufactured by highly industrialized countries they would generate a volume of energy six times greater than the yearly average output of the hydroelectric power plants of Salto Grande, i.e., the 50 percent produced for our country; Gabriel Terra; Baygorria; and Palmar combined."

This statement was made to EL PAIS by authorized officials who are making a study of this subject. They provided a series of data and illustrative documentation which describe the enormous prospects offered to Uruguay by wind currents as a generative source of energy.

Feasibility Studies

Feasibility studies on the use of wind energy in the country go back to the beginning of the 1960's when the topic was included in the plans of the CIDE (Intergovernmental Commission for Economic Development). At that time, when the possibility of manufacturing windmills with a generating capability of 2,000 kw was unheard of in the world, a wind survey was made of the entire national territory, which today is quite valid.

According to our sources, Uruguay, thanks to that survey, is the only country in the world which has a complete map with the wind variables in all the different regions.

But even more noteworthy than this advantage is the determination in the 1960s that the entire Uruguayan coast, which runs from Colonia to the Brazilian border on the Atlantic, has practically constant winds, ranging between 7 to 8 meters per second. Such wind force is unequaled in the world, except for countries in northern Europe; e.g., Denmark, Sweden and England.

Windmills: A Long Tradition

In our country, the use of windmills for the generation of electric energy is nothing new, particularly in the interior of the republic, where some years ago the peak was reached. After that, because of the extension of the national electric network and the low cost of fuels (1963-1974) the use of windmills was practically abandoned.

In fact, the technicians consulted said that the studies conducted by the CIDE in 1961 and corroborated by the balance sheet prepared by the ANCAP [National Fuels, Alcohol and Cement Administration] that same year, show that the energy supplied by windmills at that time was similar to the energy of the diesel plants of the UTE [General Administration of State Electric Power and Telephones].

On the ANCAP balance sheet, windmills represented on-fifth of the hydroelectric energy in 1961; and of the total annual energy consumption in 1974, which totaled 2,200 equivalent tons of oil, windmills supplied 68,000 tons [as published].

Oil Crisis: Modern Windmills

With the increases in crude oil prices which began to appear in 1974, the highly industrialized countries started to study the feasibility of alternative sources of energy. At that point, the advances of the technological age caught up with the windmills. On the basis of prototypes with a generating capability of 50 kw, there was planning for and installing of enormous turbines suspended in high towers which, as in the case of the American MOD-1, generated 2,000 kw.

The first big windmill was constructed in Denmark, at the University of Tvinds, 5 kilometers from the town of Ulfborg. This windmill has a 54-meter high tower and was designed and built by the professors and students of this university in a 6-month period and was placed in operation in 1976. The approximate cost of the windmill was $1 million.

NASA Prototype

The U.S. Government, for its part, made NASA responsible for the feasibility study on the harnessing of wind energy, which resulted in the construction of a series of experimental prototypes over a 2-year period. The largest of these windmills was installed in Boone,North Carolina, at a cost of $3 million. It is built on a 43-meter high tower, has one rotor (with two shafts) which is 67 meters in diameter and generates 2,000 kw at a cost of $.08 per kw/hour. This will be reduced to $.03 when the prototype is produced in quantities.

Our sources said that if a windmill with these characteristics were to be installed in Uruguay, its production would be 7 million kw/hours per year.

EL SALVADOR-HONDURAS PEACE SEEN ENCOURAGING REGIONAL UNITY

Guatemala City EL IMPARCIAL in Spanish 23 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Promises of Peace for Central America]

[Text] To a large extent, disunity is the principal cause of the misfortune of Central America, aggravated by fruitless locally oriented struggles which have run against the interests of the isthmus and failed to heed the advice to integrate from the economic authorities as well as aspirations of a civic and cultural order by significant sectors of public opinion aware that unity is the only destiny of our peoples and, while they await a propitious time to restore political unity, they believe that useful and indispensable integration-oriented plans, programs, and organs, whose effectiveness, even though partial, is undeniable.

Despite the political vicissitudes and sporadic quarrels which are unavoidable among neighbors--because we Central Americans live as if we were families in an ecological neighborhood--the practical manifestations of integration have yielded good results and convinced the most skeptical individuals, including various types of pessimists. It is for this reason that stress is placed on salvaging the Central American Common Market as one of the points of confluence of everyone's interests and of each of the states of the region. The ideal would be that our leaders take to heart the orientation of such joint effort to revitalize a process which is irreversible from all viewpoints, without relinquishing discussion or effecting the changes dictated by existing circumstances.

A disturbing element has undoubtedly been the so-called "dispute" between the republics of Honduras and El Salvador which for 11 years has maintained the break in diplomatic and trade relations between the two countries with significant damage to the integration-oriented plan that had just been developing. Another blow was the Nicaraguan crisis, halting land communications, hindering the supply of raw materials and intraregional exports, isolating or impeding access to some areas, and paralyzing or delaying traffic.

Nevertheless, there is hope that in the end the conflict between the two Morazan-oriented [After Honduran Gen Francisco Morazan who had urged the unity of Honduras and El Salvador] states, as Honduras and El Salvador have been called, will be solved. Besides the fact that they are neighbors, these two countries have had a tradition of brotherhood and intense cultural and socioeconomic interchange. The first effective step toward the normalization of their relations was to submit their dispute to mediation by a committee chaired by Dr Jose Luis Bustamente y Rivero, former president of Peru and a jurist of international reputation.

The measures taken by the mediator have also been slow, but eventually an effective system was found, namely, to screen the field, separating superficial or less important questions and in particular those for which it was felt that it was easier to achieve a reconciliation of both sides. Even though these were procedural, they made easier the path for the negotiation of more important matters or those needing previous clarification.

The Salvadoran minister of foreign affairs, Fidel Chavez Mena, paid a protocol visit to Tegucigalpa, Honduras, as if to break the ice, and both his personal posture and the manner in which he was received by the Honduran authorities were marked by extreme cordiality. And now, under similar conditions, the Honduran minister of foreign affairs, Cesar Elvir Sierra, is in San Salvador paying a visit to his Salvadoran opposite number. In both cases it was also possible to observe in public opinion an attitude favorable to good understanding.

It was announced through a joint communique in Tegucigalpa on the occasion of the visit of the Salvadoran foreign minister that on 30 October 1980 there will be signed in the Peruvian capital the peace treaty which is being finalized in San Salvador, in a last working session of the national commissions of both countries chaired by the respective ministers of foreign affairs. It seems that there was also an exchange of viewpoints between the Honduran foreign minister and the civilian-military government junta of El Salvador.

It is believed that the "dispute" between the two Morazan-oriented countries as well as the Nicaraguan political crisis and some deviations in Costa Rican policy weakened regional cohesion and for that reason it is hoped that the restoration of relations between Honduras and El Salvador will be an effective step toward a united expression of the peoples of the isthmus to unify the examination and solution of our problems. At this time, there is no point to lamentations about what has been lost or recriminations for misdeeds. It is more profitable to outline plans for the future, setting aside or forgetting misunderstandings and pointless jealousies in order to clear the field and spend time on a clear-sighted consolidation of goals whose realization would be helped by a climate of sincerely restored brotherhood.

PRESIDENT-ELECT STUDIES NEW MINISTRIES LAW PROPOSALS

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 4

[Article by Enrique Bugatti: "The Ministries Law"]

[Text] According to predictions made by the authorities, during the next few days the president-elect, Lt General Viola, will notify them of his decision regarding the ministries that will back his administration.

After that, the Secretariat of Planning (headed by Brig Gen Jose Miret) will be required to study and draft the final text dealing with the jurisdiction of the new table of organization for ministries, so that it may be approved by the president-elect, submitted to the CAL [Legislative Advisory Commission] and, finally, confirmed, so as to be ready by March of next year.

The matter of changing the structure of the ministries is nothing new. It was brought up in 1977, when the current president was confirmed in office; but at that time it was thought that any change, with its resultant period of readjustment and experimentation, would damage the pace already established within the government, causing an unnecessary hiatus.

Now, after the designacion of Lt General Viola, the Military Junta, with the government guidelines for the next 3 years, submitted to him the studies on alternate versions of a new ministries law, so that he might approve one of them, for purposes of final approval.

Division

The very existence of the studies that have been made, undertaken by the Secretariat of Planning, implies the decision of the highest authority to sponsor a change in the current structure of the ministries.

In this connection, it has reportedly been agreed to divide the Ministry of Economy, and to reduce the Ministry of Social Welfare.

The ministries could apparently amount to 10 or 11 because, although the Ministry of Economy would be eliminated, Ministries of Finance, Public Works and Services, and even Production would be created, the latter to include the activities which generate national wealth; while the Ministry of Social Welfare would be confined to Social Security and Public Health.

As has been noted, the last word in this regard will come from the future president, inasmuch as the reform is intended to be the instrument placed in his hands for the implementation of the guidelines issued by the Military Junta.

The studies that have been made are summarized in a voluminous file held by Lt General Viola, including items ranging from the plan for seven ministries (described as a "rational model") to another for 12 ministries.

As the ministries increase, the number of state secretariats decreases, and vice versa, as the ministries decrease, the number of the latter increases.

The criterion on which the study is based is that of subsidiary status, and the state's functions are determined according to that principle, which has been constantly cited by the present authorities.

To be sure, the matter entailed long studies and a report to the National Cabinet from the secretary of planning. Nevertheless, no debate was started on the change, so as to avoid the traditional support for the maintenance of certain areas of influence within the group as a whole. In any event, it is known that the current economic leadership is not in favor of reforms.

When Lt General Viola's awaited decision is made, there will be interministerial meetings to evaluate the possible divisions stemming from the final decision.

Constitution

The Constitution of 1853 set the number of ministries at eight to provide for "handling the nation's business;" while the constitutions of most countries do not refer to any number.

This was stipulated in the reform of the National Constitution which was enacted in 1972, with inconsistent application.

Based upon its status as a "tool," the ministries law in most countries is applied in accordance with the circumstances that occur, with ministries appearing and disappearing, as certain demands of a political, economic, social, cultural or other type arise and are eliminated.

While the future president decides on the types of ministry organization that he will adopt for his government service, he is talking with individuals associated with all fields, who are contributing their experience on matters that are essential to the nation.

But although the present authorities are expecting Viola's decision as soon as possible, so as to progress in the final materialization of the experiment in question, to the new president that decision will represent an increase in the expectations regarding his administration.

Because when the new table of organization has been established, everyone will want to know when and with whom the slots allocated for the heads of each ministry will be filled.

NEW CGT DIVIDES LABOR SECTOR

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 10 Nov 80 p 9

[Article by Claudio Polosecki: "A Partialized CGT"]

[Text] Last Friday, for the second time in little over a month, the reformation of the General Labor Confederation [CGT] as a new leadership for the trade union sector was announced.

This time, however, unlike the first occasion when the three leading sectors of the labor movement at present were involved in the announcement, the assumption of the traditional initials of the labor confederation was made by only one of these movements, accompanied by indifference on the part of the other two.

The fact that, to date, there has been no formal publication of the list of organizations that actually belong to the new CGT, and that the organizational structure and administration that this association will have are not known, precludes making certain assessments of the fate that this new attempt may have.

On the other hand, it can be clearly perceived that, on the basis of the participation of two teams of Peronist trade unionists in the political dialog, despite the party ban made public, and the launching of the new CGT, the deepseated division of the labor movement into two definite sectors has been formally established.

The '25'

The first sector, which has now been formed around the initials CGT, consists mainly of unions affiliated with the "Commission of 25," espousing the "hardest" positions in the labor movement, to which have been added those involved in the "dissident vertical movement" which broke off from the CNT [National Labor Commission] and an as yet undetermined number of members of the "Commission of 20."

These organizations took advantage of the political crisis started within the labor movement as a result of the CNT's participation in the political dialog to assume the many sectorial grievances of the labor movement and, through the reformation of the CGT, to devise a strategy in overt opposition to the government's policy, clearly dissociated from that sponsored by the "moderate" sector.

This stand has the certain support of most of the CGT's Regional Delegations set up in the interior of the country and Greater Buenos Aires, as well as of the Peronist

Trade Union Groups and the "organic" sector of the Justicialist Party. On the other hand, the formation of the new CGT will surely pose greater problems than the determination of its political identity; because there are many organizations in which the internal opinions regarding the overall action of the labor movement are also divided.

For example, it is not yet known what position will be assumed by some members of the "Commission of 20," such as the one for insurance, the representative for which, Ramon Valle, was a member of the first team of trade unionists to attend the political dialog, or by the municipal representatives, whose leader, Geronimo Izzetta, also accepted the invitation, although he did not attend.

The situation is even more complicated in large organizations in which there has been intervention, such as the light and power, and textile workers unions, which belong to CNT organically, although some of their leaders are said to be affiliated with the new CGT.

In the Other Corner

In the other corner of the trade union rectangle, there is the "moderate" sector, led by the organizations grouped in CNT, with which, in fact, most of the unions without intervention affiliated with the "Commission of 20" tacitly agree.

This sector,which attempted to cope with the crisis triggered by its participation in the political dialog by calling upon the other groups, until the last minute, to bring about trade union unity, does not propose, for the present to compete with the "hard-liners" for the use of the initials CGT, whose rebirth, announced by "the 25," they regard as "insignificant."

The "moderates," on the other hand, are hastening the attempt to strengthen their internal unity, while preparing to try to influence the process of normalizing the organizations in which there has been intervention.

Attaching little importance to the risks of a confrontation with the "hardlliners" in the political area, one of the CGT's top-ranking leaders stated this weekend that "just after the normalization, we shall know who is who."

The '62'

However, the diagnosis of the future is quite different in the eyes of the "hard-liners" who, anticipating the beginning of a "more political" phase in the military process,were preparing to launch, immediately after the CGT's announcement, the establishment of a new board consisting of the "62 Peronist Trade Union Organizations," as a means of participating actively in the trade union and partisan ideological dispute.

The rebirth of the traditional "trade union branch" of the Justicialist movement would enable this sector, in addition, to become involved in the active work of directing a large number of traditional labor leaders who, for various reasons, are dissociated from their organization, such as Lorenzo Miguel, Rogelio Papagno, Diego Ibanez, Jose Baez, Juan Jose Taccone, Jose Carcia, Eleuterio Cardozo and others who agree with the strategy of the "hard-liners."

PUBLIC SECTOR DEBT CONTINUES TO RISE

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 13

[Text] The state enterprises have again become one of the leading demanders of money on the financial market, taking over $150 million in one week.

Between 6 and 13 November, seven public enterprises plan to demand 296.5 billion pesos, for periods fluctuating from 90 to 360 days. That figure does not include the transactions made commercially, with the banking system. It involves loans to meet development requirements.

The main payee, accounting for nearly a quarter of the total, is SEGBA [Greater Buenos Aires Electrical Services], with 69 billion pesos. It is followed in order of importance by Government Coal Deposits (YCF), with 46.6 billion; in third place, the Salto Grande Joint Technical Commission, which received 42.912 billion pesos yesterday; and next, Water and Electric Power, which requested funds amounting to 40 billion pesos.

The fifth enterprise, in descending order, was Argentine Railroads which, in a single bid, assumed debts totaling 37.1 billion pesos for a period of 6 months; followed by the National Atomic Energy Commission, which absorbed 30.9 billion yesterday; and, finally, Government Oil Deposits, with 30 billion pesos.

Operation Method

Since mid-October, this method of operation on the part of public enterprises has become customary.

This method is reportedly based on instructions issued by the Palace of Finance, aimed at temporarily suspending the foreign debt and resolving the immediate financial needs on the local market.

During the week of 14-21 October, the state enterprises took in $30 million on the domestic market. The following week, the figure was repeated.

Drawing attention were the large amounts requested by SEGBA which totaled $82 million between 30 October and yesterday. YPF, for its part, received over $30 million during the past 3 weeks. In this regard, it should be recalled that, as of 30 June, the public enterprises' internal debt totaled nearly $1.4 billion, threatening to end the fiscal year at a considerably higher level.

TRACTOR INDUSTRY REPORTEDLY TO UNDERGO MAJOR CHANGES

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 17

[Text] The revamping of the current system for the tractor industry and its future prospects were analyzed yesterday at the Palace of Finance, for the purpose of drafting a report which Minister Jose Alfredo Martinez de Hoz is reportedly to submit to President Jorge Rafael Videla within a few hours.

The status of this sector was discussed during a meeting led by Martinez de Hoz, in which the state secretary of economic programing and coordination, Guillermo Walter Klein; the state secretary of international trade and economic negotiations, Alejandro Estrada; and the state secretary of industrial development, Alberto Grimoldi, participated, as did other officials and advisers from the economic area.

On this occasion, there was, basically, an analysis of a plan devised by the secretariat of industrial development, whereby the present system for the tractor industry which, according to the original text, was to expire on 31 December of this year, would be extended until 1984.

Changes

However, certain major changes were reportedly included, such as the increase in the number of parts that may be imported duty-free from the current 15 percent to 20 or 25 percent; and also the repeal of the article which flatly bans the importing of the respective assembled motors.

During the course of the talks, there was also an analysis of matters relating to the future of the sector, and the mechanisms leading to a kind of "reconversion system" which would spur on the merger among the various factories established in the country.

In addition to the shrinking of the tractor market, during recent years there has been evidence of a growing presence of imports.

DEUTZ FIRM ANNOUNCES IMPENDING SHUTDOWN

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 6 Nov 80 p 19

[Text] Yesterday, the president of the Deutz Argentina firm, Ernesto Schwarzboeck, gave CLARIN confirmation that the shutdown of the plant's production announced for the end of the year is an "irreversible" measure.

However, he said that the decision would be of a "temporary" nature, since "the factory is being frozen in order to ascertain whether the country's economic policy is going to change."

Schwarzboeck declared: "Obviously, the conditions are not present in Argentina now for a tractor industry;" adding that "huge amounts of money would be required to cover Deutz's monthly losses."

With regard to rumors that a delegation of businessmen from the home office, located in the Federal Republic of Germany, would be arriving in the country, the high-ranking executive explained that they were "specialists in spare parts who by no means constitute a delegation to negotiate an alternative other than the closing in Argentina; because there is nothing to negotiate."

The statement resulted from the exchange of individual wires sent by the Deutz workers and the heads of the Moron mechanics' union to the local administrative board of the firm and to the German ambassador to Argentina, demanding a meeting with the individuals sent from the home office.

'Freeze'

The president of Deutz Argentina said that the "freeze" on the plant, located in Haedo, entails keeping "all the machinery oiled and all the equipment (currently operated by about 800 persons) in good condition."

Starting in January 1981, the firm will engage in importing and marketing tractors, farm machinery and diesel engines within the country, for which (Schwarboeck added) it will keep between 60 and 80 individuals employed.

At the time of full production, Deutz was also engaged in manufacturing diesel engines, which met part of the requirements of the Ford and Chrysler automobile companies.

The businessman also remarked that, last week, some 40 of the 94 workers who had recently been laid off were rehired, a measure which caused the plant to be occupied for 4 days by part of the total personnel.

When asked about this, spokesmen from the mechanics' union confirmed the number of those rehired, explaining that the rest had decided to leave the company.

At the same time, they added that they were willing to talk about the problem with "whoever comes from Germany, whether they be company executives or specialists."

FOREIGN AUTO MAKERS NOT OPTIMISTIC ABOUT INDUSTRY'S RECOVERY

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 11

[Text] "We have decided on a drastic resizing of our industrial presence in Argentina, and will engage solely in marketing activities, starting in 1981," declared the president of Fiat, Giovanni Agnelli, in Turin yesterday during the stockholders' meeting at which it was decided to raise the company's capital from $185 to $378 million, according to a cable from the Italian news agency ANSA [National Associated Press Agency].

Giovanni Agnelli claimed that "similar decisions" concerning a reduction in industrial activities in Argentina "have been made by the leading multinationals operating in that country."

Difficulties

The businessman stressed that Fiat Diesel Argentina faced difficulties because of the "severe decline in domestic demand," and "the sizable burden of financial costs, which range from 80 to 100 percent per year."

Giovanni Agnelli also remarked that, "In Argentina, the merger between our firm and the local branch of Peugeot, the new Sevel company, which is currently operating on a par, and which has moderate prospects for income return, has just taken place."

Sevel

It should be noted that Sevel Argentina, Inc (European Vehicle Company for Latin America) expects to start producing new models in the middle of next year.

A few days ago, Sevel's board members stated that, to achieve "operative status," the firm would need some time in order to become effective. They claimed that this operative status entails, among many other matters, the decision as to the models that are to be produced.

Brazil

In commenting on Brazil, the head of Fiat, Giovanni Agnelli, maintained that, "The situation in that country appears to be improved from an industrial and marketing standpoint."

According to the ANSA account, the Italian businessman stressed: "Our companies show positive operational results, although the burden of the financial costs, which are also very high in Brazil, has caused the overall economic balance to prove negative."

In conclusion, Agnelli told the stockholders' meeting that, "Major financial contributions have been decided upon to refinance the structure of the assets, and to allow for the transition toward a positive income return."

MINISTER URGES UNITY TO COUNTER THREATS TO INDEPENDENCE

Belize City THE BELIZE SUNDAY TIMES in English 23 Nov 80 p 11

[Text]

Minister of Natural Resources, Florencio Marin, says the enemies of Belize have tried many tactics to disrupt and divert the orderly progress of Belize to nationhood.

Speaking in Dangriga last Sunday at the opening of the Stann Creek District Agricultural Fair, Marin said agents in our midst have actively promoted Guatemala's claim to Belizean territory.

"Judas has many modern counterparts" he said, "yet others seek to label any action by Government of which they disapprove as the work of Communists within the Government."

Minister Marin went on to say that the measure of activity achieved by these "agent provocateurs" in dividing the people against themselves, at a time when they should be uniting more than ever is shown by the recent formation by a group in Belize City of an anti-communist association.

Minister Marin said that such a move can only please the military in Guatemala. For, Guatemala too has a secret anti-communist army which, according to the latest edition of the British magazine THE ECONOMIST, has published a list of journalists, academics, lawyers, clerics, opposition politicians, teachers and peasant and union leaders who are to be eliminated.

A leader of the Secret Anti-Communist Army of Guatemala made the following statement: They stamped out communism in Uruguay, Argentina and Chile by destroying the left wing organisations and by God we'll do it here if we have to kill 500,000 people."

Minister Marin recalled that last May, on Labour Day, he warned of the dangers of crying communism at every turn of events. He said then that those who do so, may whether knowingly or not bring about the very conditions which they claim to seek to avoid.

Marin said in Dangriga last Sunday that "a house divided against itself will fall; this is the objective of our enemies, to sow the seeds of discord, to break down the solidarity which has led us so well to the brink of independence.

He called on Belizeans to stand firm for Belize, to stand firm for a sovereign independent Belize, with a democratically elected Government, with a Government which has proved itself over the years as having the best interests of the people of Belize as its "raison d'etre", and pay no heed to the lackeys of our enemies.

MARITIME DISCUSSION POSTPONED--A plenum of the Chamber of Representatives has postponed indefinitely the debate on the Colombian-Venezuelan dispute on the limitation of marine and underwater areas. The chamber's decision was in reply to the proposal made by congressmen Fernando Rico and Alberto Casas Santamaria, who thought it was not the proper time to discuss the matter and said that President Turbay Ayala has sufficient autonomy to handle the negotiations. The proposal caused a heated debate among the congressmen and an irate protest on the part of Ospino-Pastrana Representative Alvaro Leiva Duran, who presented the proposal. It was learned that the proposal for the postponement came from high government circles in order not to hamper any talks the Colombian and Venezuelan presidents may have in Santa Marta on 17 December during the commemoration of the 150th anniversary of liberator Simon Bolivar's death. FOREIGN POLICY POSITIONS, ACTIVITIES DESCRIBED

Rafael Rodriguez Interview

Havana GRANMA WEEKLY REVIEW in English 30 Nov 80 pp 2-3

[Interview with Carlos Rafael Rodriguez, member of Political Bureau of the Communist Party of Cuba and vice-president of the Councils of State and of Ministers, date and place not given]

[Text] Proletarian internationalism is the essence of the Communist Party of Cuba's international policy, its point of departure. On the eve of the 2nd Congress of the Party, can you say something about the 1st Congress resolutions and how they have been carried out?

In this respect, I would like to say that the 1st Congress Resolution on International Policy is based on a very clear, concrete concept of proletarian internationalism. This concept is summed up as follows: "Cuba, carrying out its foreign policy, subordinates its interests to the general interests of the victory of socialism and communism, of national liberation of the peoples, to the purposes of defeating imperialism and eliminating colonialism, neocolonialism and all forms of exploitation and discrimination of men and peoples." I believe that in the period that has transpired since the 1st Congress, the whole international policy of the Party and the state organs, under the Party's guidance, has been aimed at fulfilling this basic directive.

Of course, this policy is expressed in many different ways on the international scene. Fundamental to that policy is the defense of peace. Today, peace is the supreme interest of all the peoples. Without peace there can be no development; without peace there can be no national independence; and without peace, socialism is under constant threat. This is why, in keeping with the 1st Congress guidelines, Cuba's international policy has been directed toward helping prevent nuclear war; cut back on strategic arms; and support to the full the SALT-II agreements, denouncing those who try to sabotage them. We have also made every possible effort to promote the policy of détente, which has been under constant threat in the last few years, as there has been more and more persistent action on the part of forces bent on a policy of military superiority and the arms race — which would carry the world again to the brink of war — in the place of détente.

The second permanent element in our foreign policy in applying the aforementioned principles was taken up by the 1st Congress when it ratified its support "for the peoples resisting imperialist aggression and oppression" and proclaimed that "the struggle of each and every one of them is our own struggle."

In pursuing this policy, Cuba is active simultaneously as a member of the socialist community and of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries. We consider that both work in the same direction in the international arena and that there is no possible contradiction between our activities as a non-aligned country and our activities as a member of the socialist community.

We believe that a main role in the struggle for peace and for people's rights lies with the Soviet Union, not only because it was the first country in the world to establish socialism but also because its influence on international policy, given its history, its economic power and its military potential, makes it a significant lasting power no one can overlook.

The 1st Congress proclaimed the "unbreakable alliance which unites the Parties, the peoples, the states and the governments of Cuba and the Soviet Union." That alliance is a permanent element in our international policy. This doesn't necessarily mean that we coincide absolutely in our views on each of the problems of international life, for Cuba and the Soviet Union operate in different geographical regions and are at very differing stages of economic development. But that alliance does mean that nobody, that nothing can make us, either directly or indirectly, add grist to the mill of anti-Sovietism. We believe that the existence of socialism and, above all, the Soviet Union, is the best guarantee for peace, plus an essential factor of solidarity for peoples in their struggle against imperialism and neocolonialism.

To what extent has it been possible to carry out 1st Congress directives regarding Cuba's assistance to other peoples?

As you will recall, at the time of the 1st Congress Cuba was involved in the struggle to help Angola defend its territory and its Revolution against the attacks from the north and from the south and, above all, against the threat of the South African troops presence in Angolan territory. Cuba fulfilled, in an exemplary albeit modest fashion, that internationalist commitment. Later, a similar situation arose when Mengistu Haile Mariam, president of the Provisional Military Administrative Council of Ethiopia, requested aid to fight back the Somali invasion of the Ogaden. Cuba is known to have also done its duty in that internationalist task.

However, Cuba's collaboration is not expressed solely or chiefly in the form of military presence. Cuba would prefer, and is always making this clear, that it were never necessary to risk the lives of any of its fighters defending the rights of another people under threat. Unfortunately, this desire is undermined by those using military force to attack other peoples. Cuba's internationalism is expressed mainly, above all, through aid in the form of technical and scientific assistance and direct participation in constructive activities in friendly countries. In this sense, as the 2nd Congress of the Party approaches, we can say with certainty that Cuba is collaborating in diverse ways with more than 37 countries and that some 15 000 people are involved. The most important part of this collaboration is provided free of charge to sister nations which, because they are in the early stages of development, or because they lack economic resources, are only able to give us minimal economic compensation for the collaboration we give. There are other cases, of countries of greater wealth or countries that have reached a higher level of development, where we are compensated for this collaboration, always taking into account the varying possibilities of the countries in question.

What has been Cuba's role as chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries?

Cuba's first great task on becoming chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries was to hold the 6th Summit Conference. An unbiased review of the event serves to show all the efforts made by our country and Comrade Fidel Castro as chairman of the Summit to overcome, in the course of the Summit, the many obstacles aimed at disrupting the unity of the Non-Aligned Movement. The consolidation of that unity and the reaffirmation of the Movement's anti-imperialist character were, in our opinion, the two main results of the Summit. It was during that gathering of the non-aligned that a series of agreements were able to be reached on the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism, racism and apartheid and on the efforts to ensure that the prevailing international policy of the Movement not be a bloc-oriented one — which is simply the product of the fundamental contradictions that today throw the forces of socialism and the forces of imperialism against each other on the world scene.

Since the 6th Summit Conference was held, Cuba has continued to promote the activities and program of the Non-Aligned Movement in various international forums. For example, in the UN Special General Assembly, where the world's great economic problems were discussed and particular emphasis was placed on the struggle for the New International Economic Order, and in the 34th UN session, in which, according to the rundown that was made, the Movement was one of the session's most positive factors.

In the Special Assembly, the efforts made by Comrade Fidel Castro to promote the economic interests of the underdeveloped and developing countries, in the struggle for a New International Economic Order and to eliminate the existing inequality in international economic relations, were outstanding. His speech at the UN won unanimous praise as a creative and constructive statement serving as a platform for solving the great problems in this regard that today affect the international community. Fidel Castro raised the voice of the non-aligned beyond every ideological, political and social barrier and outlined a program that, if put into effect, could contribute to peace, to development and to mitigating the crisis the world economy is going through today. His proposal to the effect that the developing countries be granted over the next 20 years no less than 300 000 million dollars, in addition to the financial assistance they are being given now, drew international attention and met with support in all circles.

As chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, Cuba has also had to be very active in playing the role that befalls it in trying to avert internal conflicts between member countries of the Movement. In this respect, it has mediated in the differences between Malta and Libya and in the problems between the People's Democratic Republic of Guinea and the Republic of Guinea-Bissau and, more recently, has concentrated its efforts in playing a constructive role in the efforts to achieve a cease-fire and the start of negotiations between Iraq and Iran. Neither can we overlook Cuba's activities directed toward coming up with a political solution for the situation that has been created in Southwest Asia and particularly in Afghanistan.

In your opinion, what is the outlook for Cuba-U.S. relations?

This is perhaps the most difficult moment to predict the immediate outlook for relations between Cuba and the United States.

No one can deny that Reagan's election has raised new questions in the old differences between our two countries. If we were to take into account only the views expressed by Reagan during the pre-election campaign and the Republican platform's approach to the Latin American problem, all we would be able to do would be to prepare ourselves for new and harder confrontations. But this is no time for predictions, especially when the Cuban problem is one of a broader, more complex international scope and a source of concern for analysts and leaders everywhere, because what is at stake is a trend toward a war of devastation, or again taking up the road to détente.

• All I would like to say, therefore, in answer to your question is that Cuba continues to take the positions expressed by Comrade Fidel Castro in the 1st Congress of the Party. It is not part of Cuba's foreign policy to be permanently hostile to any of our neighbors, but, at the same time, Cuba stands firm in its principle that the blockade has to be eliminated for there to be official talks with the United States. And there's no doubt that our 2nd Congress will reiterate that position.

[Text] People's Republic of the Congo

Near the lake known as Saturn's Ring, on a plateau covering 6000 square kilometers, Cuban technicians are helping to develop the dairy industry of the People's Republic of the Congo.

The joint project dates back to the time when late President Marien Ngouabi, accompanied by Fidel, visited the cattle-raising project in Matanzas, east of Havana.

The first step in the Cuban-Congolese project was to ship 90 holstein heifers and five holstein breeding bulls, along with agricultural machinery and grass seed. In view of the successful results obtained, in 1979 a shipment of Santa Gertrudis, jersey, zebu and Brown Swiss, was sent to the Congo. The results in crossings, adaptation to climate and pasture growing have been excellent.

Pictured is Sercido Rangel Capote, head of the team of Cuban livestock experts, that has been working in the Congo for 14 months contributing to the development of beef- and milk-producing cattle.

Another example of Cuban-Congolese cooperation was the installation of a Sandino-type prefabricated sections plant donated by Cuba, whose production capacity will make possible the construction of 500 houses a year. Cuban specialists were also sent to train the Congolese, in running the plant and in house construction. the first apartment houses, like the ones in the photo, started going up in September 1979.

Nicaragua

● WHEN THE Sandinista Revolution triumphed after long years of heroic struggle against the Somoza dynasty, 60 percent of the three million inhabitants of Nicaragua didn't know how to read or write.

One of the first steps taken by the victorious Revolution was to undertake a nationwide literacy campaign with the ambitious goal of wiping out illiteracy within a year.

As soon as the news of the campaign got around in Cuba, a call for experienced volunteer teachers was made and 25 500 teachers offered to go help our Nicaraguan brothers and sisters.

In the first stage of the literacy campaign, 1200 young Cuban teachers were sent to Nicaragua.

In September, in the second and last stage of the campaign, another 2000 teachers will be sent to the sister nation, where they will work in the most remote areas of a country covering 127 000 square kilometers to contribute to the noble goal of declaring Nicaragua the second country free of illiteracy in Latin America.

The internationalist aid given by Cuba to Nicaragua also covers the field of medicine: 250 Cuban doctors and health personnel have been working in Nicaragua for several months. The photo shows Cuban doctor Nilda Véliz, aided by a Cuban nurse and a Nicaraguan nurse, conducting an operation in the hospital at Ocotal, near the border with Honduras.

Ethiopia

● CUBAN MEDICAL collaboration with Ethiopia has been in effect without interruption for three years. It began in July 1977 with a team of 32 doctors, nurses and technicians and has grown to a veritable army of 300 men and women dedicated to improving the health of the Ethiopian people.

The first Cuban medical team worked in the regions of Gondar, in the northwestern part of the country, and in Sidamo, in the south.

In those days the Ethiopian people had just overthrown the feudal regime and were taking the first, difficult steps in a people's revolution. Conditions in general were miserable, particularly in the field of public health, and were aggravated by the advance of the invading forces from Somalia, which were finally repulsed in 1978.

According to data furnished by the World Health Organization in 1976, the results of feudal domination were as follows:

— Ninety-eight percent of the population (estimated at 30 million) consumed water obtained from unhealthy sources, with the inevitable results of parasitic illnesses.

— Seventy-five percent of the territory was invaded by malaria.

— Almost five percent of the population was affected by tuberculosis and about one percent were the victims of leprosy.

— Five percent of the children under seven were carriers of yellow fever.

— Over 60 percent of the children between one and three were malnourished.

— More than 40 percent of the population had to make long trips in order to reach the nearest medical center, and only 15 percent went to a doctor once a year.

— In 1976 Ethiopia, a country with a land area of 1 225 000 square kilometers, had only 84 hospitals, with a total of 8000 beds. About 45 percent of these hospitals were located in the cities of Addis Ababa, Asmara and Harar.

— There were only 304 doctors in the entire country, and 204 of them practiced in the above mentioned cities. There was one doctor per every 79 000 inhabitants.

This was the dismal picture, reflecting the public health conditions in Ethiopia in particular and in Africa in general, that faced the Cuban medical teams that arrived in Addis Ababa in July 1977.

At present, some 300 Cubans in the medical field, distributed into 27 teams, are working in 12 of the 14 provinces in Ethiopia.

Five Cuban doctors have been conducting classes at the Medical School of the University of Addis Ababa since the beginning of this year.

The Cuban medical team does not limit its work to treating patients, but also extends its efforts to the training of local medical personnel.

In line with these efforts, the Cuban team achieved something that had no precedent in the history of the country: the holding of the 1st Scientific Seminar and the establishment of the Scientific Board.

In the Seminar, a total of 66 papers were submitted, dealing with pediatrics, clinical lab work, general medicine, gynecology and obstetrics, nursing, surgery, reconstructive surgery and the treatment of burns.

The papers were based on the Cuban doctors' experiences in Ethiopia and contained a series of recommendations regarding the development of public health in Ethiopia.

Algeria

Housing was given priority at the last plenary meeting of the National Liberation Front Party, held in December 1979.

Minister Aouchiche, who visited Cuba last year, was interested in securing Cuban cooperation in the field of housing.

For the past several months, a team of Cuban engineers and technicians have been working on a project to build 1000 dwellings in the town of Biskra, in southern Algeria, on the edge of the Sahara.

The bilateral relations of cooperation between Cuba and Algeria have been increasing since the establishment in 1979 of the joint intergovernmental committee on economic, scientific and technical cooperation.

Sahara Desert

Cuban doctors are carrying out an internationalist mission in Tondouf Algeria, some 30 kilometers from the border of Morocco and Western Sahara. There's practically no vegetation to speak of, and while in summer the temperature reaches as high as 50 degrees Centigrade in the shade, in winter it drops to almost zero.

Traveling this part of the desert, where the Saharan refugee camps are located, is quite an experience. It involved a four-hour trip by air and there's always the possibility that a strong sirocco wind may make landing impossible.

Some 105,000 Saharan refugees distributed into dairas (communities), where the Arab dialect hassania is spoken, have become familiar with the presence of Cuban medical brigades.

The photo shows Cuban surgeon Alberto Gonzalez Polanco (with dark hat, glasses and beard) with the medical brigade he headed for one year. The average age of the members of the brigade is 29 and they are from Cuba's eastern provinces. This brigade, which returned to Cuba recently after having fulfilled its internationalist mission, has already been replaced by a new one.

SIGNIFICANCE OF REAGAN, SEAGA VICTORIES DISCUSSED

Reagan's Latin American Views

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 8 Nov 80 Sec D p 8

[Editorial: "Reagan's Ambiguous Statements"]

[Text] Just the day before yesterday, in his first press conference, the president-elect of the United States made statements in which he described along general lines the policy that he would pursue with respect to Latin America. Among some sectors of the hemisphere, which are allergic to the odor exuded by the term "intervention," they aroused misgivings and frightening suspicions.

Mr Ronald Reagan said: "The United States cannot turn its back on some countries which do not completely adhere to the American concept of human rights, while at the same time offering its friendship to others whose status in this respect is equally wanting."

It should not be found surprising that some nations of the continent have already begun to probe the hidden meaning behind these ambiguous statements and are starting to ask for some kind of explanation of these equivocal notions.

To what countries is the president-elect of the United States referring? Cuba? Nicaragua, or the Panama of the Canal and of Torrijos?

No less unprecise is the wording in which the new American president remarks that his human rights policy "will be based on the realities of international diplomacy."

On "international diplomacy," not, as it should be, on international public law.

These statements are elusive and evasive, but they open the door to suspicions that have evoked heated reaction, such as that of Panama and Mexico which, in bewilderment, have even threatened that, if they should be attacked, even if verbally, they will make America "another Vietnam."

Wasn't that the dream of Che Guevara? Mr Reagan, adjust and purify your language, and lend it exact profiles and shapes, so as to prevent unpleasantness and antipathy, and to avoid the resumption here in America of a kind of cold war.

Three Incumbents Lose

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 11 Nov 80 pp 9, 10

[Article by Salvador Jorge Blanco: "Three Reelection Setbacks"]

[Text] There have been three reelection setbacks in three different countries recently. In fact, the rulers of Jamaica, Puerto Rico and the United States were defeated in elections won by the opposition candidates. Although the reasons for those three incidents have the most varied origins, there is, nevertheless, the coincidence that they are due to a similar electoral conduct on the part of the peoples of the aforementioned countries.

Although reelection is not banned in any of those countries, and it has been normal for the rulers to be reelected, especially in the United States and Puerto Rico, the historical conditions have varied and, consequently, the internal dynamics of our societies demand more than at other times, and wear out parties and rulers in their constitutional terms, making alternation inevitable.

We are living in times when the requirements of our peoples (in both the highly developed and the underdeveloped countries) exceed the potential of the nations to meet them completely. The former will not accept a diminishment of their prosperity, as in the case of the United States, and the latter aspire to emerge rapidly from the pit of age-old poverty in which they have lived, as in the case of Jamaica and Puerto Rico.

These changes which have recently occurred in those countries are combined with the crises in values affecting those societies, as unavoidable ingredients. Since there are no worthwhile, truly authentic alternatives, the people do not have a broad human roster to choose from, but rather are forced to make a choice from among the sampling of a "mediocracy," a term that I have taken from the work of Jose Ingenieros, "The Mediocre Man."

Under those circumstances, the people do not find what they desire in the changes that they themselves promote with their votes in the elections either. They exercise their suffrage, as an obligation, but they do not accrue, with that right, the complete fulfillment of what they are seeking in the political, economic, social and cultural realms. In this historic apathy, societies experience serious upheaval and even revolutionary processes. Just as in physics, the water in the societies subjected to certain temperatures comes to the boiling point, and then the changes are abrupt.

Luckily, the advanced democratic systems, such as that in the United States, withstand all tests, and the nation itself is renewed with its own resources, making it possible for the institutions not to have undergone retrogressions since its 200-year-old independence. In Puerto Rico and Jamaica, although they lack the American political tradition, it cannot therefore be said that, internally, they have not had or do not have a democratic system capable of withstanding the harshest adversities.

In those countries, reelection is in a process of decline.

Despite its political backwardness, in our country, where it has not yet been possible to establish a constitutional ban on reelection, there is also a spirit among the people to reject ostensibly obvious reelection. The results of the past, both distant and recent, from the traumas that have been inherited, have been really encouraging. Nevertheless, there are disturbing signs that, owing to our meager historical development and despite the progress that has been made, another reelectionist process may be hatching, and the country could be subjected to mere institutional frustration.

Therefore, because, in countries with a tradition of continuing with office-holders, such as the United States and Puerto Rico, where the rulers serve as least two terms, the societies are not tolerating more than 4 years of a constitutional term, what would happen in our country, with more serious and pressing problems?

From now on, reelection in our country cannot be merely a source of serious conflicts, the dimensions of which are immeasurable, but will be confronted by the Dominican people with determination and firmness.

PRD, UPA LEADERS ANALYZE REAGAN ELECTION VICTORY

Pena Gomez Comments

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 8 Nov 80 pp 16b-16C

[Speech by Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez, secretary general of the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD), as published in its official organ TRIBUNA DEMOCRATICA]

[Text] Comrades:

The elections in the United States are over. As expected, Governor Ronald Reagan is the Americans' president-elect today and for the next 4 years will be the most influential leader in the world.

The Republican Party won control of the Senate for the first time in 25 years and made significant gains in the House of Representatives, picking up 33 new seats.

Distinguished figures who developed into leaders of American liberalism because of their consistent efforts in their country's best interests and their devotion to progress and peace, were swept away by the overwhelming conservative tide.

Men of the stature of Senators Frank Church, George McGovern and Birch Bayh were easily defeated by representatives of the conservative wing of the Republican Party.

We are witnessing a stunning turn to the right by U.S. society, a turn that includes, in addition to traditional Republican voters, segments of society that in recent decades formed the broad coalition of the Democratic Party, such as industrial workers, racial minorities like blacks, Jews, Hispanics and the Irish and religious groups such as Catholics.

As a number of analysts have pointed out, the United States has been jolted by an earthquake whose aftershocks will be felt over the next 4 years.

Ronald Reagan has accomplished the unparalleled feat of becoming the oldest candidate to win the office, and he succeeded after three failed attempts, which shows that Ronald Reagan is a man of great patience and perseverance, two indispensable virtues for any politician aspiring to don the cloak of success.

The new president-elect of the United States has also broken another tradition that prevailed until the election before last, whereby the American people have chosen middle-of-the-road candidates and rejected those on the far ends of the political spectrum.

Thus, George McGovern was crushed by the prudent conservative Richard Nixon, whose past extremist stands had been moderated by his exercise of power. The American people followed the same tradition when Lyndon Johnson, another moderate conservative, overwhelmed ultraconservative Senator Barry Goldwater.

The trend was halted at this year's election, as the man who held more moderate ideas, President Carter, was defeated by the man advocating more conservative stands.

When President Nixon beat George McGovern, it was a candidate, not a party, that went down to defeat. Now, however, we are looking at a different case, because both the presidential candidate and his party have been bested.

Political pundits and analysts will be using vast amounts of ink for many years in trying to explain this unexpected turnabout by the American people, and explanations will always be hard to come by.

I have my own ideas about what happened in the United States and I am going to present them, along with the position of the Dominican Revolutionary Party, a position that I am authorized to voice because the party's bylaws make me its foreign policy spokesman.

The American people voted for Ronald Reagan as president for several reasons.

The first has to do with the loss of prestige and power by the great power to our north.

The United States has suffered repeated humiliations. A small, poor nation, Vietnam, kept its previously invincible armies at bay and forced it to sit down at the bargaining table and ultimately to abandon what used to be the territory of the Republic of South Vietnam. This was the first time in American history that the stars and stripes returned home in defeat.

This negative experience was followed by acts of defiance and humiliations, acts of defiance when soldiers from enemy nations invaded the territories of other states, as with the Soviet invasions of Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan, and humilitations such as the taking of the hostages in Iran, a brash move by a revolution aimed at intensifying national pride and the thirst for vengeance of a ruling class that claims to act in the name of religion.

President Richard Nixon, who was elected with one of the largest majorities in his country's history, and his vice president, Spiro Agnew, both had to resign when it became obvious that they would be charged with common and political crimes in the performance of their duties, thus plunging the nation into a deep moral crisis.

All of these developments, combined with others that were taking place daily on the international scene, gradually weakened the might of the United States, while another superpower, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, emerged as a dangerous political and military rival.

It was precisely the ascent of the Soviet Union to the rank of superpower and the fact that in the name of revolution it could undertake military intervention, as the United States used to do, without any policeman in the world to stop it, made the American people more aware of their nation's obvious decline.

This decline in military power combined with the world economic crisis of the capitalist system to make more vulnerable a nation that for many years has been the land of promise for all persecuted people, for everyone without a job and for citizens from all nations who dreamed of one day rising up from poverty when they had the good fortune to find shelter on America's rich soil.

In contrast to the full employment during the last world war and after the Korean War, the United States today has some eight million people out of work, as well mounting inflation that has considerably eroded the U.S. dollar's buying power.

The dollar, the almighty god that could open up all doors, had to be devalued during President Nixon's administration and has continued to be buffeted by the currencies of the defeated powers of Asia and Western Europe, to the extreme that during the periodic financial crises that have jolted its stability, American tourists have suffered the humiliation of having their proud currency rejected in the capital cities of Western Europe.

As the world changed, so did the United States' political view, which evolved from the harsh days of McCarthyism's primitive anticommunism to a position of respect for and defense of peaceful coexistence and detente. Thus, the People's Republic of China under Mao Tse Tung's tutelage, which used to be considered the worst of enemies, was recognized as a new friend and potential ally, by virtue of the notion that your enemy's enemy is your friend. And so Taiwan, America's number one ally in the Far East, was cast out, and its seat on the UN Security Council was taken by the communist People's Republic of China.

These major developments took place during the administration of President Nixon, who abandoned his past extremist stands and showed himself to be a man of great flexibility who was able to grasp the complex problems of his time and tackle them with extraordinary skill.

Therefore, when the time comes to make a list of the great presidents that the United States has had in foreign policy matters, Latin America aside, Richard Nixon will have to be included.

The Soviet Union acknowledged President Nixon's skills before me when it gave him more space in the Russian Encyclopedia than former Prime Minister Nikita Khrushchev or when during the election campaign against George McGovern it granted him the privilege of addressing the peoples of the United States and the Soviet Union via television, a move that clearly indicated his hosts' preferences.

When Jimmy Carter took office as president, he proclaimed a more hard-line policy towards the Soviet Union. His first act as president was a public letter of support to Soviet dissident Sakharov. Jimmy Carter was a decent man and a pacifist, however, and even though he moved against the Soviets by ordering a boycott of the Olympics and banning grain sales to Russia, he did not use military force to counter the armed venture into Afghanistan. Had he done so, President Carter would have endangered world peace, but this show of prudence was construed as weakness by broad segments of his people.

Some worried citizens considered it another weakness on President Carter's part that he returned the Canal Zone to the country it used to belong to and signed the Torrijos-Carter treaties handing back Panama its canal. Both moves were harshly assailed by conservatives in the United States, who regarded them as a capitulation and a cowardly surrender. Thus, the man who proposed the Panama Canal treaties was not the only one defeated at this election; the senators who backed them the most, such as the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Frank Church, also went down to defeat.

The hostage crisis was the last incident in this string of developments regarded as running counter to American supremacy. A fanatic prophet full of hatred for the great nation to the north and wanting to make it pay dearly for its support of the deposed shah, created the proper atmosphere for Iranian militants to attack the American Embassy and seize the diplomats there, who are still being held hostage today.

In the old days of imperialism, Iran would have been invaded or blockaded, but after essaying a clumsy rescue operation that ended in a mysterious failure, Carter was forced to renounce the use of military force.

By renouncing military force, Jimmy Carter placed himself in the hands of the aya-tollah and yielded to his will. This mistake probably had a great deal to do with sealing his crushing defeat.

There are other reasons involved in the alleged loss of American power, because whereas the United States used to be energy self-sufficient, today it is dependent on energy imports and subject to the perils of another boycot by the oil producing countries. The United States is Israel's natural ally, but even so it has had to temporize with the moderate Arab nations and strike a dangerous balance between its Arab friends that supply oil and its allies. Peace with Egypt was reached at the cost of the occupied territories, and the United States often, and against its will, had to support UN actions that ran counter to Israeli decisions, such as the one declaring Jerusalem Israel's capital, much to the displeasure of American Jews. It was for this reason that a liberal state like New York, where the Jews exert decisive influence, voted overwhelmingly for the conservative wing of the Republican Party; even the respected Jacob Javits, the venerable liberal Republican, was defeated.

Some 90 percent of American blacks voted for Jimmy Carter, but their expectations were frustrated, and large number of black voters stayed away from the polls. Although they made major gains under the Carter administration, it is also true that they staged the most violent racial disturbances in the United States since 1968 when the city of Washington was ablaze after the assassination of Martin Luther King.

The contemporary world's major economic problems rapidly erode the prestige of governments. In the midst of today's world economic crisis it is very hard for a party to win two elections in a row.

Given the powerlessness into which the capitalist world's crisis is plunging nations, their hope is that the proponents of extremist solutions can bring back the bygone days of power and glory.

The identical feeling that now prevails in American society led Canada to give conservative Prime Minister Clark a landslide victory over Pierre Trudeau, but just months later the disenchanted nation had to get rid of its inexperienced leader and once again entrust its destiny to the routed Trudeau.

In a statement that LISTIN DIARIO published yesterday, President Carter clearly revealed the reasons for his defeat when he said: "It was not personal dislike of me. It was simply frustration, the natural tendency to vote against the people in power."

It was that same tendency that led the people of Jamaica to vote against Michael Manley, because he had been in power for 8 years, and that same tendency that led the Puerto Rican people to vote against Romero Barcelo, because although he might wind up winning by a narrow margin, it has been clearly established that he is not backed by the majority of the Puerto Rican people in his bid to make it a U.S. state, since the combined votes of the Independence and People's parties constitute a clear majority against statehood. And as I said earlier, it was this same tendency that led Canada to vote against Pierre Trudeau.

The reelection of a president is not that easy anymore in a country with major problems such as the United States, because an incumbent holds no secrets for his people and does not raise fresh hopes, whereas candidates who have not held the job belong to the realm of the unknown and prompt great expectations.

It is not by chance that there were landslide victories in both Jamaica and the United States, because both nations are awash in deep crises, the one in a moral and political crisis, that of the hostages, and the other in an economic crisis, because Jamaica is a nation in which an egg costs 20 cents, soap is unavailable, a kilo of meat costs $5, rice is rationed and display windows and grocery stores are empty.

Jimmy Carter's defeat has prompted a wide range of sentiments. Throughout Latin America the political and military right wing has hailed his defeat because he was regarded as an enemy of dictatorships and his departure will theoretically give them a better chance to impose their views on their peoples.

There were two sectors in our country that applauded Ronald Reagan's victory. In the first place there is the traditional right wing, which considers him a natural ally; hence, there are local political conservatives who have proclaimed themselves supporters of the Republican Party, after his victory of course.

Reformists, PQD [Democratic Quisqueyan Party] members, MIDA [Antireelection Democratic Integration Movement] members, rightist business leaders and Dr Balaguer's former military commanders (the latter with more justifiable reasons) have hailed President Carter's defeat. But strangely enough, in a very odd coincidence, there are sectors that we could place in the arena of political liberalism and that favor change which consider that Ronald Reagan's victory will help them implement their inexplicable political plans.

Thus, there is common ground among alleged liberals and conservatives in accepting President Carter's defeat and Ronald Reagan's victory as a beneficial development.

Someone has to be wrong, because the truth is not to be found in two places at the same time. This mystery will be unraveled only with time, however.

I feel that if President Reagan implements the policy that he announced during the first few months of his campaign, his term of office could jeopardize democracy in Latin America. If, on the other hand, he proceeds with the prudence that he showed during the debate or pursues the moderate and prudent line of the great Republican presidents, then, his disturbing words notwithstanding, Ronald Reagan will become a leader respected throughout the world.

I am confident that the president-elect will act in the tradition of the great Republicans, outstanding among whom are Abraham Lincoln and President Eisenhower.

Inasmuch as the Revolutionary Party has had excellent relations with liberal factions of the Democratic Party for years, some political groups are beginning to use Jimmy Carter's defeat against the Revolutionary Party. I would tell those who feel this way that the Revolutionary Party is a democratic organization that is the ally of governments and parties in the most influential and democratic nations of Western Europe, as well as an ally of all American governments, whether they are Democratic or Republican, that respect the Dominican people's devotion to democracy. Let no one think that he can unleash the hostility of the United States against us, because our national and international prestige is bolstered by the prestige of the Socialist International, a worldwide force made up of powerful parties from nations that are allies of the United States. And I would remind these dreamers and fishers in troubled waters that Reagan himself said yesterday that he would chart his foreign policy in consultation with the country's European allies. And it so happens that America's European allies are allies of the Dominican Revolutionary Party.

The PRD is a party with a great many ties in the United States because for years we have cultivated the friendship of distinguished figures there.

I would like to announce that this weekend I will be traveling to Madrid to attend the Congress of the Socialist International, and I will then visit Washington, along with a committee made up of the highest-ranking leaders of the government party in Mexico and former President Carlos Andres Perez, to present the case of Uruguayan democrats at the Organization of American States.

The Revolutionary Party and the Socialist International Committee for Latin America and the Caribbean, both under my direction, will closely monitor political developments in the United States, and at the same time we reaffirm our willingness to maintain the best of relations with the nation under President Ronald Reagan's administration.

The following are the two telegrams that I sent on behalf of my party to President Jimmy Carter and President-Elect Ronald Reagan:

Mr Ronald Reagan, President-Elect of the United States,

On behalf of the Dominican Revolutionary Party, I congratulate you on your splendid victory and I wish you complete success in your administration.

Sincerely,
Jose Francisco Pena Gomez, Secretary General

Mr Jimmy Carter, President of the United States of America,

The Dominican Revolutionary Party would like to express to you its deep gratitude for your policy of respect and consideration for our country, for your magnificent contributions to the cause of democracy and for your vigorous defense of human rights in Latin America.

Sincerely,
Jose Francisco Pena Gomez, Secretary General

The U.S. elections are over. A pause begins in world politics, because the allies and enemies of the United States will have to wait for the new president to chart the guidelines of his new administration's foreign policy, while an anxious nation waits for the new statesman to go about solving its major economic problems.

The PRD, which has always proclaimed itself a friend of the people of the United States, wishes President Reagan success, with the hope that success is achieved within a climate of respect for democracy and for the principle of the self-determination of peoples.

[Article by Franklin J. Franco, university professor and president of the leftist Anti-Imperialist Union (UPA): "Ronald Reagan's Victory and the Future of the Dominican Republic"]

[Text] I. Although the Republican candidate's victory in the presidential election in the most powerful nation in the so-called Western World prompted wideranging commentary and differing interpretations, on the whole we can observe a curious agreement regarding its repercussions on national life: almost all political leaders in our country admitted that the surprising victory would bring no substantial changes in the political situation of Dominican society.

And there is this curious but important detail: this consensus comprised men with widely differing ideological views, leftists and rightists.

It is curious and important because until now I had thought that the thinking of those who defend right-wing interests and the thinking of those who say they defend the interests of the masses were at odds and, therefore, in analyzing any momentous political development, their conclusions had to be different since they were working with different logical approaches.

But that was not the case this time, and they agreed that "everything will still be the same after Reagan's victory."

A number of left-wing leaders have argued in different ways that things will remain the same because the two men represent the "interests of the big imperial consortiums," not the interests of the American people.

The right-wingers did not, of course, include this detail in their statements and attributed the lack of change to the advantageous and natural institutional "continuity" of American politics, a factor that is implicit in the statements of the former, albeit with a different assessment.

I confess that this consensus strongly caught my attention. Moreover, when questioned about the same development by a local paper that same day, I voiced completely different views.

I said on that occasion: "His victory will have a serious negative repercussion on Latin America in the immediate future. The fascist ultra-right will feel further encouraged, and our peoples will witness terribly painful and regrettable developments."

"When his victory is seen in perspective, however, I take it optimistically, because I feel that the progress of peoples is unstoppable."

In this article I will try to explain the grounds for my statements, which are somewhat different from those of some Dominican right-wing and left-wing leaders.

II. "The Dominican Republic is a country subject to the policies of American imperialism," generally assert those of us in our country who stand beside our people (or say we do) in their struggle to gain national independence and sovereignty.

Therefore, since that is what we are and inasmuch as "Carter and Reagan represent imperialist interests, the election of one or the other does not at all change our country's dependent or subjugated status vis-a-vis American imperialism," we generally conclude.

Viewed simplistically, such judgments are absolutely correct. Analyzed in terms of their real complexity, however, they are not.

It would seem to be a contradiction, my readers will say, to assert that a judgment can be correct and incorrect at the same time, but that is the case.

It would seem a contradiction, they will think, because according to the most elementary logic, a judgment, or a group of judgments, cannot be correct and incorrect, true and untrue at the same time.

This conclusion is true, but only on the simplistic level of what is pro forma and apparent, because in light of the profound complexity of any phenomenon, it is incorrect.

This is precisely because in analyzing a phenomenon we often stray from the thorny path of complexity and fall easily on to the paved path of simplicity, which explains why many of our judgments are misguided or in error.

When we say: "The republic is a country subject to the policies of American imperialism" and add that "since that is what we are and inasmuch as Carter and Reagan both represent imperialist interests, the election of one or the other candidate does not at all change our nation's current dependent or subjugated status," we are stating a half-truth and taking the simple path, which leads to mistakes, while disdaining the complex path, which leads to accurate judgments.

I will now begin to explain myself. It is absolutely true that "the Dominican Republic is a country subject to American imperialism." That is true, very true.

But it is a serious mistake, leading to other no less regrettable mistakes, to think that what we call "imperialism" is a homogeneous force that always moves along a straight line in one direction and to fail to realize that this imperialism is made up of opposing forces (different monopolies) whose internal struggles are what charts the course of American policy, both foreign and domestic.

If imperialism, in the broadest sense of the word, is made up of monopolies, then differences must naturally exist within it, differences that at times have emerged as real confrontations, World War II, for example.

I could mention countless minor instances stemming from the rivalries among monopolistic groups of various nationalities in their battle for world markets.

Someone might argue that such rivalries develop only among the monopolistic groups of different nationalities, not among the monopolies of a single nation, as in the case of the monopolies that make up "the economic base of American imperialism."

This is another simplistic assertion, because above all it overlooks that "monopolies stemming from unfettered competition do not eliminate it; rather, they exist above and beside it, thus prompting contradictions and particularly keen and blunt lines of reasoning."

In recent years, American imperialism has clearly demonstrated that such inter-monopolistic competition exists within it, inasmuch as it has triggered political incidents that we at times forget about or fail to analyze in their real dimension, such as, for example, the assassination of John F. Kennedy.

Competition and the struggle among monopolies are facts, although they are not clearly revealed most of the time. Hence, it is important to penetrate the darkness of this world in constant struggle, to understand some of the phenomena that take place in American society and that necessarily have repercussions throughout the world.

III. Within the United States' institutional framework, the competition that I have spoken of is normally carried on in the form of electoral contests.

Control over the incredibly powerful U.S. Government machinery is of paramount and at times decisive importance for the stability and the more or less accelerated development of all the monopolies that make up "American imperialism," which see in this control the guarantees for their economic expansion and supremacy throughout the capitalist world.

We can readily see that U.S. elections are veritable intermonopoly battles in which the groups that enjoy power (shared, at times, through congressional representation) and the ones that are out of power cross swords.

Thus, we find the institutional political expression of these intermonopoly struggles in the various elections held there, which in recent years have focused on the contests between the Democratic and Republican parties.

I must clarify at this point that it would be illusory to try and view these electoral contests as definitive confrontations between Democratic and Republican monopoly groups.

Just as monopolies have no homeland, they have no political banners either, and their support of one party or another in U.S. elections ultimately hinges on many circumstances but above all the specific type of production activities they comprise, as well as the domestic and foreign policy leanings of each of the two parties.

The only banner that monopolies unfurl is the banner of "profits," and the political domination of the government machinery in the world's number one monopoly state is the biggest and primary guarantee that this banner will stream on high.

Let's look at an example. In 1969 the U.S. Government opened bids for the manufacture of M-16 rifles at the request of the military.

Colt Industries put in a bid of $104 a rifle. Maremont Corporation placed a bid of $150 a rifle. The military, however, awarded the contract for the manufacture of 480,000 rifles to General Motors, which set its production price at $233 a unit (NEW YORK TIMES, 5 June 1969).

Guess who was in power, and whom General Motors, Colt and Maremont had supported in the previous elections, and you will have the explanation of this interesting little contract.

IV. I have established the premise that a dirty and permanent intermonopoly struggle is going on inside American imperialism and that this struggle generally manifests itself in elections, although at times it also reveals itself in the form of political assassinations (even of American presidents) and public scandals such as Watergate.

If this premise is true, then this struggle, this confrontation was present in the recent elections staged in the United States.

I support this view and therefore disagree with those who are asserting that everything will be the same.

I have said more, though. I have contended that Reagan's election "ushers in one of the most difficult eras in the history of the Americas and the world."

My differences with the consensus in assessing this development are truly fundamental, which I will now try to explain.

The last American election was held at a time when the society was going through one of its worst crises.

This time, however, it is not just an economic crisis, like the one that triggered the 1929 crash; it is, rather, an all-embracing crisis involving its internal economic structure, its world hegemony, its political system and its moral fabric.

What has been going on is a global breakdown that has been reflected in episodes such the Bay of Pigs fiasco, the assassination of Kennedy, the emergence of the hippies, the invasion of the Dominican Republic in 1965, the defeat in Vietnam, Watergate and the resulting assumption of the presidency by former football player Gerald Ford, the independence of the oil producing nations (OPEC) and the social explosion that has brought about the triumph of the Sandinist Front in Nicaragua, and it will not stop with the humiliation of the hostages in Iran, much less with the election of Reagan the actor as president of the United States.

No one disputes the economic side of the crisis in the United States, jolted as it as by unemployment of close to 11 million workers, according to official estimates, while industrial activity is declining in basic sectors such as motor vehicles, which has laid off more than 300,000 workers over the last 12 months alone; but above all there is the collapse of the mighty dollar as an international currency and the widespread inflation that has enormously lessened the buying power of the overwhelming majority of the country's people, thus ending once and for all the good old days when a high percentage of the population was able to enjoy the affluence that the country experienced until a few years ago.

This is a crisis that has proclaimed that the boom years are gone and will never return.

Everyone has acknowledged that this all-embracing crisis and its economic facet was the determining factor in the fall of the Carter the "humanist" and the rise of Reagan the hawk.

Three or four days before the balloting in the United States, a UPI cable reported that 200 of the biggest consortiums in the country had decided to support Reagan.

Three days after the vote, the same agency reported that there had been an unusual rise in the price of stock in the main American and overseas weapons manufacturing companies.

This latest piece of news, which is closely tied to the decision by the "200 largest," enables us to explain not only the reason for Reagan's triumph but also its future consequences.

Reagan's victory meant the victory of the major American monopolies involved in the war industry, or to put it as broadly as European analysts, the victory of the U.S. military-industrial complex and the crushing of the industrial and financial monopoly sector involved in civilian output, as well as the crushing of a quite large group of medium-size businesses and businessmen (albeit millionaires too) that were the spiritual and ideological force that promoted the Democratic Party's hypocritical foreign policy.

True, the influence of the U.S. military-industrial complex on the American government was undoubtedly enormous even before. It could be seen in every state, in every city, in the media and in each agency of the Federal Government; it made itself felt, in short, in every political decision by the U.S. Government. It was, so to speak, a "state within a state."

But even so, it had its limitations, dictated by the presence of other social and economic forces that occupied similar lofty positions in America's motley bureaucratic political structure and that acted as an obstacle to the hawkish, interventionist plans of the Pentagon's warmongering circles.

This is why the Pentagon often sang one tune in foreign policy while the State Department sang another quite different one.

All of this has been demolished by Reagan's landslide victory, which has placed the U.S. Congress itself [sic] in the control of the president-elect's party for the first time in many years.

U.S. policy, both foreign and domestic, will not be the same. And I must add that it will soon inject negative elements that are initially painful for our people but that in the long run will all become positive elements that will hasten the struggle in Latin America and the world.

V. Just as I have asserted that "American imperialism is not a homogeneous force and that a fierce intermonopoly battle is going on inside it for control of the U.S. Government machinery," I should now add that we can similarly describe the "world imperialist system."

I will restate the premise in other terms: "The world imperialist system" is not a totally unified force; rather, and quite to the contrary, it contains marked differences, stemming from the laws of capitalist competition itself, which still apply to this system, though at another level and in a different way.

If to this I add that on account of its own crisis the United States is not the same predominant force charting the system's policy course as it was 10 years ago, we would have to agree that today much more so than before there are factors that suggest the possible development of deep-seated differences within imperialism that Reagan's election could well hasten.

This is mentioned even in the reports of the Trilateral Commission itself, a group set up by the monopolies of Europe, Japan and the United States to conduct the imperialist system's foreign policy and made up of the most capable leaders of the status quo. It contends in one of its latest documents that:

"The United States must still play a main role in running the international system, continue providing ultimate security for most of the industrialized countries and continue being the largest economy in the world, the country of origin of half of the world's direct investment overseas, the largest supplier of foodstuffs on international markets and the least dependent of all the major industrialized countries in terms of energy and raw materials.

"Nevertheless, both U.S. domestic policy, which inhibits it from bearing a disproportionate economic burden, and the fact that the other countries might not want to follow the course charted by it, rule out the same degree of American domination as existed in the recent past."

I have cited this quote from the Trilateral Commission for incredulous Dominican right-wingers in particular, because it was enough for me to note a number of present-day developments to realize that the United States is not what it was 10 years ago. For example, there is the flirting of major European countries with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO); the acquiescing silence of these same countries and Japan with regard to Khomeyni's "follies"; France's position on putting American missiles in Europe; and here in Latin America the position taken by German Social Democracy regarding the revolutionary Sandinist Liberation Front at the very time that the U.S. Government was trying to establish Somizism without Somoza in Nicaragua.

These are facts and they are more valuable than any document, although the Trilateral's is without doubt a key one.

Thus, there are differences, conflicts inside the "world imperialist system," and far from eventually being resolved, this situation will intensify even further as socialist forces, the forces of peace and the struggle of peoples move forward.

VI. "Latin America is a continent subject to the United States' desire for economic and political domination," we generally contend. This is also an erroneous assertion because it is a half-truth.

It is also a simplistic assertion because it does not take into account the complexity of economic and political life on our continent and overlooks the changes that have occurred since 1959, when the Cuban revolutionary process said no to U.S. domination and began forging new paths.

This assertion does not take into account that after Cuba a great deal of blood has been shed on streets and in mountains and that after this there came tiny Grenada, then Nicaragua and at just about the same time Surinam, a small country nestled on one side of the Amazon jungle that is also striving to forge its own destiny.

If the simple premise with which I began this section of my article had been completely true, none of these processes would have occurred or developed.

Therefore, the argument that "Latin America is a continent subject to the economic and political domination of the United States" is an assertion that has been outdated by developments themselves and that does not reflect the objective realities that we are experiencing, a rigid and static judgment that ultimately reaffirms only the intentions or desires of the imperialists themselves.

The correct judgment would be: "Latin America is a continent struggling against the United States' policy of subjugation and dominance."

Just a few months ago, in his closing speech to the World Congress of Economists Mexican President Lopez-Portillo said that "economics is a historical science that 'like Minerva's owl' takes flight when the shadows of night have fallen."

Economic science (economists, in other words) has been unable to predict a number of developments that are taking place on our continent and that help explain the liberation movements that I mentioned a moment ago, which began in 1959.

Among the other developments that economic science has not taken into account, I must point to the sharp growth of domestic bourgeoisies in major nations of our region. At the same time that this factor spurs the revolutionary process, it begins taking shape as a Sword of Damocles hanging over American imperialism's ongoing strategy of domination.

Certain incredulous people might say that I am exaggerating. I would answer them that the Sandinist forces could not have triumphed in Nicaragua had this development not taken place, which was manifested in the support for their struggle from Venezuela, Panama, Costa Rica and Mexico, which countered the desires of the country that, as I have asserted many times, acts as our continent's policeman.

Independently of the attitude of these Latin American bourgeoisies towards the aspirations of their own peoples, in other words, independently of the political model that these bourgeoisies have promoted in each country (which in the case of Argentine and Brazil borders on the fascist model), the confrontation between these bourgeoisies and U.S. imperialism is a fact that will continue to develop because this is another inevitable dictate of the contradictory laws that emerge from the system itself.

Not too many years ago, the United States of America, or rather the imperialist monopolies of America, helped overthrow the last liberal government in Brazil.

They imposed a thoroughly fascist government and by bringing in no fewer than 50 large multinationals began a process of feverishly exploiting the country's resources that has come to be called the "Brazilian miracle."

For a number of years Brazilian reactionaries allowed themselves to be led by the hand and observed the dictates of their guardians to the letter.

But not long ago, that same reactionary bourgeoisie, feeling that it was strong enough to walk by itself now, began to make itself felt and to express its own ambitions in economic and political actions. Thus, when the United States opposed the installation of nuclear reactors there, Brazil ignored its instructions, rejected the International Atomic Agreement (pending in the UN at the time) and signed a pact with Germany for the construction of atomic reactors and technology transfer.

And the Brazilian episode is repeated in the case of the Argentine bourgeoisie, which refused to follow Washington's dictates concerning the ban on grain sales to the USSR, which was ordered after the invasion of Afghanistan.

What we are seeing in Brazil and Argentina (martial law and all) we can also see in Colombia, whose trade with the socialist camp is increasing year after year, and in Venezuela, Panama, Costa Rica, Peru, etc. Above all, however, we see it in Mexico, whose revolution early this century was the first cry of the Latin American bourgeoisie against foreign domination and which is now focusing its efforts on defending its gas and oil. Over the last 24 months it has resisted every U.S. pressure to make it give in and hand over its major natural resources.

On 6 November a UPI cable from Mexico, signed by Juan O. Tamayo, a political official in this imperialist news agency, stated that: "The presidents of Mexico and Panama have energetically advised President-Elect Reagan to remain neutral in a region lashed by political violence, unless he is looking for a Vietnam-style war."

Lopez-Portillo pointed out categorically: "He should not intervene and he should respect the internal process of countries because they are grownup nations capable of governing themselves."

In order to correctly grasp the substance of these words, we must not forget that the Mexican Government supported the struggle of the Nicaraguan people, as it today supports the Salvadoran patriots who are battling the genocidal Military Junta that is bleeding the country to death; it thus opposes the U.S. view.

Viewed in the harsh reality of concrete economic and political facts, all of this means that the bourgeoisies in a number of Latin American countries (the largest ones, as a matter of fact) have now achieved a level of industrial development that precludes their doing business solely within their own borders; thus, they are preparing to break their shell and extend their influence into territories that have been occupied until now by American imperialist monopolies.

These bourgeoisies, which are even spurred on by geographic laws, are looking to the Caribbean and the Antilles as a step on the road to their much-needed expansion.

None other than this is implicit in the so-called "San Jose Agreement" signed by Mexico and Venezuela, which involves providing Central American and Caribbean countries with credit facilities for oil purchases, technical aid in developing petroleum resources and financial assistance.

It is, purely and simply, a silent declaration of war on the petroleum multinationals.

The confrontation between American imperialism and the industrial sectors of the bourgeoisie in Latin America has begun, albeit without much noise, and it could give an incalculable boost to the liberation struggle of peoples, if we grasp the true significance of the phenomenon.

It has begun and will develop further soon because Reagan's election, coming in the midst of the empire's most acute crisis, means above all that the United States will intensify its interventionist policy on our continent in a bid to heighten the economic exploitation of our countries, which is one the very few methods it has available to alleviate its economic disaster.

VII. This is a bird's eye view of the international economic and political context in which Ronald Reagan won last week's election in the United States.

To think, as people have said, that Reagan's victory will not entail changes in U.S. foreign policy and that, therefore, "everything will remain the same" in the countries that, like ours, make up its sphere of influence, is an extremely serious mistake in my humble judgment.

It is like saying that that endless series of contradictions emerging from the world capitalist system, which I have described briefly in their American, European and Latin American manifestations, will remain frozen or ossified forever.

I think the opposite. I maintain that his victory will have serious repercussions in many Latin American countries but that nevertheless, if I understand correctly the national and world political situation in general, we will then be able to make these negative elements positive.

I will now explain what I mean as far as the Dominican Republic is concerned:

I must first assert that Reagan's triumph comes at a time when the Dominican Republic too is in the midst of a deep economic crisis, partly as a result of the American crisis.

Ours is not as all-encompassing as the U.S. crisis and, moreover, has its specific causes. But even so it is still one of the most serious in our people's entire history.

This economic crisis, which it is useless to describe with numbers because it manifests itself hour after hour in our harsh daily life, in the already intolerable increase in the cost of living that has forced segments of society that did not even used to wear belts to tighten them, will, sooner than later, bring on a subsequent political crisis.

The political side of the crisis has not yet arrived, but we are getting wind of it in the split among PRD factions, although it has not yet reached the degree that it inevitably will.

It can also be glimpsed in the Reformist Party's setback and, above all, in the disillusionment that the working people and the middle class feel with right-wing political personnel.

A firm specializing in public opinion polls conducted a survey just a few weeks ago on the popularity and unpopularity of the various Dominican political groups. The study was ordered by the U.S. Embassy, and its results show that the Dominican left has more grass roots backing than the Reformist Party and the Dominican Revolutionary Party, the two main strongholds of the right wing and the Americans in Santo Domingo.

The survey confirmed something that we already knew, that is, that American imperialism and domestic reactionaries are being left without solid party backing to continue legitimizing their ongoing domination.

Will the right wing continue to become more unpopular, and, conversely, will the left wing continue to gain support among the people?

Undoubtedly yes, and this process will be spurred by the economic crisis itself, which is not being and will not be solved within the framework of this government, just as it was not during the previous Reformist administration.

Thus, we must broach Reagan's triumph in this context and ask ourselves: if the government party and the Reformist Party continue falling into disrepute, will the imperialists and the Dominican right wing wait idly by for a surprise defeat at the next elections in 1982?

Who in a country like ours, where the most naive person can be a bishop, could really believe such nonsense?

To think naively is to engage in wishful thinking. This is alright for poets but not for politicians.

At this point in the game, as the popular saying goes, the Dominican bourgeoisie and the Americans have to be examining the situation and seeking solutions conducive to their designs.

VIII. In the same press release that I drew up on the day that I was questioned about Reagan's victory, after saying that his election "ushers in one of the most difficult periods in the history of Latin America and the world," I added that

"seen in its true perspective, I take it optimistically because I feel that the progress of peoples is unstoppable and, above all, because his victory is going to enormously assist powerful social and political sectors on this continent that had harbored certain expectations about Carter and his human rights policy to take a clear stand on a change in American policy towards their countries."

I pointed out that "his victory paves new roads for nations that will bring sectors that used to be indifferent to the liberation of peoples into the anti-imperialist struggle."

As I was writing this, I was thinking about how his triumph, amid the generally disastrous times we are living in, brings a breakdown in the country's institutional order that much closer.

This possibility came to mind not just because of the chaotic economic situation we are in but also because the victorious candidate's entire economic and political program, in both its domestic and foreign facets, proposes to surmount the U.S. crisis by intensifying the exploitation of the masses by the major American consortiums.

Internally, in other words, as far as American society is concerned, the people of the United States will respond and respond quickly, but this does not interest us for the moment.

As far as the Dominican Republic and Latin America are concerned, Reagan's program means, purely and simply, that the monopolies, dissatisfied amid their crisis with the degree of exploitation as of now, want more profits to overcome their difficulties and that these additional earnings represent more dividends sent home and greater poverty and distress for our peoples.

However, when I wrote that "it will force new segments of society to take a stand," I was also thinking that this same intensification of imperialist domination is going to affect economic sectors both here and all over Latin America that were previously not affected and that as a matter of survival will have to join the struggle against the empire's domination whether they like it or not.

I am not thinking only about the Mexican, Venezuelan, Brazilian, etc bourgeoisies that have already begun grappling with imperialism; I am thinking, above all, about the small and intermediate industrial nations that like all our people are suffering amid the intolerable crisis that is upon us.

Here is a statistic for the incredulous: next year, 1981, the country will have practically no American dollars in the Central Bank to pay for the raw materials imports that are required to such a great extent for the distorted industrialization that they have imposed on us, or to pay for the scant categories of items that can still be imported under the foreign exchange system that our government has established.

Next year, in other words no more than 3, 4 or 6 months from now, all of our imports will have to be covered by our own national currency, even medicines.

You don't believe it? Well, take note: next year we will spend more than $680 million on dividend payments to foreign monopolies doing business here, as well as the interest and principal of our monstruous foreign debt, plus $500 to $600 million on imports of oil and derivatives, which surpasses the value of our exports by more than $100 million.

Last week the Dominican Association of Small Industrialists held a press conference to speak out against the way in which small and intermediate industrialists are being throttled not only by the current economic crisis but also by the very projects that they have purchased through the so-called FIDE [Investment Fund for Economic Development] and that are sponsored by the United States.

The overwhelming majority of these small and medium-sized companies, working with obsolete equipment geared to the so-called "substitution industry" and with increasingly expensive raw materials imported from the U.S. market, are practically without credit (because the bourgeoisie and the foreign monopolies have monopolized the use of savings in our country) and are on the verge of bankruptcy today.

What is in store for them after Reagan takes office and intensifies even further the policy of subjugating our country to extract bigger profits for the desperate U.S. monopolies?

How will our small and intermediate industrialists and our small and intermediate businessmen react to this situation?

Will they continue to think that they have to support governments and parties that have surrendered to outside domination, or will they begin thinking that we have to find a solution to this disastrous situation into which the big domestic oligarchs and the foreign monopolies have led us?

IX. Reagan's triumph prompted celebrations marked by shouts of joy and gleeful hand-rubbing among the Dominican right wing.

This was to be expected. The president-elect is their firm ally and, moreover, has roundly stated that his administration "will not discriminate against any government on human rights grounds" and that "U.S. foreign policy will be based on 'protecting its friends.'"

In short, the president-elect has implicitly invited the most stubbornly reactionary sectors in those Latin American countries in which representative democracy still shakily exists, to prepare for a takeover of power.

In our country we are already beginning to hear rumors, fueled by the economic crisis, that such a development could take place during the first few months of 1981.

Is this possible in the Dominican Republic? The answer is yes and no, a seemingly illogical reply, but it is not. Let's see why.

A breakdown of the institutional order in our country is possible if the imperialists and the domestic far right, after carefully assessing the consequences, decide that it is to their advantage to create a climate of full-fledged civil war that will inevitably force all left-wing groups to back an uprising. A breakdown is not possible if, taking the above into account, they lean towards trying a variety of prescriptions to maintain the status quo of poverty and exploitation.

If we accept that this administration has guaranteed their interests just like the most backward de facto regime, we can readily agree that a breakdown is not an immediate option and that it will take place only if a grass roots movement aimed expressly at the established order (or disorder) causes the government to totter, which is something that is not on the agenda of any democratic group.

We can see this clearly if we recall that none of the major strike movements in the country last year, two of which completely paralyzed the country, questioned the legitimacy of the current president's mandate; they all merely voiced economic and social grievances.

So then, without completely ruling out the coup option, the agenda calls for a continuation of the country's shaky institutional order and the completion of the term of office of Antonio Guzman, who will gradually turn his regime more and more to the right as a means of bringing about the reelection that his friends and followers badly want.

The possibilities of a coup could mount if there is a ground swell in American society against the antipeople's platform drawn up by Reagan and his party, which calls for further layoffs of workers, even among the country's bureaucratic ranks, or if there is any serious threat of a clash between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Since both could happen and since, moreover, Reagan himself could help trigger them, we must not completely rule out the coup option.

X. Predicting the future is a somewhat difficult task. But predicting what approach the Americans will take to consolidate a political situation that is totally in their favor (bearing in mind the current situation in its colony Puerto Rico, a country of "remarkable stability," which staged elections that in no way jeopardized its status and during which they damaged computers and voting machines to force through Republican-backed candidate Romero Barcelo's victory with the ballots of lunatics and policemen), predicting the specific tack that the imperialists might take, I repeat, is more than difficult.

In any case, politics has its specific laws, which can be deduced from certain realities, and in the case of the United States the laws indicated that it had been turning to the right politically for some time and that the advent of Reagan confirms the trend.

Therefore, they will try to impose right-wing regimes in Latin America, with or without coups.

Naturally, the imperialists think one thing, and the peoples think something quite different.

We can readily see, therefore, that confrontations between the Dominican oligarchy and imperialism, on the one hand, and the democratic and anti-imperialist sectors, on the other, are inevitable.

They are inevitable and they will intensify further as the election campaign draws near. They will become more acute as the left in our country develops more of a chance to form an electoral front that could legally jeopardize their interests and domination.

Another possible option that the right wing and imperialism have before resorting to a military coup d'etat, is the formation of a "right-wing front" that could offer better chances in the 1982 elections.

We must even not rule out the merger of some PRD "factions" with the Reformist Party, with the total blessing of some Social Christian groups.

I think that this is possible, not only because it is imperialism that takes command when the right wing shows itself incapable of coming up with solutions to the crisis by itself, but also because we know that a major PRD faction operates in timid cooperation with the Reformist Party.

To all this I must add that crises also bring together rightists, not just leftists.

Hence, a right-wing electoral front could be dictated as a matter of survival for the bourgeoisie, the landowners and the interests of imperialism, above all if the left manages to unite for the May 1982 showdown.

Along with an election fraud that would enable them to hand over power to the group that best guarantees their interests, this latter possibility is the soundest option that powerful domestic and foreign economic sectors currently have in this country.

As we can readily conclude from all that I have said so far, Reagan's election introduces considerations pointing to substantial changes in the overall outlook for imperialism's policy towards Latin America and the nations of the Third World. This in turn will prompt new regroupings of political forces everywhere, which, if understood, could be utilized to further the struggle of our peoples.

We must not forget, however, that Reagan's triumph brings the possibility of a military coup closer than ever.

PAPER ANALYZES U.S. ELECTION PROCESS

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 12, 13 Nov 80

[Article by Salvador Jorge Blanco: "Elections in the United States"].

[12 Nov 80, p 6]

[Text] I

Electoral processes in all countries are emotional in their various phases, ranging from the announcement of the candidates to the supreme moment of the national election, and including an internal primary phase in each party, which varies depending on the parties' own methods, with a strong inclination for learning the people's sentiments.

The United States of America, with long experience in the full exercise of universal suffrage, has accumulated a democratic existence that constitutes an example in representative democracy, wherein the vote exercised periodically and without interruption for 20 years has served as an effective control by the citizenry, from the municipality in its various forms, including the state and going as far as the federation, which is the sum total of the desire of an entire heterogeneous nation, emerging as a symbol of respect in the selection of all its authorities who embody the various state powers.

We have reached the final days of the election campaign. New York City is continuing its normal life. It is as if the electoral process were part of a civic routine that does not arouse great reaction among the populace. One does not see the traditional billboards for the candidates, but only a few stickers attached discreetly to commercial buildings and on buses, with the names of the national candidates.

The televised debate between the two leading candidates polarized the citizens' attention, just like the anxious expectation caused by a big boxing match broadcast. The verbal duel was followed as attentively as if the future destiny would be decided by it; because calculations or computations were made in favor of the candidate who achieved the best effects because of his aggressiveness and ease in speaking, his reactions and quick retort to the questions and the way in which he behaved in front of the television cameras. The newspapers are the first to give the percentages of those assessments, which unquestionably exert an influence on an electorate which is strongly affected by the results of the polls that appear daily, showing varying rises and declines in popularity among the citizens as a whole, whose collective consciousness is the object of constant scrutiny, in collective violation, beforehand, of the secrecy of the vote and freedom of suffrage. It was obvious from all those early calculations that the favorite was Mr Ronald Reagan, as was the final result. The entire atmosphere breathing in the news media led to putting him ahead of President Carter (although with not so much of a difference as later, in the actual results accrued). The expectations created in the case of the hostages turned against Carter, because there was an entire citizenry anxiously awaiting their release to convince itself of the virtues of a clearly unpopular regime, because it had been left unsatisfied and eager for security in various areas.

In that respect, the platform points bringing Reagan and Carter into confrontation ranged from defense to international policy, including internal issues of an economic and social type in the United States. These aspects, although ostensibly different, nevertheless coincided because of their close, indivisible bonds. During the course of the campaign, Reagan staunchly upheld the need for increasing military spending in the United States budget, as well as the conventional weapons of its armed forces. It is obvious that this electoral promise was quite the opposite of the Carter administrative policy, which had begun with a pledge to cut that military spending, and was put on the defensive to such an extent that it was forced to propose a $24 billion increase for next year. In our judgment, this was the basic issue in this matter of defense, which revolves around the United States' prestige in one way or another. In economic matters, Reagan's proposals for a 10 percent reduction in individual taxes during his first 3 years of administration put Carter on the defensive again, to such an extent that he made a similar pledge, limited to the year 1981, to produce savings of $27.6 billion in taxes for the taxpayer. At the same time, Reagan underscored the budget deficit, inflation and unemployment which had increased during the course of the Carter administration like festering sores threatening the American economy. In international policy, Carter based his campaign on the "war or peace" option which he and his opponent represented; because he claimed that during his administration no soldier had died on the battlefield, backing this with peaceful coexistence, the self-determination of peoples and the maintenance of, and respect for human rights. Reagan, on the other hand, considered the world to be divided into two major spheres: the pro-American and the pro-Russian. The Third World was obviously not included in this two-dimensional view. A tremendous ingredient in the campaign was the matter of the American hostages in Iran, because the opposition candidate was inclined toward a show of force to secure their release, and the government candidate eliminated that possibility, with the view that the best possible effort for that end had been made and would continue to be made.

[13 Nov 80, p 6]

[Text] II

It did not fail to be apparent to the impartial observer that the electoral promises of the opposition candidate were very encouraging and realistic to the American citizenry, despite the message of peace and coexistence that was reflected more in the continuist intentions of the Carter administration. The advantage that Reagan maintained in the polls and surveys, multiplied by the election results, discloses how deeply Reagan penetrated the American people, bringing him an overwhelming electoral victory. An American friend with whom I discussed those differences in the platforms, told me: "You must not forget that the Third World countries, with all their dimensions and varieties, will not be voting on 4 November."

It is interesting to ponder on all this. In the face of such dazzling promises, and with a power deteriorated by an erratic administration, having destroyed the ideals that created his advent, it was obvious that his continuity in the government was marked with the seal of defeat. His attempt at reelection was perhaps less tragic than the reelection defeat of President Cleveland, in 1888, because the latter had to eat his own words when the elected candidate proclaimed himself opposed to presidential reelection, on the grounds that rulers "make improper use of the nation's resources and agents, the treasury funds and public servants, to insure their continuation in power," just as unequalled pen of Jose Marti had written, in commenting on the 1888 elections in the United States.

Early on election day, we went to observe directly how an electoral board operates. A persistent rain accompanied the voting. It was a working day, like any other, except that every employee or worker is given 2 hours of his workday to perform his civic duties. However, the banks and schools close their doors, because those premises are used to set up electoral boards. The place that we visited was a school, in Queens, where several electoral boards were in operation. There was heavy traffic and movement of individuals in evidence.

There was animation. Our companion introduced us to the election officials in charge of directing the work, including the political delegates. We noticed that the instructions for voters, printed in English and Spanish, were attached to the walls. We were shown the board's register, containing the names of all the voters. Each voter has a card with his record, showing every time that he has exercised the sacred right to vote. His signature on the card is the permanent evidence of the exercise of that right. After showing his registration and having his identity confirmed, and after signing, he goes to the booth the curtain of which closes automatically when the lever opening the ballot is moved. Inside the booth there is an electronic screen listing the candidates approved by the various parties, in separate columns, with candidacies ranging from the president and vice president to governors, congressmen and judges. The voter will press the button in the place where the names of the candidates of his choice appear. It is an educated vote. The voter even has an opportunity to write, electronically, the name of any candidate, or to cross out a candidate or add one that is not included on the screen. When he has completed his voting, the lever returns to its place, which will indicate the selection that has been made. In the Dominican electoral voting, this action is represented by the twofold act of putting the rejected ballots in the basket and placing the ballot inside the envelope, which reinforces the secrecy of the vote, into the ballot box. Approximately 200 meters from the voting place the campaign advertisers still have an opportunity to approach the voters in the last great effort at convincing them politically, distributing propaganda about the candidates. Within the premises of each board, there is a complete ban on engaging in election propaganda. At 2100 hours, the polls have closed in New York City. A critical day has ended. By that hour, the results from several states are reported on radio and television. The system is so perfect that the defeated candidate, President Carter, is the first to admit it gallantly, with the resultant congratulations to the winner, Ronald Reagan, in a day's endeavor wherein the polls were very far short of the victory of the one in whom the American people have overwhelmingly placed their confidence, their faith and also their peaceful desire for the solution to the serious problems of one of the most powerful and most democratic nations in the history of all time.

ISA CONDE: PNP'S LOSS SHOW SOCIAL DEMOCRATS' FAILURE

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 3 Nov 80 p 17

[Text] The Dominican Communist Party (PCD) feels that the defeat of the People's National Party of Jamaica, led by Prime Minister Manley is the clearest sign that there is no third way, as the social democrats proclaim.

The party states in a document that "it is impossible to overcome imperialism and the right without radically transforming the underlying capitalist structures."

"These governments that attempt the national liberation process without establishing the communist system stagnate and open the way to the resurgence of the conservative right," the PCD states.

The PCD leaders say that Manley only went half way, and to a great extent the Marxist left was unable to develop a fully independent option from that of the social democrats, permitting the decline of the PNP to be capitalized on by the Labor Party under U.S. auspices."

The PCD recalls that Jamaica nationalized its bauxite, developed an independent and progressive foreign policy close to Cuba's and thus, the party says, brought on tenacious rightist and U.S. opposition.

But it states that at the same time that regime "did not introduce sweeping social changes, did not suppress the power of the rich bourgeoisie and foreign capital, was unable to make progress toward making state-owned property predominant, did not advance toward socialist revolution."

The PCD says that Jamaica "shows that American imperialism and its internal partners are ready to counter the slightest advances of our peoples."

It indicates that they prefer to have the social democrats under their control, as in the Dominican example, or even more conservative forces than the social democrats in certain alternative formulas, be they with the social democrats or not.

MINISTRY, ASI, CCIES DISCUSS ECONOMIC SITUATION

Economic Stimulation Urged

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 13 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] The seeds for a better distribution of the wealth of the Salvadoran people were generated in the proclamation of last 15 October, says the Ministry of Economy.

A substantial change occurred in El Salvador after the aforementioned date, it added, because the armed forces wanted to change the economic structures, since the country could no longer continue with inadequate planning, which benefited only a few families.

We have the responsibility, it emphasized, all of us Salvadorans to fight to further this objective and to bring thus to our country, for the benefit of the citizenry, a more correct adaptation of the current situation in the world and in El Salvador.

The Ministry of Economy indicated the profound reforms carried out up to now, referring to a better distribution of wealth, because, it said, a better distribution will come out of these actions.

Furthermore, on the international level the secretary of state is making great efforts to get financing to be invested in programs which will be directed toward the benefit of all Salvadorans, and not as before, they explained, in the sense that the previous authorities invested large sums which the country obtained for the benefit of the few, forgetting the people in the majority.

Another aspect which the Revolutionary Junta Government has achieved, against wind and tide, is that the foreign exchange which Salvadoran products generate now returns to the country.

Previously, this foreign exchange served the big businessmen, preserving their business interests abroad. Nothing was left for the Salvadorans, they pointed out.

Concerning this, the Ministry of Economy believes that if the people and the government continue to work together, as they are now doing, our country will soon move out of its present state of underdevelopment and those who will gain from this effort toward social and economic well-being will be the Salvadoran people in general, it concluded.

JRG Reforms Praised

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 13 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] The state must stimulate productive activities to reactivate the national economy, stated the Salvador Association of Industrialists and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of El Salvador in a statement issued at the end of last week. The two business organizations pointed out that it is most urgent especially because of the social necessity "for business to continue to exist and maintain the sources of employment and guarantee an adequate family income for the great majority of the population."

The chamber and the ASI said in their statement that during the last few months, although it is certain that one can hear a few voices which are clamoring for a national dialog to return to a state of rights and elect a constituent assembly which would dictate technically drawn up laws, on the other hand, they said, "the economic panorama appears more adverse every day." The representative bodies of the traditional private sector of the country indicate that in the economic area they have noted a scarcity of foreign exchange for the import of various types of merchandise, of raw materials for production and the reduction of credits by the nationalized commercial bank, "meanwhile the credit of Banco Central de Reserve has been doubled, by the recession of productive activities."

The ASI and the chamber said in their statement that, during the moments of crisis which the country is undergoing, it becomes necessary to evaluate the most suitable laws which would allow a real economic reactivation. "Within this framework," they said, "it is indispensable to analyze the most opportune moment to apply measures which would stimulate national production or have as their principal objective the generation of greater social benefits."

ASI SPEAKS OUT ON PRIVATE SECTOR, REGIONAL COOPERATION

Private Enterprise Hailed

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 14 Oct 80 p 15

[Commentary by Salvadoran Industrialists Association]

[Text] Private enterprise continues to produce even when it is experiencing an atmosphere of anxiety, according to the Salvadoran Industrialists Association [ASI] as expressed in a commentary published in its bulletin covering the first half of October.

The ASI commentary reads as follows:

"There is an axiom which states that countries which have dynamic private initiative these days have economic stability, since the action of free enterprise can never be surpassed in production and productivity, the massive creation of jobs and higher standards of living for their citizens.

"Among other things, we Salvadorans should be pleased to have a private initiative which, in addition to being dynamic, is aggressive and decisive; it does not matter what obstacles must be overcome to achieve the objectives of economic progress of a developing country which is seeking by every possible means to obtain a higher standard of living for its inhabitants.

"Throughout our economic history we can see how the Salvadoran, a tireless worker, has achieved success in his enterprise, small, medium or large, creating wealth for the country and placing us in a privileged position in the continent's concert of nations, despite our limited territory and lack of natural resources.

"Now more than ever, when we are experiencing an atmosphere of anxiety due to the violence to which we are being subjected, this powerful private initiative is responsible for prolonging the battle to continue to produce despite all eventualities and to remain firm in face of the direct, destructive and annihilating aggression of pressure groups whose only interest is to create chaos and anarchy.

"Through its determination to work and produce and, more than anything else, its daily struggle on behalf of the country in which it is operating, private initiative is becoming the mainstay of economic stability; that is why regimes which have destroyed the effectiveness of private initiative must call upon those where that initiative is still going strong to make up for their lack of production; this is the case with the Soviet Union and mainland China, both of which were forced to import food from the United States where a powerful and dynamic private initiative is in full swing and is helping to keep that country in first place in economic terms.

"To conclude, we can honestly state that the economic salvation of our country will be in direct relation to the support and stimulus our private initiative receives, since, as far as the rest is concerned, the natural elements which characterize this sector are continuing to function despite prevailing adverse circumstances."

Costa Rican, Nicaraguan Measures Alarming

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 16 Oct 80 p 12

[Commentary by Salvadoran Industrialists Association on Costa Rican and Nicaraguan restrictions on imports]

[Text] "In connection with the exchange of goods between Central American countries, the Salvadoran Industrialists Association (ASI) has viewed with alarm the negative effects which could result from measures taken by the Costa Rican government with regard to the method of payment and by Nicaragua with respect to import restrictions."

The association has issued a press release in which it makes the following comments:

"Although justified by the deficit in the balance of payments claimed by the above two countries, both measures should be replaced by alternatives which would not only eliminate the restrictions but also permit a commercial flow without barriers in accordance with the spirit of Central American economic integration--the highest objective we should strive to achieve.

"In view of the seriousness of the problem, and having had a positive response by both the Guatemalan and Honduran industrialists, the ASI met with the Guatemalan Industrial Chamber and the Honduran National Association of Industrialists to analyze and arrive at alternatives which will permit the reestablishment of normal relations in Central America's commercial exchange. Among other measures, it was decided to hold a meeting at the level of the FECAICA [Federation of Central American Industrial Chambers and Associations] in San Jose, Costa Rica at the end of this week, to be attended by representatives of the industrial sector from throughout Central America. At this meeting, it will be necessary to adopt a resolution with recommendations calling upon the various governments to come up with alternative solutions to replace the measures already decided and which, although providing temporary protection, are not a valid solution over the long term but, rather, are causing a greater breakdown in the integration process.

"It is believed that strengthening the mechanism of the Central American Chamber of Compensation with an injection of funds from the Central American Integration Bank is the rational and plausible solution to the deficit problems in the balance of payments which originate in the Common Market; and if this injection of funds is substantial, it can assure a process of continuous and sustained exchange which cannot help but increase production and employment so badly needed by Central America to guarantee economic growth in accordance with the needs of the Central American man. This is essential and urgent, particularly because Central American industry must be able to produce what the Central American consumer needs. This means that it is vital to use our installed productive capacity at its maximum, a capacity which is currently being used at a level of 60 to 65 percent, and this, in turn, means there is a waste of 35 to 40 percent of the investments in fixed productive capital in Central America's industrial sector.

"From the preceding it is apparent that the problem posed by Costa Rica and Nicaragua must not be viewed as a simple temporary situation but as a symptom which at any moment could spread to other countries in the area; and this can mean the destruction of the entire Central American Common Market and, why not say it, that of the industrial sector which has taken so many years to build up, with the effect this would have on the economic development and growth and subsequent social well-being of Central America.

CCIES CONDEMNS REPRESSION OF NICARAGUAN BUSINESS SECTOR

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 20 Nov 80 p 14

[Text] The Chamber of Commerce and Industry of El Salvador [CCIES] has condemned "the crimes and abuses being committed against highly esteemed individuals representing the Nicaraguan business sector."

In a communique issued yesterday afternoon, the business entity declared: "Assassinations, imprisonment or banishment can never be given specious justification with the intentions of a government which supposedly desires to reconstruct and liberate its country from the vestiges of old tyrannies."

The text of the statement from the Chamber is as follows:

"The Chamber condemns aggression against Nicaraguan businessmen.

"On behalf of the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of El Salvador, we condemn the crimes and abuses being committed against highly esteemed individuals representing the Nicaraguan business sector.

"Assassinations, imprisonment or banishment can never be given specious justification with the intentions of a government which supposedly desires to reconstruct and liberate its country from the vestiges of old tyrannies, but which is rather adhering to the atrocious, dehumanizing practices of totalitarianism that is the enemy of freedom.

"The death of engineer Jorge Salazar Arguello, acting chairman of the Superior Council of Private Enterprise; the arrest of the vice-chairman of the Chamber of Commerce of Nicaragua, engineer Leonardo Somarriba, and the abuses committed against other leaders of the private sector can only be viewed as an unfortunate harbinger of a policy of aggression against free enterprise, with the intention of destroying and replacing it, as has been done in countries that have reneged on their democratic destiny to become submerged in communist dictatorships.

"We address the Government Junta of Nicaragua, on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of El Salvador, to request that the full exercise of his rights be restored to engineer Leonardo Somarriba and other businessmen under arrest; because we are certain that they are victims of sinister plots. Instead of accusing them for preconceived political purposes, as is the custom in a police state, it should be recognized that they are individuals dedicated to the creative endeavor of producing wealth, employment and prosperity for the people, which are the only means of reconstructing and preserving a country.

"We think that the true meaning of free enterprise, from an historical standpoint, for the Central American countries, is that of economic progress and social welfare, as a result of our brains and effort, without humiliating surrendering of our nations' sovereignty. That is the fundamental reason that the businessman, as a social force, deserves esteem and respect, attributes which we demand for the businessmen of Nicaragua."

ANEP PRESIDENT URGES BUSINESSMEN UNITY AGAINST COMMUNISM

San Salvador LA PRENSA GRAFICA in Spanish 20 Nov 80 pp 3, 28

[Text] The unity of the national productive sector is the force that will prevent the nation from succumbing to the oppressive war of communism. This combination of wills is the unassailable fortress which the enemy will never force to surrender, declared the president of the National Association of Private Enterprise [ANEP], Mr Eduardo Menendez, last night.

Elsewhere in his remarks, during the special session of ANEP held last night, Mr Menendez said: "The terrorists have selected the productive sector as the main target for their attacks. They know that all of the country's economic activity rests with that sector." He observed: "They are trying to undermine us psychologically."

Finally, the ANEP president made an appeal for continued support for the cause of liberty. "This is the time to redouble our efforts to keep job sources open for the benefit of the entire society, and to demonstrate to the world, once again, the capacity, discipline and patriotic zeal of the Salvadoran businessman."

The complete text of Mr Eduardo Menendez' remarks is as follows:

"Friends, businessmen: In this tragic period of our history, when the institutionality of our republic is faced with the threat of annihilation as a result of the terrorist violence of the Marxist-Leninist factions, I deem it necessary to make some comments about the political, economic and social crisis that is besetting the country.

"The forces of communist subversion are pushing our country into a fratricidal war, unleashed to undermine the foundations of our nationhood and to afford leeway for the establishment of an oppressive, Marxist-Leninist type government."

Savagery

"In this hard-fought battle, wherein savagery and absolute irrationality prevail, our business owning sector is the greatest victim of the foes of democracy and freedom.

"The terrorists have selected the productive sector as the main target for their attacks, because they know that it is the cornerstone on which all of the country's economic activity rests. In their eagerness to submerge our republic in chaos, the Marxist-Leninists are using all the weapons at their command to undermine the business owning sector psychologically."

We Are Accused

"We businessmen are being irresponsibly accused of being to blame for all the ills that this country suffers, and we are being treated unfairly, as if we were the worst enemies of our nation. These demagogic positions opposed to private enterprise, owing to their spuriousness, cannot and are not weakening our full conviction of the vital, constructive role that the productive sector has played throughout our history for the benefit of our people.

"Under these very difficult, extremely dangerous circumstances which are tremendously critical to the survival of democracy and freedom, there has arisen among Salvadoran businessmen a staunchly determined spirit and an indomitable desire for persistent struggle. We reaffirm the fact that the courage and patriotic dedication of businessmen have been, are and will be the stronghold for defending free enterprise in El Salvador."

We Are the Country's Backbone

"Respected men and women friends, let us be frank with ourselves and with the Salvadoran people. We are the backbone of a real democratic system. We are the real reflection of individual liberties. We are, in short, the bulwark of democracy. Those who are trying to destroy us are destroying individual liberties. Those who are trying to gag us are gagging free enterprise. Those who are seeking our elimination want to eliminate democracy finally from our soil."

Tribute to the Dead

"In my capacity as president of the National Association of Private Enterprise, and on behalf of my colleagues on the Executive Committee, I take the liberty of using this occasion to pay heartfelt, profound tribute to each and every one of the beloved business colleagues who have sacrificed their lives for the sake of freedom and justice for the Salvadoran people.

"Also, through this medium, I express on behalf of the association sentiments of profound grief and indignation over the despicable assassination of Mr Jorge Salazar Arguello, chairman of the Higher Council of Private Enterprise (COSEP) of Nicaragua, who was shot to death by bullets of the Sandinist Army, and whose assassination is a categorical example of what men poisoned by hatred and dedicated to the attainment of total oppression of their people are capable of doing.

"I call upon you to stand and observe a minute of silence to commemorate all the business colleagues who have been the victims of Marxist-Leninist violence and terrorism."

This Unity Is a Force

"It is cause for deep gratification to find, in your presence on this site, the indomitable character and steadfast desire for struggle of the Salvadoran businessman. This unity of the productive sector is the only force that will keep our nation from succumbing to the oppressive clutches of communism. This combination of wills, strengthened by the conviction of the principles of representative democracy and free enterprise, is the unassailable fortress which the enemy will never force to surrender.

"Friends, businessmen, this is the most all-important time in our history. The nation demands that each one of us dedicate the best of ourselves; that, despite the danger and threats, we keep upholding the cause of liberty, for which many of our colleagues have died. This is the time to redouble our efforts to keep job sources open for the benefit of the entire soeicty, and to demonstrate to the world, once again, the capacity, discipline and patriotic zeal of the Salvadoran businessman."

Supreme Effort

"We cannot retreat from our job sites now. Even though we all know that our economy is on the brink of bankruptcy, we must make a supreme effort to continue keeping the little economy that we have active. If we withdraw, our economy would undergo a total collapse. We cannot allow it to become paralyzed, even though it is sick and under attack; we must keep it going. For if we triumph, friends, our children will triumph, our people will triumph and our nation will triumph. Then, we shall have an opportunity to reap the fruits of our effort, our sacrifice and, most of all, our patriotism."

CUS, CUC MEMBERS DENOUNCE REPRESSION OF INDIANS

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 22 Nov 80 p 6

[Text] The repression from the Guatemalan Army being suffered by many Indian populations in the western and central plateaus of Guatemala was disclosed at a press conference here by two members of the Peasant Unity Committee (CUC) of that fraternal nation.

Comrades Pedro Ixcoy and Juana Sical, from the Quiche and Kakchikel areas, were introduced to the press by the Nicaraguan Committee of Solidarity With Peoples (CNSP), as part of the constant activities of solidarity with the people of Guatemala.

Comrade Sical stated that the Indian population is fully aware that the only one responsible for the situation that it is undergoing is the government army, which kidnaps, tortures and steals food from the inhabitants of the communities occupied by the military.

Juana cited the role that the Indian women are playing at present, joining in the undeclared war that is under way in Guatemala. She said that, for example, the women are guarding the communities, and remaining in a state of alert against the enemy.

Moreover, Comrade Ixcoy stressed the participation of the Church and of faithful Christians in the struggle of the people of Guatemala. This participation has caused the wave of repression against priests, curates, pastors and evangelists, particularly in the Quiche area.

In the rural sections, the economic and social situation has become very difficult and this is compounded by the wave of repression and torture against the leaders of the Peasant Unity Committee and entire families.

Comrade Miguel Angel Albizurez, member of the Committee for Labor Unity [CUS] of Guatemala, remarked that the current status of the regime of Romeo Lucas Garcia is becoming worse, because there is a rather critical economic situation, with a constant rise in prices of products of popular consumption, and an automatic cut in real wages.

He said that the control of foreign exchange, the lack of investment and a reduction in exports were noteworthy. This clearly reflects an increasing deterioration in the regime, accompanied by an international isolation, demonstrated by the boycott on tourism, the refusal of loans to the government itself and the condemnations and charges made by international agencies against the regime.

Albisurez also stated that, at the present time, the unifying process is advancing in Guatemala through the Democratic Front Against Repression, which is the entity representing the organizations struggling in Guatemala. This is a unity which will develop and intensify more each day, with the participation of broad sectors; and Albisurez said: "We hope that in the future, depending on what is happening at present in the interior, there will result a discussion of a platform for struggle and a government program."

This could give rise to a rather extensive political entity. On the other hand, the comrade emphasized the unity that is present within the revolutionary organizations, including the Rebel Armed Forces, the Guerrilla Army of the Poor, the Revolutionary Organization of the People in Arms, and the Guatemalan Labor Party.

There is noteworthy participation by students in the revolutionary struggle, forming the Revolutionary Students Front of Guatemala.

ELECTORAL REGISTRY DIRECTOR EMPHASIZES ROLE OF PARTIES

Guatemala City DIARIO DE CENTROAMERICA in Spanish 23 Oct 80 p 5

[Article by Saul David Oliva: "Prof Walfre Orlando del Valle Stresses the Democratic Political System Existing in Guatemala"]

[Excerpts] With the politeness characteristic of him, Prof Walfre Orlando del Valle Merida, director of the electoral registry, gave us an important interview to discuss a perennially fascinating political theme. Emphatically and extensively, he referred to the comments being made abroad to the effect that there is no democracy in Guatemala.

Thus, the official said, what is involved is information devoid of truth, either because of rumors propagated by ill-intentioned individuals who have an interest in maintaining a negative image of Guatemala abroad, because at home we all know, Professor Orlando del Valle added, that the government of Maj Gen Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia has been one which has most promoted a democratic opening in the past few years.

During his publicity campaign, General Lucas Garcia promised the people--and fulfilled his promise--that all political organizations which met the requirements of the law in this respect would be registered.

In this manner the functioning of four new parties was authorized: The PNR [Renewal National Party], the FUN [National Unity Front], the CAN [Authentic Nationalist Party], and the FUR [United Revolutionary Front]. These four new parties, in addition to the four already registered--the PR [Revolutionary Party], MLN [National Liberation Movement], the DC [Christian Democratic Party], and the PID [Democratic Institutional Party]--represent eight legally registered political organizations with a right to participate in the country's coming general elections slated to take place the first Sunday in March 1982.

On that occasion the people will elect the Guatemalan president and vice president; there will be a completely renewed congress, and there will be a complete change of municipal governments in the 327 municipalities, including the latest, recently established, Fray Bartolome de Las Casas Municipality in Alta Verapaz Department.

Of course, as regards the municipal councils, they are renewed at different times by virtue of the fact that elections are held at different dates. It is evident, our informant told us, that in Guatemala a democratic system is in effect guided by laws which are respected, based on the universal principle of popular suffrage, to elect the principal organs of the country.

The director of the electoral registry also referred to groups which seek authorization as associations aspiring to status as political parties. Unfortunately, in this category, the interested individuals have not taken appropriate steps and the process is hanging fire. If there were interest by the sponsors, more than one entity would already have become a political party.

At present in the electoral registry no applications are pending, the official stressed in his statements to DIARIO DE CENTROAMERICA.

We publish below the complete list of political parties, their addresses, and the names of their executives as well as of those organizations seeking to register as entities under public law.

EGP REPRESENTATIVE TO CUBA URGES LEFTIST UNITY

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 6

[Text] "Impotence, desperation, weakness and international isolation are some of the features which typify the genocidal regime of Romeo Lucas Garcia at present."

With this comment, Andrea Ramirez, representative of the Guerrilla Army of the Poor of Guatemala in Cuba, opened an interview which she granted to JUVENTUD REBELDE in order to publicize aspects of the battle being waged by the people against the criminal dictatorship in that Central American nation.

The young revolutionary fighter then declared that, despite the cruel escalation of repression, the tyranny had been unable to restrain the sharp increase in the popular, revolutionary movement.

She said that in Guatemala the revolutionary forces have used clandestine methods in the hard-fought battle, for many years; and hence the many repressive organs have been unsuccessful in removing the heads or breaking up the politicomilitary organizations.

She added that, for this reason, the regime is indiscriminately murdering peasants, workers, students and intellectuals, in order to create terror among the population and, at the same time, to demonstrate to the national bourgeoisie and the imperialists the efforts that it is making to deter the expansion of the popular struggle.

The militant revolutionary stressed the fact that the rapid growth of the revolutionary organizations has enabled them to victoriously confront the most cruel repressive action carried out by the dictatorship of that nation, since the democratic government of Jacobo Arbenz was overthrown by mercenary forces of the CIA in 1954.

Andrea Ramirez also emphasized that the Guerrilla Army of the Poor, the Rebel Armed Forces, the Revolutionary Organization of the People in Arms and the Leadership Group of the Guatemalan Labor Party have formed seven guerrilla fronts extending across virtually all of the nation's territory.

She noted that, despite the repression, the political and mass organizations of all the popular sectors have also been strengthened and unified around the intention to overthrow the tyranny and set up a popular, democratic, revolutionary government.

In commenting on the unifying process in which the politicomilitary organizations are participating, she cited the irreversible nature of that process and its advanced level, which has enabled them to carry out successful operations agains the dictatorship in joint fashion.

Moreover, she mentioned the maneuvers of the imperialists, in an attempt to impose an alleged "democratic" solution, taking former Vice President Villagran as a main personage; but they did not succeed in passing him off as an alternative. And now they are using the discredited Christian Democratic Party, and its secretary general, Vinicio Cerezo, in the vaunted farce.

She said: "During the course of the electoral process in the United States, Ronald Reagan threatened that, if he won, he would send the Marines to our country to help the Romeo Lucas regime; but he would do well to remember the crushing defeat suffered by those elite forces in Vietnam."

And she added: "The United States has no right to intervene in the just battle that the Guatemalan people are waging;" calling upon the democratic peoples and governments of the world to offer the most extensive solidarity to prevent those threats from being carried out.

In conclusion, Andrea Ramirez said that the maturity gained by the politicomilitary organizations is a result of the acquisition of experience, both from the national struggle and from those in countries such as Nicaragua and El Salvador. "We are convinced that the revolutionary victory in Guatemala requires the strong unity of all the popular and democratic revolutionary forces, because it is a necessity that cannot be deferred. Very soon, we shall be able to announce to our people and to the world that our unity is a reality."

JAMAICAN ELECTION RESULTS SEEN AS TRIUMPH OF DEMOCRACY

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 7 Nov 80 p 7

[Editorial: "The Jamaica Lesson"]

[Text] Up to now there has been relatively little said in the news media about the notorious electoral failure of former Prime Minister Michael Manley and the clamourous success of the opposition leader, Edward Seaga, who has now become the head of state in Jamaica, the Caribbean's attractive former British colony.

However, there are several factors which make this election a true indication of how the people think and provide clear evidence that the majority--if given the opportunity to choose--decide in favor of freedom and reject collectivism, the generator of oppression, poverty and the erosion of human rights.

When Manley came to power a few years ago, he was a charismatic leader. His organization, called the National Democratic Party, received the people's overwhelming support and announced a program of social, moderate and hopeful change.

Once at the government's helm, he began to turn to the left with increasing enthusiasm, and the paroxysm of that policy was marked with ever closer relations with the unfortunately famous dictator of the Caribbean, Fidel Castro.

Castro decorated Manley. Manley decorated Castro. They exchanged visits. The Havana regime offered "advice" to reorganize Jamaican policy, and in that manner, military infiltration began.

Meanwhile, sizable sectors of the economy were nationalized, and immediately, as usually happens in these cases, production began to drop.

In the face of these unwise economic measures, galloping unemployment developed, finally reaching 30 percent of the economically active people.

Lack of opportunity, on the one hand, and the worrisome turn of political events, on the other, caused many of the country's talented people to leave the country and emigrate, particularly to the United States.

The same thing happened with the country's capital. Despite monetary control measures, businessmen managed to get hold of their money and send it to foreign banks, thus adding the corrosive process of the removal of capital to the drain on the country's intelligentsia.

Meanwhile, Mr Manley's demagogy became increasingly bold. The country's radio stations were taken over by the government through obligatory purchase from their owners, and a defamation campaign was initiated against one of the Caribbean's best newspapers, THE DAILY GLEANER, the area's most influential newspaper which has been defending the freedom of the press and the democratic system since its founding many, many years ago.

The Jamaican citizens, inheritors of English culture, the vast majority well-educated, lovers of freedom and concerned about lack of supply, shortages, inflation, unemployment and threats to the system of values of the Western man, decided that they had reached the moment of change.

Thus, when the country was called upon to vote and the Labor Party defined its platform in a few words, announcing its decision to fight against all forms of collectivism and in defense of free initiative, the people espoused its position and upon filling out their ballots gave an impressive indication of their love for freedom.

Of the 60 seats of which parliament is composed the opposition took over 51. Manley's "democratic socialism" and Fidel Castro's "friendship" became an unspeakable humiliation for the former ruler: he obtained only 9 seats in the Chamber and had to turn the responsibility over to the opposition leader at once as is customary in parliamentary governments.

We believe that there is a lesson in the case of Jamaica which our politicians should take into consideration.

In England the Conservative Party recently won out. In Germany the social democrats succeeded in remaining in power only through the votes of the free democrats (liberals) with whom they had formed a coalition.

In the United States the Republic Party crushed the Democratic Party despite the fact that the latter was in the White House, and in Jamaica, a country which supposed itself to be Cuba's strongest ally, exactly the same thing happened.

What do these electoral results mean?

Could we deduce from them that people prefer "revolutionary" options above democratic solutions?

Apparently not.

When man has the opportunity to choose, he chooses freedom.

It holds great significance for Central America as a whole and, obviously, for Honduras, at a time when certain traditional politicians, wanting to appear fashionable, adopt demagogic positions to give the impression that they have moved away from the left.

It would be worthwhile for the liberals, nationalists, "pinuistas" and Christian democrats to study what happened in Jamaica and ask the people directly what they want instead of assuming that they know what the people want.

The answers may be astonishing. But it is better to be astonished before rather than after the elections, as Messrs Manley and Carter must undoubtedly be thinking at this very moment, having suffered the impressive defeat which took them out of the mainstream of history.

JGRN, MEMBERS OF STATE COUNCIL SCORE NATIONAL UNITY CRISIS

Communique Issued

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 11 Nov 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] To the heroic people of Nicaragua:

The Government Junta of National Reconstruction addresses you tonight to give a true explanation of certain events that have occurred in the country on which we are obliged to comment:

I. For reasons of national security which, as we shall observe subsequently, have been fully proven, the decision was made not to give permission for a proselytizing activity organized by the Nicaraguan Democratic Movement (MDN) in the town of Nandaime, scheduled for Sunday, 9 November.

II. For the same national security reasons, the country's news media were asked not to release information regarding the political activity in Nandaime which had been cancelled; and, although the government of the republic received the understanding of the vast majority of the news media, some had a defiant position toward these government measures adopted on the basis of national laws.

III. The Government Junta of National Reconstruction attempted to use all the means at its disposal, including direct persuasion and dialog by members of the Junta itself with MDN leaders, to make them understand the nature of and the need for the measures adopted, and the reasons requiring observance thereof.

IV. According to the reports in the possession of the revolutionary government, on the same date on which the MDN gathering was scheduled in Nandaime, armed attacks were to be carried out by counterrevolutionary forces which, in fact, occurred; and it was our concern to avoid the coinciding of those situations at all costs. Tonight, the ministers of defense and interior who are here with us, will give you a full report on the attacks which counterrevolutionary groups carried out on Sunday in the department of Nueva Segovia, attacks which were courageously repelled by our heroic armed forces.

We must tell our people that now, as in the past, it is our concern to preserve and strengthen the national unity of all the forces in our fatherland which are interested in the process of national reconstruction. At the present time, there are many dangers hovering over our country, its integrity and our sovereignty; and we must be prepared for future attacks, because the enemies of the people of Nicaragua are conspiring abroad, and organizing into gangs of assassins to try to stike us and destroy the conquests of our revolution.

This is a patriotic appeal for the national unity of all the democratic forces in Nicaragua, which we are issuing on behalf of the strength and integrity bequeathed to us by the heroes Jose Dolores Estrada, Benjamin Zeledon, Augusto Cesar Sandino, Pedro J. Chamorro and Carlos Fonseca; a unity which we cannot jeopardize at any price, since the popular advances of our revolution have no price. And we also appeal for consideration of the negative effects abroad of any kind of action inspired by private interests, and not by the interests of the nation and the revolution, which is carried out by political groups or individuals.

In making this appeal for national unity, the Government Junta of National Reconstruction reaffirms its indomitable intention of implementing its government program, which guarantees political pluralism, public freedoms and the mixed economy system. However, we must give warning that lack of understanding, lack of a national viewpoint and persistence in protecting private interests rather than those of the country, will make it more difficult to progress with the implementation of this program, which is the program of the revolution, from which we shall not deviate.

Now, I wish to give the floor to the minister of defense, Comdr Humberto Ortega, and the minister of interior, Comdr Tomas Borge, who will report to you on the hostile incidents on the northern border.

Thank you and good night.

House of Government, 10 November 1980.

Clerical Representative

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 15 Nov 80 p 14

[Text] Father Alvaro Arguello, representative of the National Association of the Clergy in the Council of State, declared that the MDN [Nicaraguan Democratic Movement], PCD [Conservative Democratic Party], PSC [Social Christian Party] and COSEP [Higher Council of Private Enterprise] have attempted to create an artificial crisis in the country which has no significant popular support.

The Church representative described the position of the minority parties which, in a futile attempt to break the national unity that has its own demonstration in the Council of State, distrupted Wednesday's session, as one of provocation and opposition to the Sandinist Front.

Father Arguello remarked that this attempt to destroy national unity and the policy of reconstructing the country should be viewed as a confrontation between two plans indicating how the Nicaragua of the future should be organized.

The first plan, Father Arguello noted, is the popular, democratic, revolutionary one which attempts to solve the problems of the vast majority of workers and peasants in our country.

The second plan is that represented by the right wing sectors, consisting of COSEP, political parties and trade union confederations, which is nothing but a bourgeois plan aimed at protecting very private interests, and disregarding everything that is being attempted to accomplish for the great majorities in our country, commented Father Arguello.

Furthermore, he described the attitudes of the members of COSEP and the political parties at the present time as an attempt at boycotting the revolutionary plan.

They Are Thinking of Political Benefits

Reflecting on why these sectors have assumed such an attitude, Father Arguello said that, with meddling by certain sectors, they feel sufficiently strong to confront the forces of the revolution, seeking an opportunity to accrue great political benefits.

In all of this there have been internal and international factors, and an entire plan including forces from abroad combined with internal reactionary sectors, which are laying the groundwork for assuming such attitudes and for attempting to destroy national unity and reconstruction.

Positions of CUS and CTN 'Inconceivable'

Father Arguello described the positions assumed by the Labor Unification Federation [CUS] and the Federation of Nicaraguan Workers [CTN], in withdrawing from the Council of State along with the bourgeois organizations, as "inconceivable."

The position whereby the CTN and CUS representatives support an historical plan that runs counter to the interests of the large majorities of workers is considered inconceivable by this Church representative, who confessed that he seriously questioned these organizations that claim to represent the workers.

They Should Admit That They Made a Mistake

Father Arguello remarked: "If I were they, and had a political view of the issue, I would go to the Council of State again, admitting that the first decision made was mistaken, and I would return, because it is in the political area that one can act politically."

He added that, if they withdraw from the Council of State for an indefinite period of time, they will have no area for action, because they will not become involved in the armed counterrevolution.

Daniel Ortega, Others

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 15 Nov 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] Last night, on the "Face the People" program, the commander of the revolution and member of the Government Junta, Daniel Ortega Saavedra, declared: "We are proud to be an armed party and a vanguard revolutionary force, and we are ready to arm the entire people."

The program, held at the La Mascota Children's Center, consisted of a candid dialog among the Government Junta, officials of the National Headquarters of the Sandinist Popular Militias [MPS] and the battalion commanders and instructors of the MPS of Managua.

The meeting was also attended by Comrades Sergio Ramirez, Moises Hassan and Arturo J. Cruz, members of the Government Junta; Brigade Comdr Eden Pastora Gomez, national head of the MPS; Comdr Emmet Lang, and Comrade Alvaro Gonzalez Cerrato, chief of the militias in Managua.

Commenting on the position of the bourgeois parties in withdrawing from the Council of State, Commander Ortega noted: "They are helping the working class to open its eyes, and realize the role being played by these organizations, which are tools of those exploiting the workers."

Commander Ortega remarked that those minority groups have taken courage from the notion that the FSLN has lost strength, and the belief that what the president-elect of the United States, Ronald Reagan, is going to do is back them and set them forth against Nicaragua. "To touch Nicaragua is to touch an entire people," warned Commander Ortega emphatically.

Ortega said that it is forgotten that there was a revolution here and that in the first phase of the victory the people shed their blood. Now those sectors want the people to continue shedding their blood. They do not understand the generous spirit of the revolution.

The commander of the revolution stated that Robelo should remember that it was the FSLN National Directorate which called upon him personally, and not as a representative of MDN, to join the Government of National Reconstruction. He said that the Sandinist Front devised and gave an impetus to the policy of national unity.

Analyzing the withdrawal of the bourgeois parties from membership in the Council of State, Commander Ortega stressed that there is no crisis such as that claimed by MDN and LA PRENSA. What it is is the separation of a minority which did not succeed in carrying along the rank and file. The revolutionary leader said that there is no doubt whatever that they did the greatest damage on the international level, to create an atmosphere hostile to the revolution and to cut off international aid.

For his part, Dr Sergio Ramirez Mercado remarked that the Sandinist Front is protecting the interests of the great majorities. National unity has not been imposed by anyone, but was conceived by the FSLN, as the member of the Government Junta stressed.

Dr Arturo Cruz declared that the unity of the JGRN is absolute, whatever be the situation that may crop up. He added: "The table for our discussions is not one of confrontation; decisions are made on the basis of solidary consensus."

Comrade Moises Hassan cited the revolutionary nature of our Sandinist Popular Militias, noting that, for the defense of the revolution the vanguard took the option that it would be the people in arms, in the face of any foreign aggression, who would assumed this historic responsibility.

Brigade Comdr Eden Pastora Gomez, national commander of the Sandinist Popular Militias, described the revolution's lines of defense, underscoring the need for a greater integration of the people into the MPS, as a force defending the true interests of our people and of the revolution.

INPESCA MINISTER DISCUSSES FISHING INDUSTRY, CUBAN HELP

Havana MAR Y PESCA in Spanish Sep 80 pp 12-13

[Interview with Carlos Coronel Kauts, minister of the Nicaraguan Fishing Institute (INPESCA), in Cuba; date not given]

[Text] Carlos Coronel Kauts, minister of the Nicaraguan Fishing Institute, recently visited Cuba in order to continue the exchange of views in the realm of cooperation between the two countries. In addition to the interview granted to our publication, Coronel Kauts arranged for our participation in some of the tours that he made of fishing and ship construction installations in Cuba, which afforded us greater identification with the effort being made by Nicaragua at present to achieve rapid growth in fishing. During his visit to the Cardenas shipyards, the Nicaraguan minister conversed at length with youths from the fraternal country who are taking a training course in the construction of reinforced cement fishing boats. The young grantholders showed him, step by step, the production line for the construction of the vessels and, what was more thrilling, the site where the immediate manufacture of one of them was to begin, with the sole intervention of students from Nicaragua; so that, upon its completion, it could be sent to the fraternal country as another sample of what is possible as a result of revolutionary cooperation between peoples!

MAR Y PESCA: It would be of great interest to our readers to learn the status of the Nicaraguan fishing industry upon the victory of the revolution.

Coronel: First of all, I must tell you that, upon the victory of the people's war, all the fishing facilities of any size were in the hands of Somoza's representatives. So, they immediately proceeded to dismantle the fleets and take them to other countries, at least the best vessels. They did the same thing with the spare parts, fishing equipment and major industrial equipment. On 19 July, when the people won their great revolutionary victory, the Nicaraguan fishing industry was therefore in a state of collapse. This, of course, applies to what we might call a fishing industry with a certain amount of development because, on the other hand, we have inherited a manual fishing, as was the case in Cuba, a reflection of the exploitation to which the fishermen were subjected. However, the Sandinist government intends to achieve immediate development in this branch of industry which, in the first place, will make it possible to increase the people's food products to a considerable extent, and, secondly, to increase one of our leading export items.

MAR Y PESCA: Then the first measures were....

Coronel: You can imagine them: with the fleets dismantled, and lacking spare parts, the few remaining vessels were overworked, and the processing plants were at a standstill. So, we had to begin....We proceeded to confiscate the plants that were in the hands of the tyranny's representatives and former national guardsmen, and in this way most of the Nicaraguan fishing industry was turned over to the people. This was on the one hand; and, on the other, the Government Junta issued a decree making exports state-owned and nationalizing foreign trade. Obviously, as part of this, the foreign trade in fish was nationalized, something that was accomplished through the Nicaraguan Sea Products Enterprise. This enterprise is part of the Nicaraguan Fishing Institute, which is the agency that runs the entire fishing industry in the country.

MAR Y PESCA: At the time of the victory of the Nicaraguan people's war, approximately how many fishermen were there in the country?

Coronel: If we count the processing plants, and the manual fishing, under the administration of INPESCA, there are about 10,000 persons. Now then, there is also a large number of fishermen, especially in the interior waters, who could represent another 5,000 persons. These fishermen sell their goods on the free market, and they also engage in a very manual kind of fishing. Nicaragua is very replete with rivers and lakes, and these fishermen make their catches aboard small rowboats, with little hooks...it is very manual!

MAR Y PESCA: A short while ago you mentioned processing plants. What are those plants like?

Coronel: These plants are somewhat like what you call combines....They have a fleet, shops for repairs, and shops for processing lobster, shrimp or fish. The products are packed and then exported through the pertinent enterprise of the Nicaraguan Fishing Institute. They are actually industrial extraction complexes.

MAR Y PESCA: Nicaragua is a country with a great fishing potential....

Coronel: Of course it is; we have vast resources. However, we also have great problems which, to be sure, the Nicaraguan people will manage to surmount. The Sandinist revolution is the starting point for this. For example, our present installed capacity is greater than our catching capacity, because, as I told you, the fleet is not yet completely reactivated. This is a task that the revolutionary government has undertaken with tremendous energy. We have already recovered many of the vessels that the hired assassins took away. Furthermore, the enthusiasm of all the fishermen and workers in the industry is tremendous.

MAR Y PESCA: Could we discuss other immediate plans concerning the fishing industry?

Coronel: In the first place, we are engaged in very specific work, without succumbing to sophistication that would cause us problems later. For the time being, the main thing is to strengthen what we have, to achieve the maximum from the resources available to us, without failing, for that reason, to look toward the future. Our main resources on the marine platform of both oceans are shrimp and lobster. They are the resources which were traditionally developed in Nicaragua, which afforded an immediate opportunity for attracting hard currency. Hence, our main immediate plans are for the development of these fisheries. Over the medium term, we shall attempt to develop the scaly fish industry, and we shall succeed. The deep sea fishing, for tuna in the Pacific, is essentially a plan over a long period of time.

MAR Y PESCA: And what about the lakes?

Coronel: The largest lake in Nicaragua measures 8,000 square kilometers! It is really a fresh water sea, with special, very different features. Although the water is fresh and potable, its fauna is of tremendous interest, including sharks, mountain fish, sea bass and shad....It has a link with the sea through the San Juan River, about 100 miles long, with its mouth in the Caribbean Sea. Of course this river also has very abundant fauna. We shall attempt to progress with the exploitation of these waters....although, I repeat, the first thing will be to consolidate what is already under exploitation....

MAR Y PESCA: What are the most important distinctive features on the Nicaraguan Pacific and Atlantic coasts?

Coronel: There are many resources on both coasts: shrimp, lobster and fish...For example, the Pacific shrimp are larger, although they have to be fished at greater depths. The Pacific lobster is vegetarian, whereas that of the Atlantic is the same that you fish for here. The most important fauna in the Pacific is pelagic. There are tremendous resources on both coasts: red snapper, giant bass and many other species of commercial value. Of course, the Atlantic platform is larger....

MAR Y PESCA: Returning now to economic matters, what place does the fishing industry occupy at present in the Nicaraguan national economy?

Coronel: Our leading fishing economy is associated with shrimp and lobster. Of those products, with the limitations of company statistics that we inherited, there were traditionally exports of about $30 or $35 million dollars. Taking into account the fact that the leading industries are coffee, cotton, livestock, sugar and gold, the fishing industry would rank about fifth. Now, the development of the fishing industry is of tremendous importance insofar as attracting hard currency is concerned. You must recall that our country was devastated by a dreadful war, a complete people's war which had a toll of about 50,000 dead. Many of our towns were destroyed by the war, such as Esteli, which was left with 6,000 out of 30,000 inhabitants. Thousands of families were without houses, or homes... All this has forced us to be very careful about our decisions relating to economic plans. So the revolutionary government has instructed that we obtain all the possible hard currency originating with our shrimp and lobster resources, and that we develop the catching of scaly species, with a view toward providing the people with a large amount of protein. I repeat, once we have succeeded in reactivating the present fish resources to the maximum extent, fishing will become a strong category, an even stronger one, in the national economy. We have now reactivated the fishing fleet about 55 percent. According to my calculations, in just a couple of months, 2 or 3, we shall have done so 80 percent, which will encourage large scale production.

MAR Y PESCA: Comrade Minister, to what extent do you think Cuba could participate; that is, cooperate with Nicaragua in its fishing development?

Coronel: We must start with the fact that Cuba is one of the countries that has made the greatest progress in fishing within the least amount of time; which is, of course, a result of the revolutionary efficiency. Furthermore, with the understandably different features, because we are two countries: one located in an island region and the other on the continent, there is an infinite number of things that bring us close together. Much of Cuba's fishing experience could help us to draw the proper conclusions. It could prove very useful to us; for example, in matters relating to the methods for lobster fishing, the tackle, the process and the manner of operating the fleets. In any event, we really appreciate the cooperation with Cuba, and we think that it will be useful for both countries.

IDB GRANTS LOAN FOR OIL EXPLORATION

FL151630 Kingston DAILY GLEANER in English 12 Dec 80 pp 1, 27

[Text] The Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) has now approved a (US)$23.5 million loan to Jamaica to finance a program of onshore oil exploration.

The loan is at two per cent interest, repayable over 35 years, with a grace period of 8 1/2 years, and will be used to finance a two-stage project which will eventually involve the drilling of seven exploratory wells.

Prime Minister Edward Seaga said yesterday, that the drilling of three of the onshore wells should commence shortly. He referred to an article in yesterday's issue of the GLEANER, which, he said, gave the impression that the loan application might not receive support from the Carter administration representatives on the IDB board, and further that the loan might have been the subject of a veto.

The Government of Jamaica dissociated itself from the sentiments of that article, he said, and in fact, there had been very good cooperation with the Carter and the incoming President Reagan administrations.

A press release yesterday from the IDB office in Kingston said:

"The Inter-American Development Bank today announced the approval of a $23.5 million loan to help Jamaica carry out a hydrocarbon exploration project. The loan is the first the bank has extended for gas or petroleum exploration.

"The loan will be used by the Petroleum Corporation of Jamaica (PCJ)—a company established in 1979 to promote the development of the country's oil resources—to help finance a two-stage exploratory drilling project of several inland wildcat wells.

The steady increase in oil prices over the past several years has placed the island's economy in a vulnerable position. The nation's oil import bill grew from $73 million in 1973 to $346 million in 1979 and an estimated US$525 million in 1980. This has brought about the need to explore geological structures that under different circumstances would not justify the large investment required.

Although a number of wildcat wells drilled by different enterprises under exploration licences granted by the Jamaican Government over the past 25 years have failed to prove or disprove the presence of petroleum in the country, experts hired by the government have concluded that all possibilities cannot be ruled out. These experts have recommended exploratory work in more promising rock strata than that tested previously.

"At the same time Jamaica is carrying out efforts with international companies for the exploration of the Pedro Banks and other offshore sites.

"Today's bank loan will help BOJ to finance the drilling of test wells totalling some 70,000 feet at selected onshore locations. In the first stage, approximately 30,000 feet will be drilled over a period of 270 days. If warranted by information gathered in this stage, an additional 40,000 feet will be drilled. The bank will provide up to 10 million of the loan for the first stage and if warranted will authorize the continuation of the second stage.

"The total cost of the project is estimated at $29.5 million, of which the bank loan will cover 79.7 per cent and local sources will provide the remaining 20.3 per cent.

"The loan was extended from the bank's fund for special operations for a term of 35 years at an interest rate of 2 per cent per annum. The loan will be disbursed in dollars or other non-Jamaican currencies which are part of the fund's reserves. It will be repaid in semiannual installments, the first of which will be due 8 1/2 years after the date of the loan contract. Principal and interest payments will be made in the currencies disbursed.

"Should commercial quantities of hydro-carbons be found, and the drilling of wells to develop such deposits be started by the Jamaican Government, the loan would be repaid within 120 days from the initiation of such drilling. In that case, the Inter-American Development Bank would within 90 days consider the possibility of granting a new loan for the amount amortized under the first loan, with a term of 15 years and at the interest rate prevailing for the bank's ordinary capital loans at the time of conversion."

FUEL COST TO INCREASE--Caracas, 10 Dec (AFP)--Venezuelan residual fuel will rise in price at least one more time during the remainder of the year, it was reported officially here today. The state VENPRES NEWS AGENCY, citing Energy Ministry sources, noted that "the current market conditions favor an increase in the price of residual fuel, because this winter appears to be more severe than last year." This fuel, used in heating systems, is regarded as a stationary product since it is used only in winter. VENPRES indicated that according to studies conducted by the Energy Ministry and the Venezuelan Oil Corporation, the price of residual fuel might be increased twice before the end of 1980, although it is certain to be increased once. Also noted was the increase of $3 per barrel of residual fuel last November in the occasional spot market. [Text] [PA101754 Paris AFP in Spanish 1650 GMT 10 Dec 80]

VENEZUELAN ENVOY TO COLOMBIA EXPLAINS PROBLEM OF ILLEGAL ALIENS

'Nervousness' Unfounded

PA121323 Bogota Domestic Service in Spanish 1730 GMT 11 Dec 80

[Interview with Venezuela Ambassador Pedro Contreras Pulido following the presentation of his credentials at Narino Palace on 11 December--presumably recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] [Unidentified speaker] Ambassador, after presenting your credentials to the Colombian Government, we want to ask you about the upcoming outflow of people without papers from Venezuela.

[Answer] I am under the impression that the news is unfounded and that the nervousness is even less founded. The census or registration of illegal aliens in Venezuela, in my opinion, has been successful up to now. However, there will always be some people who are left out. I think that percentage is not more than more or less 5 percent of the immigrants. There will probably be some identification procedure for the illegal aliens. We will see if they are working or not and we will proceed accordingly in each case. In December we won't deport anybody. That will be left for early 1981.

[Question] Mr Ambassador, what will become of the people who do not abide by the census measures?

[Answer] Will you explain your question because I don't understand it?

[Question] Yes, when...

[Answer] They have to register. If they do not register, then they will be in contempt.

[Question] And will be deported?

[Answer] Mostly likely. Yes. [end recording]

[Text] Federal District Governor Enrique Perez Olivares has announced that all undocumented foreigners will have to leave the country as of 23 December. In this respect, the governor said that it has been confirmed that a much smaller number of foreigners than estimated to be present have attempted to register legally, despite plenty of advance notice. He reiterated that if 60 percent of these foreigners have not made efforts to register by 23 December, then 60 percent will have to leave Venezuela on that date or immediately after.

VENEZUELA EXAMINES JAMAICA'S INVESTMENT OPPORTUNITIES

FL151710 Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 12 Dec 80 p 10

[Text] Kingston, Jamaica (CANA)--A 15-man Venezuelan mission is currently in Jamaica to examine the island's investment opportunities.

The group, which has already held talks with Industry and Commerce Minister Douglas Vaz comprises private businessmen with interests covering bauxite, sugar and cement.

An official announcement said that group, which leaves for home tomorrow was here in response to Jamaica's investment incentive schemes, outlines by Mr Vaz at last month's Miami conference on Caribbean trade, investment and development.

Mr Vaz told the Venezuelans that government was currently studying the existing foreign investment code and investment schemes, with a view to making whatever improvements thought necessary.

He said the lack of foreign investment which helped to cripple the Jamaican economy under the past regime did not occur for want of a good investment code, but because of lack of good investment climate and a lack of confidence.

He added that his government would make every effort to create a climate of confidence and to help investors maintain economic progress.

The industry minister said, in an interview with Venezuelan television officials accompanying the group that the Jamaican people had suffered under numerous austerity programs, and that his government had no immediate plans for another such program.

HANNA PRESENTS $336.4-MILLION BUDGET

FL081510 Nassau TRIBUNE in English 4 Dec 80 pp 1, 13

[Article by Anthony Forbes]

[Excerpts] Finance Minister Arthur D. Hanna Wednesday tabled the government's $336.4 million, 1981 budget designed to "assist the programs which are geared towards the social revolution."

Introducing the budget in a 12-page, 2 1-2 hour speech yesterday, Mr Hanna predicted a surplus of over $25 million which will be applied to a salary increase for civil servants on January 1 and to the capital development fund.

In his speech on the budget, which was increased by $37 million over the 1980 budget of $299 million, Mr Hanna also gave old age pensioners a Christmas present with a 50 per cent increase that became effective Monday, 1 December. Pensioners will now receive $60 a month.

Mr Hanna, who is deputy prime minister, said the 1981 budget will tackle unemployment as a top priority, revitalize the country's development process, expand social and health services, and develop the southeastern islands to stop migration.

Grabbing the biggest share of the budget, which contained no new taxes, was education which was allocated a total of $65 million, including over $5 million to the College of the Bahamas--an increase of $5.6 million or 9.5 per cent over 1980.

The Ministry of Health followed with $43 million, an increase of $7 million or 19.5 per cent, while the police department and the Ministry of Defense were allocated a total of $33.5 million, an increase of $9 million or 36.5 per cent.

Next is public works with $27 million, an increase of $6.2 million or 29 per cent; tourism with $20.2 million, an increase of $1.6 million or 9 per cent.

There are smaller allocations to other ministries and departments. Servicing the public debt has increased from $42 million to $45 million, up $3.2 million or about 7.7 per cent.

Also created was a Department of the Archives, to play a more useful role in the development and preservation of our archives.

In addition, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Local Government was allocated some $6.2 million, $2.2 million of which is for capital works.

The Department of Local Government was allocated a separate $5.3 million in recurrent and capital funds.

He said the estimated revenue on recurrent account is $295.9 million which represents an increase of $61.5 million or 26.2 per cent over the 1980 estimates.

The estimated expenditure on recurrent account is $270.7 million which represents an increase of $37.5 million or 16 per cent over 1980.

"I predict, therefore, a surplus of over $25 million for 1981 from which I propose to provide for further increases in salaries of officers in the public service to take effect from the anniversary of the last increase in salaries on January 1, 1980," Mr Hanna said.

Concluding, Mr Hanna said that the 1980's are indeed the years of reconstruction and the years of social revolution.

"During this year we have laid a foundation and made many pledges," he said. "The time has now come for us to build upon that foundation and redeem those pledges."

"In presenting the 1981 budget I am deeply conscious of the important tasks that lie ahead and the awful responsibility that rests upon our heads," he said.

Mr Hanna listed those as: to eliminate suffering, unemployment, ignorance and poverty; to provide for fuller economic growth, for a greater measure of security for Bahamians and the Bahamas, and to inspire loyalty.

"It is these things which have inspired the making of the 1981 budget," the minister of finance said.

COOPERATION TALKS WITH KOREA--According to Foreign Miniatry sources in Barbados, the Barbados and Korean governments today discussed the possibility of strengthened relations in a number of areas, including fisheries and agriculture. Major discussions were centered on a possible economic and technical cooperation agreement and a [word indistinct] pact but no firm decision was taken. At this stage, it seemed unlikely that any agreement would be formalized this year. During the talks, Barbados explored the possibility of Korea offering training in fisheries and agriculture, especially vegetable production, either to Barbados, Barbadians in Korea or by sending Korean experts to the island. COUNTRY TO BUILD WARSHIPS FOR UK SHIPYARD

PY162010 Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 13 Dec 80 p 7

[From the Rio de Janeiro Agency]

[Excerpt] Navy Minister Adm Maximmiano da Fonseca announced yesterday in Rio de Janeiro the formula that will be used by Brazil for the export of warships: The navy arsenal of Rio de Janeiro [AMRJ] will do the building based on projects of the Vosper Shipyards of England, which will be responsible for the sale of the end product. Thus, the country will receive 52 percent of the construction cost--those relating to manpower and Brazil's provision of raw materials--and the AMRJ will assimilate technology and it will be able to overcome its current lack of activity. When its work capacity overflows it can turn part of the workload over to private shipyards.

On announcing the plan yesterday morning, at the conclusion of the ceremony commemorating sailors day, Da Fonseca clarified that "no enterprise will be created" and he guaranteed the plan's execution "through contracts for every deal." The minister said that he did not know whether Vosper had already placed a project on the market for the AMRJ to implement, "but I do know that there are many negotiations in this area which I cannot talk about now because I would harm the deal."

According to the commander of the AMRJ, Vice Adm Raphael de Azevedo Branco, on being installed in his post on 28 October, Brazil's best trump card in becoming a constructor for Vosper is "the low production cost due to the fact that our labor costs are much lower than other countries that build ships." Another point that was highlighted on that occasion was "the great quality of the Brazilian worker" that was demonstrated in the construction of the frigate "Uniao," which the Brazilian Navy asked the British shipyard to build and which was examined by British technicians during the research carried out by Vosper when choosing the destroyer.

Da Fonseca stressed the advantage of the operation, "because with it we can give work to our arsenal and bring in dollars with the export of the end product. The participation of Vosper in the exports is considered "indispensable" by the sector's technicians, because its name will open the doors of the international market for the country until the AMRJ can assimilate sufficient technology to export its own projects.

ARMED COMMANDOS IN SHOOTOUT DURING BANK BRANCH HOLDUP

One Dead

PY161835 Santiago Chile Domestic Service in Spanish 1630 GMT 16 Dec 80

[Excerpts] A humble car attendant was brutally murdered by a group of individuals who held up a branch of the Bank of Chile in Cerrillos. Eight individuals riding a 504 Peugeot and a 125 Fiat car took part in this bloodthirsty incident.

The holdup took place at 1125 and the attackers got away with 8 million pesos and $150,000.

The individuals used a very cunning method, very similar to the method used in previous bank holdups. Four of them remained outside the building while the others, also carrying automatic arms, threatened the employees and clients inside the bank.

(Patricio Velazquez), a client who was inside the bank, witnessed most of the holdup. He described the individuals as well dressed young persons wearing suits and ties who were very calm and well-organized during the approximate 10 minutes it took them to carry out their holdup.

Members of the security forces found the 504 Peugeot car which the individuals used to get away in on the intersection of Suiza St and the railway in the (Jose Maria Caro) neighborhood shortly after the holdup. Carabineros also found a small bus [taxi bus] of the Macul-Bernal del Mercado line which had also been used by the individuals to evade the police blockade which was established a few minutes after the holdup, on 1700 Bernal del Mercado St.

Vast dragnet operations carried out by members of the Carabineros and investigations departments were centered in various parts of the capital but so far there has been no information that may lead to the arrest of the individuals.

RAUL CASTRO PAYS TRIBUTE TO GEN CALIXTO GARCIA

FL112301 [Editorial Report FL] Havana Domestic Television Service in Spanish at 1945 GMT on 11 December begins live coverage of ceremonies being held at Holguin's Frank Pais airport and Plaza de la Revolucion. An aircraft is seen approaching the airport terminal. The announcer reports that the aircraft is carrying the remains of Gen Calixto Garcia which were interred at Havana's Colon cemetery until yesterday.

Present at the airport are Army Gen Raul Castro, minister of the Revolutionary Armed Forces, commanders of the revolution Juan Almeida, Ramiro Valdes and Guillermo Garcia, Culture Minister Armando Hart, all members of the PCC Politburo and many other Cuban Government and party officials.

As the funeral cortege moves through Holguin's main streets heading toward the family home of Gen Calixto Garcia Iniguez, where the remains will lie in state for a short time until they are taken to the mausoleum at Holguin's Plaza de la Revolucion, the announcer reports that after two previous interments this will be the final burial site.

At 1958 GMT, the camera pans Holguin's Plaza de la Revolucion where the people have congregated to wait for the burial ceremony and military parade. Army Gen Castro is scheduled to deliver the funeral oration at the ceremony.

At 2016 GMT, following an honor guard by Army Gen Raul Castro, commanders of the revolution Juan Almeida, Ramiro Valdes and Guillermo Garcia and Armando Hart, the funeral cortege departs for the Palza de la Revolucion. The announcer reads a Council of State decree ordering that the remains of Gen Calixto Garcia be transferred from Havana's Colon cemetery to Holguin's Plaza de la Revolucion where a mausoleum has been built for interment.

At 2021 GMT, the camera goes back to the Plaza de la Revolucion to await arrival of the funeral cortege. At 2047 GMT, the funeral cortege arrives in the Plaza de la Revolucion with six brigadier generals guarding the remains. At 2053 GMT, the marble ossuary containing the remains of Gen Calixto Garcia is interred. The band plays the national anthem, followed by a call to attention by the bugler.

At 2100 GMT, Army Gen Raul Castro comes to the microphone to deliver the funeral oration. Referring to a moment in history when Gen Calixto Garcia attempted suicide rather than surrender, Castro praises the Cuban patriot for his behavior in the face of the most adverse situations. He goes on to tell about Gen Calixto Garcia's parents, childhood and youth. Continuing his biographical account of Garcia's revolutionary activities, Castro refers to the days when the general joined the patriots who fought against Spain and later confronted the U.S. imperialists when they tried to issue orders to the Cuban Mambi Army.

Castro recounts Gen Calixto Garcia's trip to France and the United States, where he organized a group of patriots to come back to Cuba to fight against Spain. Failing in his attempt to land and continue to fight the war, Castro says, Calixto Garcia went to jail and later on traveled to Spain, France and the United States. Then, in 1896 he returned to Cuba with an expeditionary force and joined the Cuban Freedom Fights. After displaying an exemplary courage and military genius in battle, Calixto Garcia was given the command of the Eastern Mambi Army.

Raul Castro points out that Gen Calixto Garcia was a man of action, a man of intellect, a man of many virtues. He adds that he knew and spoke several languages very well. His military skills were unequal in the Mambi Army, in fact, Castro says, he was the only Cuban general of the war of independence who had learned and used with great efficiency the military arts. Castro refers to several actions in the war of independence in which General Garcia demonstrated his skills.

Castro praises the residents of Holguin for giving the finishing touches to the mausoleum and preparing the plaza for the ceremony. He then urges all workers to make greater efforts in the current sugar harvest. He says: The nation expects a lot from Holguin. You must have all equipment in working condition and cut all the sugarcane needed by the mills to produce the necessary sugar for a healthy economy. He announces that one of the four Cuban flags taken by Cuban Cosmonaut Col Arnaldo Tamayo in his flight in space is being awarded to the city of Holguin.

In closing, Raul Castro says that Gen Calixto Garcia was always ready to serve the fatherland and never said no when he was needed. Castro adds: "His life was very difficult but he lived it fully and devoted it in its entirety to the fatherland. Eternal glory to the memory of Calixto Garcia! Long live free Cuba!" (The crowd shouts "viva")

Immediately following, the military units pass in review. Coverage ends at 2159 GMT.

Due to historical nature of Raul Castro's speech, no further processing planned.

NICARAGUAN RADIO REPORTS FMLN COMMUNIQUE

PA110345 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0300 GMT 10 Dec 80

[Direct report from Tegucigalpa, presumably via telephone--recorded]

[Excerpts] Tegucigalpa is no longer the capital of America, but the capital of tears. After Tegucigalpa became the capital of America because of the presence of several Latin American heads of state for the exchange of the instruments of ratification of the misnamed peace treaty between the governments of Honduras and El Salvador, today, Tuesday, 9 December 1980, this city is under siege by anti-riot police who dispersed a meeting to protest the presence of the counterrevolutionary junta of El Salvador and of Guatemalan President Romeo Lucas Garcia.

In the police action today, hundreds of persons were arrested and taken in military trucks to the National Investigation Directorate and National Army garrisons. Several student and labor leaders were among those arrested, including Miguel Carias, who is being subjected to all kinds of torture.

During the demonstration, it was announced that representatives and leaders of other organizations are being sought. Some of the names mentioned were (Tomana Tivi), who is being sought by investigations agents with his photo in hand.

A communique which circulated today at the meeting at the Metropolitan Cathedral was issued by the Farbundo Marti Liberation Front [FMLN]. It reads as follows:

The days of the junta are numbered. The FMLN, the single representative of the revolutionary forces of El Salvador, in view of the visit of the Military-Christian Democratic Junta to Honduras, declares that:

1. This visit forms part of the interventionist plan being promoted against the Salvadoran people, who are now headed toward a sure victory. Their enemies, in the face of this unconcealable and irrepressible fact, are involving the armies of the region in this matter.

2. The culmination of the procedures to legalize the peace treaty represents the beginning of a coordinated massacre of our brave people.

3. In the face of the real possibility of victory that is already visible, U.S. imperialism works day and night in an attempt to detain the course of history by means of maneuvers that range from the use of the Christian Democrats as a screen for repression to the signing of the peace treaty which is detrimental to the interests of the Honduran people, having been arranged so that the participation of the Honduran Army [in Salvadoran affairs] may be more open.

In view of all the above, the FMLN informs all the people of the world, who are following the steps of our daily struggle, that we have initiated large-scale actions that will further demonstrate to the genocidal junta our peoples determination to overthrow it in a very short time.

In this regard, it is useless for the members of the junta and their imperialist godfathers to stage such a farce as the ratification of the peace treaty because, despite the participation of all the armies of the region and even of the imperialists, it will not be possible to stop our people who are more determined than ever to liberate themselves.

We say to the Military-Christian Democratic Junta that its days are numbered, because we are preparing the final offensive, which will be a crushing defeat for the junta and for imperialism. They will realize this very soon. We already have our command units and the regular forces of our revolutionary army, as well as the peoples' militias, which only await the order to start the offensive that will be the end of the oppression that for over 50 years has been a threat to our people. The offensive will lead to the establishment of our revolutionary democratic government.

We ask all the peoples of the world to closely watch the events that will continue to take place in our country, because our people's victory is near.

United to fight until the final victory.

Revolution or death. We shall triumph. El Slavador, Central America, 8 December 1980.

U.S. AID SUSPENSION DENIED--Two Salvadoran leaders have accused the United States of continuing to support the repressive Military-Christian Democratic Junta of El Salvador and described as hypocritical and false the U.S. declaration that it has suspended aid pending an investigation into the assassination of three U.S. nuns and a social worker in that Central American country. In a news conference in Frankfurt am Main, Roberto Herrera and Leandro (Ustiano), representatives of the Revolutionary Democratic Front of El Salvador in Austria and the FRG, respectively, stated that they fear direct intervention by the United States in El Salvador. U.S. warhips are located off the Salvadoran coast and intensive troops movements are noted in neighboring countries, the leaders added. For her part, Cynthia (Harrington) of the Center for Political Studies in Washington told PRENSA LATINA that the United States is continuing its military aid to El Salvador and is maintaining personnel in that country to advise the armed forces and the security forces of the genocidal regime. U.S. ATTITUDE ON KILLINGS CONDEMNED--The Democratic Revolutionary Front, FDR, of El Salvador, condemned the attitude of the U.S. Government concerning the killing of three U.S. nuns and a social worker by the Salvadoran Christian Democratic Military Junta. A news bulletin released by the FDR in San Jose, Costa Rica, states that it is hard to believe that the great U.S. interests are over and above not only of those peoples struggling for at least minimum living conditions, but also of those of the U.S. people, themselves. Meanwhile, in a letter posthumously released in the United States, one of the four women recently slain by the Salvadoran regime, Jean Donovan, denounced the repression, murder and torture being practiced by the Salvadoran governing junta with the support of the U.S. Government. Cleveland's PLAIN DEALER reported that Jean Donovan had written a letter to Sen Edward Kennedy denouncing U.S. military aid to the Salvadoran junta. EDITORIAL PRAISES MICHELE DUVALIER'S SOCIAL WELFARE WORK

Port-au-Prince LE NOUVEAU MONDE in French 21 Nov 80 pp 1,8

[Editorial by Ministry of Information: "The First Lady's Humanistic Conduct"]

[Text] Becoming the wife of a chief of state may be the result of chance, but sometimes chance works out quite well with destiny. That of Mrs Michele B. Duvalier took shape immediately after her marriage as a promise consisting wholly of light, as a radiant and triumphal dawn, and as the first stream from a living spring. Creative intellectual activity, intensely shared by her husband, sprang forth in the first great hours. By successive moves made up of visits to provide comfort or make massive distributions of clothing or essential items, it confirmed the social policy that Jean-Claude's government has rationally expanded since it came to power. One could already detect the first outlines of a grand fresco in which the Christian themes of love and active solidarity were implicitly evident.

The First Lady's actions have aroused a tidal wave of collective affection, and they awaken modern vibrations. They move within the sphere of ideas spread in connection with the liberation of women, who no longer accept themselves within the narrow framework of kitchen, children, and market--an unfavorable framework for the development of a woman's own individuality. At a time when women in great numbers are entering the universities, rising to responsible positions, and engaging in an unceasing battle to take part in the entire human adventure, the desire for the blossoming of their personalities compels recognition as a new awareness and an inescapable requirement. And for a woman sharing the destinies of a chief of state, what could be more noteworthy--and natural at the same time--than the broadening of her abilities from that of being simply an important person at official ceremonies or a distinguished hostess at social receptions to the much broader and more fruitful role of being a bearer of hope and a privileged messenger of the great principles underlying government action?

It is the transcendent human dimension of that action which offers a new and ideal psychological field for affirming the First Lady's personality while at the same time justifying her preponderant role in our society. Converging with the charisma of the uncontested leader of the revolution on the move, Mrs Michele B. Duvalier conveys as a woman a sense of security that creates a continuous and intimate contact in her relationships with the masses. In so doing, she can pick out and articulate trends toward a better adaptation of the development effort. With an infectious power of conviction, she undertakes and achieves the task of sensitizing and motivating others and bringing out an expressiveness that is more than ever in symbiosis with that with which her husband is so intensely vibrant.

Panic-stricken by the great popularity that the First Lady has won so quickly by showing her solidarity with the immense work of her husband--work that can only be reflected in its fullness--a few implacable male chauvinists, accustomed to viewing women through the dark glass of taboos and myths, have begun to grumble. As "worthy heirs of the ancient world who have worsened woman's condition by lowering her status in the name of a mystique favorable to the imperium of males," those impenitent misogynists are panicking at the militant commitment of a woman as though they feared an "emasculation of politics." They are trying desperately to break her momentum and to stop her outpourings by forcing them into the tight collar of the law. No one should regard as a threat to be warded off the unshakable will of the First Lady to "come to the help of the poor, the sick, and the abandoned children." But even if some people do feel threatened by her dynamism and her high awareness of civic virtues, they cannot, in the very name of the humanistic principles they advocate, do less than applaud her good example and follow her in that path of solidarity which is lighted by her steps.

TWO AGREEMENTS SIGNED WITH FRANCE

Port-au-Prince LE NOUVEAU MONDE in French 21 Nov 80 pp 1,8

[Excerpts] Yesterday morning at the Ministry of Planning, French Minister of Cooperation Robert Galley took part in an important work meeting concerned with renewed cooperation between Port-au-Prince and Paris and based on subjects for reflection opening out on a range of felicitous arrangements to be made together in various areas.

Two important agreements were signed before the meeting: one relative to the Integrated Project for development of the Jacmel Region and the other--the agreement on civil aviation--concerned with development of the Cap-Haitien Airport and the extension of its runway to 2,300 meters.

Those signing were the [Haitian] secretaries of state for planning, for public works, transportation, and communications, and for agriculture, each for his own area of competence, and the French minister of cooperation, who was accorded chairmanship of the meeting. As the head of the SEP [expansion unknown] emphasized, the keynote of that meeting was the continuity and permanence of a form of Haitian-French cooperation that is intended to be constructive.

"We won our independence not from France, but from the France of a certain era."

[Minister Galley said in part:] "The new agreement confirms my government's intention to continue its support of this project, to which the EEC is also preparing to grant greater financial aid over the next 5 years.

"The same continuity can be seen in the sector of civil aviation, which is the subject of another agreement.

"The agreement that will be signed by us establishes continued French cooperation in this sector. It provides supplementary financial assistance for pilot training and takes charge of updating the study for modernization of the Cap-Haitien Airport that was originally made by SOFREAVIA [expansion unknown] in 1977.

"As to the future, I will simply recall that the commitments assumed by France during last April's meeting in Paris by the French-Haitian Joint Commission--and which I will have occasion to speak of again in more detail tomorrow in Cap-Haitien in the presence of His Excellency the president of the republic for life--include financing by the FAC [Aid and Cooperation Fund] of extension of the runway to 2,300 meters and perhaps, through the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation, air navigation equipment.

"The assistance that France intends to give to the Republic of Haiti is obviously not limited to these projects, but if I were to name them now I would be taking up a portion of the time that must be reserved for the work meeting which you were kind enough to arrange, Mr Minister, and which will enable us to go into matters more deeply."

COMMERCE, INDUSTRY REFORM REPORTED

Port-au-Prince LE NOUVEAU MONDE in French 13 Nov 80 pp 1,7

[Article: "Structural Reform in Commerce Department"]

[Text] The operation of a government department is related, and closely related, to the value of each of its members, the national organization of its cadres, the scientific distribution of duties, and the convergence of actions to be undertaken. Formerly, when our way of thinking leaned toward the centralization of functions, the head of a cabinet-level department ventured to do everything, formulate everything, and resolve everything. But in fact, his position elevates him to a certain point from where he can formulate and devise plans and then delegate the execution and implementation of what he has planned, based on the way in which the situation develops and on the facts of the moment, to the various agencies making up the entity for which he is responsible.

It is at that level that important structural reforms are currently being carried out within our executive departments. Through those reforms, the minister of state situates himself and defines the way in which he will intervene in the wheels of government.

The new organic law on the Commerce Department bears eloquent witness to what has been undertaken by President Jean-Claude Duvalier's government to promote the national economic policy on the basis of internal and external exchanges stimulated by the orderly, intelligent, and constructive action of the institution concerned.

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

FL051505 Port-of-Spain TRINIDAD GUARDIAN in English 1 Dec 80 p 11

[Text] Kingston (CANA-REUTER)—Jamaica's balance of payments showed "marked improvement" in the first half of 1980, recording a surplus of $19.8 million compared with a deficit of $108.6 million in the corresponding 1979 period, according to the island's central bank.

"The net foreign exchange reserves fell to minus $752.1 million at the end of June 1980 from minus $771.9 million at the end of December 1979," the Bank of Jamaica OCTOBER REVIEW said.

"The main contributory factors were higher net capital inflows, higher alumina and nontraditional exports increased tourist earnings."

The improved situation showed up in a decreased external trade deficit for the first 6 months of the year, as total exports for the January-June period increased by 13.9 per cent over the same period in 1979.

Total exports for the period were $826.4 million, $101 million more than the same period last year.

Meanwhile imports for the 1980 period were valued at $890 million compared with $806 million in the 1979 period, leading to a trade deficit of $64.6 million.

The deficit for January-June 1979 was $80.7 million.

All categories of domestic exports increased in value, except food, animal and vegetable oils and fats.

"The major export commodities for the period January to June 1980 accounted for 2 per cent of total domestical export compared with 83.9 per cent during the corresponding period for 1979" the REVIEW said.

"During the 1980 period the total value of these commodities amounted to $669 million; $67.3 million or 11.2 per cent increase over the 1979 level.

"The volume of bauxites, sugar and bananas declined during the period under review compared with the volume of the corresponding period in 1979.

Bauxite declined by 433 thousand metric tons, sugar by 20 thousand metric tons and bananas by 11 thousand metric tons," it continued.

The values of all three commodities also declined during the period under review, with bauxite declining by $25.1 million or 12.4 per cent, sugar by $3.9 million or 6 per cent and bananas by 3 million dollars or 20.5 per cent.

Other domestic exports for January-June valued $146.8 million, an increase of $31 million over the figure for the corresponding period last year.

Mineral fuels, beverages and tobacco, manufactured goods and food showed significant increases.

Tourist expenditures for the period January to April 1980 also saw a $33 million increase in gross earnings compared with last year, to $195.3 million.

This represents a gross foreign exchange earning of $109.6 million (US) in 1975.

However, total visitor arrivals for the January to April period were 260,500, a decrease of 7,000 compared with 1979.

"The volume and value of alumina, on the other hand, registered increases," the REVIEW said.

"The volume increased by 160 thousand metric tons or 16 per cent while the value increased more significantly by $99.3 million or 31.3 per cent above the 1979 level," it added.

BORGE DISCUSSES REVOLUTION, RELATIONS WITH HONDURAS

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 28 Oct 80 p 3

[Interview with Nicaraguan Interior Minister Tomas Borge by Jesus Suarez Moreno in Cuba; date not given]

[Text] Before us is one of the legendary figures of the Sandinist Revolution in Nicaragua, one of the founders of the Sandinist National Liberation Front [FSLN] and a personality of great influence in that fraternal Central American country.

Commander of the Revolution, Tomas Borge, member of the FSLN National Directorate and minister of the interior, is visiting Cuba.

We are taking advantage of his stay to inquire about the current situation in Nicaragua.

[Question] What can you tell us about the counterrevolutionary outbreaks on the Atlantic Coast?

[Answer] In reality I think they have been greatly exaggerated. It was a simple misunderstanding due to the cultural and political backwardness that exists in that part of the country which was historically abandoned by the Somozist dictatorship. Reactionary elements, in conjunction with international reactionary forces manipulated [the situation] and tried to confuse a small sector of the population. Counterrevolution shows itself in Nicaragua through punitive incursions from the Honduran border and in the field of ideological diversion, where the media at the disposal of reactionary forces attack the process, as well as through artificial contradictions which they try to set up between the church and the revolution.

Tomas Borge points out how history repeats itself and reaffirms the universal truth that there is no revolution without its price. "It is stimulating for a counterrevolution to exist because it means that a revolution exists."

Commander Tomas Borge states that "the Nicaraguan process shows that to be victorious, it is necessary for a people to rely on arms to be able to achieve political power. The union of arms and the masses, as happened in Cuba, is what gives strenth to the revolution. And to the vanguard--the party. Without the party there is no revolution. Without the masses there is no revolution. Without arms there is no revolution.

"One of our principal and immediate tasks is to strengthen the role of the party, because by developing the party we are contributing to more rapidly organizing our mass organizations.

"We know very well that the struggle will be long and difficult. But we were born in the struggle, we develop in it and this is how we will die, by fighting for the revolution."

Relations With Honduras

On this subject Commander Tomas Borge reiterates the principles of the Nicaraguan foreign policy of promoting friendly relations with Honduras and reaffirms that his country will never be the one to create a crisis between the two nations.

Borge points out that the Nicaraguan authorities are aware that former Somozist guards are covertly undergoing military training in refugee camps in Honduran territory as part of a plan supported by international reactionary forces. Up until now no serious incident has occurred, and the Honduran Government has been warned about this situation.

He added that he is aware of the existing contradictions within the Honduran military regime and that if there are sectors which view the Somozists with sympathy, there are others which do not.

Present Stage of the Revolution

Tomas Borge recalls the characteristics of the Sandinist revolution: democratic, anti-imperialist and popular, within the framework of a mixed economy and a pluralist political system, in other words, with the existence of diverse parties, including the right.

He returns to the subject of class struggle, this time within the context of the immediate prospects for the Nicaraguan revolutionary process.

"Class struggle is becoming acute. Some sectors of the bourgeoisie decapitalize businesses, others conspire and there is a third sector that has formed ties to the Sandinist program.

"Our position with regard to the church is clear. We support revolutionary Christians. In the country there exists the right to believe or not to believe. Christians participated in the insurrectional struggle against the dictatorship and it is not by chance that many of them are present in the government leadership and in the ranks of the Sandinist Front.

"I would say this is the stage of delimitation. In the political sphere there is an inevitable class struggle. In the economic sphere we propose to establish the foundations for development and economic planning. We fulfilled the objectives of the previous stage of economic reactivation: More than 10,000 new jobs will be created beyond what had been projected, reducing the unemployment rates and promoting beyond what had been projected, reducing the unemployment rates and promoting an increase in agriculture and industry.

"At this time we are facing a great challenge--to absorb the great mass of newly literate people who have been incorporated into the educational system: more than 600,000 children in primary and secondary schools, an unprecedented number. In this sense we face problems in the educational infrastructure and a lack of teaching cadre. We very much appreciate Cuba's help in this field: Cuba has also given its solidarity cooperation in the field of health, another ministry on which the revolution is concentrating its efforts to ease the critical situation inherited from Somozism."

The commander of the Nicaraguan revolution summed up the objectives of the present stage in his country: establishing the foundations for development and economic planning according to the principles of the next triennial plan.

Before the converstion comes to a close, Tomas Borge--the Nicaraguan guerrilla who has now become a protagonist in a new and more difficult war: the liberation of his people from misery and backwardness--expresses the sentiment that he sees our country as an extension of his own. He concludes by greeting our young revolutionaries, wishing them success in their eternal commitment: promoting our ideals.

NEW EZEQUIEL BRIGADE BATTALION ENDS TRAINING

PA131509 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0300 GMT 13 Dec 80

[Excerpt] The commencement exercises of the Second Battalion of Peoples' Militias were held at noon today at the Eduardo Contreras Sandinist Military Training Center. This battalion will immediately join the struggle against counterrevolutionaries in the northern hills of Nicaragua. This second battalion of the Ezequiel Brigade includes revolutionaries from Esteli and Chinandega who will replace the militia battalion made up of people from Monimbo, who will return to Masaya tomorrow as heroes. Wives, parents, children, siblings and girlfriends were at the training center to say goodbye to their relatives before they left to defend the Sandinist Peoples Revolution.

Although they felt sad to see their loved ones go, no tears were shed because our process--which cost the lives of more than 50,000 heroes and martyrs--must be defended rifle in hand and by consolidating the revolution.

In the hills that witnessed the passing of our unforgettable brother Carlos Fonseca, together with German Pomares, Julian Roque and hundreds of other heroes and martyrs, battalion 30-12 read a document of commitment to the Sandinist Peoples Revolution. Companero Rafael Rugama, a member of the battalion, read the document in which the second contingent of the Ezequiel Brigade vows to defend the revolution to the death, to increase production, to voice solidarity with the struggle of the fraternal peoples of El Salvador and Guatemala and to condemn every means of exploitation in the world.

Companero Silvio Molina, responsible for the 1st military zone, played up the combative spirit of the heroic people of Esteli, noting that this reserve battalion of the Ezequiel Brigade will continue the struggle of the thrice heroic city. He also reported that counterrevolutionary activities have been cut back in the last few days and that this is due to the presence of battalion 80-15 of the people of Masaya which returns to that also heroic city tomorrow.

Fifteen companeros of the Sandinist Peoples Army who belong to the border guard have laid down their valuable lives to defend our revolution, Companero Molina said, and this second battalion will continue the work that the companeros from Masaya will leave tomorrow to rejoin the production process.

PDC LEADER COMMENTS ON SALVADORAN SITUATION

PA111326 Panama City Televisora Nacional in Spanish 2315 GMT 10 Dec 80

[Excerpt] A group of clergymen, including priests, layment and a Lutheran bishop, this morning seized the headquarters of Panama's Christian Democratic Party [PDC] on Peru Avenue, across from Porras Square.

According to spokesmen, the purpose of the seizure, which the group described as a peaceful protest, is to denounce the bonds between Panama's Christian Democrats and the Christian Democrats in El Salvador's cilivian-military junta and to protest the recent murder of several American nuns and six leaders of El Salvador's Revolutionary Democratic Front [FDR].

Among other demands, the clergymen ask for respect for the Salvadoran people's right to self-determination, recognition of the FDR and the Farabundo Marti Peoples Liberation Front [FMLN] as the sole leaders of the Salvadoran people and a break of diplomatic relations between the Government of Panama and El Salvador's Christian Democratic Junta.

Dr Ricardo Arias Calderon, president of the PDC political committee, told this station that the Salvadoran military are using force indiscriminately in their efforts to keep order.

Dr Arias Calderon made the following comments with regard to the PDC's position vis-a-vis the Salvadoran situation and the seizure of his party's headquarters by a group of clergymen and laymen:

[Begin recording] We believe that an effort is being made in El Salvador to achieve a thorough social and political transformation toward democracy and justice. We believe this is going on within a cycle of truly horrifying violence. What the Salvadoran Christian Democratic Party has tried to do is to try to carry out the political and social changes within the existing climate, within the greatest peace. That is why it has achieved three great structural changes: the signing of a peace treaty with a neighboring nation, a promise for holding a constituent assembly and has said that it is willing to accept the mediation either of the church or of European political parties such as Social Democrat or the Socialist Party.

So we think that the participation of Christian Democracy in El Salvador seems to be valid.

The second point of our position is this: we believe that the Salvadoran Army has not completely turned over a new page toward the future and toward peace. It continues to make indiscriminate use of force in its attempt to maintain order and it continues to maintain bonds with armed groups of the extreme right which are killing, just as armed groups of the extreme left also kill. That is why we have made a very clear and explicit appeal to the Salvadoran Armed Forces to truly end the 40 years of dictatorship and oppression which they themselves used to uphold.

With regard to the document of the clergymen who have seized party headquarters, I must point out that the only thing they really propose is that there be support for the FDR political group and the armed FMLN group. That is, they are taking sides in the quasi-civil war that exists in El Salvador, siding with the Marxist-Leninist sector. As citizens, they have a right to do so. It is somewhat surprising, however, to see Catholic priests supporting one of the parties in a civil war and above all, that they support the Marxist-Leninist sector.

[Question] Regarding the comment you made to the effect that military sectors in the Salvadoran junta are either backing or condoning ultrarightists who are committing grotesque acts of violence, if the Salvadoran Christian Democrats do not take steps regarding this situation, such as withdrawing or reorganizing the junta, what will the Panamanian Christian Democrat's position be?

[Answer] In a tragedy such as El Salvador's in which there are dozens, hundreds, thousands of dead, we cannot appreciate this situation from the outside. Salvadoran Christian Democrats are testifying to it with their lives. In a very difficult situation, Christian Democracy is giving an example of a heroism which, I believe, calls for more respect by those of us who look at this tragedy from the outside. It is right within the center of this tragedy that a decision must be made, just as they did from the beginning. [end recording]

PRIME MINISTER WILLIAMS PRESENTS 1981 BUDGET

FL101835 Port of Spain TRINIDAD GUARDIAN in English 6 Dec 80 pp 1, 3

[Article by John Babb]

[Text] Prime Minister and Minister of Finance, Dr Eric Williams, yesterday presented a $6.8 billion 1981 budget which offered some reliefs with "prudence and restraint."

It fell short of the expectations of those who believed he would have opted for adventurism and free spending in 1981--election year.

His fiscal proposals offered increased personal income tax reliefs, increased old age pensions, increased pensions to retired public officers, a special allowance for pensioners.

From next year also, the severance pay ceiling of $18,000 will be increased to $40,000 to be exempted from income tax, while the ceiling on tax deductible bonds has gone up from $5,000 to $7,500.

Estate duties will be abolished, while the annual rateable value of all owner-occupied houses ("only one house") will also be exempted from tax.

In addition to his fiscal proposals, Dr Williams told of improved incentives for housing and sought to throw ice-water on the flames of rising controversy on the race-track, judges' pay and the teachers recognition issues.

He also announced proposed increased choice of television viewing, with emphasis on education, and including another television station.

Dr Williams ruled out completely the call to halt construction of the centralized racing complex at Caroni, and squashed the argument that the government loan to the racing authority was interest-free.

He said the authority would pay an interest rate of 10 percent--an interest rate not more favorable than would be available on the open market.

In place of the three current racing venues--Port of Spain, Arima, and Union Park--ambitious sporting and cultural projects will sprout.

In fact, after 1980, there is to be no more racing at the Savannah.

The judges, after all, will receive a backpay--a judge's allowance of $2,000 per month, effective January 1, 1980. In addition, they are being offered improved travel facilities.

Education Act

Proposed amendment of the education act will accommodate recognition of the Trinidad and Tobago Unified Teachers' Association (TTUTA).

Outlining income tax reliefs, Dr William revealed that from January 1, personal allowance goes up from $2,000 to $2,500; spouse allowance from $1,000 to $1,300; child allowance, from $500 to $700; medical expenses, from $600 to $800.

Income tax rebates range from 100 per cent on chargeable incomes not exceeding $5,000 to 20 per cent on chargeable incomes not exceeding $8,000.

Pensioners will receive an additional special personal allowance of $1,500 in recognition of their past services to the nation--this is over and above the personal income allowance of $2,500--provided such pensioners are in receipt of a pension and are aged 60 years and over.

Pension increases are also in store for public service pensioners whose retirement date is December 31, 1980, or earlier. They will continue to receive their cost of living allowance.

Old age pensioners are also to get an increase--from $85 to $100 per month--an interim measure until the old age pension ordinance has been updated.

On agriculture, Dr Williams told of a proposed pilot project food farm utilizing DEWD [Department of Environmental Works Division] labor.

The farm, to be under the control of the Food and Agriculture Corporation, will be established on 81 hectares (200 acres) of state lands off the Churchill-Roosevelt Highway adjoining the existing Piarco corn and soya project.

Specific objectives will be to increase the domestic production of food of relatively high nutritive value and to reduce the staggering food import bill. The initial labor force will be 100.

Dr Williams, in his 3-hour presentation, also spoke of housing which he noted was beginning to make some impact.

However, he said many serious problems and constraints still existed and these had served to inhibit the very considerable effort which was being made.

Major problem areas identified included the failure of the construction industry to meet the increasing demands being made on it: shortages on a continuing basis of basic building materials; a shortage of skilled workers in the construction industry; lack of response by some local financial institutions; high interest rate on mortgages; the absence of adequate infrastructure, and rapid increase in the urban population.

In the light of these inhibitive factors, the prime minister emphasized that there will have to be further intensification of effort in 1981 if any significant headway is to be made to alleviate the housing problem.

This would involve planned expansion of existing production facilities, coupled with some importation.

Towards this end, 15 million bricks will be bought from Guayana, and contractors will be issued with permits to import their requirements.

With respect to roads Dr Williams cited improvements in the east-west corridor.

The priority bus route between San Juan and Curepe will be substantially completed by year's end.

Dr Williams also announced some road construction projects to be initiated next year.

They include extension of the Sir Solomon Hochoy Highway and new Cipero road, dualizing of the Princess Margaret; the coastal arterial San Fernando to Marabella highway. Also, a southern link freeway, and possible completion of the ambitious Mucurapo Foreshore freeway.

In relation to developments in the energy sector, Dr Williams said specific steps would be taken in 1981 to improve the overall-security of natural gas supplies, and establishment of a pricing regime for the commodity.

Investment decisions, in principle, he hinted, have been taken by the cabinet in respect to the methanol and urea projects, while some additional work was required before a final decision was taken on the aluminum smelter project.

His other budgetary measures include establishing a $5 million fund to assist small businessmen, and the provision of free managerial and technical assistance.

In respect of divestment, the finance minister pointed to the patterns set by the National Commercial Bank (NCB) and PLIPDECO [Point Lisas Industrial Port Development Corporation], and urged that they be actively pursued by those state enterprises which the government has earmarked for divestment.

Additional shares in PLIPDECO will be offered to the public, while wide public ownership is proposed for the immediate downstream plant—an off-shoot of ISCOTT [expansion unknown], and the second commercial television station.

However, based on a cabinet decision, the prime minister, minister of finance, Corporation Sole [as published], will not be permitted to hold any shares whatsoever in state enterprises or any companies—public or private.

He hinted that the proposed unit trust legislation was in the pipeline--a move on which the pace of divestment hinges.

During his 3-hour presentation, Dr Williams also served a reminder to the two foreign-owned banks operating locally--Chase Manhattan and Citibank. It is a question of "time is up" as far as they are concerned, come December 31.

Dr Williams wound up his presentation with the hope that it "will help to encourage a certain austerity in our expenditures, national and individual, in 1981, and would discourage those among us who have been flaunting their affluence in the faces of those who have not."

Debate on the budget will begin 1.30 pm on Wednesday.
